This eventually led them to trying to cross humans with female vampires, and one of the people that had been selected to participate in this, was Cindy. When she was still very young. The second family at the time had many children and they thought that the family wouldn't care about such a thing, but her father Rowa did care.

Finding out about it, he had put a stop to it, however, after reporting it to the current King at the time and returning her, they had done nothing. Their answer was to simply start again, putting the current leader to sleep and selecting a new one. Cindy was traumatised for what she had been forced to go through and her father made it so she would never have to remember those events ever again.

When these memories resurfaced, she realised why she had a hatred for men, the past eighth leaders and for what had happened to her. The King, who had outcasted the only person who had protected her, and the eighth family who received next to no punishment.

Cindy wanted to get rid of it all, and she wanted to start with the eighth family. Supposedly, the eighth family Original leader had perished due to an experiment conducted from the tenth family, and she wanted to see this for herself.

Perhaps she could get an answer from him as to why she had been put through so much.

Obtaining blood from one of the eighth's heirs she had entered the eighth's family tomb and summoned the Original leader. They were right, what was left of him certainly wasn't a vampire, there was nothing left but a beating heart, linked to an outer shell of the brain. There was no flesh, or anything, or even a way for the body to properly consume blood.

She imagined they had put him in the tomb just out of respect.

However, Cindy hadn't exactly been honest about the strength of her powers, after spending some time, over the course of weeks she had eventually restored the eighth leader back to what he once was and he had remembered everything the tenth family did to him.

Although Cindy wanted to get rid of the eighth family, she also had the goal of crushing the whole settlement. The one that had killed her beloved father. Now, the Original vampire Remus owed Cindy a favour. What she was surprised by was just how much power Remus seemed to have over his ability compared to the previous leaders. How when using his powers, he could force those with more of his blood to do whatever he wished.

Since both of their goals were similar they had decided to work together and Jill was thrown into the deep end of things. However, Jill being a female of the eighth family, she had more of a soft spot for her.

And this was how Cindy's quest for revenge had begun.

"So earlier when you said that most of your goal had been completed, you were talking about how nearly all the vampires in the eighth family have now died." Bryce said, having listened to the story.

"Correct, but it's a shame I didn't take everyone else down with me." Cindy replied.

"Then answer me this, I understand why Remus had a grudge against the tenth family, but you could have still completed your revenge slowly. What made you attempt to frame Quinn and attack them? There must have been more to it." Bryce asked.

"Because I was selfish." She answered. "Quinn had things that I wanted. He had three beautiful girls that I believed needed saving. My goal wasn't to destroy the whole settlement, but create a new one where only females would exist, and the men would have to suffer the same punishment that I went through, and only to be used as tools for breeding." She said with a malicious smile.

Although this was true she hadn't told the whole truth. The original plan was to do everything after she had become Queen. Slowly getting rid of the families and building her secret army but there were a few unexpected things that had occurred.

The first one was receiving information from the Bloodsuckers after her father's passing, that in the tenth family there was Dhampir. The very thing that the eighth family had been attempting to create for so long, somehow the tenth family had managed to create one, and it was a female of all things.

Cindy wanted Erin for herself. Becoming Queen, she couldn't possibly just request that Erin come over to her side. She needed Quinn to be out of the picture and out of the way, and to somehow build trust.

Then what had further escalated her to commit to her plans was the vision the banshee had told her. However, Cindy was willing to take the fact that the tenth family had a dhampir with them to her grave.

'I don't know why the eighth family were obsessed with creating a dhampir, but I believe one day, it might be the end of all the vampires. I don't even think Quinn knows what he has on his hands yet.' Cindy thought.

"It seems like Jill was telling the truth after all, but it still doesn't excuse her for her involvement in things after the fact, and her continued involvement. Now that the eighth family has been destroyed including all of its previous leaders, there aren't many of them left alive. I will need to decide what to do." Bryce said as he started to walk away from Cindy.

"Wait, where are you going!" Cindy screamed. "You promised you would end my life!"

"Oh did I?" Bryce said, smiling back.

"Aren't you a man of his word? I thought you were a respectful vampire that followed the rules and took pride in things like this!" She argued.

As they left the room, Bryce had one last thing to say to her.

"Cindy, you aren't the only one that has been keeping up an image in front of others for the sake of their goal." Bryce replied.

Chapter 937: Returning memoires

It seemed like whatever Bryce had to do was finally complete, for he had sent a message to those in the tenth castle, to inform him of when Quinn was awake. He had been asleep for two days now, but his condition seemed fine and even Leo said there was nothing to worry about.

It was as if Quinn's body knew his duties for now were over and he could finally rest.

The message stated, after Quinn woke up, they would try to gather all of the leaders still left to inform everyone on the council of the decision to be made and agreed upon.

It was a good sign, unlike before where they were doing things and just treating Quinn as an add on; it now seemed he was more like a leader. One whose opinion they valued, or at least now they respected his strength, which was a big thing to vampires.

As for the one who came to deliver the message, it was none other than the first Vampire Knight Kazz. Before she left though, Silver had called out to her asking for the request she had made before.

For the past few days Silver had been staying at the tenth castle looking after her brother. After what had happened to him, she was a little afraid it might happen again. Lee, her father was happy for her to do this as well, and now Kazz had returned and Bryce was done with his tasks she could finally make her request again.

"Kazz, you said that Bryce would restore Fex memories the same way he restored yours, are you able to do it now? I'm afraid the longer Fex is without them, it might be harder to get them back, or the more he will feel lost. I'm sure you understand." Silver said.

"Sure." Kazz said, looking at Fex who was standing sheepishly beside her. Although Fex was getting used to everyone at the castle, he wasn't used to everyone knowing things about him that even he didn't know. "I have to warn you, you might not like the solution though but it's the only one."

"Anything to get my memories back, please." Fex said, giving a polite bow to her.

"Your little brother is a cute one, isn't he." She said walking over wanting to pinch his cheeks, but Kazz's hand was soon slapped away from Silver on instinct.

"I'm sorry." Silver replied as if she was shocked by her own actions. "It's just, after everything that happened."

Holding her hand, Kazz walked out of the room, and it was up to them if they wanted to follow her and the two of them did so quickly.

When leaving the castle, the inner area was quite busy, it looked like the humans that had been turned were busy organising something, but they had no clue what. Even Silver didn't know as she had been too busy doting and looking after her brother.

When they had finally reached the north gate of the castle walls they could see thousands of vampires outside trying to get in.

"What is going on?" Silver said.

"I guess you haven't left the castle?" Kazz stated. "Everyone is waiting to see the person who saved them from the attack. They know that the second family was behind things by now. Or at least their leader was. Anyway the important thing is they want to see Quinn, or even join the tenth family."

"Isn't that a good thing?" Fex said from what he understood. "I mean I think, there aren't a lot of vampires in the tenth family, so it's good that now all of these people want to join."

"Brother, I think that is a mistake. These people only want to join now, which means that they only care about themselves. Only after seeing how strong the new tenth leader is and his defences do they want to join. Do you think they would be willing to risk their lives for their leader, no they just want to save themselves." Silver explained.

What she said was quite true as well, Kazz noticed. Those standing outside of the gate were either from the tenth family pooling area, the few vampires from the eighth family and those from the second family.

At the moment, the eighth family and second family were being treated quite poorly by the other families due to what happened, while the tenth were now a family not to be messed around with. They were hoping by transferring over it could solve some of their problems.

Following Kazz, eventually Silver realised where they were. Standing outside the castle gate were Royal Guards stationed all over. They looked like they belonged at the King's castle, but this wasn't the King's castle they were at. They were at the second family castle.

The guards were stationed there, just in case any of the other family members wanted to get some personal revenge. After all, the other families had lost a lot due to Cindy. With her locked up, they could only focus their hatred and anger towards the family.

The other reason the guards were there was to not allow those from the second family to escape either. An investigation was still ongoing to which vampires exactly knew what Cindy was doing. After all, Silver had spotted a few of the girls from the inner castle taking the men to the unknown place.

"What are we doing here?" Why would you bring us to such a place?" Silver asked.

"Mine and Fex's memories weren't taken away using an influence skill but it was due to the second family's ability. So to get them back, we need to use that ability as well." Kazz replied.

There were quite a few vampires in the second family that had learned their ability. However, to get rid of an ability that a leader had placed, one would need to be even stronger or at least of equal powers to Cindy.

When Silver saw her use her powers that day fighting Quinn and the other leaders. Everyone saw that Cindy had been hiding the extent of her reversing powers. There were others who even thought maybe there was something she could do to help the past King.

Entering the castle, and walking up to the throne room, she quickly found out who was sitting in the current second leader's throne. As soon as she laid eyes on him, Silver bowed down, and so did the other two.

"Please you can stand, my family has already caused so much pain for the vampire settlement. Right now I don't feel like I am deserving of your respect." The man spoke, but he wasn't any ordinary man, and he certainly didn't look like it either.

The man was dressed in an all white robe, which stood out for a vampire since they often wore black. On his right shoulder he had an ancient armour piece that was silver in design with a gold trim going along the edges, and finally he had his long black hair tied up, but allowed two long bangs to go down the front.

When looking at her with his soft smile, Silver couldn't believe that Cindy and this man were related. For he was the Original vampire of the second family, Tempus Cha.

"Um sir," Fex said standing up. "I think someone from this family removed my memories and I was wondering if you could bring them back."

Silver, and Kazz couldn't believe how casually Fex was talking to the man just now, but of course Fex had no clue who he was.

The man looked at Fex for a few seconds who was rubbing the back of his head.

"Haha, of course, of course. It was my ability in the first place, so I should be able to remove it just like I did with Kazz."

"Remove it, so I'll still remember everything that happened right, I won't forget everything?" Fex asked, clenching his fist. He didn't want to forget what happened. He wanted to remember all the people from the tenth family including what his sister had done to help him.

"Of course." Tempus said, signaling for him to come over with one finger.

When Fex reached Tempus, he placed his hand on top of his head, and it only took a few seconds and the whole skill was cancelled allowing him to remember everything again. Immediately, Fex's eyes went wide, before immediately bowing down to the ground.

"I'm so sorry, I'm such an idiot for my words before. Please, please forgive me!" Fex said.

In the background Fex continued to beg, while Silver had her own thoughts watching everything play out. If Tempus was here standing now, it meant that the one who had awakened him was Bryce.

"Does Bryce plan to return him back to his tomb?" Silver asked Kazz who was still by her side.

"Originally, yes.' Kazz replied. "But it seems like Tempus doesn't wish to return to his tomb, instead he wants to build up the second family's name so they are trustworthy again before he leaves."

Silver didn't know why, she should be happy that the Original vampires were waking up and choosing to stay on their world during her time. However, she had a bad feeling about it all. Maybe it was because of her experience with Remus, but she just felt like the generations of vampires were too far apart, and their views were sure to clash.

With that said and done, there was only one thing that they needed to wait for, and Quinn had finally woken up from his long awaited rest.

Chapter 938: Juicy Rewards

Slowly opening his eyes, Quinn felt the best he had ever felt in a long time. It reminded him of when he was a young teenager and, on the weekends, would sleep in until three in the afternoon. There was no one to wake him up and nag him anyway like others had. Ever since turning, being thrown into all of this mess, it felt like he didn't even have a single day to rest.

'I thought life back then was hard, and now look at this.' Quinn thought.

He realised that he was in a bed, one that he had come to recognise as his own in the Castle. Although slightly different as it had been rebuilt after being destroyed from Borden's and Remus's battle. It was hardly noticeable since all the rooms were quite similar.

A large Victorian style bed, with old furnishings and rugs that had been there for who knew how many years.

"You're finally awake, sleepy head," Layla said, who was by his side and had the most genuine smile he had ever seen. It was clear that she was happy to see him awake.

Knowing that there were now people there for him and that cared for him, it was a reminder of why he fought so hard.

"What was that strange dream?" Quinn mumbled as he slowly got up. "I remembered being back at school." He said, touching his head.

"Do you want me to call over the others and tell them you're awake, or do you want to rest for a little longer," Layla asked, knowing full well that the others would barge in full of excitement if she told them the news.

The others were a handful, and if Quinn was half awake, it would be hard for him to handle them.

"Rest would be good for now. Just give me a little more time." Quinn said.

Saying this, Layla thought it was best she left as well. Of course, there was a lot Quinn wanted to know, but just for a few hours, she didn't want him to worry about being the leader of the Cursed family, or one of the leaders of the human race. She just wanted him to be Quinn.

Just as she was about to shut the door though, He had a few words for her.

"I'm sorry," Quinn said. "I think I know what happened to Cia. I'm sorry I wasn't there to save her."

Layla turned around and smiled while shaking her head.

"Quinn, you don't need to apologise anymore. We have been on this journey with you long enough. Besides Cia, she died happily. At least, I would like to believe that. And you did everything you could. Your towers and the defences you set up. We all survived that day due to your help."

"I think I realised we should start being more thankful for what we have, rather than what we have lost." Closing the door behind her, Quinn was finally left on his own.

He was sitting there in disbelief on his bed, thinking about what he had just been through. The fight he had just had trying to remember every single detail.

But what actually had him most excited, were the rewards he was about to receive.

While passing out from exhaustion, Quinn heard several pings go off in his head, and screens appearing in front of him, but he was unable to check out exactly what they were.

'So system, you didn't think I could beat her? So much so that you didn't even bother giving me a quest. At least it looks like you know when to reward someone when they are in the wrong.' Quinn thought over the moon, ready to open up the notification screens.

[The Tenth family thinks very highly of you]

[The Vampire settlement has learnt of your deeds]

[You have gained a total of 50,000 reputation points]

[You have reached the maximum amount of reputation points]

[You can now upgrade your Castle, to 'Level Two' in exchange for 50,000 points]

[Do you wish to proceed?]

Seeing all the information pop up in front of him, it was great news. He didn't know what it meant by upgrading his Castle, but if anything cost 50,000 points, undoubtedly it had to be good.

Seeing the temptation in front of him, he couldn't help but press the button at that moment.

[Your Castle is now being upgraded to 'Level two']

At first, it seemed like nothing was happening, and Quinn wondered if he could see some changes out of his window that showed the tenth settlement as a whole. As soon as he got up on his feet. Rumbling started, and the whole Castle seemed to be shaking.

'What is going on, Vincent? What's happening?' Quinn asked.

'I have no idea. Your system's ability has gone beyond whatever I was capable of. It's far too advanced.' Although Vincent didn't say it, he was kind of jealous and wished he had the system when he was still alive. He would have loved to experiment in so many different ways to fully understand the system.

In a way, for the system to be handed to someone as young as Quinn, with a not so great of a mind, was a little bit of a waste.

Finally, the rumbling had stopped, and Quinn immediately rushed out to see if there had been any grand changes. The first he spotted was at the very edge of the inner castle area. All of the walls were larger and thicker than they once were.

The jagged black rock the wall's used to be made off was no more, and now the black material looked to have been turned into large smooth stones. Fitting for a real castle wall. It also was twice as high and nearly twice as thick.

If anyone was thinking of attacking the family, they were sure to have trouble now. Checking the system out as well, he now could see that the wall had a health bar and a reputation cost to repair it.

'I wonder how strong that wall is?' Quinn thought.

What Quinn failed to realise more than anything was the amount of attention this was having on the vampires in the settlement. It was sure to grab the attention of the other families as well. In a few seconds, grand changes had been made to the castle walls, and it stood out compared to the rest, even the King's Castle.

What Quinn also didn't know was that the Castle itself had changed as well. Like the walls, the Castle's material was now made in the same style, and it looked to have even grown slightly in size.

Quinn could already hear everyone in the Castle making a commotion from the others inside.

'Oh, this is going to be a headache and a half. I better check if there was anything else as well.' Quinn thought.

Scrolling down through the notifications, there was still more to come.

[You have done the impossible, the system is impressed]

[It is sorry for doubting you]

[Reward +10 levels]

[You are now level 51]

[Ten stat points have been received]

Seeing this, Quinn decided to use his stat points. He didn't know what trouble he might get into around the corner. Looking at his stats, he realised that he quite enjoyed being a balanced fighter.

Each stat was essential to him. Although lately, the charm skill seemed useless. It was strong enough to influence most humans and weak vampires, but now with the type of opponents, he was facing. It was nearly impossible to attempt to control them.

After putting in the stat points as he wished they now were as follows:

[Charm 60]

These stats were without Quinn wearing any beats equipment. He decided to put his strength stat at the next stage since it was already the closest, and Quinn always saw the most significant jump every ten stat points.

Although, the higher the stat points, the less noticeable it was now.

[You have witnessed the use of Great blood control]

[Your knowledge of blood control has increased]

[You know have 50 points in blood control]

The good news seemed to keep on coming. The ten levels were the biggest increase Quinn had ever received, and he thought these were the best rewards he had gotten as well. He wanted to jump up and down in excitement, but at the same time, he just felt like it was embarrassing to do so.

'You deserve it, Quinn. That was a battle I don't think many would have been able to survive. Some might have said you were lucky to receive this system.' Vincent then cleared his throat as he was one of those people. 'However, I know that even if others were put in your situation, they wouldn't have achieved the same result, and I believe the system thinks the same.'

Hearing these words from Vincent of all people, for some reason, it made him feel the proudest.

"Thanks...Grandpa." Quinn jokingly said once more.

It was the end of the rewards for Quinn, but not the end of the messages, for there was one more, and this one was a new quest. He was quite surprised at this since he believed after getting the 'Become the vampire king' Quest, he wouldn't receive anything after, or at least until he had completed it.

[New Quest received]

[You have surpassed level fifty]

[The strength inside you is growing, and something is starting to emerge, but what is it?]

[Find out what lies beyond that of a Vampire lord?]

Chapter 939: Answer them

Looking at the message that had appeared in front of him, Quinn was trying to figure out what the quest exactly was. The requirements for completing the quest weren't clear and had been blanked out with question marks. Meaning Quinn didn't really know how to complete it, but by the wording of the quest given, it was clearly alluding to something.

'Is it saying there is another evolution?' Quinn wondered. 'Is there an evolution past that of a vampire lord?'

This was the only thing he could think of as to what the system was getting at, but if there was another evolution then when would it be unlocked? He had already reached level fifty and he wasn't even sure if there was a level cap like there would be in games. 60, 80 maybe not until he reached level a hundred he would complete the quest.

'To my knowledge no. All the leaders, or at least all the current leaders during my time and yours are at the lord level. Although the Original vampires might be a bit different, they were born the way they were and don't go through an evolution like yourself and the others.' Vincent answered.

With no clue what the requirements were though, Quinn would have to put it in the back of his head for now.

'I wish the system could just stop playing games with me and be a little more upfront with me sometimes.' Quinn sighed.

'Well, that would defeat the mystery of the game after all. Remember the whole system was based on a game in the first place.' Vincent answered.

Just seconds after, the door swung open and a group of people were excitedly rushing through the door to see him. It looked like when they saw the change in the castle and walls, they all knew there was only one person possible for such a thing.

"Quinn!" Some of them shouted, rushing over giving him hugs, cheers and slaps on the back.

"It's good to see you all again as well." Quinn said.

There were many questions asked on both ends, as Quinn was unaware of what exactly had happened while he was in the cellar, and they too wanted to know what happened to him. This way everyone was getting more of a full picture of what was going on at the time and an idea of why things had played out the way they were.

"Well what a surprise." Sam said. "It looks like the one that clocked onto everything from the beginning was Peter."

Everyone turned to Peter who was in the room. He was leaning up against the wall at the very back with his arms crossed.

"I told you I had a bad feeling about her, maybe you guys should trust me a bit more." Peter said.

"Didn't he think Xander was a bad person when he first met him as well?" Timmy whispered over to Amy.

"Well, maybe he's not wrong." She teased, and the others who had overheard all started to laugh.

"I'm sorry to ruin this happy moment." Paul said breaking through and walking over to where Quinn was. "But there are some important matters we need to deal with. I've sent a report to the King that you are now awake as he requested, but before that, I really think we should deal with the matters outside."

"Outside?" Quinn said, confused at what Paul was going on about.

After some explaining, Paul told Quinn about those that now wished to join the tenth families and how many wanted to see who had saved the vampires.

"I didn't know what you wanted to do, but there is one thing for sure, we are certainly lacking people. Therefore while you were asleep, I started to organise them into certain groups. I had people test them on a number of things and categorised them, based on their skills." Paul started to explain.

"Wait, categorised based on their skills, do you mean like strength and fighting ability?" Quinn asked, and Paul didn't say a word after. "Don't Paul, don't do it. You're acting like you're in the military again. I have to admit your way has had its uses and I have come to understand why the military did the things the way they did, but I do not want to do what they did."

"I want you to make a new list. Take a look at those that have been in the tenth family pooling area the longest. Bring them in first, then I want you to make a list of skills they are capable of or best at. I want you to find out what they are talented at and then find a use for their talent. Those that aren't good at fighting won't just be chucked aside."

"I want you to work closely with Timmy, he came up with a good reward system before, but I want these people to be rewarded for helping, and their loyalty to the tenth family. Is that okay?"

Paul paused for a second, and looked at the table of information in his hand. He then swiped the information off the screen and started a whole new one.

"You're the leader Quinn, not me. I will do as you say, but I will make a suggestion. The momentum is in your favour now. You should go and answer those wishes, and let the people see who saved them. You deserve that much." Paul said.

The reason why Quinn wasn't so quick to take up this idea was because Quinn had decided already that he wanted to leave this place. He felt a little strange helping them and doing all these duties when he wasn't going to be here much longer.

'Do I take them back to the Cursed ship with me?' Quinn wondered.

'I think just like you see Earth as your home, these vampires see this place as their home as well. There will be many that do not want to leave Quinn.' Vincent explained. 'On top of that, would the vampires allow you to take that many with you? It would mean exposing their secret. Perhaps this is something you could discuss with Bryce but I don't think the humans are ready to know of the vampire's existence just yet.'

Honestly, Quinn couldn't agree more. Although Quinn did think humans could live along with vampires it would be a learning curve and take time. On top of this, right now the humans were on their toes, waiting for the Dalki to attack at any moment.

Perhaps once the Dalki threat was over, Quinn could attempt to do what Arthur had failed at.

"Come on then, let's go see everyone." Quinn said.

When leaving the castle, there were two more people waiting for him at the castle door. One of them Leo, his other Vampire Knight, and the other Peter.

"I understand why Leo is coming with us, because we should go out as the three of us, but why is Peter here?" Quinn asked.

"It seems that some of the people are also here to see Peter as well. He saved quite a bit of people while you were off fighting."

Walking through the inner castle area, Quinn could already hear the crowd of people talking. He had never heard the tenth area be so noisy before and with his super hearing he could hear and pick out certain sentences.

"I still can't believe how the tenth has been able to grow so quickly."

"Everything changed when they announced their new leader. I didn't think much of him at first."

"I always knew he was special, the tenth in the past always created great inventions that changed the vampire's lives and look at what he is making for his people now."

"Then shouldn't the tenth leader not be so selfish, he should share them with the other families?"

"After the other families attacked him, if he keeps everything for himself then so be it, I don't blame him. It's clear the new leader cares for all his people which is why he's built so much to protect them."

At first, Quinn was happy to hear all the compliments, but soon it was making him feel sick as he got closer and closer.

'These people, they rely on a leader.'

"Look, that's him, he's finally here everyone!" One person shouted, and they soon all started to shout and cheer seeing Quinn. There were far more vampires than Quinn had expected and every single one was there for him.

The Royal Guard made sure no one was to get through the front gate, and the vampires made sure to listen, but they continued to move their heads to get a look at the leader. Some of them hadn't even bothered to care to burn in the memory of the tenth leader when they had first seen him at the ceremony, so they didn't even know what Quinn really looked like.

Seeing the commotion, Quinn jumped up using his strength to the top of the wall in one go, and soon Peter, Leo and Paul followed him. The four of them stood there looking down at all the vampires.

"Thank you for protecting us!"

"It's the Wight, the Wight that saved you, look!" A mother said, pointing upward towards Peter.

'Do you still think you can just up and leave this place?' Vincent said. 'You remember, you promised me and said you would look after them, Quinn. You now have a connection with them.'

Vincent was right, Quinn had already promised to protect those in the tenth, but now other vampires also wanted his help, not just those from the tenth anymore.

'What am I meant to do now?'

Chapter 940: Paul's Goal

After looking at all the people from the top of the castle wall, he could see everyone. They looked back at him as if they were expecting some type of grand speech, but he didn't really have one for them, nor was he expecting this in the first place.

They all thought he had saved the vampire race, protected them. When in reality, he was just protecting his friends and wanted to leave this place.

He then looked back at his own castle and started to look at the others in comparison. The towers, the upgraded walls and the castle itself. There was a huge difference now, and so much had changed in a short amount of time.

The last time he had come here, the castle was untouched, abandoned, and hadn't been worked on.

'Are they really here for me?' Quinn wondered and soon jumped back off without saying a word to any of them. He didn't know if this would be better for his position or not, but seeing what had happened, seeing them. He now had a better idea of what he wanted to do.

"The tenth leader has asked me to do a few things. If you wish to join the tenth family, then you should comply with the following rules..." Paul continued on giving the vampires a set of instructions. All of what Paul was doing, was based on what Quinn had requested from before. Soon they began to let in vampires slowly into the castle walls.

Through talking to the vampires, Paul found out that there were quite a few of those that had been in the tenth family for a while, and their reasons for staying and wanting to join were quite similar. They had respect for Quinn ever since he had gotten in power.

Many of those in the tenth family were criticised, and the other families used their powers to abuse them. Similar to what Timmy had gone through at school. Because of Quinn's request, before he had been accused of killing Dwight, the tenth family were already seeing improvements in their lives.

They thought that the new tenth leader was someone who actually cared for the family. Enough to even return to this place and come here when he didn't have to.

They didn't realise that Quinn had made that rule more so he would receive prisoners from the other families. In hopes to improve his own power. There was a selfish reason behind it, but it had done good in the process.

As things were rolling into place, Quinn noticed that there had been a summon. For the first time in a while, there was a voice, a message that had been sent in his head.

"This is a message from King Bryce. All leaders are to come to the King's castle along with their fellow Knights in the next two hours. All leaders must attend."

The voice responsible for sending the message, was from Jill. It didn't sound the same as she usually did. When delivering this message, it was far more monotone and spoken as if Jill had lost all hope.

Quite frankly, Quinn was surprised that she was still being used to send messages after what had happened.

Due to the message that had been sent, Quinn also called Paul and Leo back to the castle as well, as Quinn wanted to have his own meeting with all the others. Paul left the task he had assigned his men to Ashley, and they were off.

Due to Paul's background, he was great at getting things done and was extremely organised and efficient. He made it so whatever plan needed to be implemented could be done quickly and run like clockwork.

He only needed a piece to replace him in the clock with him away, and it could continue on working.

Finally, in the usual grand dining room that looked like it could seat around thirty or so people. Everyone that Quinn was close to had gathered. He deemed it important to him and those that were part of the Cursed ship.

"You might be wondering why I asked you all to come, but I have been summoned to the King's castle for a talk. It's what we've been waiting for, or at least I have been waiting for." Quinn said. "I'll be blunt. I'm going to ask if we can leave this place. Although ask isn't really the right word, I'm going to make it clear that I'm leaving this place, but I see that there is a lot to be done here, and there are those that care about this world." Quinn then looked at Timmy, Xander and Amy, who were originally from the vampire world. "I'm going to ask for a way, where I am still part of this crazy vampire ruling, but I have more freedom to come and go as I wish."

"From what I have seen outside, I realised that the position I'm in might be a lot better than we thought, and I can use this to my advantage. Honestly, asking just for permission to leave would be too simple for what we have done and what we have suffered through. I came to realise I have only been thinking about myself, acting on everyone's behalf without actually asking what you guys wanted. So I want you guys to tell me now, is there anything you need or would like to ask for?"

It came as quite a surprise. For one, they weren't sure Bryce was going to accept Quinn's request, and now Quinn wanted to ask the King for more, but for those that were able to see deeper than the surface, they realised that Quinn noticed the power of the vampires. The power of the people.

Using them, and his 'good deed' Bryce didn't have much choice. What could he do if he refused his request, and Quinn decided to leave anyway? Attack the family, attempt to attack Quinn? It simply wouldn't go well and cause another war.

The first to speak and wasn't shy about asking for something, was Logan. He raised his good hand up before speaking. "Can I request we keep the blood crystals we obtained from the eighth family attack? I'm sure when things settle down, they will ask for them back, but they are quite useful to power certain items and even my own. I would like to do more research if possible that would help us out a lot. I believe the vampires have deemed this as an illegal item."

"I think that will be fine," Quinn replied and looked at his seared off arm. "Do you want me to see if they have someone that can get your arm back, or maybe a new one? They should have those in the second family that might be able to do something."

Even though Quinn said this, he didn't really want to be sending another one of his friends off to the second family. If Logan did go through anything, this time Quinn would be right there beside them.

Shaking his head, Logan had no hesitation rejecting the offer.

"Don't worry, I don't see having fewer human parts as a bad thing for me. I can still use my ability just as well. Besides, I have other plans for this." He said, raising his stump. "If you get us back to the human world. I can work on something straight away."

Soon after, Logan started to mumble to himself, and had a slight smirk as he was thinking of the creations he could come up with.

Quinn looked around the room to see if there was anyone else, but all they really wanted was to go home. There wasn't anything that the vampires could give them that they wanted other than that, until Paul had raised his arm as well.

"I would like to make an offer, and also a request as well," Paul said. "I have spoken with my people before this, so do not think I am talking on their behalf when I say this. Like before, I would assume that if they do accept your request to leave, they will want you to leave someone behind."

"This is also good for us as we can keep an eye on things here. My people and I would like to be the ones left behind to look after this place."

According to the rules stated last time. Quinn had to leave a vampire knight behind. He had taken Paul with him last time due to them heading back to the second military base. It was unknown to them at the time the condition of the base.

However, now with Quinn's position in the human race, there was no need for Paul to be by his side any longer. Quinn knew that Leo wanted to do things as well. And felt a little bad for keeping him here.

Honestly, Quinn hadn't planned to leave any of the main group behind, but if Paul did request and wanted to, he wouldn't stop him.

"I see. Paul, I know you would only do this with the interest of your people, so what is it that you request?" Quinn asked.

"When you're in the meeting, Quinn. I want you to ask them, If there is a cure. A way to turn a vampire back into a human."

Chapter 941: An old castle down, a new one in its place

Finally, the time for the meeting had come, and the three from the tenth family that were due to attend were on their way. In order to avoid the commotion outside and being spotted by the other vampires, Quinn had decided to use his shadow travel and brought along both Leo and Paul as asked.

While using the shadow travel, Quinn noticed that he no longer felt like his MC points were draining. It was as if a specific part of his body no longer got tired when using it.

'So this is what having over a thousand MC points feels like?' Quinn thought. One of his main problems with using the shadow ability was how much MC each skill would use, it seemed to be more taxing compared to other abilities, but now Quinn could finally use his skills in more ways without having to worry.

While on the way there, Quinn's mind started to wander and focus on something else. It was the question Paul had asked not too long ago.

'About Paul's request, it should be possible, right?' Quinn asked. This was something Quinn had never really thought about himself, but it must have been natural for those who had been turned unwillingly to want to be turned back.

However, for Quinn, it was a new power, he always treated it like an ability and it was because he had become a vampire his whole life had changed. It was now a part of him. What used to be problems and difficulties were no longer there. Although he did miss the taste of normal food now and then.

'What makes you think that?' Vincent replied.

'When I lived your life, you placed your powers away in that book, you used your ability so you could become human and live with....' Quinn stopped there as he realised that talking about old memories may have not been the best or politest thing to do. It felt natural for Quinn because he had lived Vincent's life.

At the end of the day, Vincent never told him these things, and the two of them had never directly talked about Vincent's past before.

'That was due to my ability, the equivalent exchange ability. This is something that you don't have, Quinn. Perhaps there would have been something that could have been done, if I was still alive.' Vincent replied.

'Yes, but there are others with the same ability, remember. Some that are still out there even now.' Quinn replied, referring to the possibility of the original leader

Richard Eno, and Jim. 'So apart from that, is there any other way? After thousands of years, did they never figure something out.'

Quinn didn't hear from Vincent for a while, as he must have been thinking of something, and he eventually replied.

'Not that I know of, I'm not saying it's impossible. I'm just saying even when I was alive there was no research put towards such a thing. Even Vampires that think they must protect humans see themselves above them, so why would they ever want to become one of them?'

'But you did.' Quinn replied.

'I know, but I was certainly a special case. When I decided to, I used what tools I had available at the time. Anyway, my point is, there hasn't been any research done, which is why I said not that I know of. Perhaps after my time someone has done something. I'll be honest there is one family that might know the answer. The second family.'

It was an unexpected answer for Quinn.

'Did you remember when Leo told you about the subclasses that they found. What interests me is how they even created such subclasses? There are only two ways to create a subclass. Either be born, this means one of their parents would have needed to be a subclass, or the second, is to turn a human. They had far too many subclasses for me to believe that they were born.'

Vincent certainly had a point, and it was something Quinn had never thought of before. But with Cindy dead, who was there to ask? Still, he had made a promise and he would certainly pop the question.

Arriving at the King's castle the normal checks had been done, and it was time for the three of them to be led on inside.

'Well, at least the guards aren't acting strange like last time. Were some of them working for Cindy, or was it something else?' Quinn wondered.

As Quinn entered the castle doors, he prepared himself. His plan was to make it so his group could leave this world without fighting if possible, but in the back of his mind he had to prepare for quite the confrontation.

When Quinn finally arrived, the large wide doors were opened and the usual council room could be seen, although what he hated was the fact that it seemed like everyone was already there before him, and he was once again the center of attention.

'Why is it, every time I come here, they look at me?'

Although this time, it was for a different reason. Those that were there and had seen Quinn fight. They were reminded of his power and those who weren't had heard what he had done. Somehow a leader was able to go toe to toe with one that had the absolute blood power.

In a way, some of them felt fear, as they believed that this might be the coming of a second Arthur.

As Quinn walked past his seat, and his two knights stood by his side. He realised that there were some new faces in the room, and not just that, but Jill was not sitting in her seat. Instead she was standing by Bryce's side, her hands kept together, her back straight.

The most noticeable thing was her eyes. They lacked any form of emotion in them. It was as if she had now become a doll.

Following Quinn behind, Leo's attention wasn't focused on the same thing as Quinn. Instead, he was feeling all the different energies in the room, and there was one in the room that was slightly different from the rest.

A detail that only his ability could pick up, and even Quinn with his Qi control might not have noticed.

'The man, in the second seat? Is he like the one from before?' Leo thought. The person he was talking about was the original vampire Tempus.

"Now that the tenth leader has finally arrived we can begin this meeting." Bryce said, hitting his new cane on the floor once. A habit of his when he was leader but now he could do it even more so as King.

"There are many things that we are to discuss on the agenda, and I will go through them all. Once I have spoken the council table will be open for discussion about certain topics. I hope the recent events haven't made us forget what the courtesy and rules are in the council room."

The others nodded, including Quinn.

For some reason, he thought he would have felt nervous, but right now, Quinn was feeling quite calm. He was reminded of the first time he had come into the council room, how big everyone looked and the energy pouring out of them. Now though, he didn't feel afraid of them.

His calm demeanour also didn't go unnoticed, and it was putting the leaders next to him a little at unease.

"First I would like to introduce you to the new leaders that you see around you. First of all, we should all pay our respects to the new second Leader, Tempus Cha." When introducing him, even Bryce bowed down which Quinn thought was strange.

'Quinn, that's another original!' Vincent said.

Still, Quinn didn't act as if he was surprised. He knew something was up when he entered the room. There were only three people that were completely calm, their heartbeat beating as if it was just any other day.

These people were, Quinn himself, Bryce and finally Tempus.

"Tempus is the new second family leader, and he said he will do everything he can to build up the second family and right the wrongs his family has committed." Bryce continued to explain.

Standing up, the others gave the most respectful bow, nearly lacing their heads on the table in front of them. They could possibly do, and for now Quinn followed along.

"Next we have the new leaders replacing the seats that have been vacant for a while. From the seventh family, we have new Leader, Harlu Dawn." When his name was announced the young man stood up.

"After that, we have replacing the new twelfth leader, Kim Killton."

This time, a female vampire stood up, who had quite the baby face. As she had smooth chubby cheeks and wore quite young clothing. It was quite clear to Quinn which vampires were from a new generation and which were from an old.

It seemed like Leaders were a thing hardly replaced. Even if their face remained young their fashion sense stayed the same.

The new leaders gave a little speech stating what they planned to do to improve the family, and a little bit about their background, but what Quinn was concerned about was that no one stood by the eighth seat, where Jill should have been.

"As you may have noticed, the eighth seat is empty, and Jill is standing by my side. Now that all the past leaders no longer exist, including the original, we have decided that there will no longer be an eighth family anymore. The Original leader has betrayed the vampire settlement and I believe they no longer deserve to be a part of the council. This is the punishment the eighth family must bear."

Hearing this, the room was a little unsettled by the design.

"Moving on, the next agenda I would like to talk about, is bringing back the fourteenth castle."

Chapter 942: Revote the king!

There had been a lot of things that Bryce seemed to have skimmed over, not giving many details about, and it left all the leaders with great confusion. For one, Bryce was already taking up the role of King pretty well, even though there were some that didn't really agree with that either, but as he stated at the beginning, they would let him finish before he opens up a discussion.

"Since there is one less family, I think bringing back the Fourteenth family will strengthen us once again. On top of this, the Punishers, whether I want to admit it or not, kept the vampires of the past in line.

"In a way, too much control is now given to the families and those in the inner castle under them. Before, we didn't have anyone strong enough to take the role of the one that was lost, but now we do." Bryce said, looking towards Quinn.

Hearing those words, Quinn wanted to pinch himself.

'Did Bryce really just say that? Was he giving me a compliment?' A shiver ran down his spine hearing those words and Tempus was now looking his way as if he was trying to judge Quinn based on his appearance.

Tempus had been caught up on the details, but since he hadn't been awake for long, he had no clue about the current strength of this generation of vampires. So what if Quinn was able to defeat his bloodline, to him that could have meant nothing.

"Now that we have gone through with all the agendas, we may proceed with opening up the council floor for discussion." Bryce stated, and immediately there were a few hands that were raised, but the one who was quickest and most outspoken was Muka.

"Your Majesty, I have been fine with you running things for the time being, and I admit you did well looking into the things with Cindy and resolving this whole mess. However, don't you think a revote should be cast for the next in line?"

"Back then, the Tenth leader never got a vote, with everything that happened with Cindy, for the next candidate shouldn't we open up the voting once again? And what of the bloodling ceremony, what happened to that?" Muka suggested.

Usually, the other leaders would expect Bryce to be angered by these comments, but he seemed to remain calm as he replied.

"I partially agree with your suggestion. Due to what Cindy had done and from what we have learnt, she should have never been made a candidate in the first place. Let's say then all those that had voted for her are now void. We can even include Jill here, before we found out that the two of them were cooperating."

"If that were to be the case, wouldn't that mean the outcome would be the same? Unless you and Jin planned to vote for someone else? Allow me to put out another suggestion, say we do have a revote to start over and undo what has already been done. What would the people think? The ceremony has already taken place and I think it would weaken our resolve. Lately, is there another candidate here, at least one you could all agree on? If I'm honest, I think I am still the best candidate here but if anyone doesn't believe so, or if there is anyone else that would like to rise up to the task please feel free to speak up."

The pressure coming off Bryce as he asked this question was menacing, and that's when Muka realised. The reason Bryce was so confident was because he had already taken the blood powers away from Cindy.

Knowing Bryce, he already had an answer for all of this, and he was right. If there was a revote even those against Bryce couldn't all come up with a candidate that they could agree on. Those that supported Bryce seemed like they still did, and those against him had their trust broken from a previous leader.

Muka started to look towards the new Second leader, perhaps an original could win them over. However, Muka had no clue what this man was like, and they could just be digging another hole like they had done with Cindy.

The people wouldn't like that a Second family member, even if it was an original, were to become King after what had happened. Lastly, Muka looked at Quinn of all people.

'Maybe, maybe after what has happened the others would vote for him?' This thought quickly left Muka's mind. Even after what Quinn had done, he hadn't been with the vampires long. If he ever was elected, Muka was sure the vampires would rise up and try to challenge his position. The one most against the idea was probably Bryce.

'Is that why he is suggesting bringing the Punishers back, so Quinn can't become a candidate for the position?'

Although Muka didn't want Bryce to become King, he didn't want to cause a war either. He just wanted what was best for the people. Also, now that Bryce has the blood book, if it came to a duel it would be a tough fight for anyone to beat him, including Quinn.

"You are correct, your majesty, the people also already know you as King and it might be best this way. They need to focus on everything. Speaking of what will happen to the First family, you have mentioned other leaders that have been replaced but not your own family."

"You can't possibly split your focus on the two things."

"You are correct." Bryce replied. "However, Nicu who I have been nurturing to be the next leader is a little too young at the moment and naive. For now, I will let Kazz take over duties while I try to find a replacement. It is not too much of an urgent matter." Bryce stated.

The next to ask a question was Sunny.

"While I do think that the Eighth family should be punished, is there really a need for them to be removed from the council? There are still vampires that are loyal to them." Sunny asked.

"Jill is no longer who she was." Bryce answered back immediately. "All the past leaders are dead, including the one that they all originally stemmed from. Honestly at this point, there isn't much we can do, they would be unable to function as a family that could support the vampire settlement."

"Jill's ability has always been helpful, which is why she will continue to pass it down, and her family genes shall now be used as one will always assist the King or Queen with their tasks. Now we all should have a better line of communication with each other."

With the initial arguments sorted, Quinn felt like it was now his turn to question Bryce.

"What did you mean by bringing back the Fourteenth castle, what do you want from me Bryce?" Quinn asked in a calm voice, and it didn't sound like he was asking a question to someone of higher authority, it was more like Quinn was annoyed for putting him in such a situation.

'This boy, who is he to talk to the King like this?' Tempus thought as he smiled and was enjoying the current show.

"I explained this earlier, you are the strongest Shadow user belonging to the vampire settlement and we believe you have been teaching some of those in your family the Shadow skill. You will have a lot of resources at your disposal. You would have to find a replacement for the Tenth family, but it seems there are quite a lot of strong ones in the Tenth family." Said Bryce.

Thinking about the advantages, Quinn would be delivered a number of vampires to him, allowing him to use the shadow eater skill and improve them, but beyond this, he just felt like a puppet working for Bryce.

"Bryce, I told you back then and I'm telling you now again. I have nothing to do with the vampire settlement and I will be leaving. I came to this meeting hoping to ask you for a few favours but I see that me having saved all of you means nothing." Quinn said, ready to fight back.

Chapter 943: Deciding vote

Once Quinn had finished his turn speaking, the room was deathly silent. So much so that one could even hear the draft coming in through the small gap under the door. No one moved an inch, no shuffling of the feet or anything for fear it would make some noise.

The reason why? It was because of the words and tone that Quinn had used when speaking to the Vampire King. Bryce was a man that was well respected even before he had become King. The leaders like Muka who disliked him, even they had always respected him as the First leader.

He was organised, strong, and cared for the vampire settlement. Now that he was King, respect wasn't just expected but demanded. Some would even go as far to say that Bryce had earned the respect by being elected for the position.

But with Quinn, there were no fluff words like 'your Majesty' or beating around the bush. He was direct, to the point where Quinn may have come across as arrogant by speaking as if he was above him.

No words were spoken yet, the leaders had remained silent in shock with no idea how to break the awkward tension. They didn't want to set off anyone's anger at this moment, until finally Quinn was the one who had broken the silence himself.

"Bryce, remember you owe me, and more than once now." Quinn stated. "At least the people standing outside my castle know how to be grateful for what I have done. All I am asking is for you to do the same."

It was clear by the way Quinn was talking, the two of them had more history than the other leaders knew about. From Quinn's words they could gather that he wasn't just talking about what happened with Cindy.

Bryce sighed in resignation. "Very well. You are right. We accused you wrongfully and even then you were the one who got rid of the biggest threat to us. We still haven't even rewarded you for your efforts due to everything that is going on. What is your request?" Bryce asked.

Quinn was one step closer, but not the whole way, for now Bryce would have to hear him out, whether he would accept it or not was a different story.

"Whether I was forced into this position or not, I am the current leader of the Tenth family. The Tenth family, not the Fourteenth. It was by chance that I had got that power and my role was never to be a Punisher.

"At the end of the day, I can't let go of my past either or those I care about. I was originally a human and just like this place is your home, for myself, the humans, and everyone with me, Earth is their home. I want to request the freedom for me and my people to move between the Tenth castle and the Cursed ship as we wish.

"The other castles already have teleporters linked to Earth, so I see that there should be no issue if we link one to the Cursed ship my group has created. I won't be taking all of the Tenth vampires with me, but just those close to me and who wish to go to Earth. However, like I said, I won't abide by my position.

"If my people need me, if you need to call me for duties that those left behind can't handle to do with the Tenth family, then you can call me. I think this is quite fair.

"And I have on more requests." Quinn said, turning to Paul. "I want to know if there is a way to turn a vampire that has been turned, back into a human. Even if you don't know of one, if there is any research that I can look into, it would be appreciated."

For now, Quinn thought there was no need to mention about Paul and his men wanting to turn back, and just would let them know he was looking for a cure. They might even think he was looking for one himself this way.

Although Bryce was allowing Quinn to speak to him the way he did so, the other vampires didn't like it at all, and now after hearing his request they couldn't take it anymore.

"Have you gone mad?" Prima shouted. "Just because you have gained a little power you think you can trample over the whole council with your request! What you're asking for is basically to disappear and do what you want in the human world, while still keeping a title here in the vampire world."

"Let me correct you." Quinn said, staring right at Prima. "I don't care about the title and I don't care about the council. The only thing I care about is protecting those from the Tenth, because it seems like all the other leaders have something against them. However I won't force them to leave their home in order to protect them. I am leaving this place, but I was also thinking about the vampires, something you guys should do more of rather than just thinking about your own families."

Prima was enraged and went to reach for his rapier by his side, but Quinn's eyes were already glowing red and Bryce had raised his hand to stop the tension.

"You are a Royal Knight Prima, and you can't act rashly like you just did right now. If you attacked, then Quinn would have had every right to defend himself." Bryce stated. "Firstly to address your requests, I do not think there is any trouble giving you access to our research facilities and library, including the King's library which has books that have been scrapped.

"Although the Tenth family are the ones that have the most research and skills to deal with this. So I would expect that there won't be much you can find there. This will be your reward for saving the settlement, as for your first request it is something we have never allowed before, so we shall deal with this the same way we deal with problems undecided in the council room and we shall put it to a vote. All those that think Quinn's request is reasonable and he should be granted those privileges please raise your hand."

Quinn had predicted that it might come to a vote, but if it did he was unsure what the outcome would be. He just hoped it was in their favour, otherwise there was a lot of convincing he would need to do.

Muka, Jin, and Lee were the first to raise their hands for Quinn. They owed Quinn a lot for what he had done. Jin and Muka felt like if they hadn't taken his advice and not voted for Bryce they would have been in a far worse situation.

The next to raise their hand was Sunny. A lot of her people had been saved thanks to Peter, on top of this Leo and Borden dealing with Remus made it so her people could live. She saw the fighting first hand and thought her family would have suffered the most losses if Remus hadn't been dealt with.

The next one to raise their hand superseded them the most, as it was the new Second leader, Tempus.

"I like the kid." Tempus said. "Besides, he was the one that purged the evil from my family. He clearly doesn't want to be here, what is the point of stopping someone from leaving who wants to go? They will find a way out even without permission."

This meant there were now five votes in favour for Quinn's request being accepted. With Jill no longer being a leader, it also meant those against were the new leaders, Kim and Harlu, along with Suzan, Muscat, and David.

"A tie breaker?" Kyle mumbled.

If it was a tie, Quinn wondered what would happen. Would he have to fight some of the leaders to prove his strength like when the royalty were to be selected, or would it default and there was a majority rule in place? Also, didn't Quinn's own vote count?

"Not quite." Bryce interrupted. "Usually when there is a tie then the final vote lies with the King, at the same time, there isn't a current leader for the First family and I am still part of this role. My final vote goes in favour of Quinn's request."

It was safe to say, Quinn was gobsmacked. For some reason Bryce was on Quinn's side.

'First wanting me to become a Punisher and now this, what is he up to?' Quinn couldn't help but think.

Chapter 944: A warning to you all

Finally, after everything Quinn had been through, everything he had done. It felt like for the first time, things were going his way. Although, he still felt like Bryce was up to something, because at this point it felt like he couldn't trust any of the vampires after what had happened. Just like Dwight had warned him. In the end, he did get everything he had requested.

'It looks like we can finally get ba-' Quinn thought as he was about to slump back into his chair, but of course, there had to be an outburst.

"This shouldn't be something that should have even been voted on!" Suzan complained. "How can a leader have so much freedom compared to the other leaders? Shouldn't we all be treated as equals? We didn't even bring up anything about the changes he had made to his castle and castle walls."

Due to the many concerns that the leaders had from Bryce's announcements, they had forgotten about this matter, and it was something each of them would like to discuss as well.

"First off, Quinn as someone who has protected this settlement does now have special rights, without him most of us, if not all of us would be dead." Bryce stated. "The council and you arguing, wouldn't even exist. Just as Tempus said as well, even if we wanted him to stay, clearly Quinn does not, but if you wish to stop him, then go right ahead."

Thinking about this, Suzan knew she wouldn't be able to match up to Quinn. Maybe through a surprise attack of some sort if she could get a few needles in, but not in a duel where he was prepared. His shadow skills were just too strong.

Reluctantly, she had to give up.

"I will speak to all you leaders together." Said Bryce. "It's clear the room is divided with the decision but let me ask you. Is it the fact that you think Quinn as the Tenth leader is needed for the settlement that you are annoyed he is leaving, or the fact that he is a leader that is getting special privileges that you dislike. Because if it is the latter, then you are not thinking about what is best for the settlement."

Bryce's words had hit some of them hard as they realised that they were just being selfish. Seeing Quinn's strength they should have wanted him to stay to make the vampires stronger, but that wasn't the case at all.

"As for the second matter you brought up, I am quite interested in this as well. Quinn, we saw how effective your towers were and now it seems your defences have improved even further. I am fine with each leader keeping some extra resources or powers for themselves, but I believe this is something that could be shared with all the vampires as a whole." Bryce requested

This was something else Quinn was expecting, after seeing what his system could do and the upgrades he had made, Bryce would want it for the rest of the castles as well. However, even if Quinn wanted to help, he couldn't.

The titles he had received made it so he could only build things within a certain area, and for now that area was only within the castle.

'Maybe if I completed the quest to become a King I would get a new title. One that would open up the whole area. Sure, I'll build it all for you, but you have to let me become King. Yeah, that wouldn't go down too well.' Quinn thought.

"Unfortunately, it is something I can't do. The things that happened to the tenth castle. It was due to the past Tenth leader's ability and not mine. Left behind by Vincent. I just activated them for defensive measures but there is no way for it to be used in other places. As all resources have been used up." Quinn said, shifting the blame onto Vincent for once.

"I see, if there is nothing to be done, then we can't go any further. I hope at some point you will at least allow us to study your walls and castle so we can try to replicate it." Bryce said.

Suddenly, Kim Killton, the leader who had replaced Prima, raised her hand.

"Your majesty, about what you said earlier. Although I am a new leader I hope I am able to speak my mind. I still think that everyone is putting too much emphasis on what the Tenth leader's achievements were that day.

"Weren't all the leaders there to stop Cindy? Didn't everyone fight? Without them, wouldn't the Tenth have perished as well? I just think, with so many strong vampires the families had, including myself, the vampire settlement is giving the tenth too much glory."

The leaders who were there that day, knew how much Quinn had done, and not just him, his knights and his people. Which was why they didn't say anything, but could understand why a new leader would feel this way.

Prima wanted to interject but Bryce stopped him once more, and he saw Quinn standing up from his seat instead.

'How will you deal with this young one?' Bryce thought.

"If you want, you can test my strength out for yourself?" Quinn suggested. "I want to test out a few things myself as well. If I beat her convincingly I guess none of the new leaders will have any more doubts about me?"

It was a strange request Quinn had made, but the one who actually suggested him to do such a thing was Vincent. He knew how vampires reacted to certain things. The vote was set and this didn't need to be done, but to make sure no one touched his family and for the new leaders to understand this would be the best cause of action. He would gain respect from the new and the old.

So currently, all the leaders had moved to a large training hall in the King's castle. It was a huge room with wooden floorboards. Empty apart from the large windows on either side letting in the moonlight. On one side stood Quinn, on the other the new leader Kim, who held a rapier in her hand, the same weapon as Prima used.

"How do you think this exhibition match will go?" Muka asked, standing next to Jin.

"I think it's obvious who the winner will be, but it will be interesting to see. I heard Prima has been raising quite the talent. Maybe one day Kim will have speed that even surpasses him. If anything, her ability might make Quinn have some trouble."

Watching over the match was the Royal Knight Prima himself. Being the fastest vampire, he should be able to stop anything if something was to happen. However, even though he didn't say it to Kim, even he believed she would lose.

"The match will now begin!" Prima shouted.

Kim and Quinn were standing at opposite ends of the halls, so they found it a little strange when Kim started to stab the air from such a distance away with her thin rapier blade. The movements were fast and soon they were seeing little red dots of blood energy hovering in place.

After several attacks, she swiped her blade and all of them shot out like bullets towards Quinn. When they turned their head to see how Quinn would deal with the attack, they could see he was just walking ahead, one foot ahead of the other. When the attacks came towards him, he continued to walk.

"Look under his feet!" Jin noticed.

The shadow had spread, and it was spread far and wide, around ten meters in all directions away from Quinn. When the attack had entered the shadow's zone, straight away it raised up, stopping the attacks.

Not only that, but once the attacks were stopped by the shadow, Quinn could now move the positions of the shadows and when dropping it redirecting the attacks. He did it in a way, so the attacks would just hit the side of the walls.

'This is a good test for my powers, I can do things I never even thought of!' Quinn was excited. Before holding attacks would take up MC points as well, being able to hold and move an attack was great for Quinn.

Finally as he went forward, he used shadow equip, equipping all of his beast gear including the mask. The attacks from Kim continued, and each time the shadow would raise blocking them, she started to vary up her attacks, performing larger and more powerful blood attacks but the shadow just continued to block them all while Quinn moved slowly.

'What is with this guy, we are both leaders shouldn't our strength be similar, then why do I feel so...so..scared.' She thought.

Some were even wondering if Quinn had gotten stronger now after the fight with Cindy, and they weren't wrong.

At first, Kim wanted to weaken Quinn before diving in, but with no choice she dived in with her weapon, moving faster than ever. She stepped into the shadow, but Quinn didn't raise them, or do anything to try to slow her down.

She thrust her rapier towards his head, at a speed that would even match Prima's.

"I got you!" She shouted, but the blade was grabbed by Quinn's b.a.r.e hand at the very end. Then before she could even blink, the blade was snapped, and Quinn had grabbed her neck.

"I got you."

"The fight is over!" Prima quickly said.

The speed he had witnessed displayed by Quinn, was something he didn't even see against Cindy. They were right, Quinn had gotten stronger after the fight with Cindy. What they didn't realise was during the fight with Cindy, Quinn didn't have his beast gear due to it being taken away from him.

Now with his beast gear, his mask and added stat points, he was stronger than ever.

With everything done and no leaders now set to question him, Quinn could finally prepare to go home.

"Is there anyone else that would like to challenge him?" Bryce asked but there were no objections.

As Quinn walked past Bryce and the other leaders he paused for a second and looked at them all.

"I am a fair person, you have accepted my request and I hope you treat the tenth family better from now on. Our relationship should be one that benefits each other. Bryce, I don't know why you have supported me so much but because of that, I will tell you something.

"Something you should all hear. I don't know why, or what you all did, but Arthur is coming for you, and he aims to get rid of you all. If you want to beat him, you have to get stronger, and you can't rely on me for help."

Walking out of the training room, Quinn walked past a frozen Bryce.

Chapter 945: Preparing for the future

There were no further instructions from Bryce or the others for what Quinn could and could not do. It seemed like his request went down quite well. At least well enough to do what he wanted. Upon returning, the group was ecstatic to hear the news. They could finally go home after being here for what seemed like an eternity.

There were ups and downs with the whole group and what started off as excitement and adventure, turned into one bad mishap happening one after another. They never thought they would look forward to returning so much.

It didn't take long for those in the tenth family to make preparations. Some of them had made friends with the vampire students and were saying their goodbye's, while others were collecting a few things from their room.

In the meantime, Quinn decided to do what he could, so the tenth castle would be well protected as well, after he left. There were the castle's towers and gargoyles, and even more were built before leaving. As for other preparations, one of the first things he did was request for Logan to make sure the teleporters worked well for travelling to and from the Cursed ship.

Although Quinn also made a separate request if Logan could pull it off, the request was if they could change the destination of the teleporters at a certain point and time. Logan found it interesting, and with the new information he had learnt while studying in the vampire world, he felt like it was something he could do.

He had taken a look at the Vampire teleporters, how they differed from the ones from earth. When inputting a code it would redirect you to a different location, and Logan believed he had found out how to work it, so Quinn's request shouldn't be too hard for him.

"May I ask, why do you want to request such a thing?" Logan asked.

"Things might be going well now, but preparation is the best prevention method as they say. If there was a storming of the Tenth castle that we couldn't protect, then that would mean that whoever attacked the vampires, or even the vampires themselves would have direct access to our ship. I don't want it to be a double edged sword."

"While we are away, I want the teleporters to take them somewhere else, and when we need to use them to link up to the Cursed ship. Of course, this stays between me and you. I have already instructed Paul about this, and we will communicate to him using the masks. Worst case, maybe we could make it so it requires a code as well and only tell that code to Paul, in case communications are broken again." Quinn requested.

Just like the other leaders it was time Quinn stopped playing things by the book. There was no need for him to inform them of everything he was doing, and it honestly seemed like Bryce didn't care too much.

'I'm sure he has his own worries to deal with after what you told him.' Vincent said.
'I was afraid the old man might fall over from a heart attack.'

'Isn't it strange for you to call someone old? Anyway, I don't know whether it's a good sign or a bad sign that Arthur hasn't attacked yet, but until we find out why, the vampires deserve a chance. They're not all bad.' Quinn replied.

It didn't take long until Logan had returned with some good news. He was able to successfully accomplish Quinn's request, including that of a secret code just for Paul in emergencies.

Surfaces were flat and smooth everywhere they went, and the ground wasn't uneven as if it was something that had been built thousands of years ago. The only downside was the place seemed a bit empty, since it lacked furnishings that had been destroyed from Borden and Remus's battle.

Waiting to walk into the teleporter, it seemed there were more people returning to earth than those that had arrived. Leo and Erin had decided to come along this time. Quinn felt better about this, as he had felt awkward leaving Leo behind when he had so much he wanted to do, and even had his own goal. Now it looked like he could finally move towards it.

It was also nice to see Erin standing by Layla's side. Now with Cia gone, he would have hated for Layla to not have someone close to talk to. Quinn was just far too busy to talk to everyone like he used to in the past.

Quinn also asked if Xander, Timmy or Amy would have liked to come along, and although they said they would like to someday, they didn't want to leave the vampire world just yet.

They would do so after things had calmed down in both worlds.

With everyone ready, there were those who stood opposite them giving them a send off, who were the vampire students and vampires that were trained under Leo. It almost looked like they had tears in their eyes as they gave their two teachers a big goodbye.

On top of this, there was Paul, Ashley and a few of the other soldier vampires.

"Quinn, I know I haven't said this much to you, but thank you." Paul said. "After going through what we all went through this time, I can imagine how tough it must have been for you to even get them to spare our lives." He said bowing down.

"No Paul, you are also doing me a favour by staying behind here. You have proven that you are someone who I can trust, and the only thing I hope is that you treat all those in the tenth as well as you do your men." Said Quinn.

The reason for Quinn's words were because he respected Paul's decision to stay behind with his men. This was something that didn't actually need to be done. Bryce never made it a request. Of course it was better for a Vampire Knight to stay behind. Especially if matters got out of hand, and for a leader to give them orders.

However, for Paul to volunteer this position, it felt like he had decided in his own way to help Quinn and his own people.

"I hope this time when you return, it won't be as disastrous as the last." Paul said with a smile, one of the rare times Quinn had seen it on his face.

"Huh, yeah, maybe the Dalki have attacked earth this time or something." Peter said.

"Please, don't jinx it. I'm a little tired." Layla replied.

Everyone gave Paul a salute for what he was doing, and a wave goodbye as they entered the teleporter back to earth.

At the same time, Bryce had gone to a castle, however it wasn't the King's castle he was in. Instead he was in the First castle, and a meeting had been called.

Standing at the front, Bryce had his head held down as if he was full of thoughts and turmoil. Standing in front of him were the vampires that he had invited over to have a meeting, but they weren't just any vampires. Suzan, Muscat, Prima, Kyle and Jill were all there with him.

"I believe you all know why I have called you all here today." Bryce said, gripping his fist. The others didn't say a word, but they had sweat running down their faces as they thought about what was about to come.

"If what Quinn had said is true, it means Arthur has found out the truth. I don't know when, but we must prepare for his return, and make sure we come out of this alive." Said Bryce.

End of Arc five

Chapter 946: An invitation

The latest ship created by the military, the Big Bertha, sleek in style and design while also being practical for warfare. Made of the strongest light material possible Glathrium. Only allowing them to create eight of these in existence. Although now only seven of them belonged to the military.

After the Civil War had ended, being on the cautious side, the Supreme Commander Oscar decided to utilise these ships. Two of the Bertha's were placed on the North and South Pole of earth, rotating around it as a protective measure.

The space station that would teleport one to the beast planet solar system had to be limited to one station. The other stations were closed down and it was agreed that the Graylash family and Cursed family would have equal rights to use the station at any point and time.

The rule was made as a precaution, they were sure the Dalki had their eyes on the humans. They thought that an attack would happen at any moment. That's why the rest of the remaining Berthas, including their fleets of ships, were sent out on the edge of the beast planets that they had owned.

What they couldn't do was just because they felt like war was upon them, was back down and stop hunting for the beast crystals. They were essential for powering items for war, on top of getting their people the beast gear they needed.

If the humans were to leave the area, or have it unprotected, the Dalki could easily take over the planets. Defending was always a lot easier than attacking.

The military was now mainly responsible for protection, education and training. While the Graylash and Cursed family were the two families that were out on the beast planets who were constantly hunting for crystals. Sharing a percentage of what they found and sending it back to the military.

For whatever reason, the Dalki never attacked, and they were allowing the humans to recover and stay in place from the war. Now on earth, Oscar stood there with a large grin on his face, for the project that they had been working on was finally complete.

"We have made a lot of mistakes in the past, I'm surprised the whole human race didn't collapse when Truedream disappeared. I hope we can make things better this time. Did you send out the invitations like I asked?"

"Yes, Commander, I'm hoping to get a reply from them soon. We should know what their decision is before the starting date."

Inside the Cursed ship, Megan had her head slumped down on top of the command center table. Her hair was frazzled and she was unmoving. The sound of the doors opening made her move her head slightly up and one could now see the bags under her eyes.

Seeing who had entered, there was a spring in her step as she got out from her seat.

"Helen, thank you so much for helping me out all the time." Megan said, grabbing her two hands. "I'm starting to know why you and the Daisy faction were so popular."

"It's okay, I'm just completing my duties as asked." Helen replied. "I must thank Quinn as well. Some families after completing a deal like so would have treated us like slaves, or as lesser beings once joining, but Quinn allowed us to pretty much to operate the way we usually do, just under the Cursed faction name."

While Quinn was away, Megan, one of the heads of the old Crow faction, was left in charge. After all, nearly every single high ranking member of the Cursed faction had gone off had gone off on a mission. There really wasn't much choice, but someone had to be left in charge especially after the position the cursed family had achieved.

However, the faction was no longer small and there were multiple things that needed to be done. What Megan thought was just looking after those on the Cursed ship, soon became a much bigger task. Communicating with the other two families, on top of the smaller factions that had joined under the Cursed faction and even down to sorting out the forging, buying and selling process.

She was starting to realise just how much Sam did around the place. He was always busy in the command room, not training like the others, and now she realised he just didn't have the time.

Thankfully, Helen having led one of the largest factions Daisy, she had a lot of experience. When she had come to visit the Cursed ship one day. This was due to receiving a strange order. One asking them to forge new weapons and equipment.

She didn't think Quinn or the others would be that stupid to turn such a powerful faction into a bunch of forgers, who had no experience. So, she decided to visit and found a frantic Megan not being able to handle any of the pressure at all.

"Speaking of, I wonder how long your leader and the others will be on their little trip for, it's been a while hasn't it?" Helen asked.

Suddenly, Megan started to fidget as she had told a small little lie. Saying that Quinn and the others had discovered a Demon tier beast, which was what they were currently out exploring at the moment.

This was an understandable excuse for those in the Cursed as well as those outside the Cursed. However, a few moments later, one of the computer terminals inside the command room started to light up.

"Miss, we have a signal from a teleporter in one of the training rooms!" A member shouted.

"The training rooms, I don't remember there being any Tele-" At that moment she realised that it meant they had finally returned.

Inside the personal training room, Quinn and everyone else had finally gotten through the portal and had arrived back at the Cursed ship.

"Oh sweet metal ground!" Alex cheered as he started to kiss the floor. He never thought he would miss the bright lights and metallic floor of the ship, but he was so ecstatic.

"I mean I'm happy I returned but I'm not that crazy about it?" Nate whispered over to Sam.

"I don't think you're the best person to talk about other people's strange tendencies. Besides he went through a lot being taken away, and having to be hidden. It was a good thing they claimed that the blood fairy was planted by Jill and Cindy." Sam replied.

When Kazz had returned with Fex and Silver, she had informed them of what they had planned to do with Alex. The explanation given to the other leaders was that when Cindy had attacked the Tenth family, they had planted a blood fairy that they created there in order to frame Quinn.

However, an order from Bryce was given. That Alex, the real blood fairy, was never ever to set foot in the vampire world again, which he was more than happy to comply with.

'We finally made it back.' Quinn said looking around the training room and at everyone's happy faces. He could tell what they were feeling because he felt the same way. It was similar to when one went on holiday for a long time and returned to their comfy home.

What he started to think about though, was the tasks he still had left here and what to do now he was one of the world leaders. It was natural to prepare for war with the Dalki but there were other things.

Exploring Paul's request to turn him and his people back into humans, Quinn thought back to Chris. One of the members of Pure. How he was able to make it so the red energy didn't consume him. Perhaps with enough Qi control, something else could be done as well. Separating the two energies completely from one's body.

Then, Quinn saw Sil's back as he exited the room not really talking to anyone. The only people Sil talked to were Quinn and Borden, and Quinn didn't talk to him much these days. It seems like Sil was still greatly depressed about losing Vorden and Raten. To the point where he hardly spoke to Quinn now.

Now with a large fleet it might be possible to try and find someone who had an ability that could help them.

Thinking about that, reminded Quinn of Hilston and the Blade island. The Blade island was located on Earth. Knowing now how much of a threat Hilston was, Quinn wondered if they were still there, if Hilston was still out there somewhere planning his move. It was a worry because this time, they didn't have Arthur.

There was also the search for Richard Eno and Jim Eno, with Logan. Although they couldn't do anything about this because they no longer had any clues or hints of his whereabouts.

The problem with all the things Quinn needed to do, was he had no information. He knew nothing about Pure or how to find Chris, didn't know if there was an ability to help out Sil, didn't know Hilston's whereabouts nor the Eno family.

'If I really can't progress I guess we could do one thing?' Quinn thought.

What he was thinking about was at least making himself stronger. With Logan's new device they could search for Demon tier beasts on other planets, but was wondering if they were ready to take on such a thing. Even with a thousand MC points, it would still be a struggle.

Exiting the ship, an announcement was made to everyone and a welcoming party was thrown in the main reception hall of the large ship. Everyone was full of smiles and more, and this time it didn't seem like anything serious happened to the world after their return.

It looked like those from the Cursed were just happy to see them. Leo and Erin were introduced as new members as well, but not just any members, as Quinn made sure they got the respect they deserved and announced them as part of the Cursed Leaders.

After that, the music and food began.

'I like this,' Quinn thought.

"Hey, this is great right?" Sam asked.

The two of them stood towards the side of a room by a table. Quinn stood next to all the great food but was unable to eat any of it.

"I want it to be like this all the time." Quinn said.

"Well it is for us, so you have accomplished a lot already Quinn. Sometimes I think you just need to be told that. You always seem to be rushing from one thing into the next, bulldozing your way forward."

"Trust me, that's not me, just everything was moving so quickly around me all the time." Said Quinn.

"I guess you're right, because something else has come up as well. I don't mean to ruin your fun, but once this party is over, I think we need to talk. There was a message from Oscar which I think you'll find pretty interesting, and it's up to you what you want to do." Sam said, giving a wink.

'A message, what could it be about?'

Chapter 947: On my own

The party was a big hit, and it allowed everyone who was part of the Cursed faction, to have a good well deserved rest. There weren't many times they could celebrate things that happened in this harsh world, so they took advantage of it, and made sure to make it count. It looked like Quinn and his group weren't the only ones keeping busy. The faction members had been as well, constantly going out on quests keeping up with trade and more.

What seemed to go down well at the party most, was the alcohol, as those that had been turned into vampires found out that their taste buds for this were practically the same as before. Finally, it was something that they could enjoy from their human life.

Looking around the room, they could see a red faced Nate, trying to talk to a few girls in the faction. Most of those that were turned seemed to handle their alcohol well, better than when they were human, so based on Nate's condition he had either drunken a large amount, hoping he could build up the courage to talk to the girls or he was just one of those that couldn't handle their drink well, even as a vampire.

"I would have thought with our healing abilities it wouldn't let us get drunk, but it looks like I was proven wrong," Quinn commented.

Hearing this, Sam could see who he was talking about.

"I'll keep an eye on him and the others, make sure they don't spill the beans on our big secret. Although, maybe they will just think it's drunk talk. Have a rest for tonight and we can talk about it tomorrow." Sam said, rushing off and trying his best to get his friend away from the girls.

"Sam, my wing man! Come on and tell these girls how great I am." Nate could be heard saying in the background. Rather than Sam pulling him away, it looked like Nate had pulled him in instead.

"Wait a minute, you're not drunk at all, are you just pretending!?" Sam shouted back.

'Our secret huh, can we really just hide it forever with how involved we are in everything?' Quinn thought. 'The Cursed faction are now the centre of attention, someone is bound to find out about it one day.'

'And if they do, then you can deal with it as you have done most of your problems.' Vincent said. 'As Sam said you have done well.'

Heading on over, Quinn decided that he wanted to talk to Megan for a short while. The centre of the Hall was being used as a dancing space, with food and drink placed around the edges. It reminded Quinn of the prom videos he would see in old movies, although it was something he never had, as prom had been stopped in his time and age.

Instead, when you turned sixteen and finished school, you were chartered to military school instead.

'Better times.'

Behind the tables of food there were also seats and a few tables, and on one table in particular there were a few girls sitting down along with Megan, but it wasn't the girls he was familiar with. Helen, her two sisters were sitting along with her.

"Do you mind if I take a seat?" Quinn asked, pulling one of the chairs back.

"Please Quinn, you don't have to ask." Megan said, as she couldn't help but stare at Quinn's face as he went to sit down. She had to often remind herself that this young looking man was actually a young adult, who was hardly eighteen.

However, his facial features and his handsome charming good looks were hard to ignore. It was even more picture perfect than celebrities. She was sure that if she saw Quinn in person, there would be sponsors all over the place wanting to grab him to advertise their beauty products.

All of this was even without using any of his Charm skills. It was through Quinn's evolutions.

'He's far too young for you Megan, and besides you have Dennis, where is Dennis?' She wondered and soon saw that he was on the dance floor having a little wiggle with Linda.

A deep fire started to burn in her chest.

"All men are scum." She blurted out.

"I'm sorry, did I do something to offend you?'" Quinn said. "I can leave, if you want me too."

Realising the words she was meant to say in her head had come out of her mouth instead, she felt extremely embarrassed, and her cheeks were getting redder by the second.

"No, Quinn I-"

"Don't worry about her," Helen said. "It just seems like her man is being taken by another woman over there."

Turning around, Quinn could see who they were talking about. It was Linda and Dennis. The two of them had always been close due to Blip being best friends with Dennis. After Blip's death they didn't spend much time together.

'Did they get closer in the castle together?' Quinn wondered.

"It's normal to feel this way." Quinn said. "I'm just glad you weren't turning into Cindy."

"Who's Cindy?" Megan asked.

"Oh, don't worry just someone I met while I was away. Anyway, the reason I came over here was I wanted to thank you for everything you did. I know it must have been hard." Quinn said.

"Oh no, please I had so much help from Helen here. She is the real superstar." She replied, grabbing her shoulders. "This is the one you need to say thank you to."

"Thank you, both of you." Quinn said with a gentle smile.

While at the table, the group started talking a little bit more. Quinn asked Megan to give him a small update on what had happened so far while they were away. With Helen here, he thought it would be good to be caught up as well.

Apparently not much had happened. The Dalki hadn't attacked, there had been a few scuffles with humans here and there on a few beast planets, but that always happened now and then anyway.

"Do you really have to talk about work right now?" Helen said, taking a sip of her drink. "I know you're the leader and everything, but you're not even eighteen yet, you should live a little. Do you even have a girlfriend, sometimes you just need to let out some stress?"

That's when Quinn noticed that he had soured the girl's moods. They looked to be having such a good time at the party drinking away. He had only come over to thank Megan but somehow the conversation moved onto the matter at hand.

"I'm sorry," Quinn said standing up. "I think I should let everyone have their fun."

And before the others could say anything, Quinn was no longer in the party room. No matter how hard others looked, they couldn't find him anywhere.

"Crap, Helen, did you really have to say that to him? I'm sure he's quite sensitive for his age." Megan replied.

"But, I was generally interested in the boy. Someone who has good looks like him, and is one of the leaders of the world. If he really wanted to, he could get anyone he wished." Helen said, thinking about Quinn a little more.

The reason why no one was able to find Quinn for the rest of the night, was because he had used the skill, shadow lock on himself. Of course he wanted to have fun, doing certain things, going out on dates. However, whenever he would think about those things his mind would always start to wonder.

He thought, 'couldn't I be doing something to better myself right now'. The reason why he enjoyed the game power fighters was because he felt like he was learning something from it and progressing his goal, but with other games or dates, he could just imagine his time would be better spent improving for what was to come.

'Don't worry Quinn, you're a vampire now.' Vincent said. 'Humans think this way because they have a short life span. They need to fit everything they can into that lifespan. I understand you more than the others. You have plenty of time now that you're a vampire. When everything is done, then you can have your fun.'

Although Vincent was trying to cheer him up, he didn't like that Vincent was comparing him more to a vampire than a human.

It was at that point he realised that Quinn always considered himself half and half. As a human who was turned into a vampire, but that wasn't the case at all. Quinn wasn't a dhampir like Erin. Her hair had returned blonde now she was amongst other humans and didn't need blood nor was affected by the daylight.

Quinn was a full fledged vampire, who used to be human.

'When Quinn had eventually gotten out from the shadow lock, he found that the party had ended. There was no one around and he was left on his own.

'If I live my life as a vampire forever Vincent, is this what it will feel like? Will I see everyone I care about grow old and leave me.'

For a brief moment, Quinn was understanding why Vincent had chosen to become human and possibly why Vampires in the end decided to go into eternal slumber.

Thinking about this, Quinn feared for the end.

Chapter 948: A date

It was the next day and the first thing that was on the agenda, was a meeting between the leaders of the Cursed faction. Heading across the bridge and over to the command centre, Quinn could see Sam standing there with a tablet in his hand. While the others sat all around the large circular holographic displaying machine.

"I expected to see you all here with a headache, or hangover but you all seem to be doing fine." Quinn commented.

"Yeah, it seems like alcohol doesn't really affect us like it used to." Nate blurted out.

Nearly everyone at the table had turned their heads towards Nate, because today there were some others at the table that were unaware of their secret.

For one, there was Megan, one of the only Cursed leaders that was still a human and also it looked like Helen from the Daisy faction had been invited along as well. She had stayed for the party, and had stayed for the night too. It looked like Sam must have invited her along.

Clearing his throat, Sam began the presentation as he usually would, once Quinn had sat down.

"As you know we have been away for a while, and I hope everyone had a good time last night, but we have to remind everyone of our goals and what we plan to do next as a faction and group."

Sam went on to update everyone of the events in the human world and how the communication between, what was now deemed as the three world leaders had gotten better. The Graylash family, the Cursed faction, as well as the military, all were working together now, and we're collaborating more and more.

"The reason why I have called Helen here today, is because I think it's important that we should give recognition where recognition is due. There are quite a few factions now under the Cursed faction name, including Daisy. Helen has done a great job in coordinating between them in order to get resources and any help needed.

"She has also suggested that there be a meeting between faction leaders once a month in order to bring everyone closer together."

From the way Sam was speaking, the idea sounded similar to what giant corporations would do. There were several smaller companies under one big one with different departments. Once in a while they would have a meeting in order to make sure everyone was doing their own part, in their own way all towards the same goal.

Next, Sam allowed Helen to speak a little and she started to talk about the accomplishments that the factions had achieved.

"We have stumbled across quite a few legendary tier beasts on our planet search, although have seen no Demi-god or Demon tier beasts. If we did anyway, I have asked the group to report back to us, since they are a high risk for our faction." Daisy reported. "For the legendary crystals, we have kept them so the leaders in the Cursed faction can get the best gear first."

"You don't need to worry about that." Quinn said, interrupting her midway. "The Daisy faction worked hard for the legendary tier beast crystals. I'm sure some blood was spilt and maybe even some lives were lost. For you to hand them over to us, it just feels wrong."

"While you guys are out on the front lines getting crystals, it is more important that they protect themselves first before thinking about us. Improve your gear, to improve the chance of you surviving, and in turn get more crystals. Then you can hand over whatever you have spare to us." Quinn said.

Everyone nodded in agreement because they thought what Quinn had said made sense. This was the advantage of having people in the faction that had climbed up the ranks themselves. Everyone at that table had been in a hunt and knew how tough it was.

For a second, Helen had lost her train of thought and just looked at Quinn.

"If I don't take my chance now, I may never know when it will come." Helen said not breaking eye contact away from Quinn. It looked quite fierce and the others were unsure if she was about to climb over the table and attack him. "I would like to ask you out on a date whenever you are free. Remember what I said before? Sometimes you need some free time to do things like this."

Everyone was stunned from what they had just heard. Helen was quite a strong person that wasn't used to taking orders. It was why she had made a faction trying to rise to the top herself not wanting to take orders from any of the other families.

However, the major shock was the fact that she had said these words in front of everyone during a meeting.

'How could she..' Layla thought, as she could hear her heart thumping louder than her thoughts. 'Isn't she shy, with all these people looking around. How could she say that? I haven't even..'

Now, what everyone was more curious about, was just what exactly Quinn's answer would be.

Clearing his throat, and making sure no one could read his facial expressions, he gave a reply.

"We can see if I have some time, at some point." Quinn said.

After his reply, Helen sat back down in her seat and continued as normal.

"Well, that was definitely interesting huh. I can tell you for sure that wasn't planned in the meeting or run past me." Sam said, trying to crack a joke to break the current atmosphere but he was never really good at those things.

"Now, let's move onto the main reason why I called you all today." Pressing a button on his tablet, the holographic display started to form something in front of everyone's eyes. A giant building started to emerge with a large circular design and square shaped buildings.

The design was modern, with lots of glass to let light in, while also being practical as they had bridges connecting from building to building. It was hard to get a scale of the size of the building until they could see the model humans walking through it.

It was bigger than any university they had seen in the past and looked like a miniature city.

"This is what the military has been working on for a while now and they say it's finally complete. What you are all looking at is the newly designed military school." Said Sam.

"A military school, but that thing is nearly as big as one of the military bases, never mind the school. I even thought the schools there were big." Nate said, amazed.

"You're right, this is a really big school but there is a reason for that. Rather than have eight military schools like before, now they only have one. I think you all remember the inter-base tournament, or at least have seen it broadcasted for those of you that are a little older." Sam mentioned, knowing there were those that had never attended one.

"The new military school has been built where the first military base was located. Now, the eight bases have been condensed into one. From what I have learnt most of the forces have moved along with it as well."

"The students themselves will be placed into nine groups which will be linked to their military group counterparts. These military groups are controlled by nine head generals now. Sounds strange right, why decrease the base but then increase the head generals. This is all due to Oscar's plan to collaborate with the Graylash family and the cursed family more."

"In these nine groups, three of them will actually be directly controlled by one of the three great powers. The Cursed faction, the Graylash family, and what is now known as the Earthian group, which was formerly the military.

"The idea is for the students in each of these groups to be placed under one of them randomly as a House. This will be used for sporting events and competition like the inter base tournament. When they graduate they are free to decide which group they would like to go to." Sam explained.

It was interesting and Sam felt like he could go on and on about the details and the plans for this project, yet everyone there started to notice something. For some reason, Sam was focused on the students more than anything, rather than the military group themselves.

"So why are you telling us all this, and what exactly does Oscar want from us? Other than looking after some of those in the military?" Quinn asked.

"Well, there are a few things. First, Oscar wants three members of the cursed faction to act as head general. They will be in charge of three of these groups linked to the Cursed faction. The Graylash family will do the same. This way, there is not one power that is greater than the other. Even in the military. Making it, so the military is more of one singular group but three forces.

"As for the second thing, he recommends that we send someone there as a teacher as well. The head general or whatever position he decides to give us, can also become teachers, but the reason I was telling you all of this was because, Quinn. I think it might be a good idea if you became a teacher for a while."

Chapter 949: A teacher

What was being suggested by Sam, was a thought that hadn't once crossed Quinn's mind. 'Become a teacher?'

Kids had certain dreams growing up, but Quinn being someone who had always hated school and the teachers around him that ignored everything that happened, never thought he would be put in such a position where he could become one.

Quinn himself was soon to only become eighteen and be considered an a.d.u.l.t by the world. It was strange to even think of himself as a teacher, and besides, he had more important pressing things to do. So why would he need to waste his time with this?

"I can tell what you're thinking, Quinn, but you should hear me out before you make up your mind. The meeting for everyone else is dismissed. If there is anything you would like to request, feel free to run it past me, and then I can run it past Quinn." Sam said, and soon after, everyone had left the room quite quickly.

They wanted to know the reason as well, why Sam thought it was best for Quinn to take on this role, but if he said the others shouldn't be there, they probably had an idea of what the reason could be.

For once, Linda was shoving Nate out of the room, even though he wanted to stay.

Eventually, the only two left around the table were Sam and Quinn, and Quinn had moved, so now the two of them could talk side by side.

"Look, you don't have to worry too much about the teaching part of this. There are plenty of courses you could choose where you could help them out. Combat courses, for one. You're better than any of the teachers that ever taught us hand to hand combat. Or if you wanted to, maybe you could teach them how to use Qi. I'm sure Oscar wouldn't be against that idea, after seeing what Pure could do with it." Sam suggested.

Quinn hadn't thought about that. Teaching the new generation Qi would certainly give them more chances against the Dalki. If everyone had it, then Pure would no longer have an advantage.

Pure was already advertising Qi to the world, so more people would choose to join their side, so maybe they could do the same.

"This can't be the only reason. I know you better than this Sam, come on, spill it all out." Quinn asked.

"Well, there are a few points. For one, with you there, I think you will see firsthand if the military has changed its ways. See if they align with your goals. Don't you want to change the way the system works? To do that, the best way is to learn how it works, and being part of the system is a good first hand experience.

"Also, do you remember I told you how students would later select which group they would like to join after the military ends? Well, out of all of those, the Cursed faction is the newest and not the most popular. The only reason we have people joining us now is due to the Daisy faction's popularity. The students that have no choice will be sent out the Cursed fanfiction. People like you Quinn, with no ability.

"I saw you use that strange power against Cindy. When you used all of our shadows. The time limit seemed kind of short. The only thing I can guess is because the shadow you borrowed from us wasn't enough. Maybe you can find some students that could learn the shadow.

"We don't know if the shadow is a vampire only ability, and you can't use your shadow eater skill on non vampire subjects, but if you can find more people that can learn the shadow, then you can borrow the powers from those around you a lot more," Sam explained.

Although Quinn now had a lot more MC points, he understood where Sam was coming from. On top of that, he was sure Arthur, with his thousands of years of being a punisher, still had a larger amount.

With the enhanced soul weapon, Quinn could use the shadow just as much as Arthur could, but not for the same amount of time.

"I understand, and honestly, what you're saying doesn't sound too bad, but my worry is about the other things that need to be done. I feel like I can't just waste my time being a teacher, and maybe someone else could do this." Quinn replied.

"You don't have to worry. If you were to get a role, it would be as head general. Of course, your real title and rank are higher than that, but this is just for the sake of positions within the military groups. Do you remember Paul? I bet you hardly ever saw him during your time at school. It was the same for our military head, and It could be the same for you.

"If you have to deal with other matters, they will just get a substitute for you in the meantime. And if you worry about your position affecting how people will treat you, don't worry about that too much. The broadcast from the match you had when you became one of the major powers, you don't even look the same as that little twerp from before.

"I don't even think anyone would recognise you," Sam said.

It was true that there was quite the jump in appearance from when Quinn was a vampire Nobel to vampire lord, and he had also changed his hairstyle. People didn't recognise Quinn unless he mentioned it to them. So to the outside, and others, they didn't know what he looked like.

However, the shadow powers and blood abilities would be a giveaway, but with a bunch of students, would he ever need to use them?

"So, I would be assigned as head general of one of the nine groups, and become a teacher. Doing all the things you mentioned, but have the freedom to come and go as I please?" Quinn said, and Sam nodded.

When it was put as simply as that, it really didn't sound like there was any downside to it at all.

"Of course, we would need people to fill up the other positions to run the school, to support you, so you wouldn't be on your own. They have even said we can send anyone there as students. I was sometimes thinking teacher's miss the things that happen in school, so we could send a few of our own in the Cursed family as students. It will also help your scouting job a little easier."

After debating internally for a while, there was something that drew him to the position more than others. It was the fact that he could see how the new school worked. His end goal was changing the system.

The Dalki were indeed a threat, but Quinn wasn't so sure people's lives could just change once the war was over. At the same time, he started to think back to when he was in school. Sam was right. Teachers did miss a lot of things that happened, and who knows if they were other teachers like Duke in charge of the other groups.

Oscar didn't seem like a bad person, based on Quinn's impression of him, but even he didn't know everything that went on. Lastly, Quinn was lucky to have a teacher like Leo there, one that he really needed.

"A teacher huh, I guess it doesn't sound too bad," Quinn said, agreeing to Sam's proposition.

Now, they just needed to decide who would be coming with him.

Chapter 950: Taking along

Walking around the Cursed ship, Quinn wondered who would be best to take along with him to the school. It was quite the head scratcher for a few reasons. There were a few positions that needed to be filled up.

Three head generals, taking charge of three military groups, one of them being Quinn himself. These would have the most and at the same time the least responsibility. According to Sam, they were more like a figurehead. Although they genuinely could be used in time of need.

'Paul and Helen would have been good for these types of things, even Sam, but they're already far too busy.' Quinn thought. Since Paul was already a head general and Helen was the leader of a large faction.

Thinking about it more, he wondered if bringing Helen was a good idea anyway, but she would have gotten the wrong idea if he did so. Perhaps she would force him to go on that date that he partially agreed to earlier.

'Why did you agree to that date?' Vincent asked.

'I didn't agree, I just came up with an excuse. When will I have time to do such things?' Quinn replied back and continued to think of who else he could bring along.

Other than those positions, as head general, Quinn could really bring along anyone from the Cursed ship he liked and just give them a position of sergeant or even as a student. The main thing was that they shouldn't currently be too busy or their task essential to something else, like Sam.

'It would be nice if we could bring everyone back together again.' Quinn thought, and with this in his mind, Quinn decided to visit one of the few people that he had first met while he was at military school.

This led him to one of the break rooms on the ship. There was plenty of space on the ship, and a lot of rooms were empty. Still, they couldn't just turn every large empty room into a training room, so they decided to renovate one into a breakroom.

Here there were pool tables, the block block game, as well as a little bar area for ordering drinks and sitting down and talking. What brought him to such a place was because he was here to find Layla, and he could see her sitting along with Eirin, who was covered in sweat.

'Did they just come out of training or something?'

Quinn thought as the two of them saw him and waved him over, it looked like for a second, Erin was about to leave to let the two of them be alone, but Layla quickly tugged on her sleeve, bringing her back down.

"Please stay." She said,

Even though Quinn had heard these words, he chose to ignore them and continued walking.

'Did I do something to annoy her?' Quinn thought.

But he continued on anyway and thought he would just try to be extra nice if he had done something.

"I know we haven't gotten much chance to talk, Layla, but I wanted to ask you something," Quinn said, as he continued to explain what Sam's plan was and what he was planning to do.

"So the reason why I came over to the both of you, was because I was thinking of getting the old group back together. I thought it would be nice, all of us that were once students to return now as teachers." Quinn said, in a happy tone, but realised that the two girls weren't reciprocating the same feelings back.

"I have bad memories of that place, Quinn. Unlike all of you that carried on to live a joyous life without me." Erin replied. "Besides, I think you should talk to Leo before talking to us. It sounded like he had something planned, and Layla and I were hoping to go along."

Quinn turned to look towards Layla, who could barely make eye contact and just nodded along. Realising that he couldn't convince the girls, unless he had talked to Leo, he decided that this would be his next destination.

Leo didn't know much of the crew on the Cursed ship, and he hardly knew the others. At the same time, it didn't seem like many would talk to him, but Quinn knew where Leo would be. For Quinn had given him access to his personal training room, and ever since it felt like it no longer was his anymore and now was permanently Leo's.

'I don't mind anyway. I can always use the shadow lock if I want to get somewhere where no one will disturb me.'

Entering the room, Quinn was right. He could see Leo sitting down, meditating and practising as he usually did.

"Quinn, I thought you would come to see me eventually," Leo said, and Quinn went ahead and sat down opposite him.

It reminded Quinn of the first time he had learnt Qi from Leo. Quinn went ahead and briefly explained the situation to Leo, and waited for a reply.

"I see. I think Sam is a great person to have by your side. He is knowledgeable and thinks for not only your best interest but the whole group as well. If you continue to follow his advice, you will achieve what you truly d.e.s.i.r.e, Quinn." Leo said.

"But, if your request is for me to come back to being a teacher, I can not. I simply don't think you need me there. I joined before because I thought it was something I could do to help the future generation. I believe you are now more suited for that position.

"While for me, I have something else I want to achieve."

Quinn thought that this might be the case when Erin and Layla had brought something up.

"Do you plan to try to find the high ranking members of Pure?" Quinn asked.
"Layla and Erin said they would be coming with you."

"I haven't forced Quinn. This is your choice at the end of the day. Honestly, if you give a reason why you think they shouldn't, or you didn't even want me to go, then we will comply with your request, but you who believes in freedom, I don't think would do that."

Leo was right, If it was something they chose to do, as long as they knew the risks, then he would allow them to go, but Quinn just wished he could go with them.

"Leo, I trust you to look after them, but this time I want to be there as well. Pure is a dangerous group. They have a lot of strong people, I'm sure you know. Before you take any action, I want you to report back to me, and I will come and help. While you're on your search, I also want you to bring one of the shadow users with you. That way I can come to you at any time."

"I don't want to go on another rescue mission for you guys. We have been on far too many of those already." Quinn said, thinking about everything that happened.

"Well, neither do we. I assure you. We will inform you as soon as there is any problem at all. With your shadow powers, as long as there is one that can be used at the school, the Cursed ship, and with us, you will be able to go to all three positions at once, so don't worry about that."

Leaving the conversation there, it was just more people that Quinn couldn't take along with him to the school. He started to think about Logan as well, but his use was far more suited on the ship as well, same with Alex.

After racking his brain long and hard, Quinn finally decided who would be coming with him back to school.

"These guys!" Sam said, shaking his head slightly and placing his hand on his forehead. "Are you sure, Quinn?"

"I don't see what is wrong with them?" Quinn replied. "Besides, it's the best choice I have. I'm sure these are the ones I want to take with me."

Chapter 951: My Choices

Sam thought leaving Quinn to decide who to take with him should have been fine. After all, Quinn was actually a good decision maker when it came to certain things. Sure Sam disagreed with his decisions at times and would have done things differently, but Quinn seemed to have this intuition style of leading that got them out of the worst of situations.

There were times that even Sam wouldn't have known how to deal with such things and Quinn's quick thinking would have helped them. Whether or not Sam would have gotten into such a dire situation in the first place was a different story, but people were different.

Still, none of this changed the fact that Sam didn't understand Quinn's reasoning to bring these people along with him.

"Can I please ask, why them? I mean.. yeah please Quinn?" Sam had to ask.

"Do you have a problem with me?" Peter said, looking at him while tilting his head a little to the side. His eyes looked like if Sam said anything, he would come over there and give him a slap at the back of the head.

"Peter is plenty strong, and his ability is extremely helpful in certain situations. We are no longer in the vampire world where they can smell he isn't one of them. If anything is going on, or we need to dive further to find out information, Peter will be our guy." Quinn answered.

Looking at Peter, he was nodding along to every word Quinn would say and kind of looked a little smug, hiding a slight smile.

"Peter, don't take this the wrong way, but don't you think he's a little aggressive. Are you planning to make him a teacher, or a head general?" Said Sam.

"I think Peter will do better than you think, his current difficult personality has been getting better with time. Also, he has this intuition where he can spot when something is wrong. You have to give him credit where credit is due. Peter was the first one to call out Cindy." Said Quinn.

"That's right, and this time if my intuition starts to ring, I'll slap them before anyone gets hurt." Peter said while doing the action of a punch instead.

Seeing this, Sam couldn't help but shake his head.

"Don't worry, Peter has a calm side." Quinn whispered to him. "If he was really quick to anger or aggressive then he wouldn't be able to teach the kids from the Blade island. He'll make a good head general."

"Okay, I'll give you a pass on the ability side of things, especially with his soul weapon, it means he isn't the one that needs to do the snooping. So explain to me, why you're taking one of the strongest humans with you. A lot of people saw him on the broadcast it will be hard hiding him." Sam said, looking towards Sil.

"Sil, never got to experience school properly." Quinn said in a softer tone as he lowered his voice. "I want Sil to get to know others, without an environment where they have to worry about their lives, or betray their friends. Also, new abilities are being discovered all the time and he's one of the best people to find them."

"Hopefully Sil might be able to find someone that can help him achieve his goal. Don't worry about his appearance, it's one of the reasons Peter is coming along as well. With the 'Mud Mask' soul weapon, we can change that for him. So I've decided that Sil will be attending as a student."

Looking at Sil, Sam noticed that he seemed quite nervous. He wasn't sure if he was only doing this because it was Quinn's request. Although Quinn might have not noticed it, Sil listened to Quinn a lot and would nearly do everything he asked. Even despite them not talking as much these days.

"Well, I mean my worry is that Sil is one of the strongest people in existence. Especially around so many ability users, having him as a student you won't be able to keep an eye on him all the time." Sam explained.

However, Quinn wanted Sil to get better, there was a chance Vorden and Raten would never be brought back, and somehow Quinn needed him to get out of this rut.

"Don't worry about that, I have thought of that as well." Quinn replied.

Finally, they moved onto the last three people Quinn had brought with him.

Sam looked at this person confused for a few seconds. It was a male who looked quite plain. He didn't have any memorable features on his face, he had a normal short styled haircut that was within time and he looked like a plain guy.

"Who even is this guy!" Sam blurted out, realising he was losing it a little. He felt like his brain cells were weakening as he couldn't figure out Quinn's decision making, but found out that everything he said made sense.

"This is Bucky!" Quinn said as he held out his hand introducing him.

"Chucky," The man corrected Quinn.

"Chucky? You're taking someone with you whose name you don't even know?" Said Sam.

"Well, he will also be attending as a student and will be looking over Sil. I plan to have them attend the same class. Sil's main weakness is he needs an ability to copy, you know why he can't do so with the others, so that's why I have brought Chucky along as well. I also picked him because he doesn't stand out so much. I mean it's almost as if this guy has a second ability." Quinn answered quite proudly.

"And next you're going to tell me you brought the troublemaker along just to make your life harder?" Sam said bluntly, looking at Fex.

"No, Fex I brought along because I just wanted someone by my side." Quinn said quite seriously. "I want people I trust. Fex and I share some good memories at school with each other, and I want to make more. Honestly, I wanted everyone who I used to go to school with to come as well. I thought maybe it would serve as a good break after everything we've been through, but they seem to be a bit busy."

Now Sam was starting to understand Quinn a bit more. Although the reasons did make sense, it was pushing it a little. There were better candidates such as Linda and Dennis to take over the role of head general. Both of these had experience leading factions.

They would be able to spot talent within the students and the military and if something was to occur they would also be able to lead them. That's when Sam realised, he had brought Sil, Peter and Fex. Sil was a replacement for Vorden back then.

However, Erin and Layla had refused due to helping out Leo. Quinn just wanted to take everyone back to those times.

Finally, they had moved on to the last person.

"And what about....Actually I think this is a good choice, but I didn't think you would pick her?" Sam said with his finger on his chin.

"That's because he didn't pick me, but I volunteered." Helen spoke. "I knew you guys would think I was too busy with Daisy and helping out with the beast planets, but my sisters deal with most of that stuff anyway, so everything will be fine even if I'm away."

For some reason, when Helen spoke, Quinn didn't say much either, even though Sam was waiting for him to say something. Placing his hand over his neck and pulling him over to one side Sam whispered.

"Hey, she isn't blackmailing you or something into this is she, what's wrong?" Sam asked.

"It's not that, I just don't really know how to deal with someone like her. She just came up and said, 'I know why Sam was talking about all that stuff. I want to be a part of that school'. Then she started listing all the reasons why she would make a good head general and a teacher at the school. I just froze and said yes."

Shaking his head Sam didn't know what to do with this boy, or the strong headed girl, and was wondering if it really was good for the two of them to be working together.

"You're going to break a lot of hearts in the future Quinn, just be ready for some revenge from them." Sam said, patting him on the back.

"Huh, what are you talking about?" Quinn said, confused, as Sam returned to all the others.

"Alright, I guess that's everyone then, I'll send a message to Oscar and tell him who is coming. Everyone, it's time to get ready." Sam said.

Chapter 952: Pure's secret weapon

In an open land where the floor was an iron red, structures that had been built were seemingly destroyed all over the place. Nothing left but rubble. However, a single one stood tall and strong out of them all. A tower larger than anything in the entire area. The tower itself had exactly a hundred floors and down below at the very bottom of the tower, the sound of fighting, and more could be heard.

Yet at the very top, on top of the tower itself looking down at everything around them, two men were sitting down.

"They sure like to fight, don't they?" Arthur said.

"Of course, it's in their nature you can't stop it, you should know that by now. I'm more interested in you though. Are you sure about your decision? You've spent enough time thinking about it, and I don't want you to regret your actions like you did before." The man by his side said.

Gripping his fist, the sword on Arthur's back started to vibrate.

"I'm sure." Arthur replied. "Do you think everything will go well on your end?"

"It depends, it seems like the humans have built this new school. They've gotten their forces together but honestly fighting together or apart they're no match for the Dalki. I'm sure you know that as well. My only concern is what he will do. He has been planning his move for hundreds of years, which is why I think your plan is best."

Hearing this, Arthur grabbed his sword on his back, and he was debating whether to go down to where all the fighting was happening below, or even enter the tower himself. He just wanted to get out all the frustration that was felt in his body.

"Remember, if you find him I want you to keep him alive. I have a lot of things I want to ask him."

"Of course, a deal is a deal, you have my word."

Somewhere in the deep, dark blue sea, was a state of the art submarine. Inside it, were the agents of Pure. The members were a little hectic and nervous today as the leaders had told them to be on their best behaviour and at the same time, had asked them to prepare for something.

Inside the submarine itself, they had a large dome room that acted as an arena. Stands for crowds of people to sit and watch what would happen down below. However, even the arena grounds had another glass dome. Created to protect the onlookers from above.

On the arena floor, inside the glass dome, stood a man with wild red hair. His shirt had been taken off and tied around his waist, showing his ripped body full of scars.

"Come on, hurry up and get this place ready! If they arrive and this place is not ready, who knows what they'll do to you. I'll be fine but you guys...I wouldn't want to be you in that situation." Chris shouted.

The shirt tied around his waist was flapping slightly, and the number one could be seen.

There were many members who were clearing the grounds, as it looked like a battle had just taken place. They were smoothing at the floor, filling in the cracks. It was a lot harder work since there weren't many ability users in Pure, so everything had to be done manually.

Finally, in the stands at the far end, the door slid open and five people could be seen entering the room. Unlike Chris who didn't like wearing his large white overcoat much, these members of Pure almost never walked around the base without them on.

The first two at front, one a female with a straight fringe that just reached her eyebrows, the fringe of her black hair followed all around and looked almost like a bowl had been placed on top of her head and the hair had been cut around it. On her overcoat the number three could be displayed largely on her back and the numbers on both of her shoulders.

The man next to her, wore a similar overcoat. Only that displayed the number two on it. His distinctive features were the pitch black sunglasses he would wear. As Chris looked at him, he was wondering if he ever saw Agent 2 without the sunglasses.

'Hey, maybe he's blind.' Chris thought.

Finally entering the room, everyone who was busy preparing the arena, immediately bowed down showing respect, while Chris just gave the man a wave. For this, was Agent 0, the leader of Pure.

Agent 0's hair was wholly white and it seemed it was naturally this colour from old age, but it was hard to tell how old he was due to their being hardly having any wrinkles on his forehead or eyes, but when one first would meet him, there was something noticeable about him that usually one wouldn't be able to keep their eyes off of.

It was the four lines scared on the top of his forehead, going straight down as if a chart or a counter of some kind. They looked almost intentional, but no one dared to ask Agent 0 what the lines were for.

Standing by his side, was someone Chris didn't recognize, but there was one more behind them, who was Agent 4. All of the single digit agents, the founders of Pure had gathered in this room, all because of the stranger Agent 0 had brought with him today.

'It's a shame that Lucy isn't here as well.' Chris thought, as Lucy was also one of the founders of Pure.

Looking around, the arena was ready and it was time for them to put on a show.

Chris went ahead, and joined the others up in the stand. Agent 0, along with the stranger they had invited was sitting down while the rest remained standing. Coming over, Chris decided to just sit down next to Agent 0, and took a peek at the stranger.

'We went through all the trouble because of this guy, why is he so special?' Chris wondered, and he couldn't help, but try to sense the man's aura.

"Don't," Agent 0 said. "It's very rude of you to do such a thing, and he is our guest. Let's just get on with the demonstration."

Chris agreed with Agent 0, and decided to not try and see the man's aura. He just thought if someone was so important, then Chris would have known who this man was based on their appearance, but he had never seen him before and had no clue who he was.

On the arena floor, two people stood opposite each other. Members of Pure, one ranked number eight, while the other, number nine. They were quite the high ranking agents within pure, and they knew all three stages of Qi as well.

A fight between the two had begun and they started to display all the different uses of Qi while fighting each other.

"Qi, the energy known as life force, it differs from person to person." Agent 0 started to explain while the fighting continued. "Throughout all my life I have studied this life force, and figured out it controls more than we think.

"During my time, we figured out that there are three stages of Qi that you are witnessing today, but the reason why I have invited you is to show a new stage of Qi. Something we call the fourth stage of Qi. A breakthrough if I do say so myself.

"We came to know that soul weapons are manifested in the body at a certain age, and their power and form is greatly dependent on the ability one will have, but members of Pure don't have an ability, so does that mean we are unable to produce a soul weapon? For years we thought that to be the case, until we finally made a breakthrough, and this is what we call the fourth stage of Qi." Agent 0 finished explaining. And at that moment Chris raised his hand giving the two agents inside the signal.

A huge force could be felt, and everyone there couldn't keep their eyes off what they were witnessing. The whole room felt like it was shaking as the two powers collided, and finally, it had stopped.

Agent 0 looked towards his guest to see his reaction but even after witnessing something so great it remained the same.

"The good thing about the fourth stage of Qi is that it is not needed to know the third stage, which is arguably the most difficult and not every person can learn. The stage of Qi you just witnessed any members of Pure can accomplish. So, what do you think?"

The guest didn't give an answer straight away, and he looked down at the two humans below. He then closed his eyes and started to imagine. A few seconds later he finally spoke.

"Do you think this is enough to defeat the Dalki? They are far stronger than any of you can imagine." The guest asked.

Agent 0 started to chuckle.

"I brought you here and showed you one of our greatest secrets, hoping you would come over to our side and help us. I have shown you a few things already that show you our power. If you won't support us, then who will you support? The military, the Graylash family. You know none of them are strong enough to take on the Dalki."

Standing up, the guest looked uninterested. He then started to walk towards the exit, and no one tried to stop him.

"Richard!" Agent 0 shouted. "Tell me, what are you thinking?"

The guest turned around as he heard his name being called out.

"Right now, I need to decide who has the best chance of defeating the Dalki, and will support them. There is an interesting group I have been keeping an eye on for a while. Perhaps I should pay them a visit. Before I make my decision." Richard Eno said.

Chapter 953: Planet Earth

Flying through space was a medium-sized oval spaceship. It had a clear front allowing one to look at everything outside. It was a vehicle designed to fit around fifteen or so people, one of the many aircraft onboard the Cursed spaceship.

Currently inside were all the members that were preparing to head back to earth and arrive at their new destination. On top of this, Sam had come along for now but would be returning after dropping the others off. A small brief was being given by him to everyone, and at the same time, they were making their final preparations.

Peter had formed his soul weapon in his hand, and Sil stood opposite him with his eyes closed and his body slightly shaking.

"What the hell are you scared of?" Peter asked. "The mask doesn't hurt."

"I know, but you're going to shove it onto my face. Anyone would feel uncomfortable about that. Why can't I just copy your ability?" Sil asked.

"Well, unless you want to come to see me every twenty-four hours, then I wouldn't recommend it. It wouldn't work anyway. Is there anyone you want him to look like, or am I free to choose?" Peter asked while looking over at Sam.

"Just don't make him stand out too much, and don't turn him into a girl. That would be a little uncomfortable." Sam said.

Before Sil could even get ready, the mask was shoved onto his face. Sil attempted to grab his hands, but when they connected he realised that for some reason, he couldn't copy Peter's ability. He didn't pay much attention in the past when Vorden was in control, but now he knew there wasn't much he could do. However, as his body started to morph, he realised the whole process was painless and let go. Once everything was complete, he took a step back, touching his face.

"Do I look different?" Sil asked.

The sound of a slap was heard, and when they turned around, they could see it was Sam. His forehead was bright red. He had slapped his head too many times recently.

"Didn't I say not to make him stand out?" Sam said.

"What? I just made him into a good looking chap. We want him to learn as many abilities as he can, right?" Peter said.

Essentially, there weren't any massive changes that had been done to Sil's body. He was still a tall good looking young lad. His facial features differed slightly, changing the shape of his eyes and nose, but his hair remained the same, apart from a change in colour from blonde to a light brown.

With Sil's looks, he usually gathered attention anyway, and Peter didn't want to go to the effort of changing him much. It was nearly impossible for him to come up with an entirely new appearance, he had to base it off others and he did so thinking of some of the people he had seen on the Blade island.

"So, are you and Borden really not going to be with me?" Sil asked, looking at Quinn. He looked down with his shoulders slumped as if he was sulking.

"No, but remember I will be a teacher at the school so you can come to see me at any time. But honestly, I want you to talk to others and get used to it. It's what Vorden and Raten would have wanted. Remember, Borden is busy teaching all the Blade children you saved from the island. Think of it this way, the more people you meet, the more chances we have of bringing Borden and Raten back."

"Besides, Chucky will be with you most of the time. He's a member of the Cursed faction, so if it ever gets too much, just talk to him, and he will come over to us." Quinn answered.

When Sil turned to look at Chucky, he smiled back at him, but Sil instead just stomped the ground and walked away as if he was disappointed by Quinn's answer.

'Why are they putting so much attention on this person that is acting like a child?' Chucky thought. Not really knowing who Sil was. Only that he would regularly be invited to be at the table of the Cursed leaders.

Only those in higher positions had seen what Sil could do. Fortunately, the Broadcast also didn't show much either, apart from the world leaders not wanting Sil to participate in the duel.

"Okay, looks like we are nearly there," Sam said, looking at the map. He turned around to face the others. "Now remember, Quinn. You will not be known as Quinn when you arrive, but instead, you will now be known as Hardy."

Hearing the name and alias Sam had given him, he was glad that Logan wasn't the one coming up with them. Otherwise, he would have been stuck with the name Buinn.

"Remind me why I'm the only one using an alias?" Quinn asked.

"Because you're one of the world leaders, you have to know your position now. Even the other Head Generals need to treat you with respect, and that's not what we want. Everyone is on their best behaviour when they know they are being watched by the higher-ups. What we need is to find out the truth. They will just treat you differently if they know who you are."

"Everyone will think you are just a high ranking member from the Cursed faction having taken this position. The only one that knows who you really are is Owen and Oscar. Although Owen won't be there, only those he has sent."

"And you're sure they won't recognise me?" Quinn asked, attempting to look at himself, but just looking at his hands and legs, he felt hardly any difference at all.

"Quinn, I remember when I first saw you. Your appearance from back then, and the appearance you have now, are completely different. No one would believe the weak little nerd and the person standing in front of me, is the same person."

"He's right about that," Helen commented, who had been sitting down staring out the window the whole time. "I've seen the photos, and the boy from before would get a four at best. While the hunk in front of me would be getting a ten out of ten. Although, you did have your own charms back then."

"Wow!" Fex said, looking at Quinn. "I thought I was the playboy of the group and not shy to speak my mouth, but it looks like I got some competition. Hey, I forgot to ask but, if Peter and Helen are going to be head generals, then what about me?"

"You," Sam said. "Um, well you see, they have this class called arts and crafts, and I thought your ability really suited it, so I requested for you to be an arts and crafts teacher at the school. You know people need their hobbies as well."

"Arts and crafts?" Fex replied, his excitement quickly dwindling as he imagined a bunch of grandmas sitting around, knitting.

"Remember they're students, not grandmas," Sam replied as if he could see what he was thinking. At times he thought he was dealing with a Nate 2.0. The only difference was, Fex could get the girls he was interested in. "So, are you ready, Hardy?" Sam asked.

Quinn stood there confused for a second and then quickly replied, figuring out that it was his new name from now on.

"Yes, Head General Hardy is ready," Quinn said.

Looking out of the glass window, they could see countless ships leaving and flying through space as they all got closer to one area in particular, and that area was none other than earth. Even after all the planets they had discovered through the beast solar system, there wasn't one quite like earth.

With its blue water, clear skies and green landmass. Earth was a unique place, and seeing it like this, from a distance, he understood why humans fought so hard to keep this place.

"I guess we're finally going home," Quinn said.

As they entered the earth's atmosphere, the ship started to follow the flight path of the coordinates given. It flew over the blue sea, and the crashing waves could be seen, and finally, out in the distance, there was land.

On top of that land, a large school-like sculpture was seen. It was an incredible masterpiece that could be seen from afar. In the centre of all the square buildings, it had two titled large altars with a levitating circle ball in the middle.

Ships seemed to be lined up waiting to enter the island as strict border control was being implemented.

"It's impressive. I'm sure the military has some defensive measures as well, just in case the Dalki chose to attack. They wouldn't prepare all this for no reason." Sam said.

"Sure," Quinn replied, but he knew it wasn't a question of if. It was when. What Quinn didn't know was some extra forces would be working with the Dalki.

Chapter 954: The Head generals

Going through border control to get onto the island where the new base was located, was quite the headache in itself. However, while Quinn was away, special clearance badges had been sent to those in the Cursed faction. For Quinn, he had received two of these special passes.

One being a special platinum colour, this one was to be used for Quinn only, and was meant to be kept on him at all times. Although, one would think they would know what the world leaders of the world looked like. However, it was all for security in the end. It was common for those in high positions to either alter their appearance for certain reasons or many would attempt to imitate them.

What Quinn, Peter and Helen had also obtained was a gold pass that was given to Head Generals. What was unique about these passes were they were imprinted with the users DNA. Only when being touched by the owner would a small little symbol light up in the centre of the card to prove one was the owner and the card was meant for them.

The reason why the cards had to have such measures was due to the level of clearance and access they gave. Not only could they be used at this military base, but all the ones scattered on earth as well as on the shelters on other planets.

This was a way the military was claiming that they were more open compared to before, hoping that everyone could share information with each other. Now when attempting to connect to the server, they could use the special passes to access the server.

Not that this mattered much anyway, because the whole system had been created by the Green family in the first place, whatever information the Cursed family needed could be gathered by Logan, but of course the Cursed faction would keep this on the down-low.

As soon as showing the passes to those at the border, their treatment had changed immediately, and the guards on duty gave their ship a certain odd look before letting them pass and go on ahead.

"What was that about?" Peter asked. He was pretty annoyed that it had taken so long until they had shown the passes. As the ship continued onward towards the school. Now that they were in the city, the spaceship had transformed itself to a land vehicle and was being escorted between two larger vehicles towards the school.

"I think it's because of our ship." Said Sam.

"Haven't you noticed?" Helen said it, like it was obvious. "Now that all three families are truly cooperating with each other. It's time for influential families, and those with close ties to the top to show off what they have. All the other spaceships are top tier. Basically, everyone is using this as a chance to show their wealth and power that they have."

Peter was wondering why they had chosen this ship, when they had so many nicer ones on board the Cursed ship, but he assumed that it really didn't matter. Who cared what spaceship one took, as long as it got you to place A to place B in a safe manner, what did it matter.

To him, it just sounded like a bunch of people who wanted to show off their connections and power.

"Should have shown them your platinum card, I bet then they would have all bowed down to you and had a big fuss." Peter replied.

Quinn, when arriving, had only shown them his gold pass, which still gave them grand treatment. No other ships were being escorted to the school, but as Peter said, if they knew one of the three world leaders were here, they were sure to give them more protection than this.

"It's fine, I'm still not used to all this leader stuff anyway." Quinn replied.

The school was seen up ahead, and as they got closer, the sheer size of it just seemed to get larger and larger. However, it made sense, since this was a place that was meant to harbour all the students from every facility, for training. They would even be living here for a short while.

However, it was clear they were caring about the students because the school itself looked to have more resources spent on it, than the rest of the place.

"You can thank Logan for that." Sam said, noting how much in awe Quinn was.

"What do you mean?" Quinn asked.

"The money and funding had to come from somewhere. Logan made a lot of money betting on you winning that fight that day, and a short while after he managed to recover the rest of the Green funds. He had more money than he could handle."

"This project has been in the works for a while, and Logan requested it would be put towards the students." Sam explained.

"More money than he can handle that's nice. Well, he has always sorted out the Cursed faction funding problems as well. Just how much money does that guy have?" Quinn thought, but quickly remembered that nearly every system they used today, not just games, had been created by the Green family.

And apparently they had some tie in with the Dalki as well.

After being led underneath the school to the parking area. The spaceship was parked with all the others. Now Peter had a better idea of what the others were talking about. The spaceship they had brought with them, only filled a quarter of the parking space they had received. And all the ships around them were grander and better than theirs.

Soon, the guards opened up a teleporter, and asked for all of them to step through.

"I guess this is my goodbye for now." Sam said. "We have the masks so you can communicate with us anytime you want. It would be best to talk to Oscar about setting up a teleporter in the school that only you can access. That way you can come back to the Cursed ship as soon as possible, and we can come here as well if there is any trouble."

With that, everyone gave Sam a wave goodbye, and Quinn now realised that everything from here on out would be up to him.

'At least you have had a lot of practice with the vampire council, all of this should be a walk in the park for you.' Vincent said, but it wasn't helping Quinn feel any better.

Each of them walked through the teleporter and they soon found themselves looking at a large desk in a room. Sitting behind the desk was the Supreme Commander Oscar. Behind him were several large glass pane windows. Through them one could see the whole school campus from above.

'These leaders sure like their views, I guess it makes them have a sense that they are in control of everything.' Quinn thought.

"Quinn, you finally made it." Oscar said with a cheery smile. It was strange to have someone happy to see him even though they barely knew him.

However, Oscar's personality towards Quinn was different compared to last time, and the reason was simple. Oscar knew that whatever Quinn did, whoever he had summoned that day, it was because of him that their lives were saved.

He owed Quinn and he would never forget that.

"I heard you had a lot going on, so I didn't get to see you or thank you, as you can see I have been busy here myself. I have to say I never expected you to become a teacher yourself." Oscar said.

"Neither did I, but I think this is important. This was where my life was changed, and I'm sure it will be true for many others as well." Quinn answered back.

"Don't be so uptight, there is no threat here, you can relax especially when you're speaking to me. You can leave the formal stuff for later.

"I see you brought a few others along with you. Sam has made the request and my personal assistant will deal with them. For now the Head Generals and Sergeants are all waiting in the meeting room down below. Why don't we all go and introduce ourselves? Don't worry, you're not the only new ones that have arrived. The whole military has had a lot of restructuring." Oscar said.

The head generals, Quinn hadn't seen many of them before, only once or twice during the inter-base tournament. He remembered that their school was considered one of the weakest of the bunch, and no one expected them to get far, but due to Quinn and Logan, their school had received a higher position than expected when the results came out.

'The head generals were quite strong. Even Paul, before he was turned, had gone toe to toe with Leo as a vampire. In fact, it was more like Leo was losing, until we had captured most of his men and he had surrendered.'

"I wonder what these head generals will be like.' Quinn thought.

Chapter 955: Getting rid of sc.u.m (Part 1)

Sil, Chucky and Fex were carted away by some of the staff. They would be briefed on their lesson plan and schedule and everything they needed to cover for the semester as students and teachers.

The meeting that Quinn, Peter and Helen were to attend was one between the higher up staff of the group. Of course, Sam could have requested at least Fex to be a higher staff member but had completely forgotten. Not that it mattered much anyway. As a teacher, he would have plenty of freedom to see Quinn whenever he wished, just not to be in on the big meetings between others.

As soon as Quinn arrived, Oscar was escorting Quinn and his group personally down to the banquet hall where the other higher military staff were waiting. The reason Oscar was waiting for Quinn was because in reality, these two carried the same rank. Of course he would be treating Quinn better compared to the rest of the Head Generals and he would have done the same if Owen had arrived as well.

The automatic doors slid open, and the sound of groups of people talking was seen, and the first thing that had caught Quinn's eye was a giant chandelier. Everyone was eating food, while having gathered in groups. That's when Quinn also noticed he and the others were the only ones in their military uniforms from the Cursed ship, while everyone else was dressed quite formally.

"This looks like a party for rich snobs," Peter commented, and he wasn't shy about hiding his opinion either.

"Think of it as a more formal gathering. Not everyone in this room is from the military. We have sponsors from big families as well as merchants and more." Oscar said.

Quinn would often forget about this, that there were two forms of power, money and strength. Although usually having strength or a strong ability, money would naturally come with it. However, there were a few individuals that made use of their ability and were able to create products for everyday use in the current world.

The Green family was a good example of that, and there were a few families like the Green family that were protected by the military.

As soon as everyone noticed Oscar in the room, they stopped chatting and bowed down to him as a sign of respect.

"Don't mind me, please continue on. This might be the only time we get to relax before the semester starts tomorrow." Oscar said.

Everyone smiled and continued on with their talking.

"Alright, you three, first I'm going to introduce you to your co-workers. The three of you are in charge of military groups, as we call them, which were based on the old military bases of the past. Quinn, you are in charge of the second group, Peter, you will be in charge of the fourth, and Helen the sixth. To help you, you will all be assigned, six sergeants. Three of them will be in charge of the non-students, while the other three will help you with the students."

After the short explanation, Oscar walked over to a certain group who were talking with each other, dining on the small pieces of food. There were three of them in total, and as soon as one of them turned around to look at who was coming towards them, Quinn's heart started to beat louder.

"I would like to introduce you to the Head Generals that have come from the Cursed faction," Oscar said with his hand held out, presenting them. "These three are sergeants of the second group."

Although Oscar didn't need to say that, Quinn already knew who they were, for at one point, they were teachers that had worked in his school from the past. There was Fay, the sergeant from before who had the ability of superspeed. Hayley, the school doctor who was actually Paul's daughter and finally, Nathan. Who used to be one of the generals of the second military base.

'I guess the reformation was to make the ranking a bit clearer and easier, and because of the introduction of the Cursed faction and the Graylash family, technically Nathan has got a demotion.' Quinn thought.

The first thing they did was give a salute to show their respect to their Head Generals, but then their eyes all turned to Helen.

"I had heard of your feats before you became part of the Cursed family. Your power is nothing to laugh at." Fay said, shaking her hand. "It would be an honour to work under someone like yourself."

"It's unfortunate you lost the duel, I assume that Shadow power is an unpredictable power, so it would have been hard for anyone to beat it," Hayley said. Having witnessed the event first hand.

"Hey, calm down, you two. It almost sounds like you don't like the Cursed faction. Remember Quinn was a student from our school, and now he has become a world leader. It still seems so unbelievable. We should be proud, though." Nathan added.

What they didn't realise was that Quinn was right in front of them all. His nerves started to settle down a little after he realised that Sam was right. None of his old teachers had recognised him at all.

It also seems they had all witnessed the duel and had been fans of the Daisy faction, which was expected since some would even consider them the fifth strongest faction after the big four.

The Cursed faction winning that duel was an upset.

"Hey, you idiots! Don't you realise -" Peter was about to explode on them, but Quinn soon stopped him, pulling him off to the side.

"Oh, that's right, it's Peter isn't it? You and Quinn were always close to each other." Fay said. "Don't get it wrong, we weren't badmouthing him. It's just really unbelievable what happened. It was so sudden it doesn't feel real. While Helen had been running Daisy for years to get up to its position. It's natural that there will be more people in awestruck meeting her than if they were to meet him."

No matter how hard the sergeants of the past tried, they just couldn't get the student image of both Peter and Quinn out of their heads. Even though they both now had higher ranks than themselves.

"This is Hardy," Oscar said, giving Quinn a little nudge. "He will be the Head General you will be following from now on. He is also planning to teach some lessons. As you three are part of the student department, I imagine you will be seeing each other a lot. Do your best to get along.

"Once you guys are done introducing yourself, come meet me again. By then, I'll have all the other Head Generals together." Oscar said, leaving them be.

Once they had learnt who would be their Head general, it was hard for the three of them to hide their disappointment. Each military group wanted to accomplish great things. With the students and with the whole group, they found it hard to imagine they could do so with Hardy.

The conversation between them and the other sergeants continued. Although they were respectful, most of their attention was focused on Helen. It was words of praise for her past accomplishments and, at the same time, almost apologising for the fact that they had to work for the Cursed faction.

'Is our reputation really that bad, or is it just because of how quick we have risen? People think we still need to prove ourselves.' Quinn thought.

If this really was the case, then there wouldn't be many students who would choose to come to the Cursed faction once they had ended their military studies. However, they would get those that wouldn't be fit, or good enough for the other teams, and this thought in itself pleased Quinn a bit.

Finally, Oscar had gathered the other Head Generals and had come to get Quinn and the others. He had brought them together in a large circle, and it was quite obvious who was from what family just based on what they were wearing.

All those from the Graylash family wore their white robes they wore all the time, and one of them, who Quinn recognised, was Hector. One of Owen's assistants was in charge of looking after the Crow's faction. Quinn didn't know the other two but thought they had to have been strong to have been given the position they were in.

As for the other three Head Generals that belonged to the military, they would have had to have been the best of the best. Since the other head generals had been demoted to make room for the Cursed faction and Graylash family.

Each of them was dressed in formal clothing rather than military clothing, which was suited to their own taste. As soon as Quinn and the others joined, the three from the military had looked the Cursed faction up and down and almost rolled their eyes back.

The arrogance and air around them reminded Quinn a lot of Duke, and the vampire leaders, as if they were above others. A problem that seemed to be persistent with those higher up in the military.

'It looks like some people don't like us being here.' Quinn thought.

Chapter 956 - Getting rid of sc.u.m (Part 2)

Before Oscar could introduce everyone, it seemed like he had been called to handle something and had to leave the banquet hall in a rush.

"I hope everyone gets along. Introduce yourself to each other. You will all be working together quite closely from now on." Oscar said as he left everyone.

It seemed like the Graylash family and the military generals had been talking for some time before Quinn had arrived, so their attention was focused on them.

"So, Oscar said your name was Hardy, correct?" One of the male head generals asked. His hair was a reddish-brown in colour and was quite long for someone in the military, going down to his collarbone. However, every once in a while, he would have this slight twitch that Quinn noticed, moving his upper lip.

"I don't know much about the Cursed faction. However, I do know of Helen and of the Zombie boy over there, but you I have never heard of your name before?" The man said.

"I would have thought the Cursed faction had some old faction leaders they could have sent here. What are your accomplishments exactly?" The red-haired man asked.

Now that Quinn was closer, he recognised the three Head Generals a little more. Their appearance looked a little different to what he remembered, but that was due to him seeing them on TV when he was younger.

These three generals were also claimed to be part of the hero's of war. Having great accomplishments in the war against the Dalki. However, they weren't as famous as Leo or Oscar.

'Is that why they seem to be a little arrogant?' Vincent said. 'I think they are asking of your accomplishments only so they could boast about their own.'

Quinn agreed.

"I think this little trial Oscar is doing might prove to be a failure." Another general from the military spoke. His hair was green in colour, and when looking closely, one could see that their tongue was split into two halves like a snake. "They have allowed the Graylash family and the Cursed faction to make three Head Generals. They trusted the other powerhouses, and they have chosen to assign a nobody, or maybe this is just the next best person the faction have got!"

Peter's fist was clenching up by the second. He didn't care who they were. Right now, someone was disrespecting their leader, thier group, everything they had worked hard for, and after everything, they had gone through.

"It seems like you have got his tongue-tied. The man can't say anything because he hasn't even achieved any accomplishments. Everyone knows that the Cursed faction bullied all the other factions by using those beasts. That's how you rose to your position, and it doesn't sit well with us. I'm sure even Helen here despises working for you. Perhaps we could come to some sort of deal with you barbarians, so we can bring her over to our side." The red-haired man said, but he wasn't done thier. He could tell that thier were some onlookers around nodding in agreement with what he was saying, which just spurred him on further.

"Oscar, only has let you guys in, in the hopes to tame you, so that you don't attack the people. This is a time when we should be working together to fight against the Dalki. And your faction members continued to attack each other all for your own gains!" The man continued to shout.

"I am not being held against my will, and I would much rather work with the Cursed faction than a broken military that can't even trust the decisions of its supreme commander." Helen piped up. "The Cursed faction is stronger than you think. I'm sure you know of the strength of my group and my faction, and even then, the Cursed faction was able to beat us. I assure you, anyone they have assigned to the position of Head General, would be able to make each of you lie on your back. Perhaps they may even fix your broken tongue while they're at it."

"What did you say?! I dare you to try to prove those words right now!" The split tongued man shouted, and it looked like he was about to use an ability of some sort as he raised his hand, but before he could even do so, it had already been stopped being held in place.

"Arghh!" The man screamed, and a few cracking sounds were heard from his fingers as they were being crushed by the sheer pressure.

"What do you think you're doing? Did you just try to attack someone from our family!" Peter shouted at the man.

The scream and Peter's words were so loud, that the others in the banquet hall were now looking in their direction.

Usually, Quinn would tell Peter to stop, but from what he had learnt in the past it was best to put these people in their place when he could.

The third general was a female with a long black ponytail that nearly touched the floor. She noticed something at this point. She could see Quinn's eyes starting to glow red and took a step back from the other two, she was debating whether to warn them or not, but a shiver was entirely sent down her spine.

"You want to know what type of power the Cursed faction have," Quinn said, looking at the two of them with his eyes glowing red. At this point, Peter had let go of the man's crushed hand and smiled in anticipation for what was about to come next.

"Both of you, kneel!" Quinn ordered, and a few seconds later, as if their body was being forced, they dropped to the ground and were on their knees.

From the outside, the onlookers had no clue what was happening and only saw that two of the Head Generals were kneeling in front of another, but it was one that they didn't recognise.

"What is going on? Do they know that person?" Fay asked, looking from the side.
"None of us recognised him."

"No, look at the struggle on their faces." Nathan pointed out, "It must be some ability of some sort. They're being forced."

"Should we go do something, isn't that our Head General?" Hayley asked.

However, Nathan was interested in the person he would be taking orders from, from now on and decided to let things play out.

"You talk about working together, and then you attempt to attack us before finding out more about us. You know nothing about the Cursed faction, and all of you tried to drag our name through the mud."

"Let me tell you, the reason we are here is to get rid of the sc.u.m in the military, and I haven't quite made up my mind yet if you two fit that role." Quinn continued to speak, but it wasn't in a soft voice. Everyone around could hear as well.

"The Cursed faction are here to get rid of sc.u.m. What do they mean?" People started to gossip around.

The two on the ground could be seen trying to struggle, trying to fight whatever was happening in their bodies, but they could do nothing as they were forced to stay on the ground.

"You, you are attacking us in front of everyone!" The red haired man continued to shout.

"Don't speak," Quinn ordered again, and now the two of them couldn't even open their mouths.

'This boy seems to have a darkside.' Helen thought, looking at him, and l.i.c.k.i.n.g her lips slightly.

Quinn had simply had enough of this behaviour through his life, and it was the same in the vampire settlement. The thing was now, there was no reason he had to take it. No one they had to complain to.

"I apologise on Head General Innu, and Head General Sach's behalf." The female general said, getting down on one knee. "You are right, I believe they were quite hostile towards your faction from the start. Please I hope you can forgive them and let them go. I hope that all the Head Generals can get along."

Hearing her say these words, calmed Quinn down a little. He turned around and decided to leave the room, while Helen and Peter soon followed.

Everyone quickly moved away from them, allowing them to pass for fear that they would be attacked as well.

"This might just make our reputation even worse, you know?" Helen said as they left the room. 'What was that ability of his that he used just now, it wasn't part of the shadow?'

"It's okay, people will find out the truth in the end, but I can't forgive anyone that tries to attack my family right in front of me," Quinn said.

The Cursed faction had made quite the impression on their very first day.

Chapter 957: Disappointment

It didn't take long for word to get out about what the Cursed faction had done to the other head generals. Especially since it was done to those in the military. One of them had a crushed hand that needed to be healed, while the others were supposedly kneeling behind and looked like they were on the verge of holding back their tears, or so the rumours said.

Because of the news spreading around so quickly, the three head generals that had been involved were called into a meeting with Oscar himself. Currently, all three of them were standing in front of him having given their reports of the event that had occurred.

"Those people from the Cursed have no respect. We never raised a finger against them. Yet they go around abusing their power like that and at a gathering of all things!" Innu, the red-haired general, complained.

Oscar let out a big sigh. He didn't think there would be problems. It wasn't even the first day of the school semester. However, sometimes this is what happens when a bunch of hot-headed fools were placed in the same room together.

Oscar knew that based on the military. Due to them giving positions out based on strength and ability often things like this would happen. What they didn't know was the person they were messing with, Quinn, was far stronger than both of them.

"I have heard your complaints, both of yours. My advice to you both would be to ignore this event for the sake of humanity's future. The Cursed faction, the Graylash family, and the Earthborn coming together and cooperating is essential to our survival. Do you understand?"

Both of the men looked at each other, gripping their hands tightly. They were hoping Oscar might act out against them, do something like he would have done in the past. However, it almost sounded like they were the ones getting a slap on the wrist while the Cursed faction received nothing for their humiliation. They reluctantly agreed and nodded towards Oscar.

"We understand." they both said, leaving the room.

"Samantha, would you mind staying behind," Oscar ordered, and the other two left the room.

"I hope I can trust you to tell me the real tale of events. It seems you didn't quite agree with the story they told. I mean they didn't really let you speak." Oscar said.

Samantha, the third head general that was there at the time explained everything that had happened. She told them how the two were disrespectful to the Cursed faction. However, what she didn't manage to catch was that one of her own, was about to use an ability on Helen.

In her eyes, the ones that had attacked first were the Cursed faction, with Peter having crushed one of their own fingers.

"Thank you, I thought it would be something along those lines." Oscar replied.
"You are free to leave."

However, before leaving Samantha wanted to ask her own questions.

"Supreme commander, if I may speak." She asked, and Oscar was listening keenly. "The man known as Hardy. He was somehow able to force those two to do his bidding.. It looked like they couldn't move and everything he said it was as if their bodies were being forced to listen to that order. I was afraid at the time if he had told them to kill themselves they would have complied.

"It was the first time I had ever seen two head generals being so powerless in front of another. Who is the person the Cursed family has sent to us?" Samantha asked. What she was also thinking, was if the Cursed family had someone this powerful under their control, what of their leader.

Of course, Oscar had been told to keep Quinn's identity a secret and he actually thought this was a good idea himself. Ever since Truedream's disappearance, although the military had gotten their act together there were more cases of infighting than ever. As those with strong abilities refused to listen to those above.

Still, he was thinking about the multiple things he saw Quinn do, not just the shadow or the red aura ability he seemed to have but Quinn's background and identity was so secretive. Information could only be found out about him and his parents and never went further back than that.

Turning around, Oscar went to look at the whole school once more as he gave his answer.

"I don't really know who that person is, and I don't know much about the Cursed faction." Said Oscar. "However, I can tell you what I think. I think we should do everything we can to make sure that person is on our side."

The next day was the opening ceremony for the new school. All the first year and second year students based on their age had already had their introduction and had received their uniforms.

However, there was a big difference this time compared to the last, although each of them wore watches on their wrist, there was no power level being displayed for everyone to see.

At the moment, a large temporary stage had been built, one the size of a large concert. On top of that there were multiple screens all facing towards one direction that would allow everyone to see what was happening no matter how far they were.

The students stood in the centre of the school, where the large open field was surrounded by all the different buildings coming from different directions. To just get from one end of the green to the other it looked like it would take half an hour.

The students, and been split up into nine groups. They were unaware of why this was the case or what was happening today, only that an opening ceremony was to be held and to start it off, was none other than Oscar.

As he took to the stage the crowd of students cheered loudly. It seemed like his reception was mostly positive. Despite the fact that these students had come from all sorts of different factions. They still knew him as a war hero from the last war.

At the same time, out of all the forces, the military was probably the least aggressive during the Civil war. They mostly only defended attacks and were trying to deal with their own set of problems.

Oscar started to give them a grand speech about what war was like and why it was important for the students to attend. He also gave them a breakdown of what they would learn and finally he had mentioned about the housing system.

How the nine groups they were in now, would be split into three different houses. The Cursed house, Graylash house, and the Earthborn house. Being in a house didn't mean you would have to join that group once you left the military. It meant two things, points would be assigned to houses based on good behaviour scores and sporting events.

The second, was which head generals would lead certain houses, as the generals would correlate with the house they were in. For example if they were in the Cursed house, those students would either be under Quinn, Peter or Helen.

The groups of students were eventually told what house they belonged to, with house 2, 4 and 6 belonging to the Cursed house. Hearing this news, there were some students that were annoyed while others were indifferent as they realised it didn't matter too much.

Groups 1,3 and 5 belonged to the Earthborn house, while the last remaining groups 7, 8 and 9 belonged to the Graylash family.

"Now that all introductions are complete, it's time to meet your Head generals in person. Any problems, concerns you want to raise you need to talk to these people. They will help you carve your future." Oscar said, as he left the stage.

Soon, an announcer was being heard coming from the stage, and lights started to flicker in all sorts of directions as if a real concert was about to begin.

"First introducing your head general of the first family from the Earthborn group. Samantha Reeves!" The announcement said.

Coming out to the stage Samantha waved at the crowd below. She stomped with her feet along the way, and pieces of earth were lifted to the ground. Moving her hands she joined the pieces of earth to create a large dragon like sculpture. It seemed so real and so alive. Soon after she started to swirl it around her body and when her little show was done, she dropped it to the floor.

Cheers from the students came out again, and those from the first group were especially pleased.

"Did you see how skilful she was using her earth ability?"

"Yeah, she could carve and control the earth like it was a real dragon, it didn't even look to have any cracks in it or anything. How much control does she have?" The students were amazed.

This continued with each general of those in charge of the Earthborn group coming out, and each time they would display their powers in an amazing way.

Next, were the Graylash family, and they seemed to have done the same as well.

"Do we have to do something flashy?" Quinn asked, showboating wasn't really in his nature.

"I thought with you being closer to their age you would understand more." Helen replied. "They need to be inspired and amazed. What better way to make them listen, by showing what hard work and dedication can lead to. It's also a way to show our groups power. Just think, what would you have wanted to see when you were at school." She said, and soon her name had been called up as well.

Helen, seemingly walking on to stage as confident as ever, then raised her hands and at the same time, several plants had risen from the ground in place. The camera then revealed from above, that the plants had made a special love heart, while all the plants were different colours. To finish it off, she brought all the plants together, raising up a gigantic one behind her that looked like a serpent with a giant pink rose head.

"Ahhh!" Girls started screaming. "It's Helen from Daisy, isn't she amazing!"

The next name that was to be called to the stage was Peter, and as he walked over with his hands in his pocket. He stared at them all for a while, and the crowd had gone silent.

In a way, this act in itself was quite impressive, considering he was able to silence such a large number of people.

Finally, he started to do something, as he raised a single arm in the air.

'Maybe I can get an idea of Peter?' Quinn thought, but that idea was quickly chucked out of the window.

Chapter 958: A speech

Seeing Peter stand there giving a fierce look at the crowd, the students were wondering just what feat or show he would put on for the rest of them and Quinn was as well.

'I guess he would show his impressive transformation ability and start selecting students from the crowds. Although then the other heads would know that was something he could do, but Nathan should know his ability already based on what happened last time.' Quinn thought.

Nathan already knew of Peter's ability to transform into others, because he had once been caught being disguised as a student that was supposedly dead but when that dead student was found to be very much alive, Peter had a difficult time after that.

However, what they had also witnessed was his incredible healing abilities. Which was why back then Nathan, Duke and Truedream thought they had witnessed a first of its kind. A human that could hold two abilities or more.

For they had even given Peter the Earth ability book to learn and had seen him display some of those skills as well.

There were many theories of how this was possible, perhaps Pure had successfully created a unique body, Peter could have had a unique body himself or it could have been an ability like that of Vorden at the time.

'We may never find out now.' Nathan thought. "You have reached a position far too high, whereas previously you could have been forced to share your secrets, and your Faction sent a clear message yesterday, including you. You are ready to fight back at any time.'

Finally, Peter seemed to be doing something as he held one of his hands up in the air, and soon he grabbed it with the other. Within seconds, a cracking sound was heard, and his arm had gone limp, flopping about.

His facial expression never changed, even though he was now standing there with a broken arm, one he had broken himself.

Some of the students couldn't look at the flapping arm any more, imagining the pain it had to have caused and were forced to look away.

"Does this guy feel no pain? I mean could you break your own arm like that?"

"He's crazy, can't you see it in his eyes!? I knew something like this was going to happen when he stepped on the stage."

In mere seconds though, the arm started to heal in front of everyone and was good as new. They had just witnessed a healing speed that seemed impossible in front of their very eyes.

"Now, for my next display." Peter said, positioning his hand into the form of a karate chop.

'Is he going to cut off his hand?' Quinn thought, as he imagined the horror. "Peter stop." Quinn shouted. It was heard from those on the stage. But it was too far for any of the students to hear.

Not performing his second half of the trick, Peter started to walk off the stage and a round of applause slowly started.

Through his strange actions he had won the students over and they were quite impressed.

Sach, one of the Head Generals of Earthborn, looked at his fingers for a few seconds, and could remember the tight grip around them. 'He doesn't just have super healing abilities, was he wearing beast gear underneath his clothes?'

Although that night, it didn't look like anyone was wearing any beast gear, in his head it was the only thing that made sense.

Finally, the last announcement was ready to be made, and Quinn knew it was his turn to do something. He was hoping for some inspiration from Peter's act, but that didn't inspire him at all.

"Please welcome your Head General of the second group. Hardy Lynch!" The announcer said.

Hearing this name, the students tossed and turned their heads, to see if anyone in the crowd knew who they were. Although Peter hardly had any fame, there were a few that had seen him in the inter-base military tournament. Everyone they had seen so far at least one person had heard of their name, but for this person, it wasn't the case at all.

They thought maybe when they saw him, but when they saw him walk onto the stage, they were even more dumbfounded about who this person was.

The students had done research into the Cursed faction. There was some public information available and they knew that there were some faction leaders that had joined the Cursed, even those from the Bree family that had gone over to the Cursed side. They had fame and had made a name for themselves. So they were struggling to think why this person would be selected.

While the students seemed to not care for who this person was, they started talking amongst each other. It was the last thing before the ceremony was to end, and they were excited to see their rooms and more, and since the last person didn't seem to be anyone of great importance the chatting had started.

However, the generals and sergeants that were all on stage were keeping a very close eye on him. After seeing what this person could do. Even the Graylash family were concerned after all, any human could become a possible threat in the future.

'Show us what you're going to do?' Innu thought. 'Are you going to get them all to shut their mouths, to stop speaking like you did with us.'

Looking at the students, Quinn could see that not all of them were chatting with their new friends they had made. Not all of them looked confident, some seemed frightened, nervous of their new school and Quinn had even spotted Sil out there amongst them. These students reminded him of how he had felt.

Helen's words played through his head. 'Think what you would have liked to have seen when you were younger.' With that, a smile spread across his face and he knew what 'He' would have wanted to see back then.

"School is a life changing place. At such a young age your actions now decide your future, but you are only young. How are you meant to know that now is the most crucial time of your lives, or how are you meant to know what you want to do when you are older?

"Your goals, your friends and the people around you will change as you grow up. These are things that you can change and there might be some things you can't change. However, when I was in your position, standing where you were today, I was a level one student who had no ability. And now I am where I am today.

"I hope you all can see that if someone like me can do it, then all of you can as well, and I will be here to make that possible."

As Quinn started to speak, the crowd got quiet listening to his words. His voice was being projected by special equipment so everyone out on the field could hear.

"A speech, a speech talking about how weak he was?" The students were disappointed to say the least.

"Does he not have any powers, or anything that he can show, is that why he wanted to talk about how weak he was."

"Maybe all the other generals showed him up so he felt like he couldn't show his powers."

Of course Quinn could have displayed his powers, he could have even shown his Shadow powers and claimed he was a student of the Cursed leader, Quinn. However, Quinn wanted to show that people in high positions of power shouldn't just have strong abilities.

He wanted to put hope in those that didn't have a strong ability. Of course, after the students had been told all their lives that their abilities matter and the stronger ones were important it would be hard to change this mindset.

Quinn didn't mind all the words that were being spoken about him, it was his goal to change their mind.

Soon though, the sound of loud clapping could be heard. Single claps coming from one person, and it was coming from the side.

"That was a great speech..Whooo! Go on, best performance yet I would say compared to all these guys that just wanted to show off. That's a real teacher right there!" Peter shouted loud and clear to everyone.

Although Peter was doing this in support of Quinn, he also did it because he was genuinely touched by Quinn's words. Back then, he too was frightened, nervous and felt like a path had already been predetermined for him, it felt like Quinn was speaking to him.

Soon after, Helen was seen clapping as well, and the students slowly began to clap, but it wasn't an applaud but rather just out of habit.

'Quinn I wonder if you really can do what you say. It might be a lot harder than you think.' Oscar thought looking at the students' disgruntled faces.

Chapter 959: Strongest Teacher

After introductions were complete, students were to return to their dorms to find out where they would be staying and it was a chance for a lot of them to communicate with each other and get to know everyone better.

In the meantime, Quinn was getting a briefing from Nathan, about what classes he would be teaching and when his schedule would be. He was given all of this information on a tablet screen he could access.

"It's pretty rare for a head general to also be a teacher, but Oscar has said that if you need to attend to any duties outside, not just for you but the rest of your Faction, just to inform us as soon as possible and we'll find a replacement." Nathan finished explaining.

Looking at the schedule, Quinn noticed a couple of things. He had been put as a Homeroom teacher, so he had his own class that he had to look after, on top of that he was allowed to teach one subject of his choice, and before arriving he had chosen to teach the beast weapon class.

Having attended the class in the past himself, and Leo being the one who had taught it, Quinn thought he could follow in his footsteps quite well. Due to him learning Qi, he realised teaching the process on how to activate a beast weapon was quite simple, and he could also teach things like hand to hand combat when one wouldn't have a weapon.

Looking at the list of students Quinn had, he noticed a couple of things. The first was the fact that Sil and Chucky were in his class as requested. This was good because although Quinn wanted Sil to stop relying on him, it was important to take small steps.

With someone as strong and unstable as Sil at times, it would also be good to keep an eye on the person, and he was sure Chucky wouldn't be enough to do that.

The other thing that stood out though, was the students' ability levels. Although the other students weren't able to see their power levels right off the bat, Quinn did have a list of information that had been given from their previous school.

The main shock was, apart from Sil and Chucky, there were no ability level users in his class above that of level three. There were even some level ones, and even a student with no ability at all.

'Did they stop handing out the earth books? Or did the student simply reject the offer?' Quinn thought. However, his main concern was with the amount of low levels in his class. Back when he attended military school, there was quite an even spread in all of the classes.

There were times when classes would have events against each other, and this would make it unfair. 'Is it a coincidence? It can't be?' Quinn thought.

At the same time, there was another person questioning Oscar's very decision. Standing by his desks was his personal assistant, Jane. Her old position was testing all the new students' power levels and she had even done so with Quinn.

She too had noticed that Oscar had done something with his class and had asked him the very same question.

"Don't you think it will be interesting?" Oscar replied. "Quinn who was once a level one and Peter, both of them weak, had gained a sudden strength out of nowhere somehow. So what do you think would happen if we put him in a class full of low level ability students.

"Do you think Quinn would be able to stand by and do nothing while the students in front of him are struggling with this world? We may even find out their secret." Oscar said, leaning back in his chair.

It took the entire day for students to have a tour around the school, being shown their living quarters and where every place was meant to be. Luckily, if they couldn't remember everything, their watches also acted as a 3D holographic map that would pinpoint where they were and would tell them where to go if needed.

After a full day of touring, it meant the next day it was time for the lessons to begin. Quinn had made way to his homeroom class which was labeled as 2A. As the head general he was technically in charge of all the classes labeled with a two at the front, but he was also the assigned homeroom teacher for 2A.

Looking at the door, he could see the digital number staring back at him 2A, and for the first time, he would be teaching. For some reason it felt a little more nerve racking than compared to some dangers he would face.

Opening up the door, the first thing Quinn could see in front of him was a levitating bucket of water, and in an instant it was chucked towards him. However, the water did nothing as it was splashed across the floor, and Quinn could be seen standing and holding the bucket.

'I guess the students have decided to play a little prank on me? I guess I can forgive them since it is the first day and all.' Quinn thought as he placed the bucket on the front of his desk.

Some of the kids that were behind the prank were quite amazed, they had done that trick with their old teacher but he would be hit nearly every single time, but they didn't even see Quinn move and he was suddenly holding the bucket.

"Did you see what happened?" Venus asked.

"No, but maybe it has something to do with his ability that he didn't show." Swin replied.

Swin, and Venus were two boys who saw themselves as the trouble makers of the class. Unlike before where students were sent to different campuses so they wouldn't know each other, now that everyone was part of the same gigantic school there was more of a chance that one would know their classmates.

This was true for both Swin and Venus. Of the two boys, one with long hair covering the front of his eyes, one would think he couldn't see through them, which was Swin. While the other, who had his hairline so far back, he might have not had any hair to begin with.

Quinn started with the first task which was to take the attendance from the register list, making sure everyone was present in class. There were roughly fifty students in the class, and he noticed while calling their names the students were awfully chatty and at the same time weren't really paying any attention.

'This is nothing like when I attended?' Quinn thought. 'Everyone was so strict and worried about what the other stronger students would do.'

Thinking about it, Quinn wondered if this had something to do with their behaviour.

'It would make sense.' Vincent said. 'Something similar has happened like this before when I was a leader. I believe this is a similar effect of what happens to some vampires in the pooling area. They don't care about school, or rankings anymore because they are so far down the ladder. They have no hopes of ever climbing it. So they resort to pranks and messing around as they see no hope in their future.'

Although Quinn thought what Vincent said made sense, he also thought they all couldn't have thought this way, or possibly some of them just needed a little push.

'Would I have felt the same way if I had never opened that book?' Quinn wondered.

At that moment, a pen was sent flying towards Quinn, as he was looking down at his class register list.

Out of instinct, as the attack moved towards him, he stopped it with two of his fingers holding it in place.

"Okay, so we're done with the register here, now who's pen does this belong to so I can return it to them?" Quinn asked with a short smile.

The other students, for some reason, could feel something sinister coming behind this smile, and Swin, who was sitting next to Venus, had pulled away, making it obvious who it was.

"Now, before I send you off to your next lessons, here are a few things some of you need to do." Quinn said. "You have to select what classes you would like to attend, and I just want to let everyone know that I will be the one teaching the beast weapons class."

Some students were surprised by this, as they thought someone like Hardy would never teach a combat class.

"Just to show some of you what I can do." Quinn said, as he hurled the pen back towards Venus.

It skimmed past his hair, and continued going forward until it hit the wall and was left there stuck in place.

The other students started to rub their eyes, as this looked like something that wasn't possible, but they could see the pen there, stuck in the wall.

"I hope I can see some of you there." Quinn said.

The introduction class continued for a while, and both Venus and Swin looked at each other.

"Hey, maybe we should give that beast lesson thing a try." Swin said.

'I think I might have this teacher thing down.' Quinn thought with a smile.

Chapter 960: No ability, take mine

After the incident with the pen, there were less disturbances and Quinn was allowed to go through and explain everything that was needed. He hated to admit it, but sometimes force, or a show of strength, was one of the best deterrents. At least it was for the way things were now.

Quinn went through the process of how school life would be for them, and the different classes they could attend. Explaining the benefits of each one and answering any questions the students had. Soon after, the students were to select what classes they would like to attend and if their request was accepted, then their schedule that was linked to their watch would automatically update.

After everyone had selected their classes based on the information Quinn had given, the sound for the morning class had gone off, and students were now free to head to their next lesson.

"Before you all leave, can I speak to Shiro please for a little bit." Quinn asked, and the other students soon left.

However, as they walked past their desk there were two students who had stopped to look at Quinn and they had stars in their eyes.

"Mr. Hardy!" Swin called out. "That thing you did with the pen was amazing. Can we do something like that as well if we attend your class?"

"Don't be stupid Swin, that was obviously an ability." Venus argued. "So do you mind telling us what your ability is? You hid it on the first day because you didn't want to show off right."

Quinn honestly didn't know how to deal with this. The two kids were leaning over his desk and couldn't stop staring at him expecting some grand answer. The truth was, even if they attended his beast weapons class, those kids probably couldn't do something like that.

He could do so just because of his strange vampiric strength.

"If you want to learn something like that, you will have to put in a lot of hard work." Quinn said with a serious face and his arms crossed, trying to give an impression of a teacher.

"That's amazing!" Venus replied as the two of them started to head towards the exit. "We'll see you at the beast weapons class then." They called out and waved goodbye.

'I guess inspiring some of them might be easier than I thought.' Quinn said, quite happy based on the reaction of the two students.

Once all the students had left though, Shiro was left behind. Shiro was a boy who had brown hair that stuck upwards with three large spikes, but from Quinn's first impression he didn't seem like a trouble maker.

While in class, he didn't speak to anyone and he seemed to be diligently taking notes, but there was a reason why Quinn had called him off. Sitting down so the two of them were more comfortable, Quinn decided to throw the question out there.

"There's no need to be worried, you're not in trouble or anything." Quinn said, noticing Shiro's nervousness over having been asked to stay behind. "I was just a little curious. It's actually rarer to have someone like you in the class than it is to have an original. I was wondering, didn't the military offer you the standard earth book? Your file says you have no ability."

Shiro, was the one student in Quinn's class that had no ability, just like himself back then.

"I rejected their offer." Shiro replied politely.

"You don't have to tell me, but may I ask why?" Quinn asked. There was silence for a few seconds, so Quinn decided to push it a bit further. "The reason I'm asking is because I was the same as you. Throughout my whole school life I didn't have an ability, and it was only midway through the military that I gained mine." Quinn led but it was almost the truth.

It seemed like Quinn's little push had worked, since Shiro had answered.

"I need a better ability than that if I want to get somewhere." Said Shiro. "Not to offend you in the Cursed faction, but I was hoping I could prove my way somehow so I could get the ability of the Graylash family."

Now it made sense why he would reject the ability, but at this age, it was almost impossible to prove one's worth without having an ability in the first place. Without connections or showing promise there would be no way for the Graylash family to recruit him.

If he had an ability, at least he could join one of the factions belonging to the Graylash family, and as a reward they might award his next of Kin with the ability. However, sadly it was unlikely that Shiro would ever get such an ability.

"I think I know the answer, but may I ask why?" Quinn said.

"Because, I need to become strong, and their ability is the strongest out there." Shiro replied.

Speaking to the boy, and seeing the determination in his eyes. It reminded Quinn a lot like himself at his age.

"Alright, you're free to go, but before you do I just want to tell you something. Maybe there are other abilities out there that are stronger than the Graylash ability, so if you can't get that far. Don't give up." Quinn said.

From initial impressions, the boy was a good candidate to attempt to teach the Shadow ability to. However, Quinn wasn't just going to teach him because he could. Quinn wanted someone who wished to join the Cursed group.

Right now, Shiro wasn't that person, but it didn't mean he would never be.

At the moment, Quinn had no lessons, and he was struggling with what to do with his spare time. So he decided to meditate and focus on increasing his Qi. Soon though, time started to pass by quickly and the bell went off once again, signalling it was time for lunch.

The food was provided by that of the school, but Quinn couldn't eat the food anyway. The only reason why he was actually heading to the canteen was to meet up with the others as they had agreed.

The teachers and students canteen were separated, so Quinn wouldn't be able to see how Sil was doing. But based on his class, all he had seen Sil do during Homeroom class was place his head on the desk and stay in the same position.

When entering the canteen, Quinn could see that Fex, Peter and Helen were sitting together, so he decided to go ahead and join them on the round table.

"Don't tell me you're not eating as well." Helen said, as she saw Quinn sitting down with no tray of food. "Are all the boys on a diet these days? It's going to make me feel shy if I'm the only one eating." She said.

Each of the boys didn't really know how to answer that, and Quinn tried to change the topic straight away.

"So, how has your first lesson been?" Quinn asked.

"The kids have been great with me, although they asked far too many questions about the faction." Helen replied, as she carefully ate her food making sure none of it would spill as to embarrass herself.

'I guess even she has her cute side.' Quinn thought.

"I didn't teach any lessons yet." Peter replied. "I think they said I was just going to be an assistant anyway, which means I will just stand at the back unless someone needs me."

In a way, the others thought it was a good thing that Peter wasn't the lead teacher. They hadn't been keeping an eye on him when he taught the Blade kids, but just assumed he had been doing well since none of them complained. However, after witnessing his performance from earlier, they were a little frightened as to what he would do.

"I had my class." Fex said. "And it was actually quite interesting. It seems like a lot of girls had signed up, and well they just kept asking me to personally teach them so many things." Fex said, as he pushed his hair back and had a cheeky smile on his face.

"Oh I see, so you're taking advantage of these young girls just because you're quite the looker." Said Helen.

At this moment, Fex's face had gone bright red. He thought he was being quite sly, but he wasn't. Everyone knew he was bragging in his own way, but just didn't call him out on it, while Helen did.

"Hey, you have to remember, they're actually nearly the same age as me, and I'm not doing anything." Fex replied.

"Well, if you didn't think you were doing anything wrong you wouldn't have gotten so defensive just now, would you?" Helen replied again, and Fex had nothing to reply back to that.

After that, the group continued to talk and there was a relatively nice atmosphere between them all. For once, Quinn imagined his life as it was currently. Maybe being a teacher wasn't so bad of a choice for him.

If there was no war going on, if there were no abilities and he had a better school life, perhaps this would have been a career choice for him.

Quinn had one more registration to do with his homeroom class and soon after, he would teach his beast weapons class in the afternoon. Upon returning to his classroom, he could see his students were there waiting.

But some of the students were gathered around a few others, and when Quinn had entered they quickly left.

"What happened!" Quinn asked.

As he could see, several of his students were beaten and bruised, including the likes of Shiro, Venus and Swin.

"Oh this, don't worry too much about it, teach." Swin said, holding his eye, and speaking through his busted up lip. "Just kids being kids. We just got into an argument with one of the other classes, but don't worry about it."

Seeing them like this, had brought a wave of emotions and memories crashing down for Quinn.

"Tell me, who did this to you now." Quinn said, unable to control his anger and without realising it, his eyes were glowing red as he gave this command.

Chapter 961: The caring teacher

Quinn was so consumed with rage as the bad memories started to surface in his mind again, that he was completely unaware, that when he had asked a question to one of his own students, he had used the influence skill on him.

Being only a young student with hardly any mental strength, there was almost no resistance at all, as Swin's eyes appeared to hollow out and he answered.

"The students from class 3B, it was a group of six of them." Swin answered and soon his eyes regained colour once again.

'Quinn!' Vincent snapped at him in his mind.

Coming to, Quinn realised what had happened, it wasn't the first time his influence skill had leaked out when his emotions were out of control. It was almost as if his body was more in charge than his mind was when that happened.

"Oh, sorry about that." Quinn quickly apologised, but the students in the room were scared into silence. To a lot of them, their new teacher seemed calm, relaxed, and quite friendly. It was the first time they had seen him be so serious and many of the students had seen the red hue in his eyes.

There was no way of ignoring what had already happened unless Quinn wanted to mind wipe the students, but this was no longer an option for him because of what happened with Cia. He thought it would be best to apologise and have the others think it was just an ability of his.

"I will speak to their teacher, but before I do, I need to know if there was anything you guys did to set them off. You don't have to tell me now, you can tell me after class." Quinn said, as he realised the whole class was focused on the current situation.

Some of them felt like even if they told the teacher, it wouldn't change anything. In the past, they had told the teachers of their old schools multiple times and still nothing ever was done about it. The kids looked at each other and didn't say much.

That was until a female student with glasses sitting near the front called out.

"They went to the same school as Swin and Venus." She said, "I saw what happened, they were asking him to do something. I think maybe they tried to get them to help with a prank on one of the teachers, but they refused, and when they did, they started to attack, and that's when the boys from our class got involved as well."

Quinn looked at their battered and bruised bodies, and decided to give a quick call to one of his sergeants. A few moments later, Hayley was in the classroom dealing with each of their wounds.

"If you guys ever have anything like this again, you can come to the doctor's office straight away." Hayley said as she started to heal Swin's eye that looked the worst.

When the healing was complete, Quinn had approached Hayley and he had a bit of surprising news for her.

"I need you to teach the class for a little while, there's just a few things I need to sort out." Quinn said, and was already heading out the room leaving the students with Hayley.

Seeing Quinn leave the room and not in the best of moods, all the student's didn't know what he was planning to do. They had never had a teacher act like this before when one of them was hurt.

"Sergeant Hayley, what is General Hardy planning to do?" Venus asked, and the other students were interested to know the answer as well.

Thinking about the question that had been asked, Hayley thought back to the first meeting. She didn't know who exactly this person was but based on his actions back then, he didn't leave to do something small.

"I'm not sure, but you can let the adults worry about it, okay?" She said with a warm reassuring smile.

"I hope he doesn't get in trouble." Swin said. "I kinda like him."

It didn't take long for Quinn to find the room he was looking for, and without any sort of announcement whatsoever, Quinn had entered classroom 3B. The doors were opened and as he entered, he could see the homeroom teacher was in the middle of her lesson.

When she saw who it was she quickly stood tall and straight and gave a salute.

"Head General Hardy, is there anything I can do for you? If you need to contact any of the upper staff I'm sure I can contact the other general for you." She said.

Since the classroom started with the number three, it meant the classroom was under the control of the general in charge of group three, which was one of the Earthborn Generals who Quinn had already had a falling out with, but he wasn't thinking about this at the time.

Walking forward almost ignoring the teacher, Quinn stood by her desk and looked at all the students.

"I am Head General Hardy of the Second group, and also homeroom teacher of class 2A. In my class today, a few of my students returned to me beaten and bruised and I have found out that it was due to some students from this classroom.

"Now, those responsible, will they please come forward." Quinn requested in a deadly serious tone.

However, his request seemed to fall upon death ears, as no one replied and the students looked at Quinn like he was a mad man.

"General Hardy." The teacher called out to him softly. "I understand that this is quite the problem, but it's in the middle of class, was there really a reason for it to be interrupted for this? If you want, I can ask my students if they saw who was responsible and deal with them myself."

The teacher was already annoyed due to how Quinn had basically ignored her and taken over her class, and now he was still interrupting her. There were certain procedures that needed to be followed, and she didn't think it was right for another general to come in and interrupt her class like that.

'Of course they wouldn't just volunteer to come forward.'

Not getting the answer Quinn wanted, he made a fist and slammed it on the desk, which immediately crumbled beneath him.

The teacher immediately took a step back and almost panicked.

'Damn, that's right, I heard these people from the Cursed faction are crazy, I need to get some help.' She thought.

Although Quinn could have used his influence skill to find out who was responsible, even if he did, what could he do? These were still students, and Quinn wasn't exactly going to beat them to a pulp, that wouldn't solve the problem.

"This is a warning, I will not tolerate those who choose to abuse their power. Fights will break out every now and then, but just because someone doesn't want to do what you want, or you try to force them to do something and they refuse...these acts are unforgivable."

As Quinn had finished giving his talk, the door was opened once again and this time, Head General Innu had entered the room, and immediately saw Hardy in front of him.

"What are you doing here? This is not part of your group?" Innu asked.

Not saying anything, Quinn started to walk towards Innu

"Don't worry, I'm just leaving." Quinn said.

Innu wanted to say something but when the two got close, he quickly moved out of his way. This time he wasn't forced to but felt like if he didn't, he would have been again.

As soon as Quinn was out of the room, Innu approached the teacher to find out what exactly happened, while in the class, the group of six students who were responsible were sitting next to each other towards the back.

"Hey what the hell, could you believe what they told their teacher? Why would they do that?"

"I don't know, but even if they did do that I thought it was a surprise that the General himself would come in, why does he care about them?"

"You know what we have to do right? We just have to make sure those guys never say something about this again."

"But what happens if the Head General finds out, what if they tell him again? We could be in serious trouble."

"Don't you know, the ones that are responsible for our punishment will be our Head General, and with my connection and family sponsoring all his military projects, we will just get a slap on the wrist. Besides, who really cares about those low levels, they aren't ever going to help us in the war against the Dalki. They need to know their place."

Chapter 962: Reliving the past

On his way back to his class, Quinn's anger had calmed down a bit. However, his main worry was he wasn't quite sure about what he had just done. He wondered if it would even act as a deterrent for the students to stop fighting.

He knew from experience that even if a teacher gave a telling off to the students directly, they would just carry on doing the same thing again and again. As long as there was no real punishment for those students, then this would just carry on happening.

The school would never expel the students as long as they had an ability that was deemed needed.

'Should I talk to Oscar about it? But could he even do something? What would be the best course of action?' Quinn wondered and had finally entered his classroom once again.

Hayley had done quite a good job taking over, as she stood in front of the class. Everyone seemed to be keenly listening in on her, and he wanted her to continue while he was trying to think of something, but as soon as he entered, all the students' eyes were on him and they were far too distracted.

So instead, Quinn walked to the front.

"Thank you Hayley, for covering for me," Quinn said and turned to the students. "I just wanted to talk to you all. What happened today with your fellow classmates is not okay. Maybe you have seen it happen many times before, but why should people get hurt just because they have been put in an unfavourable position.

"If there are any incidents like today, or if any of you get hurt, I want you to tell me. If you can't confide in me, then confide in Hayley here. She might be good at healing the wounds on the outside, but we can't see the wounds on the inside."

There was silence after Quinn's speech from the students, as they didn't really know what or how to reply.

'Hey, you're getting a bit cheesy with your speeches Quinn, what do you want them to say?' Vincent said, trying to tease him a little, but knew Quinn meant well with his words.

Luckily, the students didn't have to react to what had just been said, because the bell had gone off, and it was time for their final lesson of the day. For Quinn as well, it was time for him to go ahead and teach his beast weapon class.

Some students from his class, couldn't help but talk about how strange Quinn was acting and how strange he was as well. It was weird because it seemed like he was even more caring about certain things than his parents. The sad truth was, this wasn't unusual either.

The kids' parents knew that even if their child were getting abused, they were unable to do anything about it. Usually the ones that did the bullying, wasn't due to lack of self confidence, it was the opposite, they were overconfident and knew they could get away with it.

Usually, this also stemmed from their parents that acted the same way.

Taking a shortcut, Quinn decided to run ahead, out of sight to where the beast weapons class would take place. Seeing the large temple-like building, Quinn could tell it was modelled after the one that Leo had taught in as well.

Only this building was around four times the size. After all, it had to accommodate more students. The good news was that there were also several teachers. For example, Quinn wasn't the only one that would be teaching the beast weapons class. He was only to teach it to the students that were in the Cursed house.

He entered the large white room, which gave off the illusion it was bigger than it seemed, and the wall was filled with all kinds of beast weapons. Looking at them all, Quinn used his inspect skill and he could see the stats of every single item in the room.

"This really does bring back memories, it would have been a lot easier if my inspect skill was this strong back then as well." Quinn thought, rather than going around and inspecting every single weapon.

Before the students arrived, Quinn decided to shadow equip his gauntlets and boots onto the rest of his body. So he looked more suitable to at least be teaching the class and soon, the students started to pour into the room.

"As you enter the room, could you please select a space and don't let anyone get within a meter of you." Quinn instructed. "This will be your space and remember it well."

Eventually, the room started to fill up and it looked like there were over a hundred and fifty students inside. There would have been more, but Quinn had seen some students step into the room and when they saw who was teaching quickly left as if they were disappointed.

"Ah, it's taught by him, maybe I should go to the elemental class instead." Some students spoke.

Students were free to go between classes for the first few weeks anyway, as they decided what they wanted to excel in, so Quinn didn't really mind it.

What pleased him the most though, was the students from his very own class, had come right to the front where Quinn could see them. Venus and Swine were both looking at him carefully and staring at the equipment on his body. What was a surprise for Quinn, was that Shiro had entered as well, and was standing beside them.

'Oh, I thought since he wanted to be in the Graylash family he would have joined the elemental class, but I guess since he doesn't have an ability there isn't much he can do.' Quinn thought.

"General Hardy, what level are those gauntlets on your arms?!" Swin asked. "I've never seen gauntlets so bright red before."

Quinn looked at them and realised he still had the emperor tier gauntlets on him. Although they had gathered some legendary tier crystals, they weren't the right crystals to produce an ideal weapon for himself.

"I guess they do need an upgrade at some point, there at the emperor tier level." Quinn replied.

Hearing these words, Swin placed his hand on his chest and grabbed Venus before he fell.

"Emperor tier! Does that mean you've fought against some emperor tier beasts before?" Venus asked.

Quinn didn't mean to blurt out the first part, but the cat was out of the bag now about his weapons, so he just went ahead and nodded.

Of course, not all the students were as excited about this. If someone was capable of killing an emperor tier beast, they would have at least been known, however Hardy wasn't. So they could only assume he was given those weapons, lying about them, or had fought with his faction to obtain them.

Students were shaking their heads, clearly regretting the choice they had made.

Now that all the students were ready, Quinn decided to start the lesson. He first went into explaining the different tiers there were and how some beast weapons had active abilities. Those that didn't would still need to be activated to gain a stat boost from the items themselves however.

He briefly went over all of this information and soon gave a display. Touching the ground made of concrete with his fingertips, he made a fist. With just his strength alone and no abilities, he grabbed the concrete, leaving markings on the floor, making a ball.

This small demonstration alone was able to get quite a few of the kids pumped up and ready to try things themselves.

In similar fashion to Leo. He had done the same thing as him. Saying to all the students that they were free to try all the weapons on the wall, to find which one suit them. The students quickly began to take weapons down from the wall and try them at will.

Walking around the room, Quinn kept a keen eye on a lot of them, and even at one point a stray whip looked like it was about to hit another. The student tried to pull it back but Quinn had caught it in time, before it had hit another.

"Woah, calm down a little there, make sure you know your surroundings. Think about it, if this was a fight you wouldn't want to be hurting your own allies now, would you?" Quinn said.

The student apologised and went ahead to select another weapon. That's when Quinn noticed that there was one student who hadn't selected any weapons at all, and standing on his own, it was Shiro.

"Too much choice?" Quinn asked.

"I thought it would be best to pick a weapon that would go well with an ability, but since I don't have an ability..." Shiro stopped there.

"Well, you can always change your weapon, you know? Or you could do something similar to me." Quinn said. "You know, one of the reasons I selected just gauntlets wasn't because I was good at fighting with my fists. It was because even with them, if I wanted to I could grab and use another weapon."

Back then though, Quinn had mainly selected it due to it giving his bloodskills a boost, so he understood why Shiro was struggling. The more he started to remember about the past, the more Quinn was thankful for having the system.

"Teacher, I remember what you said before." Shiro replied. "About how you used to be a level one with no ability."

Shiro grabbed his arm, like it was in pain, and Quinn remembered he had a marking there before Hayley had healed it. Based on what the girl was saying, it was only Venus and Swine that got involved with the other classmates. So it meant Shiro was one of the ones from his class that tried to help.

"I wanted to ask, did you ever get bullied?"

"Did I ever get bullied?" Quinn chuckled. "Of course I did. But back then there wasn't anyone that would stick up for me. At least not at the beginning, but I found some people that helped me along the way, and I really meant what I said, I will help you as well."

Shiro's hand was shaking slightly, as if he was holding back something. He wanted to speak but couldn't and he soon ran off and went to grab one of the weapons off from the wall.

'That kid Quinn, reminds me a lot of you.' Vincent said.

"I know, and that's a problem."

Outside, not too far from the beast weapons class, a group of six students were patiently waiting.

"Are you sure they are in here?" One of them asked.

"Trust me, I have my connections," They said. Swim and Venus had signed up for the beast weapons class. Once this class is over it's the end of the day, and this is the only path someone can take from the beast class to head back to the dorms. We need to make sure they learn to listen, so they never ever think about telling the teacher again."

Chapter 963: A.d.u.l.ts are liars!

Although Quinn was a little worried about Shiro, he seemed to be doing better after their small talk. He tried out a few of the weapons as intended but it still didn't seem like he found something that he was used to yet.

It was either that, or Shiro was still holding out to learn the Graylash ability.

'Shiro, if you dived in when you saw your classmates were in trouble, you're going to do the same thing again. As sad as this is, without any strength or an ability it might be impossible to help them.' Quinn thought. 'Maybe there is something I can teach him which makes it so he doesn't have to learn an ability.'

'Quinn are you thinking of teaching the kid Qi, you know what will happen if you do that right?' Vincent questioned him.

'I know, the military are already interested in it, since Pure mentioned it, but I was debating whether it was something I should attempt to teach others anyway. Leo seems to also have a more open mind about it, and he's started to teach those on the Cursed ship while continuing his search.' Quinn replied.

If Quinn was going to open up Qi to the whole world, then he at least wanted those in his group to have a bit of a head start, besides Qi was a strong skill to use against the vampires, and with Quinn being closely related to these types of beings, he thought it might be best for the Cursed faction to learn something that could potentially be used against them.

It reminded Quinn though, that it shouldn't have to be this way, people shouldn't have to get stronger or better at fighting just for a better life. In a way, he was doing that all himself so others didn't have to.

The class was finally coming to an end, and Quinn said his goodbyes to them. Everyone was pretty drained, and there looked to be a couple of students who already knew how to activate the beast weapon to use it to its full potential. None from his class though.

Quinn wondered if all the students that had been placed in the Cursed house might have been all low ranking ones. However, it didn't seem to be the case for the other classes, as those from the other classes were quite balanced based on what he was seeing. It was only his class that was full of low levels.

'It still doesn't help me know if it is just a coincidence or not.'

Everyone had left the room quite quickly, it had been a tiring day after all, and while in the room on his own, Quinn thought he would take this time to perhaps figure out a few things. Thinking about Qi, he was trying to figure out the third stage of Qi.

The reason for this was because it might be Paul's answer to finding a cure as well. Qi, the human life energy, and the vampire energy didn't mix well, but Quinn had figured out a way for it to power his attacks.

From what he had seen Chris do, the third stage of Qi, was taking the Qi from inside your body and using it outside. With this concept, he thought that maybe if he learnt how to do this with Qi, he could do it with the vampire energy as well.

Similar to how he was able to turn into a Bloodsucker by filling his Qi ball with red energy, maybe there was a way to extinguish all the red energy from one's body.

'It's a long shot what you're thinking Quinn.' Vincent thought. 'I don't know much about Qi, but here is one thing, Qi only slows down the vampire's healing process, it doesn't stop it. Even when using your second stage it stops until the foreign Qi energy has vanished, or been removed. The main thing is your body is now different, so there are living cells in your body constantly producing this vampire energy. Yes you might be able to get rid of it temporarily, but eventually it will come back."

Although Vincent was a much smarter man than Quinn was, at the same time, even he admitted he didn't understand everything about Qi, so Quinn thought he would give it a shot. Besides, even if it didn't work it was another weapon he had in his arsenal.

Meanwhile, both Venus and Swin were happily walking back from their class together. They had stayed a little bit behind because they wanted to ask their teacher a few more questions, but it looked like he had a lot on his mind so they decided to leave it for another day for now.

Still, they were excited and couldn't stop talking about all the weapons they had both tried.

"I liked the spear the best, it really felt like I had a really long arm." Venus said, as he thrusted forward, imagining a spear in his hand.

"I wanted to try on some armour as well, but I guess that will be another class." Swin said.

"Maybe we can help you practice." A voice from behind was heard, and soon they felt their heads being pulled under one's arm by a few people, and being dragged along to a different location.

"Erlen, your, your, you're here." Venus stuttered.

"Your, your, your', shut the hell up Venus!" Erlen said as he chucked Venus from under his arm, across the floor. Soon after, Swin was chucked on the floor by his side as well.

As the two boys looked around, they could see that they had been dragged between two large buildings, between the beast weapons class, and the dormitory. There was a pathway with a glass roof over them that allowed them to see the orange sky created from the sunset, while they walked to their dorms.

With it being the end of the day, there weren't many students left that would walk this way, and there were only the students from the beast weapons class that would come this way to head to their dorms, which meant, it was unlikely they would be seen.

Looking up, Erlen's face had a creepy smile. He had black rough spiked hair, and the five behind him were his usual followers he always had throughout school.

"You of all people Venus, I never expected that you would tell the teacher about what happened. Doesn't your dad work for my company? That's right, a poor worker who didn't have a great ability, but worked hard to eventually give his son a level two telekinesis ability."

"We didn't say anything!" Swin objected.

"Hey, shut up! Even if your parents don't work for my company, we have connections with those above. I can find out where your family works too and make life hell for them." Erlen stated.

That immediately got Swin to shut up. He didn't mind taking beatings himself, but if it was his family. He didn't want them to get hurt or their life to be any worse.

"Even if you didn't tell the teacher, then you should have told him that it was a lie. Told him that what they said wasn't true or it was an accident. Now we are just going to have to make it so you never tell the others again. I believe I only punched one of your eyes last time, let's make that two this time."

Erlen said, as he made a fist and started to swing it towards Swin's face, but mid-swing a loud scream could be heard coming from the side.

"Arghhh!" A male student could be seen running towards them and a few seconds later, Erlen could feel a sharp pain in his side.

"Shiro!" Venus called out, but Shiro was too shocked to hear anything.

Usually one screaming before attacking their enemy would be a stupid thing, but Shiro had to scream, it was the only way he could go through with what he was doing. As he took a step back, a small amount of blood had gotten on his hands, and a dagger was stuck inside of Erlen.

'Did he steal that from the beast weapons class?' Venus thought.

"You, you really stabbed me, who the heck are you!" Erlen said, as he pulled the dagger out and threw it right back at Shiro, stabbing him in the shoulder. Soon the other boys had pinned him down.

Placing his hand on the wound, the area around Erlen's wound started to freeze over.

"This wound will heal." Erlen said, walking over. "But what I'm about to do to you; your whole life, and your family, that will never heal. You think you're some hero? Now I remember you from last time as well."

Shiro was struggling, trying to break free. Being powerless and knowing his classmates would be in trouble again. Shiro felt like he had to do something, but in his head even when he was stabbing Erlen he never knew what he was going to do after this.

'Maybe I deserve this after all, what the hell was I thinking. It was that stupid teacher's fault. Didn't he say he would help? That he would be there for us? Well, where the hell is he now?! Teachers, adults, they're all liars! I had to act myself!' Shiro screamed internally as he saw a frozen hand move towards him.

Once again, a projectile was seen having been thrown towards Erlen's hand and had hit it away.

"Those people, Quinn likes those people, so I can't let you hurt them." A voice said.

Turning around, annoyed at how many people were getting involved, Erlen went to look at this brave student, but it was one he didn't really recognise. It was a light brown haired boy, and standing next to him, was a plain guy that seemed almost invisible.

Chapter 964: Class of 2A

Looking at the two boys who were walking over, Erlen was wondering just who they were. He didn't recognise them at all. He thought maybe they were some of the students that had gotten beaten up the other day. He didn't recognise any of those that had helped before either but they were all pathetically weak.

However, he was a little worried that based on one kid's confidence that they might be someone from higher up or one with a strong ability, but Erlen had made note of all those that he should be careful to offend. After all, he too knew how the current world worked and didn't want to cause any trouble for the members of his family either.

'Why is the guy next to him not as confident?' Erlen thought.

Sil was trying to walk forward to stop the fight, but before he could, Chucky pulled him by the sleeve.

"Hey, I'm meant to look after you, I can't just have you going into a fight where there are six of them, we should call someone or go get a teacher." Chucky whispered to Sil.

It wasn't that Chucky was afraid of the students, after all, he was an adult that had gone on far more frightening things, such as battles with deadly beasts while being in a faction. But he was a careful person, and having to fight while protecting another he didn't know how hard it would be.

This was the first big mission he had been given by the Cursed faction and he wanted to make an impression. Although, unknown to him, Chucky wasn't selected for any particular reason, it wasn't because he was good, or strong, or had a good ability, it was due to his young looking face.

There weren't too many in the faction that would pass off as high school students.

"Chucky," Sil said for a second. "I don't like your ability." And after saying this he had his hand held out as if he was asking for something.

Reluctantly, Chucky handed Sil a round black ball from around his waist, a similar size to an egg, while keeping some for himself.

"You don't want to kill someone. If you can, avoid doing that as much as possible. Once you do, you can never go back." Sil said.

"Kill, I wasn't planning on killing him, I just wanted to make sure that he could never sleep in his dreams again without thinking about me!" Erlen shouted.

Chucky started to chuckle hearing this.

"Whoa, if you just wanted to ask him out, you didn't have to go through all this trouble, there are other ways." Chucky couldn't help himself but say.

Now in his hand, Erlen had formed two spears made of ice, and had a frown on his forehead looking at the two newcomers.

"Looks like we need to deal with some others first!" Erlen said throwing out the ice spears at both of them, soon the other students started to move as well.

The first thing Sil did was throw the black egg towards the spear and when it hit, the spear completely shattered and fell to the ground, the same happened with Chucky's throw as well, but soon the others would be upon him.

"What should we do? They came here to help us, should we help them?" Swin asked Venus wasn't too sure, the last time people from their class got involved it ended in all of them getting beat, and the other kids now stayed clear of both Venus and Swin. They were honestly quite surprised to see Shiro come and help them again, and now two other students from the class.

"Why, why are so many people helping us?" Venus asked, wiping away his frightened tears, when he looked up, Sil was tapping them both on the shoulder, but he was looking straight past them and at Shiro on the ground.

"Those words I spoke before, they weren't aimed at him, they were aimed at you. Remember what I said." Sil spoke, and soon turned around to all those that were ganged up on him.

All six of them including Erlen had them surrounded.

"We have no choice, we have to fight!" Swin said, standing up.

However, Sil held out his hands, and a few seconds later, two of them were lifted off the ground. Putting his hands together, both of their bodies crashed into each other with such force, and flopped to the floor after. Straight after that, he lifted another one and slammed him against the glass ceiling, causing it to crack above and soon let go allowing him to drop to the floor.

Then when several ice spears came towards him, Sil held them mid-air, throwing them back and hitting them against an ice wall that Erlen had made.

"Whoa, wait what is this telekinesis ability! It must be close to level eight to be able to lift things so heavy!" Swin said, knowing full well due to him having the same ability.

"Now this is an ability I like." Sil said.

It made them wonder what those black egg balls were that they had thrown earlier, and if it was a beast weapon due to how it was able to smash the ice like that. What they didn't realise was it had something to do with Chucky's ability.

Looking around, Erlen noticed that all of his friends had passed out, he didn't even see the others get hit.

'The force from that student's power must have been strong to be able to do that!' Erlen thought. Even if he didn't want to admit it, he was a little afraid.

He had never heard, or knew of someone with such a strong telekinesis power in the school.

"Hey, look, you don't want to hurt me, you know my da-" Before Erlen could finish the sentence, he felt a strong thump at the back of his head and his eyes went white and fell to the ground.

"No one wants to know about your dad." Standing behind Erlen, Chucky could be seen holding one of the black balls in his hand.

"Where did he come from?" Venus asked.

"Yeah I didn't see him in the whole fight." Swin replied.

Chucky could hear every word the kids were saying and although he hated to admit it, as soon as the fighting started for some reason everyone's attention had gone straight to Sil, and they were completely ignoring Chucky. He practically was able to run up straight behind them without anyone noticing and had hit the back of Erlen's head. He had even taken out the other students with little trouble.

"Come on, let's get out of here." Chucky said, and he and Sil were seen leaving the three boys.

"Wait, you're in our class right!" Shiro called out to him, finally breaking out of his spell. "What's your name?"

"I'm Sil." He replied, as he walked back and the two of them headed out of the room.

'I guess no one wants to know my name, huh.' Chucky thought, feeling a little upset.

A short while later, the kids had gone over to Hayley to heal some of their wounds' though they didn't have any serious injuries due to what had happened, they were so small that even Hayley thought nothing of it.

When heading back to their dormitory, they were thinking about what to do.

"Should we tell teacher Hardy, he did tell us to tell him if anything came up?" Swin asked.

"No, teacher Hardy won't be able to do anything." Shiro said. "I know what those kids are like, they probably attacked us because teacher Hardy got involved in the first place. If we tell, something worse could happen to us."

Shiro, wasn't wrong either. As Erlen woke up with the rest, they were steaming with anger all over, and they felt like he had no choice, and he knew exactly what to do.

"Dad, there's something I need you to do.....yeah I'm being bullied. It's best if you come in."

It didn't take long for Erlen's parents to come to the school and call an emergency meeting soon. Erlen, the five kids who were with him, his parents and Head General Innu of the third group were all in a meeting room together.

"I understand." Innu said after listening to everything. "Don't worry, I will speak to the second Head General, and have these students that did this to your kids, and his friends come in here themselves and apologise to both of you. This can not be tolerated in our school."

"Good!" The father spoke, standing up and straightening his high end tailored suit. "I especially want the boy named Sil and Shiro to be brought to us. They could have killed our child!"

Two names in particular were mentioned with great detail from Erlen when he told his story. Towards the end of the fight, as everyone was leaving, Erlen had managed to regain a little bit of consciousness, and while Sil was still there he didn't want to get up off the ground, but he had heard the name of the student that had been spoken at the end, and he was sure to remember it.

Looking away from the parents, there was a smile on Inuu's face. He had been waiting for a way to get back at Head General Hardy but didn't know how, and he thought that this was now the perfect opportunity.

'Thank you kids of class 2A, and especially you Sil and Shiro.'

Chapter 965: The Cursed faction Influence (Part 1)

The next day, in the early morning, the two kids Venus and Swin who were staying in the same room together woke up dreading heading into class. Based on how Erlen had acted before, they were worried that he might already be planning his next move, and they had seen this happen with other students in the past.

'Maybe if we get close with that Sil kid, Erlen will stop messing with us?' Venus thought.

He couldn't stop thinking about what great power, Sil had displayed. How he had completely overpowered a strong ice user. He was calm throughout the whole fight, and didn't get a scratch on him. They were surprised that such a strong student was in their class, even more so that he would help them.

'No, I can't get him involved. What if Erlen tries something worse?' Venus thought, and at that moment, Venus noticed that he had a ton of missed messages from his parents.

Before, in the old military bases, there were only certain periods when one could get in contact with their families. However, this year the military were trying to be a bit different, and this was also a request of those from the Graylash and Cursed faction if they were to send kids from their factions over to the military base.

Most of them were voice messages, and he thought that it might be nice to hear his mom's voice after a while, but when he listened to message after message, he was devastated about what he had heard.

His emotions were so mixed, he couldn't even blink and didn't know how to react at all. His body remained frozen in place.

"Venus I don't know why, but your father, he's been fired from the company!" His Mum sounded panicked and distraught on the phone. Usually, his mother would have tried to hide something like this from him, so that he wouldn't worry, however the last message made it clear why she had told him.

"I don't know what's happened, but they said that if he wanted to get his job back, then they should ask our son about it. Please, if you know anything can you tell us what happened?"

Venus sat there on his bed, playing the messages to himself over and over again, thinking about what had happened, and when he looked across the room, he could see that Swin had an equally shocked look on his face.

It turned out that Venus wasn't the only one that had been affected by this, but also Swin as well. They didn't need to put their minds together for this one, it was obvious who was doing it all.

"Erlen, he really did it..." Venus mumbled. He had to say it out loud to make sure that it wasn't a dream.

Of course, they both knew that Erlen wasn't lying about his father, but no matter what happened in the past while in school, he had never got his parents involved in such a thing. Who would get their parents involved when it was a problem between them. It made no sense to attack other people.

Unfortunately for them, the bad news didn't stop there, as the bell rang to their dormitory door.

"This is Sargent Himmle, please open up. You have been called into a meeting with Head General Innu." Himmle said, spoken through the door.

The two boys looked at each other and gulped. They truly didn't know what to do now and didn't know what to expect.

Being called by the sergeant, and having a meeting with a head general felt like a serious thing. They knew Erlen was influential but not this influential and they could see their whole lives being ruined. Neither boy said anything, as they moved from their building and headed towards where the third group's building was based.

They entered a medium sized meeting room, where there was a desk, and a bookshelf on either side of the walls. Towards the left side of the room, were two sofas and a table and on one of the sofas, was an older gentleman in a suit, and sitting next to him was Erlen.

Erlen's father looked at the students with disgust as they turned their heads avoiding eye contact.

From his seat Innu had stood up.

"Please take a seat, we are still waiting for everyone to arrive." Innu said, walking over, and standing on the other side. Even the sergeant that had brought them there was standing on the other side, and it really felt like everyone in the room was against them too, with no one to back them up.

Looking across them, seeing both Shiro and Sil, Erlen wasn't feeling the happiest seeing them.

'My father was able to do something about Venus and Swin, but these other three. Shiro, turned out to be an orphan so there was nothing we could do to his family, and as for the other two, known as Sil and Chucky, we also couldn't find any information at all. Oh well, I'll just have to be happy with what they're about to get.'

Innu wasn't the only one that was going to be a part of the meeting, eventually the other two Earthborn head generals had entered as well Samantha and Sach.

'Now the others can see me getting a little payback for the humiliation we received.' Innu thought.

"What's going to happen to us?" Shiro eventually said, his voice a little shaky.

"Don't worry, you're only students, but what you have tried to do to my son is a big crime." Erlen's father spoke, and that had quietened Shiro down a lot. "So don't expect a slap on the wrist."

He thought he might get in trouble or use the beast weapon on the fellow student. This would be placed on his record, and his chances of getting into the Graylash family might be stained. With a powerful family out to get him, they would make it so his report would deem him more useless than he already was.

'No one is going to help us.' Shiro thought. 'No one is on our side and even those two that helped us before can't do anything.'

He looked to his right, and could see Sil and Chucky sitting quite calmly on their seats. Did they really not fear what was about to happen to them, did they not care about their record or score they would get when leaving this palace.

'Oh that's right, these two are already strong, they don't need to worry.'

"I wouldn't be so calm if I were you two." Innu said. "A matter like this could very well mean an expulsion, and expulsion from the military may be a fate worse than the lowest grading students and we will be sure to let your faction, and everyone know about what you did today. Do you think anyone will be willing to take those in that attack their own?"

Still, Innu's threats did nothing, as Chucky remained calm, and even Sil gave a little yawn.

The door opened, one more time, and the last person who had entered the room was Quinn.

"Head General Hardy, it looks like you made it!" Innu said, being polite and putting on a smile.

Straight away, seeing Sil and Chucky involved in this incident, he was a little calm, but soon after he could hear the other students' panicked heartbeat. It was clear they were nervous and scared. Quinn walked over by their side and stood behind them.

"What happened?" Quinn asked.

Samantha, seeing this, could feel an immense pressure coming off him. She didn't know what Innu was planning to do, but in the end, thought that she should come along, just for his sake. From that day onward after the meeting with Oscar, she couldn't get his words out of her head.

'Don't do anything stupid Innu.' She thought.

Chapter 966 - The Cursed faction Influence (Part 2)

For a second, Venus and Swin were happy to see General Hardy, but soon after realising their dark situation, even they thought that it might be difficult for him to help them, and the intense energy radiating off from him was just scaring them even more.

"There seems to have been an incident involving your students here from group 2 and my students from group 3." Innu claimed. "The one that has been brought in has been hurt the most, but not only that, he and his family are an important asset to the military."

"They are a great sponsor of ours, which only makes matters even more serious to the point where we have had to call you in."

Saying these words. Erlen's father had a smug look on his face, as if he was proud. He sorted out and fixed up his suit a little more to make sure he looked the part. It was as if his looks were more important than the situation they were all currently in.

"Six of our students had been beaten by the five that have been brought in here today, they were the cause of all of this. The damage is as follows, a concussed head, several broken ribs, a twisted arm, missing teeth and finally to our student Erlen here. A stab wound in his side, and blunt blow to the back of his head, seems to have been done with a heavy object of some kind."

"I don't have to tell you that some of these wounds could have been fatal. If it was a simple fight then maybe it could have been overlooked, but something could have easily gone wrong and the outcome could have been worse."

Erlen's father stood up and pointed towards Shiro.

"This boy that stabbed my son, if it wasn't for my son's quick thinking then he might have died. Luckily my son is talented and had used his abilities to stop the wound from becoming worse." He said, sitting back down in his seats and straightening out his blazer once more.

All of them that were sitting in the chair, hearing the accusations made out as they were, didn't really know what to say. Based on what they had seen Sil do, it didn't seem like they were making any of the injuries up.

Although, Swin and Venus were wondering what to say themselves, after all, they hadn't hurt any of the pupils, so why should a punishment fall on them? And most of all, what of their parents if they did claim that nothing had happened?

Quinn had finally heard enough to speak up a little on his own.

"If I may ask, General Innu, did you know there was an incident involving some of the students here and students from your class before today? If I was a gambling man I would have to think that the incident that happened the other day, is linked to this one as well."

Seeing what Quinn was trying to do, Erlen was the one to first speak up about it.

"It's true." Erlen said. "Me, Venus and Swin used to be friends out of our schools. We knew each other and we had a falling out the other day, we got into a scuffle and we were both beaten, but I didn't expect them to ambush us the very next day and try to use a weapon. They even called their new friends they made."

Erlen, was putting on an Oscar worthy performance making it look like he was the victim in all of this. Quinn could imagine if it was another general, due to the other family's position and connections with the military they would take their side.

Looking over to Chucky, Quinn could see him shaking his head, calming what they said wasn't true at all.

Seeing how his son seemed to be quite upset at what happened, Erlen's father stood up in anger.

"I won't accept anything but begging from these students, they should be l.i.c.k.i.n.g the floor and apologising for what they did. If the military doesn't give them an appropriate punishment they can kiss their contracts goodbye! We, the Tiffle family, will not tolerate this!" The father declared.

Hearing this, for a second, both Venus and Swin wanted to immediately get on the floor and apologise, they didn't care if they were really in the wrong or not, but they needed to make sure. That their parents wouldn't be affected.

"If we do that, if we do that, then will you give our parents their jobs back!" Venus shouted, as he pleaded.

Everyone in the room was quite stunned by this, but the other Generals expected something like this might happen. Although it did not happen often, there were occasions where parents ended up getting involved in their kids' disputes.

However, what Samantha was concerned about was the strange atmosphere that had just gotten heavy in the room.

"What did you say he did?" Quinn asked, as his fingertips had dug straight through the sofa.

"Please, we're really sorry!" Swin pleaded. "We will do whatever you ask, but our parents already work so hard for us." Swin said, already on his knees on the ground.

"As you can see General Hardy, this is a serious matter for the military, I think if the students at least apologise we can lighten their punishment." Innu said, a bit worried himself, not realising that the father would go this far for his son. "I hope we do not need to escalate this to the point where Oscar has to get involved."

Quinn didn't look up, and lifted Swin off the ground. He felt so light as he placed him back in his seat.

"No one should have to get on their knees, especially if they did nothing wrong." Quinn said softly, while his back was turned to the others.

"Do you really think it makes sense for a bunch of low levels, who are even weaker than your son and his gang, to attack a group of high levels? You want me to believe that they were the ones that started this mess. That they would really instigate a fight knowing full well that they would lose?" Quinn questioned them.

"Who even are you, General Hardy?!" Erlen's father shouted back. "Don't you know how this world works? Who cares who attacked who first! The crimes committed by those children are unforgivable. They attacked some important people that are vital for our society. We should be respected for all we are doing for this war, and what have they done! They dare to even attempt to attack us or argue with us!"

Samantha urgently wanted to step in at this point. As she didn't know what General Hardy might do. She knew the connections the Tiffle family had with the military.

'Surely, just a random member of the Cursed family can't be that important? We can just comply for now and apologise to those in the Cursed.' She thought, but no matter what, she couldn't step in.

"So you people really don't understand or learn, until you get a taste of your own medicine." Quinn said, turning around and looking at Erlen's father.

Seeing General Hardy's eyes, she was just thankful that they weren't glowing red like last time. But why did he seem so confident?

"Oh, you're calling me while you're away. I assume that something has come up that you need my expertise with?" Logan said.

The others looked at this young boy and didn't have a clue who he was, or why Hardy had decided to make a call in the middle of the situation they were in.

"I don't usually ask you for favours Logan, but this time I had to-"

"Don't say anything else, you will upset me if you do. Tell me what you need." Logan replied.

Before saying anything, Quinn looked at Erlen and his father. He could still see that they weren't worried, or cared at all how they had just treated several lower ranking students and their families.

"Look into a family called the Tiffle family for me please." Quinn requested.

Some typing was heard, and it didn't take long for Logan to bring up their information.

"It looks like the family has a lot of connections with the military, they own a lot of manufacturing plants that mostly help produce the Mechs for the military amongst other things. What's the problem with them, are they causing trouble?" Logan asked, calmly.

"How long would it take to bring them down?" Quinn asked.

Hearing these words, nearly everyone in the room was stunned. The kids, the Generals and even Erlen's father. However, they all assumed it was merely a bluff.

"I think I can gather what has happened, let me sort it out." Logan said and the call had ended there.

"You think your little fake call is going to scare me. I've had enough, call the Supreme Commander immediately!" Erlen's father demanded.

However, a few moments later, his own watch started going off. Looking down he could see it was an important call that he had to take.

"Sir! Sir! We have a problem, our company, we've been bought out!" The caller said.

"How is that possible, our group would never have sold!"

"They had no choice sir. We no longer have access to any of our systems or databases. It was a complete take-over that happened in seconds, but somehow they managed to halt production immediately. An offer was then made from the Green family, that they wouldn't allow us to continue production, complete our contracts unless we sold. Even if we wanted to do anything we couldn't and Sir, I'm afraid I have even more bad news. The first decision the new director had ordered to be done, was to get rid of all the executive staff and other directors."

Soon there was more bad news as the Tiffle's personal accounts were taken over, and multiple pings from his accounts were being sent to him.

"What is happening!" Erlen's father panicked, as he went on the floor, grabbing his hair. Everything was hitting him at once and he was slowly beginning to make sense of it all. His stomach was churning and his head started to spin and the only comfort he had was being on the floor. Looking up, he saw Quinn, who was looking down at him. "Please! It was you, wasn't it? I'm sorry, I'm sorry!" He shouted.

Quinn stared at the man on the floor, who was almost begging, and stepped away before he could grab on to his feet.

"Father, I don't understand! What's happening?!" Erlen started to panic.

A ping was received on Quinn's watch, and it was a message from Logan.

"Your company and all of its productions will continue to operate as normal. However, you nor your family, will no longer own it anymore." Quinn read.

Turning away, he left the man. "Come on, let's go." Quinn said, as he walked out of the front door. Sil and Chucky stood up following him out, and the other students quickly followed close behind.

Shiro couldn't believe what he had just seen happen. Why would a General get so involved in all of this, just for a couple of students? Taking down a corporation of that size couldn't have been easy.

As Quinn left that door, everyone was thinking, 'who the hell was this person?'

Chapter 967: Logan the real superpower

On the Cursed Ship, Sam was doing his daily duties, reading the reports sent in from all the different planets they now owned. Sorting of the beast crystals, allocating trade, seeing what was made and he even had to decide who in the Cursed faction would get what equipment first.

Since the attack on the forgery that happened on the Cursed ship last time, he had told those in the forgery to make equipment for themselves first. They needed something just in case of an emergency. Even though Alex could now use the shadow ability, it wasn't enough and they needed to be careful.

So strangely at the moment, there were some of those in the forgery with legendary tier armour.

Sam continued to look through all the reports, which was done at the command centre. He liked working here because it was where one could see the vast space out from the glass window.

That's when he noticed that he had received an additional report compared to usual, and it had come from someone who he didn't typically get reports from.

"This one was sent from Logan, was there anything I asked him to send me?" He wondered. He was pretty sure he would have remembered if he had.

Although Sam was mostly in charge of the Cursed faction, the leaders themselves were pretty much free to do what they wanted, and they did so with a few helping him here and there. Wevil, Nate, Linda, Dennis and Megan were the ones that helped out the most.

Opening up the report, it took Sam a second, before he thought his head was going to explode, he couldn't quite believe what he was reading and he needed an explanation immediately.

A short while later, Sam and Logan were sitting opposite each other and Logan had just given a full explanation to him about what happened, and what exactly the report was about.

"So, you're telling me, Quinn told you to buy out all these manufacturing plants. You essentially sent me the details of the whole company!" Sam said, still not understanding to the full extent of what he was being told.

"I just did what I was asked. There was trouble that was giving Quinn a headache. I thought the easiest way to get rid of that trouble, without putting up a fight, was to buy the company. Anyway, I have my own things to do so I can't really do much with it. That's why I have handed it over to you. Rather than be owned by the Green family, I want it to be owned by the Cursed faction." Logan explained.

Having looked through the report, Sam was able to see the contracts the company had on top of who their biggest client was, which was the military. In the past, The Cursed didn't actually do much trading with the military, and they were more focused on trading beast gear and crystals with other factions on different planets.

'I guess this could be our link to the military? All the employees are still there, it looks like just the directors and executives were the ones that were let go. It should be doable and will benefit us a lot. The mechs were handy when we fought against the Sunshield family as well for those that are weak, and they are great for construction.' Too many ideas were feeding into Sam's head at once as he realised how good of a thing this was for their faction, it just meant there was extra work to be done.

"How much did this cost?" Sam couldn't help but ask.

"Don't worry about that." Logan replied. "It's all my money. Remember my parents have passed away and I'm an only child. I also don't plan to have any children in the future, so the money needs to be spent somehow. If it's to help Quinn and those in the Cursed then I will have deemed it a good cause." Logan said.

It wasn't like the Cursed faction were poor. Ever since taking over the Daisy faction, and with Sam creating a good system they now had quite a bit of good stable income. Even then, if they had no credits as long as they had beast crystals that could be used, they could do something.

But thinking about the Green family's influence on everything, it made him think. Was it possible if Logan wanted to, could he take down the whole of the military's systems? In a way, the Green family had always been a powerhouse just not fighting wise.

'I guess that's why they never did, they kept a neutral relationship with each of the families, helping everyone and for the sake of humanity. It meant all groups were protecting the Green family, but now, there was a clear bias for who they worked for. Perhaps this may cause a problem in the future.'

Seeing that Sam no longer had anything to say about the subject, Logan decided to change the subject.

"Did you manage to send my request to Paul?" Logan asked.

This was something that Sam wasn't too sure was a good idea.

"I did," Sam said. "Whenever you want to come over, he will be happy to escort you to where you want to go, and then you are free to be sent back. He just informed the King about what you are doing, but it seems like everything will be okay."

"Good, this robotic arm is good, but I realised that it isn't the best, but I will use this opportunity to make something better than what I had before." Logan replied, swinging his robotic arm about.

"And how are your other projects going?" Sam asked. "When you talked to Quinn did you inform him of what you wanted to do? I know it's not really my place to stop you, but I will have to tell him."

There were two things that Logan was mostly focused on while on the Cursed ship. The first task was looking for any Demon tier beasts on the planets that they currently owned. They realised after finding out that some planets had an inner planet, that the device sometimes would have to be used in different places to get a fuller and more accurate reading if there was a Demon tier beast on that planet.

If they found one, then they would inform Quinn immediately, and Quinn temporarily would stop his duties as teacher to see what they should do about the Demon tier beast. After witnessing Hilston's power and knowing he was still out there, this was the quickest way to get stronger, but was also the most risky possibly taking most of their lives.

As for the second reason...

"I'm thinking about it, I'm not quite sure, and still trying to see if there is another way, but it's the only clue I have." Logan said while walking away.

What Logan was referring to, was the Blade island itself. No one knew if the Hilston family had returned to their island after what had happened, but in a way they were related to Logan's goal. Wanting to fulfill his parents request, he wanted to find Richard Eno, but there were no clues about him anywhere, apart from one.

On the Blade Island, there was a note left by Brock, one of the top workers for the Blade family, telling him to keep searching. Logan had a feeling that he knew where Richard Eno was, and there was a reason for him being on the island.

Trying to search for clues if Brock had left that place or anything else was almost impossible, even with his vast network, and 'borrowing' others' networks using his powers he was able to find nothing.

The only clue he had left was to go to the Blade island itself, and this was what Sam was referring to earlier.

At the same time, there were also others planning to make their move soon as well. Leo, Erin and Layla often met up with each other, for more things than one.

Layla using all of her knowledge of Pure had pinpointed all the bases on other planets she knew of. As she actually didn't know where or what the main base was located on.

Their search for Pure members and the Pure organisations had to start somewhere, and soon they would be going out on their first expedition.

Having just finished a meeting with the other two, Layla had gone to a quiet part of the training room; tired, panting and sweating. She had also been training with them as well.

While she rested up against the wall, she kept thinking of one person in particular.

'Quinn, I wonder how you're dealing with being a teacher?' Layla thought.
'Honestly, I wanted to come with you like the good old times, but I have my own questions as well. Why did my mother decide to create Pure in the first place? Why did she hate ability users? Surely one of the founders knows? I thought she never cared about me, but in the end that wasn't true at all.'

Footsteps were heard coming towards her, and blonde hair flickered in front of her face.

"Come on, it's time we get moving, it looks like Leo is ready as well."

From behind, Leo stood up, who was in a sitting position the whole time, and he had a smile on his face.

"The third stage of Qi is a brilliant thing, I should inform Quinn about it once we are done." Leo said.

Chapter 968: Two wrongs

Walking through the hallway, the kids were returning to their homeroom classroom wondering what they had just witnessed. Their emotions were on a rollercoaster ride during the whole thing. They were panicking throughout and all of sudden, they were now walking back to their homeroom class.

No punishment had been received towards any of them, and miraculously, they had just witnessed a worried looking Erlen, and his father who was kneeling and begging on the floor. All of this was due to their teacher, General Hardy.

The kids didn't say anything, as it was taking each of them a while to process what they had just seen. It was clear that Erlen had the head general of the third group on their side, but still when compared to their own teacher, it seemed like he was untouchable.

"Teacher, you're amazing." Venus mumbled.

At that moment, they had nearly reached their classroom, and hearing the words from the kids, he realised that he had better say something. He turned around to them and looked at Sil and Chucky. It looked like the two of them had got involved trying to protect the kids.

When they were listing out the injuries on all the students, Quinn could only assume that Sil had something to do with it, and he was thankful that Sil didn't go too far.

"I want to talk to you guys about what just happened. As a teacher, I think it's my duty to say that two wrongs don't make a right." Quinn said. "What I did just there, I abused my power and used it against them. I don't want you guys to grow up like that."

Swin and Venus looked at each other, as if they didn't understand quite what Quinn was saying.

"Teacher, we don't think you abused your power. You could have done that from the beginning but you didn't. Until it felt like we were in a corner. You used your power to help against what you thought was an injustice. They were the real abuse of power!" Swin said. "You only used it when you felt like it was necessary while those guys used it everyday."

It made him feel a little better that the kids didn't see him as the big bad guy in the situation, but he just wanted to make it clear to them.

"If you can keep what happened a secret, that would be for the best." Quinn said, giving them all a wink.

When they were just about to reach their classroom door, Shiro, who hadn't said a word, just felt like he had to say what was on his mind.

"General Hardy, who are you? I thought you said you were a low level like me...I know you're a Head General, but no Head General can do something like that..." Shiro stated.

Looking at the young boy, who reminded Quinn a lot like himself, he thought it would be good to have someone like him join the Cursed faction, before he could be ruined by the current society.

"The Cursed faction are stronger than you think." Quinn left it at that, entering the class and the lesson had begun.

It was safe to say that during class, the kids couldn't concentrate at all on what Quinn was talking about. They kept thinking about how they were saved, and so spectacularly.

'This guy, he is super strong, has high level beast gear, and was able to do something like that to Erlen's family?' Venus thought. 'He is not a normal person, but I've never heard of him.'

At the same time though, due to how quick those in the Cursed faction had risen, there weren't many that knew a lot about them. When the bell rang and it was the end of the homeroom class, Venus and Swin noticed that their teacher had requested for Sil and Chucky to stay behind.

They thought that their names might get called too, but it never did happen. They thought it was a little strange but nothing too out of the ordinary since they were also involved in the incidents the other day.

The reason why Quinn had called them, was because he wanted to hear the full story of what had really happened that day. Why the two of them were there and how everything had started.

"Well, it looks like you did a really good job, Sil. I'm proud of you." Quinn said, putting his hand on his shoulder.

Hearing the praise, made Sil act in a strange way, and he placed his head slightly downward.

"It's nothing, I just thought 'what would Vorden do' if he was here."

Hearing about this, reminded Quinn of when he was in school. Vorden would often come back beaten and bruised, and it was only later he found out that Vorden was going around beating all those that were abusing their powers.

"Yes, and hopefully Vorden will be back soon, remember what you need to do."
Said Quinn.

However, hearing the full story there was one thing that was concerning, and it was Shiro. The fact that he had gone so far as to take a weapon from the beast weapons class, and pretty much had committed to wanting to kill Erlen and dealing with the consequences later.

'This isn't a good sign. It reminds me of how Peter was at one point, if he gets a strong power, he could very well attempt to use it to get revenge on all those that bullied him.' Quinn thought.

Although Quinn had to admit when he was younger, he had harboured these same thoughts as well. But he realised that most of the time it wasn't the individual's fault, but rather a problem with the whole system. It was a change that would take some time to achieve.

Later that day, when it was the school lunch break, Venus and Swin were both looking for somewhere to sit. After the incident, most of those in their class were still trying to avoid them. Afraid that they too would get attacked by Erlen and his gang if they got close to them.

They didn't know about the extraordinary events that had occurred and they were fighting everything in their body to hold it in. That's when they spotted Shiro sitting on his own and decided to sit with him.

The three of them now, although didn't have much in common before, now all shared a certain bond, and had one thing they loved to talk about. Their favourite teacher, General Hardy. It seemed like they had all come to the same conclusion, Hardy had to be a fake name.

"In this day and age, it's quite common for popular people to only be known by their name rather than what they look like, so maybe he used that to his advantage." Swin said.

"Ah, like those famous power fighter players. Some of them never reveal who they are in real life." Venus replied.

In the middle of their conversation, they spotted someone entering the room, and it was Erlen. It was still the same day that the incident had happened, so he didn't yet have time to take in everything that had occurred, and who knows how the conversation between him and his father had gone. But one thing was clear, he wasn't acting himself.

Usually, people would allow him to pass to grab his food first, but he just waited in line like everyone else, getting his tray of food like a zombie. When he sat down, he didn't touch any of his food and just looked at it. His eyes were puffy and red as if he had been crying the whole time, and the side of his cheek was red.

Quite possibly, after finding out what happened and everything his father had built up, he had put the blame on his son for losing it all, and was now dishing out punishment on him.

It was hard for the others to feel sorry for him though, they had years of abuse, and their injuries were far worse. They were just hoping that Erlen would learn from this.

After what had happened today, there was another group that was stunned by what they had just seen. In Innu's room; Innu, Samantha, Sach and Hayley were all sitting down together.

"I just got an update from the company, it looks like all the contracts are going to be continued as per usual." Samantha said. "Also it seems to all be true, the Green family has taken over the company and now it belongs to the Cursed faction."

"Who would have thought?" Sach said. "The Green family and the Cursed working together!"

"The person who Hardy called, I've seen him before." Hayley mentioned. "When the fight was going on for electing the next big power, he was there along with the Bree family, working with Mona."

"Does that mean that the Cursed faction took him in after the Bree family disbanded?" Innu asked.

"I'm not sure, but the Cursed family seem to have a lot more allies than people think on the surface, as you can see." Hayley said, wondering herself as she knew her father, Paul, an ex-head general, was also part of the Cursed faction.

Everyone still underestimated the Cursed faction, due to them being the newest addition to the leaders table, but it was quite clear with their allies and consuming the Daisy faction, they were bigger than anyone imagined.

"I think I'm starting to understand why Oscar told us to try to get the Cursed faction on our side." Samantha blurted out.

Hearing this, set the other two aback a bit as well. They were hoping that Oscar might be a help to them, but if Oscar cared about the Cursed faction, then they might not see eye to eye.

"Yes, but did you see how he is acting? He acts like he owns the military and that he can come and do whatever he likes!" Innu shouted.

"Calm down." Sach said. "You had your chance and you failed, but I think I have something up my sleeve that might do the trick. He might have a strange ability, and connections but he has never fought us directly. I think we can figure out something."

Chapter 969: Adapt to the situation

Later in the school day, it was time for the students to head to their classes, and currently Sil and Chucky had decided that they would hop over to the elemental class. The other day, they had joined a mental ability class and today they had switched to another one.

The two of them decided that they would continue to switch between classes while Sil would try to copy as many different abilities as he could. The goal was to try and find someone that could possibly help Sil bring the other two back.

Although it was unlikely they would find anyone in the elemental class that could help, they wouldn't leave any stone unturned, and this seemed to be quite the easy class for them to join.

The elemental class was filled with students and was always the most popular class in school. Students would attend it regardless if they had an elemental ability or not. Some just wanted to see displays of the most powerful abilities, while others were there to make connections with other families.

However, in the bright dome-like room, standing on top of a square stage structure at the very back was a special person. The usual teacher of the elemental class had claimed to have invited a special guest. Quite a young looking gentleman was standing by their side, and he was covered in white robes. The special guest was one of the head generals who was part of the Graylash family, named Robin Graylash.

Because of him, the already popular class was filled with even more students, and it looked like that's when Chucky noticed that Shiro, from their class, was here as well. Standing at the very front watching keenly on the demonstration.

"Come on Sil, you're not going to get a better chance than this?" Chucky said. "All of these people here and they're paying attention to the speech. I know you don't like approaching people but here you can touch whoever you like?"

When Quinn had called them after class, he had learnt of what happened, but on top of that Chucky had a question of his own. Just who was Sil? Sil had been able to copy his ability, and then soon after used the telekinesis ability. He was so strong and powerful.

The Blade kids that were on the Cursed ship were kind of a secret, always training on their own, and not many knew about Sil.

In the end, since Chucky had been such a good help to Sil, so far, Quinn told him what his ability was, and what their goal was. To try and find a certain person with a specific ability. He didn't go into much detail after this and he didn't need to.

Chucky, with a clearer goal in mind with what they were trying to do, was ready to help. However there was one problem.

It didn't seem like Sil liked people that much, nor touching them either unless he had to. In the last class they were in, they tried to think of several ways for Sil to touch others without it seeming weird. The easiest way was through an introduction and handshake.

Whenever it came to this part though, Sil just wouldn't stick out his hand, or say his name. It made the situation awkward eventually causing the other person to leave. So now seeing how things were, Sil could just go through crowds of people touching them.

"Okay, I'll try." Sil said convincing himself it was something he had to do, if he wanted to get Vorden and Raten back.

The two of them were at the very back, and not wanting to make eye contact or make it awkward. Sil started to walk through the crowds of people while the speech continued. While doing so he would let his hands out, and brush it past each person as he walked by.

There were two clear ways for Sil to copy one's ability. Through a brief touch of one's skin, or holding onto one's body. So in some instances if he grabbed onto another one's arm or on their shoulder, if he was holding onto their actual body he could still copy their cells.

Still, the easiest thing to do was just skim past their hands, as he did now, learning of other people's ability.

On the stage, Robin was demonstrating the after effect of the lightning ability. He was just moving his hands simply in a circle but a trail of lightning would be left behind and eventually he could make small circles out of this.

"You should use the tools you have learnt to be creative and come up with your own skills. Although our abilities may be the same, every person is different." Robin explained. "Even if your ability is not an elemental one, we are only limited to what we can create in our mind."

"There are two constant enemies you will face, one being the Dalki. They have a permanent form that we are used to, but with their human-like bodies and extreme strength they can adapt to the situation they are put in. At the same time, you must adapt as well.

"As for the second enemy, those are the beasts we face nearly everyday. Aggressive in nature as they attack on sight but more importantly, they come in different shapes, sizes and abilities. If you have utilized everything in your arsenal and still cannot defeat it, then you need to adapt and create something new. To do that you must all treat your abilities as part of your body. This is an...this is an..." in the middle of his talk, Robin started to stutter, as his concentration was losing focus. But it wasn't because he was nervous or shy, it was because there was a distraction happening in the crowd.

A light brown haired boy was making his way through the crowd of people, lightly pushing others aside as he walked by. It was a big distraction, since he was the only one that was moving, but what was even worse, it seemed like the boy was uninterested in the lesson. He wasn't looking at the stage, and was just zig zagging through the crowd of people as if this was his goal.

The rings of lightning he had created disappeared and now a single finger started to spark blue.

"Now, once your ability is like a part of your body, you will have absolute control like so." Robin said, as he pointed his finger into the crowd and decided to fire a very small spark of lightning.

Still going through the crowd, Sil wasn't paying attention and was just focusing on his task.

'No, no, that ability won't help. How many earth users are there?' Sil thought.

Suddenly, he could feel a few hairs on his head stand up, and when he finally lifted his head, a blue spark of lightning had hit him on the forehead. His whole body stood shaking in place from the shock, for a short while. The others seeing his body shake had decided to move away from him.

"Did he just hit a student with his lightning?" Some of the students watched in shock.

'Is that Sil and Chucky?!" He thought, as he looked at them.

Chucky immediately went over to grab Sil, but then his body too was shaking from the shock, and eventually it had stopped.

In order not to cause a panic, Robin quickly informed the students what had just happened. "Don't worry, I didn't use a large amount of force. This skill isn't one that will cause a lot of damage, so it won't injure the student badly. However, it will paralyze a person for a few seconds." Turning his attention towards Sil, Robin spoke his next words directly to him. "Although, I do have to say that if you are not interested in the lesson, then rather than be a distraction the two of you should leave."

When the two had finally recovered, Sil's and Chucky's hair was both a little frazzled, and Sil kept his head down.

"Sil, are you okay? Hey, answer me." Chucky said, but Sil just continued to look down.

The two of them hadn't been with each other long, but from the brief encounter they had before, he was worried.

'No, he isn't planning to...' Chucky was preparing for the worst.

Chapter 970: What is the strongest ability?

The crowd of students who had attended the elemental class for the special demonstration, never imagined that they would have witnessed an actual skill being used, and against another student at that.

However, what was quite surprising, was while Chucky had only gotten second hand aftershock from touching Sil, he was down on one knee. As for Sil, he had remained standing.

'Doesn't hurt my arse!' Chucky thought. 'I feel like my whole insides have been fried.' His immediate reaction after receiving an attack like this one, was to pay back the person that had dealt it.

Maybe there were some that would be frightened, but Chucky's natural response was to fight. However, he knew who Robin Graylash was. One of the strongest members of the Graylash family, who's name had spread quite far and wide.

If he was to do anything, it would be pointless. Which was why, based on his own feelings, he couldn't imagine what Sil was feeling or would do. He was a person who was a little unstable.

Looking at Sil, it seemed like the worst was coming true, as Sil raised his hand towards Robin, with an open palm and looked at him. The students weren't stupid. If anyone did this it only meant one thing, Sil was planning an attack.

'He can't be thinking of attacking a head general?' Shiro thought, watching from the side.

Although, he didn't know Sil. Sil had saved him that day, and he had seen some of his strength. However, he couldn't imagine Sil beating a head general, and one of the strongest members of the Graylash family who had the strongest ability in existence.

Chucky, who was by Sil's side, was having the same thoughts as well. He tried to get up, but his legs didn't seem to listen. When trying to move his leg, it was as if the muscles in his arm would activate instead.

'Is this the general's skill, then how is Sil able to move?' Chucky thought.

The truth was, it was the same for Sil, but with years of training different types of ability, he had quickly worked out which muscles had switched to which parts. If moving his leg moved his right arm in a certain way, then he would just do that.

"Sil, think of Quinn, we can't cause a scene." Chucky desperately said, thinking it was the only words that would calm him down. For some reason, there was one person that Sil always responded to, which was why he thought this might work, and a few seconds later, Sil was seen placing his hand down.

Through the whole ordeal, Robin had a smile on his face. He wasn't frightened when the student raised his hand.

"Good, now if you want to stay I hope there won't be any more distractions," Robin said and continued on with his show.

Chucky decided to move him and Sil to the back to check if he was okay. His body could now work as it seemed like the effect of the lightning was only a temporary effect. The students were now also staying clear of them, afraid Robin might just lash out at them again.

Which meant that Sil could no longer touch the other students.

'Maybe we will get another chance, another way.' Chunky thought.

Surprisingly, there was one person from the crowd that did approach them, and that was Shiro.

"Is he okay?" Shiro asked.

"I'm fine, like he said it didn't hurt, but it was annoying." Sil replied, folding his arms. Even if it didn't hurt he was clearly frustrated.

The speech continued from Robin and his demonstration was about to finish, so he decided to end the show off with a Big Bang, and started to show many different spectacles and skills, moving himself at the speed of lightning, creating thunderbolts to hit certain cards that he threw in the air. It was more similar to a magic show but it had done its job and the students were impressed including Shiro.

'I see, now I understand why the Head General agreed to do a demonstration even though this is the Cursed house elemental class.' Chucky thought. 'He wants to win over the students so when they choose to select a group to join, they will chose the Graylash family. Smart move.'

The demonstration was finally complete and Robin had a few last words.

"Now remember, although I said imagination is the most important thing, there will be things that I have shown that are just not possible without the Graylash family ability. After all, that is why our ability is the strongest ability in the world."

The students were ready to give a round of applause until they were interrupted once again.

"That's not the strongest ability in the world." A voice shouted.

When they turned around to see who spoke, they saw that it was none other than the student who had been attacked.

"Oh, I see it was the boy who had interrupted me before. Well, if you think it isn't true then do you mind giving me an example?" Robin asked.

At this point, Chucky didn't know what to do, but at least he thought a fight wouldn't break out this way, or he hoped.

Hearing these words, Shiro who was next to them was reminded of something general Hardy had said to him, about how there were other strong abilities out there as well.

"Of course." Sil replied. "The earth ability is well known to be a weakness of the lightning ability. If an earth user and a lightning user were of the same strength, most of the time the earth user would win."

The students also knew about this as well. They had seen this happen at the inter-base tournament last year. At the finals it was an Earth user against one of the strongest Graylash students and the earth ability user had won. They turned their heads waiting for an answer from the teacher.

"I'll give you half a point for that answer. Although what you say is correct, when it comes to cultivating the Graylash family is more advanced and has many skills. To put it simply, for every great earth user out here, there are about ten Graylash family members that could match them in strength. On top of that, the cap for the earth ability is far lower than what one can do with the lightning ability, no earth user, even the Supreme commander Oscar has been able to match up to our Leader Owen." Robin replied. "This is why I say lightning is the strongest ability there is."

The students then turned their heads, as they waited for Sil to reply next.

"There are still other abilities that are stronger, what about the Shadow ability?" Sil asked.

Hearing these words, the students started to gossip. Currently in the world the humans only know of one person with the shadow ability, and that was the Cursed leader, Quinn Talen. The students started to debate, but the problem was, no one knew the full power of the shadow ability.

They turned their heads once more expecting a comeback from Robin. But instead he just started clapping.

"Bravo, although I will not admit that the lightning ability is weaker than the shadow, I can not also say that it is stronger because I simply know nothing about it. It is a case that can't be proven." Robin replied

The students were quite surprised by the answer Robin gave, he thought he would have been smug or big headed but he gave an honest answer and because of that, they respected him.

"Enough arguments, let's get this lesson started." Robin said.

The students spread out, and started to practice their abilities, while the teachers and assistants would go around giving pointers. Some students were even able to do a light spar with each other, as there was a doctor on standby in the class in case anything happened.

During this, Sil wanted to attempt to ask some of the students for a light spar so he could use their ability, however, as soon as he moved a certain someone had approached them, and it was none other than Robin.

When he approached Sil, he held out his hand as if waiting for a handshake.

"I would like to apologise to you, I had hit you with my skill out of anger but I should have known to hold back. You are only students, of course you will talk and misbehave. This is why I'm not suited to be a teacher." Robin nervously chuckled to himself.

'Hey what about me? Is he not going to apologise to me?' Chucky thought. 'Well, at least this guy seems to be quite nice. I guess not all generals are bad people.'

Taking his hand, Sil decided to give it a shake.

"On top of this, I would like to give you a little personal lesson." Using his fingers to blow a whistle, in an instant a student appeared by the side of him.

"This is one of my best pupils, Lin. He studied at the Graylash household before we sent him here to the military base. To be honest looking over him is one of the reasons why I decided to join and become a head general here. It was impressive how you didn't fall from my strike earlier, I think you have some skill. Why don't you two have a little sparring match and then after I can give you some pointers. What do you say?" Robin asked.

Chucky was about to say no for him. But was interrupted before he could. Sil had already said. "Okay."

Still not having left their side, Shiro was amazed that the head general and one of the top members in the Graylash family was willing to give pointers to Sil. Because of this, he decided to stay close, with hopes to somehow prove himself to the Graylash family.

Both Sil and Lin were about to get ready in position, but before he did, Sil turned around and looked at Robin.

"I didn't finish answering your question before. I said that there were abilities stronger than the Graylash family, and one of them is mine."

Chapter 971: Who taught who?

Just when Chucky was beginning to think that perhaps the centre of attention would no longer be on them, Sil went ahead and said those words. A few students around had heard what was spoken as they were already looking in their direction.

After all, it wasn't everyday a famous head general would attend class like they had done. After seeing who was brought over and the words of a sparring match, nearly everyone around had practically stopped focusing on their own skills.

'Quinn, I thought you were giving me an easy job when I first met you, but this task is a lot harder than I initially thought. Now I know why you wanted me to keep an eye on him.' Chucky thought, but looking at Sil walking away and getting ready for his fight, he couldn't be mad at him. 'Well, that was a cool line you said at the end so I'll forgive you, now let's just beat this student and get on with the task.'

While Robin was making sure the area was clear and stood towards the centre of where the two were fighting, another visitor had joined the room. Walking in, wanting to have a look at how the class was going, was the head general of one of the Earthborn, Samantha.

She too had heard that one of the Graylash generals was having a demonstration today. Unfortunately due to her own duties in her own group, she couldn't appear at the start of the class, but still decided that it would be best if she popped down to see a first hand demonstration of a peak Graylash family member.

It was at that moment that she spotted him with two boys as if he was about to referee a match.

'Wait a minute, isn't that the boy that Innu brought into the meeting?' Samantha recognised, but didn't think much of it, and decided to stay by the sidelines and watch the sparring match play out.

Robin looked to his right, where Sil was. "Ready?" He asked and then looked to his left, where his personal student Lin was as well. "Ready?"

'Alright, so you say your ability is stronger than that of the Graylash family, let's see if you're all talk.' Ropbin thought, as he swung his arms down to signal it was the start of the fight.

In an instant, both of Lin's hands were covered in lightning, and placing them together the first thing did was fire them off like a lightning bolt right towards Sil.

'The activation speed of his ability is amazing for a kid at such a young age, the Graylash family seem to have gotten stronger since their new leader.' Samantha thought. 'I heard their leader had passed down some of his personal techniques. It seems they have been put to good use.'

Seeing how Sil had gotten hit by something similar last time, most of the students saw no hope for him. Even Chucky was a little worried.

Lifting his hands up, Sil was calm as ever as he brought up a wall of earth from the ground. When the lightning strike had hit, it smashed the top layer crumbling it to pieces.

'My lightning strike won't be stopped by just any mere wall.' Lin thought, until he saw the impact it had made. His strike had only managed to crumble off an inch deep off the wall. 'How high is this person's earth level?'

"Wait an earth ability?!" Shiro was so shocked, he blurted out the question. He truly didn't have a clue what was going on. The last time he saw Sil fight he had used telekinesis, so how was he able to use the earth ability?

Soon though, the wall started to move like a wave, and it wasn't the only one. The whole ground had formed into giant waves of earth. Lin tried his best to fire stronger lighting attacks, but when it hit the giant waves of earth it looked like it would do nothing.

Seeing this, he tried to use his speed to outrun the wave. Turning right, there was another wave taller than himself coming his way, and it was the same on the left.

'How much earth can he control?' Lin started to think. Seeing all this there was only one thing he could do, and running straight towards it he covered his whole body in lightning. Jumping off, he spun his body around, spinning forward making his whole body into a large lightning bolt.

"One of the signature moves of the Graylash family, although I haven't experienced it myself I have seen it in action a few times." Samantha thought. 'Still, that boy, how can he control so much earth?'

What everyone else around failed to realise, although what Sil was doing didn't look too impressive, controlling this amount of earth at once would require a huge amount of MC points. Points beyond that of a level eight user.

"He won't break through." Robin mumbled. When Lin hit the wall, although the damage created to the earth this time was stronger than his previous attack, it was useless when there were multiple waves of mud forming in mere seconds, and soon, it had collapsed on him entirely.

"Stop, the fight is over!" Robin shouted. "Get rid of all this earth."

Sil listened and soon, all the waves of the earth were returned to where it once came from, and Lin could be seen covered in dirt.

"I believe you already know I went easy on him." Sil mentioned.

Robin first made sure his student was okay, and he was completely fine. He knew what Sil had said was true. All he did was move large amounts of earth, he didn't really attack with it, but just overwhelmed him showing the extent of his powers.

"Don't worry about losing Lin, you just have to use this loss to get stronger, and I wouldn't be upset. It looks like you lost against a monster." Robin said.

After seeing to Lin, Robin walked forward one more time and he only had one thing on his mind.

"I said I would teach you a lesson, but it looks like you taught my student a lesson instead, so why don't we continue the lesson. Are you okay with giving me a go?" Robin asked.

The students who were pretending to still be focusing on the class, had now completely stopped, and the teacher and assistants that were giving them a telling off had stopped as well. They just couldn't believe what they had heard and now this was something they wanted to see.

"After all, I need to prove to you that the Graylash ability is the strongest." Said Robin.

At this point, Chucky thought that Sil was just going to do what he wanted anyway, and after seeing what Sil had produced with the mud, and the other members of the Cursed family, he was wondering if the members of the Cursed knew just how strong the members in their family were.

'I was lucky to join this team.'

"Okay." Sil replied calmly, and got back to the starting position he was in before. It was safe to say that, no longer was anyone paying attention to the lesson and instead was just watching the fight that was about to appear before their very eyes.

'That boy, he is incredibly strong,' Samantha thought, and she immediately decided to make a call to a certain high ranking individual. Soon on the other end, Oscar the Supreme Commander had answered.

"I'm sorry to bother you at such an important time, but I have just spotted a student that has an incredible talent, we must make sure he comes to the Earthborn group no matter what!" Samantha claimed.

"Oh, do you know the boy's name and class?" Oscar asked.

Thinking of the details she had gotten from Innu, she remembered the name.

"The boy goes by the name Sil." She replied.

There was a slight pause from Oscar until he eventually replied with a big sigh.

"That boy, I know he is talented, unfortunately he already belongs to the Cursed."

At that moment, the fight in which Lin was now signalling the match to start, had begun. As soon as he threw his hands down, Sil was this time the aggressor starting with the waves of mud the same as before.

As they came towards him though, from all directions, everyone was wondering just what was going to happen. At first, Robin attacked a wave of earth, but as soon as it crumbled it was quickly rebuilt.

Seeing this, even Lin was beginning to worry, thinking his teacher didn't have an answer.

'Destroying that wall will just be a waste of my time.' Robin thought.

Before the wall could reach him from all ends, his whole body started to illuminate in a blue glow, and soon all four waves from each direction completely consumed the spot he was standing in. As they fell to the ground though, there was no figure or person that could be seen, and when they looked up, Robin was already standing off to his side.

"Your earth powers are strong so I can see why you're confident. But the Graylash family also has speed." Robin claimed, as he fired off a lightning bolt directly towards Sil.

However, what happened next, no one had expected. Sil's body too started to light up blue, and it looked as if his whole body had vanished and the lightning bolt had hit nothing but thin air. When looking around the arena, Sil was seen in a different place, and now the entirety of his right hand was covered in lightning.

"Now he has lightning abilities as well, who is this person?" Shiro kept thinking.

All the students were discussing seeing him use multiple abilities trying to figure out who he was. As for Robin, after seeing this, his eyes widened and the lightning covering his arms immediately faded.

"I'm sorry, I apologize for everything I have done." Robin said. "If I knew who you were I would have treated you with a lot more respect." Robin then bowed down to Sil once again. "I hope the Cursed faction leader is doing well. The Graylash family owe you and him a great debt."

After that, Robin was seen leaving the entire place, and had completely left the training hall they were in, leaving everyone in a stunned confusion.

Samantha looked at Sil trying to figure out who he was but she had no clue.

"This student belongs to the Cursed faction, and the Graylash general just paid him so much respect like that. Why do we keep hearing about the Cursed faction members? The Graylash faction should be in higher positions and more respected than these strangers. Yet the Cursed faction keep being treated with this level of respect.

"Just what is the Cursed faction?" Samantha thought.

At the same time, Shiro too was starting to become more and more fascinated with the Cursed faction as well.

'The Cursed faction is a lot stronger than you think.' Shiro remembered his teacher saying these words.

Chapter 972: The missing person

The head general Robin had just left the room, not saying much, saying hardly anything at all, which just added to the confusion of everyone around.

"Did general Robin just lose a duel to a student?" One of them asked amongst the silence.

"I wouldn't say lose, but kind of refusing to fight him."

"Forget that, did you see what he did, he just used two different abilities at the same time. How is that possible?"

"It might be some type of replicating ability, or an illusion, but I don't think the general would act that way if it was an illusion."

The students had many questions to ask, but with the head general not being there, they all turned to look at one person who was. It didn't take long for crowds of students to start rushing over to where Sil was standing.

"That was amazing, who are you?"

"What's your ability?"

"Do you and the general know each other?"

Seeing the crowds of people rushing towards him, while asking a million different questions, Sil had just frozen in place and didn't know what to do. It looked like the wave of people would consume him just like he had done with Lin using the Earth ability.

However, before the crowds of people could get close, two people started to block them from getting to him. Shiro, and Chucky. Predicting something like this would happen, and seeing Sil's awkward character they knew he would freeze.

Stretching out their hands, they were able to block a few of the students but they would soon be trampled by the wave of people.

'Hey, you didn't happen to get an ability that can get you out of here did you?' Chucky asked.

Hearing this, Sil immediately closed his eyes, and soon he had completely disappeared from sight. No one could see him in the room, but he was still there. One of the abilities he had gotten was an invisibility one, thinking that it might come in handy when trying to get other abilities as well.

With that, Sil managed to get out of the interrogation from all the others. The students quickly gave up after not being able to find him, but when the class ended they wouldn't let up, and soon the news of what happened started to spread around the whole school.

Details seemed to get exaggerated, tales of a student taking on the whole elemental class including the head general. It became so much so that the original tale of a student beating a head general was dismissed as just a rumour.

The rest of the day, the students who were looking for Sil never could find him, but there was one person who was more determined than all the others.

Shiro, while everyone was looking for Sil after the class ended, instead Shiro thought it was best to follow Chucky. The two of them had been together not once, but twice now and he didn't think it was just a coincidence.

Yet, for some reason Chucky was incredibly hard to find.

'What did that guy even look like again? Did he have wild hair, long hair? Wait, what colour is even his hair? Why is it so hard to remember that guy?' Shiro thought.

However, eventually he would run into him, as the two of them attended the same class. When having returned to the classroom, it seemed like news had reached the ears of the classmates as well. They twisted and turned trying to look for Sil but he was nowhere to be found.

"Hey Shiro, is it true that Sil beat Robin Graylash?" Venus asked, approaching him with Swin. The two of them always seemed to be together like another pair.

"Um, I mean not quite, the two did have a match, and the general all of a sudden forfeited, so I guess you could say he won." Shiro replied, but this wasn't why Shiro was interested in Sil.

It was his ability, somehow he not only had the Graylash ability he had another. Which meant there was a way to learn abilities without being a part of that family, Shiro thought. Or a stronger ability.

Eventually, Chucky had gone into the room but the lesson had begun. It was tutor time, so Quinn only needed to take registration and catch up on what all the students were doing or how their day was going.

"Teacher, where is Sil?" One of the students asked.

"Sil is sick for the time being." Quinn replied.

Hearing this, Shiro was starting to think something was up.

'Hardy is part of the Cursed faction and at the end, Robin said something about saying hello to the Cursed leader? Is Sil already a part of the Cursed faction?' He started to think. 'Maybe Hardy is covering for him.'

Shiro didn't want to admit it, but the Cursed faction was getting more interesting by the second. When class had ended, Shiro decided to stay behind, he waited and saw that Chucky was waiting as well.

In the end, everyone had left the classroom, and now only Chucky and Quinn were left there.

"Shiro, do you need help with something?" Quinn asked.

"I wanted to speak to Chucky if possible, it's about Sil. I know you guys are working together, you're all a part of the Cursed faction, aren't you? Including Sil." Shiro claimed. "You don't have to lie to me, and I just wanted to say thank you. Sil saved me back then and I wanted to know more about him?"

Both Chucky and Quinn looked at each other for a second.

"Alright Sil, if you want to, you can come out now, I think we need to rethink this whole plan in the first place." Quinn said.

A few seconds later, Sil seemingly seemed to appear out of nowhere standing by Quinn's side.

"Quinn, I'm sorry, things just got out of hand, I was trying to do everything I can." Sil said.

Now Chucky was visibly shaking his head as well, and Shiro took a step back while trying to look his teacher Hardy in the face.

"Quinn..." the name seemed to sound oddly familiar and it took him a minute until he had realised.

"Quinn? As in the leader of the Cursed faction Quinn Talen?" Now things were starting to fall into place about who he really was. Why did their teacher have so many connections and power?

Now, he was standing in front of the world leaders. Equal to a president or prime minister in past times.

However, it was only through the few interactions he had that he was starting to learn just why the Cursed faction was allowed to be on the leaders table.

The first thing Shiro did was get down on one knee and bow his head down.

"Thank you grand leader for looking after me as a student. You protected me from punishment and at the same time your men have protected me again."

What Shiro was doing now was all natural, he didn't know how to react but thought he should at least be this respectful.

"You can get up. Don't worry, here I am just a teacher, and I don't make those in the Cursed faction do that type of thing so why would I make my students? The only thing I ask of you, is if you can be a little tight lipped about this whole incident, as for Sil, well it seems like the whole school already knows about him now." Quinn said, sounding a little disappointed.

He wanted Sil to make some friends while being here, but he had only been in the school two days, and if others thought he was still a student after his display, it would cause a lot of problems for Sil.

There would be students challenging him to fights, others asking for details about his family and more, it just wasn't worth the trouble.

"Actually?" Quinn said realising there was another solution. "Why don't we start again, head over to Peter, and ask him to change your appearance. I'll have to transfer you to another class, I won't be your teacher anymore but I'll get Chucky to transfer as well. I'm sure no one will realise he's no longer in this class, he seems to have that effect." Quinn said.

They had talked about what to do when Sil had come to him. Sil was the first person to explain what actually happened before Quinn had heard the rumours and the two of them were trying to figure out what he wanted to do, and surprisingly, Sil had said he wanted to stay in school.

"If this is the best way, then so be it." Sil said, ready to go invisible once more and head over to where Peter was.

"Wait!" Shiro shouted, as he could see Sil's legs disappearing.

"I wanted to ask you, your ability is strong and I currently don't have an ability, so I was wondering if you could teach it to me?" Shiro pleaded.

Sil looked at Quinn who did nothing but smile back.

"Let me give you some advice. My ability is not suited for just anyone and I wish to never spread this further, but if you are chasing after my ability because of strength then don't. Remember what I said about there being abilities stronger than that of the Graylash family, well you have one of them right in front of you now." Sil said, pointing towards Quinn.

"The shadow ability?" Shiro said.

Chapter 973: Shadow books

Shiro continued to look at Quinn, not asking him the question he had deep down. It was as if he was intimated by who this person was after finding out who he was. For Quinn though, seeing he was debating internally on what to do, it wasn't a good sign.

"Let me ask you a question." Quinn finally said. "Do you want to join the Cursed faction, or are you only interested in joining because you want the power that Sil mentioned?"

At this point and time, although Shiro was interested in the Cursed faction, he still couldn't get out of his head that his life would be better to join either the Earthborn or the Graylash family, he just didn't know enough about the Cursed, and ultimately he knew he was doing it for the ability, and it was an ability he really didn't know about.

He was just taking Sil's word that it was an ability that was stronger than the Graylash. The sudden opportunity that was now in front of him was tempting.

He wasn't the only one that was internally debating. Honestly, even though Sam had suggested trying to teach humans the shadow ability to further help increase his soul weapon, Quinn wasn't sure it was a good idea for one reason. The ability 'Shadow Link'. It was a worry that was always on the back of Quinn's mind, that the shadow users could travel to one another at any point and time.

In this case, there was one thing that Quinn did learn that was important when deciding on who to teach the shadow more than anything. Loyalty, someone like Arthur was able to even take others with him, so if Quinn ever made another 'enemy' that knew the shadow ability, if they weren't loyal in the future it could cause a problem.

With the vampires that had been turned, at least there was a connection that would make them loyal on a surface level.

Looking at Shiro and based on the fact that he hadn't answered quite just yet, it seemed like he was yet to make a full decision.

"I'm sorry for wasting your time." Shiro bowed, with his face almost red as if he was embarrassed and then began to walk out of the room.

Soon after, Sil went to see Peter along with Chucky, and Quinn requested the paperwork to allow the two of them to be transferred to another class.

'Those guys are a worry but they should be okay.' Quinn thought, but still had Shiro on his mind.

Thinking about whether Shiro did eventually make the request to learn the ability, Quinn had some questions of his own. The Blade ability that had been explained by Vorden at the start of his first year at military school, had the ability to copy the MC cells of humans. At the time, when Quinn had learnt the shadow ability, Vorden was unable to copy his ability due to the vampire's body structure being slightly different to humans.

This was why, even though an ability like Peter's, which was able to be learnt by both vampires and humans, Vorden and Sil had both been unable to copy the ability that belonged to Peter.

Just because Vorden was unable to copy the shadow ability from Quinn, didn't mean that it was impossible for humans to learn, but there were a few things that did make him think this. It was when Quinn had discovered the ability book itself.

Learning the ability, it stated that one had to be blooded, or rather the system stated that, but the system although mostly right, wasn't always right. There were always ways to bypass things, especially with an ability like Vincent's.

In the first place, it wasn't clear why certain abilities were able to be learnt by humans, and some by vampires while others both. It was clear more research needed to be put into this, but it just never happened due to humans not knowing about this, and vampires not caring.

'Maybe I could be the researcher on this subject, with your help, of course.' Quinn said, talking to Vincent.

'And I suppose Shiro will be your test subject? Careful with what lines you are treading on.' Vincent warned sternly.

Another reason, why Quinn doubted one could learn the shadow, was because the ability book was discovered locked up on its own, and Quinn had assumed at the time, it was due to them not being able to find a person that was able to learn the ability.

'Was that really the case though? Maybe they were attacked at the time when they had just discovered the book, or maybe it was at a higher level than the person was capable of learning?"

Thinking about this, Quinn wondered if he was to teach Shiro, would it be best to teach it himself like he did so with the others from the Cursed faction. Although they were able to learn the ability, it was learnt at an incredibly slow pace.

'Vincent, if there was one book found there, then shouldn't there be others, and are there lower level shadow books?' Quinn asked.

'I'm afraid you are asking the wrong person Quinn. The Punishers were always treated as a separate family; what they did was down to them. To be honest, the other families haven't even created books for their abilities. There might be one book in secret in their possession in case the family dies out, but there wouldn't be multiple copies. Perhaps when Arthur was going into his slumber he had decided to do this, or it was a request made by someone else.'

It was too bad that Quinn, now with Arthur being against him, was unable to ask the person directly.

However, it did mean there were chances that there were other shadow books out there, and they would have the proper cultivation techniques and methods to teach one the ability. Even if he couldn't use it to teach Shiro if he decided to, he could use it to improve the others in the Cursed faction.

Now the question was, where would the possible shadow books be? In Quinn's mind there were three places most likely for this. The first one would be where he had found the shadow book in the first place. When he first had arrived at the planet the place was far too dangerous for him, now though he was a completely different person.

No intermediate beast and rats were going to stop him from looking at the place all over.

'However, the military did already search that place quite thoroughly, with Paul.'

The other option was where Arthur was first found. After all, the Punishers had been relocated to that planet. After Arthur decided to go into eternal slumber, it made sense for one to perhaps create books for the future. Arthur, having spent so much time with the shadow ability, would have liked to pass on the knowledge that he had learnt to those underneath him.

Maybe he even felt the same way as Quinn and wished to teach it to all the vampires that had left with him.

'Thinking about going back there is a little worrying though.' Quinn thought. 'There is a chance that Arthur could still be there, and I remember there was meant to be a human settlement there.'

The more Quinn thought of Arthur's past actions, he just couldn't think of him as a bad guy. Ever since waking up all he had done was help Quinn and help humans. It hurt him inside to know something had changed in him.

'Well, I guess that leaves one more place. The fourteenth castle.'

The castle that originally belonged to the Punishers and was still standing in the vampire world.

It didn't take long for Quinn to take action, there weren't too many important matters in the school. He enjoyed his time here, but he still trusted Helen and Peter to deal with whatever mess came at them.

'Well maybe not Peter, but he would at least inform me.' Quinn thought.

Quinn had decided to contact the tenth castle directly, and in doing so he had gotten in contact with Paul. He had made his request clear, that he wanted to briefly return to the vampire world for a short time, in order for him to search the fourteenth castle.

Although, he thought that he might be able to do this without much trouble anyway. He didn't want to waltz in unannounced, especially since it was something to do with the shadow users. He was sure Bryce and the others might be on high alert after his little warning message.

Surprisingly, it didn't take long for them to get an answer back either. The request had been accepted. Quinn could go back to the vampire world in order to search the fourteenth castle. However, there was one restriction that was placed.

While he was to search the castle, Bryce wanted someone to attend with him.

"So what's your answer Quinn? If you want, I could ask that I go to your place, you don't have to come back here." Paul said over the call.

"No it's okay. I don't think it will be a problem and I have nothing to hide anyway." Quinn replied. "I would like to search for it myself. I'm sure there might be some things that will need my ability, and I can handle Kazz, don't worry."

Chapter 974: Replacement teacher

As stated before, Quinn being in the position he was in, was free to leave as he wished. Even if he had classes to teach, such as the homeroom class and the beast weapons class, he just needed to inform them beforehand and that's exactly what he did.

To his surprise, the person who would be taking his homeroom class was Hayley. Honestly, Quinn was quite happy with the choice, considering how well the class had reacted to her the last time she had taught. On top of this, he remembered the times when he was at school and would often have to come to the medical room.

Hayley never seemed like a bad person, and anyone who was a doctor for the students had to be a caring person, or at least he hoped so. Healers were highly sought after, and it would have been easy for her to get a position at any top faction. Perhaps she had other reasons as to why she had chosen to stay with the military, like her father being a Head general at the time. Still, she had even been there when Peter and Layla were injured and tried to help the best she could, but he didn't know if that was just because she was actually Paul's daughter.

As for the person who would be taking over the beast weapon class, Quinn didn't know who that was as he didn't recognise the name but thought it would be fine if it was only for a few days anyway. He didn't plan to stay on the vampire planet for long, not after he had just come back.

It seemed like every time he returned, bad things would happen, so he didn't exactly have the best of memories for the place.

It was the start of the day and while Hayley was fine with being a substitute she did wonder what General Hardy had that was so important that he needed to leave so suddenly. Currently, she was having a cup of coffee and was in the teacher's lounge. A room where the teachers could rest and take a break. They had coffee machines, snacks, sofas and all sorts. Even a nice relaxing pod for one to take a quick power nap.

Inside the teacher's lounge, Hayley wasn't alone as she was talking to her work colleagues, Nathan, and Fay. The two other sergeants that were under Quinn and in the same group as each other.

"What's wrong? Hayley, you have a concerned look on your face, are you a little nervous being a homeroom teacher after being a doctor for so long?" Fay asked.

She gave out a big sigh.

"It's not that, it's about the Earthborn generals. They seem to be quite arrogant and remember what I told you about what happened, well it seems like they still are planning to do something. I can't believe they just openly were talking about it as if I wasn't even there.

"These are our students as well, how are they meant to learn when the adults are secretly fighting and plotting behind their backs?"

It had been something that was on her mind since. The order of the military had changed quite a bit due to Oscar, and many were displeased with it. In the past, Hayley would have to obey completely to any of the head generals, regardless if they were part of a different military base.

And, Innu, Samantha and Sach used to be some of the best of the best when it came to the strength of the military generals. However, now with the new structure, technically she was only to obey Hardy, who was her head general, and Oscar the overall supreme commander.

But she understood what Oscar wanted to show, that the military wasn't a single force, the military was a group composed of all these groups that would share resources and forces. Of course, some didn't like this and it was hard to get used to, but what kept them together was the idea that they still had Oscar at the very top.

After all, the other groups in the alliance had their own personal forces that were just as strong.

"From what you told me before, it seems like Hardy is no small fry in the Cursed faction. If he has that much power, then I wouldn't worry too much about what they plan to do with him." Said Nathan. "Honestly, sometimes these people need to be filtered out of the system whether it's through their own stupid actions or someone playing their hand, it was the same with Duke, and I know how we all felt about him."

Taking on what Nathan said, she just hoped this whole thing didn't get ugly, there had to be a reason why Oscar was letting things play out the way they were.

The homeroom class went on well for Hayley, obviously there were many in the class that asked 'Where did teacher Hardy go?'. But it was easy to explain since he was a Head general. They imagined he would be busy discussing deals, or even doing something with the military group rather than the school.

However, the beast class was a different story. For Quinn's replacement they had grabbed a teacher from one of the other groups in the Earthborn who went by the name Aden. It wasn't that he was a bad teacher, although the students still hadn't found that out yet, it was the fact that he kept complaining about Hardy's teaching methods.

"How could he just let you all try out any weapons you like?" Aden puffed. "You guys are only kids and hardly know much about our abilities and next to nothing about beast weapons. You, what's your ability?"

"Erghh telekinesis?" Venus answered.

"With your type of ability a ranged beast weapon is best, or at least a projectile that you can throw. There are some users that have a dagger tied to a strong piece of string and use that in combat as well."

Aden carried on this way, going from student to student asking what their ability was and recommending a type of weapon or would outright hand them one. The students themselves were conflicted by this method.

Some of them were struggling with picking a beast weapon to use, after all, there were so many and they liked that someone told them what was best. While others didn't like the fact that they had been shoved a weapon that they didn't particularly want, even if it suited their ability.

It was two different styles that left the classroom divided, and there was one particular problem when it came to one student.

"And what ability do you have?" Aden asked.

Shiro looked around for a few seconds, he didn't want to answer because he knew it would make him a target amongst others, but someone else who used to go to his school shouted out the answer for him,

"He doesn't have any ability, sir!" A student shouted out.

The others who didn't know about this started to gossip, as it was a rare sight and were wondering how he had gotten so far or his reasoning for not having one.

He was waiting for the teacher to say something, but rather than say anything, he just moved on, and Shiro could see the words he mouthed with his lips under his breath.

"Waste of time."

Seeing this, Shiro was angry, angry with himself.

'Quinn, did you really go through all this as well?' Shiro thought, as he was embarrassed and ignored as if he was just a piece of trash.

Using a teleporter at the school, Quinn was able to travel aboard the Cursed ship in nearly an instant. There was a quick hello to everyone as he walked past, but there was no time for idle chit chat as Quinn wanted to get this done as soon as possible.

From the Cursed ship, he would use the teleporter to head back to the vampire world. Although he would have to travel through two teleporters, it was better than having a teleporter at school that linked to the vampire world.

Once stepping through, he had finally appeared in the tenth castle directly into the new throne room. It was the normal dark colours that surrounded the large hall, with large stained glass windows overlooking the area. In front a red carpet laid out going all the way all to the arching doors. What did take Quinn by surprise, was that there were two people there to greet him. Paul for one, and the other was Kazz.

'Wow, Bryce really does like to work fast.'

"It's nice to meet you again Quinn." Paul said. "Things have been going well here, I hope they have been so for you on the other side as well."

Walking away from the teleporter, he walked forward and Kazz started to follow.

"A few small problems here and there, but nothing I can't handle, and by the way, your daughter is doing well. I hope you two can see each other soon."

Paul, had one of his few genuine smiles on his face after hearing this

Quinn soon left the room and his next destination was the fourteenth castle.

'I wonder what I will find there?'

Chapter 975: Same same, but different

After Sil had visited Peter, once again using his soul weapon and putting on a new mud mask, Sil was able to change his appearance. This time, there needed to be quite the change to what Sil would look like, since others would know if he just changed something like one's hair colour. With Peter not being the best on the spot thinker, he could only produce what he could see in front of him.

A few seconds later, Sil looked like an almost identical copy of Chucky. A plain ordinary looking face with a short haircut. This time nothing that would make one stand out, however, there was one slight difference and that was now Sil's hair was jet black, while Chucky's hair was more of a darker brown.

"Why would you do that, we almost look exactly the same?" Chucky asked.

"Almost look the same?" Peter thought, and only realised himself that he had given the two of them a different hair colour. "I must have forgotten a detail while making the mask. Trust me, you don't stand out, and just because there are two of you, it won't make a difference. They might even think you're the same person."

Chucky knew who Peter was, he was meant to be a reliable person, named the Cursed ship protector. This was due to the incident that had happened right when the Crow's had joined, as Peter dealt with an annoyance quickly, but Chucky was beginning to realise that fighting might be the only thing he was good at.

What was worse, was the class that Chucky and Sil had now transferred to, was Peter's class. Although Peter wasn't the main teacher, he was an assistant. Someone who would often just sit in the back and stare at the students.

If anything, Peter was kind of a frightening figure to the students. When Peter had first joined, the teacher had asked him if he could help with several things, or what he was good at, but it seemed like Peter didn't know anything and everything he touched or tried to assist with would just end up being worse.

There were even a number of expensive items that when Peter couldn't figure out how to use, he would resort to hitting it, and breaking it altogether.

Therefore the teacher asked him to just control the class and catch the misbehaved kids that weren't paying attention. Chucky, watched Peter's method for this, and found him quite frightening. If a few kids in class would start to speak out of turn, he would appear out of nowhere standing right behind them, peeking over their shoulder.

He could keep eye contact, and wouldn't even blink until eventually the students looked away. There were then several students who had attempted to challenge Peter to a staring competition but no one succeeded and they all turned their heads.

The kids could feel a tingle in their spine and and heavy weight in the air. After that, they never spoke again.

"Is this why they call him zombie Peter?" The students thought.

"Look at his eyes, and even when we don't think he is paying attention, somehow he's able to hear us. He's always watching."

"I'm having nightmares. One time I woke up and I thought I saw him standing in the corner of the room."

"Yeah,I heard him shouting, don't look at me, stop stop!"

"It might have been him, I think he never sleeps, there's a bet going around that if anyone can get a photo of him sleeping, there will be a reward of at least 50,000 credits."

For Chucky though, this was just the tip of the iceberg. What was the worst thing, was when the two of them had transferred over, Peter was in charge of making the new name for Sil. After all, now everyone knew Sil and was looking for him, he needed a new alias and he had decided to go with Lis.

'It was as if he didn't even try, you think people aren't going to be able to work out that it's just Sil spelt backwards?' Chucky thought.

Nonetheless, he was happy that Sil could keep on continuing classes. After being with him a while he was also quite surprised that Sil still wanted to still attend school. He thought based on how shy and afraid of everything, he hated school but it didn't seem to be the case.

After Chucky had learnt this, the whole thing seemed a bit heartwarming and now Chucky wanted to do what he could to help him out.

Still he had to be careful to not make him angry, especially after witnessing his power.

Over where Shiro, Venus and Swin were, they were currently in another beast class lesson, run by Aden again, and today he seemed to be even angrier than yesterday.

Today's lesson was about teaching the kids how to activate the beats weapon, in order to draw the power from it. However, a lot of students were finding it difficult. Aden had gotten so angry at one, he had just whacked the weapon out of the students hand and caused it to throb bright red.

"I thought he was angry on the first day we met him, but now he seems like he was calm the other day, what's wrong with him?" Venus whispered over to Swin.

"I don't know, but I think he's pretty annoyed that he has to teach two classes now and cover for Hardy, at least that's what seems to be the route of the problem." Swin replied.

There were more reasons than that. It was true that Aden was annoyed that his workload had increased, but it wasn't like he wasn't getting compensated for doing so. At first he thought it would be as simple as just replicating what needed to be done in his own class.

Yet, the first lesson had to be spent reteaching them due to what Hardy had taught, and now they couldn't seem to progress with the second lesson either.

"What is wrong with you guys. The other classes have already all learnt how to activate the beast weapons and now are moving onto the next stage!" Aden complained.

What Aden didn't know, was that a lot of the students that were attending General Hardy's class were actually from class 2A. Knowing that they had weak abilities, or thier MC cells could never be improved upon, they had decided to take the beast class.

On top of this, his demonstration in class, his speeches, had actually inspired a lot of them. So a lot of low level students, who were slow or weak, were attending the beast class. Aden, was thinking that it was due to Hardy's bad teaching, not realising this was the case.

Still, at least Aden did carry on teaching them as he should, and a light slap on the wrist here and there from anger was as far as he would go.

"I feel bad for Shiro?" Swin whispered while the two of them were pretending to try and activate their weapons. They too didn't really understand the concept behind it, and were avoiding the teacher afraid of getting a slap themselves, at the same time it seemed like the teacher was avoiding them.

However, there was one person he didn't even try to look at even once, and that was Shiro. Who had been left on his own since Aden had become a teacher. He was on his own trying to learn how to activate the weapons, and unknown to everyone else, he had already succeeded, but Shiro wouldn't brag, because he knew it wouldn't get him anywhere.

'I'm one step closer to proving myself, if Quinn and Sil won't teach me their ability, then I still need to show through handwork that I can be put to use.' Shiro thought.

When class ended, Aden rallied up all the students and just shook his head as he looked at them all. Out of the hundred and fifty or so students, only twenty five were able to activate the weapons, which was appalling.

Due to how slow others were at learning, it took some time for him to even go around to reach everyone. Before he knew it, the class was over.

"Look, I'm not trying to be an angry teacher but I just don't want you guys to embarrass yourselves." Aden said. "After next week, all the beast weapon classes are going to have a joint class, and we're going to have a little competition. Based on how well you do, you will be awarded points that will go towards your Cursed house.

"Honestly, if you guys go out there now like this, you're all going to be slaughtered."

Some of the students were nervous after finding out about this news. They already felt bad not knowing how to activate their weapons and learning this just gave them more pressure. Usually in sparring matches, including beast weapons ones, they were allowed to use their ablates aswell. To simulate true warfare.

'Maybe this is my chance to show myself, if all the other generals from the other groups are going to be there.' Shiro thought.

While Venus and Swim had another thought.

'A week's time, I hope General Hardy is back by then, otherwise I feel like we're going to get nowhere with this teacher, maybe he can teach us a few things. Our whole class is going to become a laughing stock.' Swin thought.

'Hardy, Just what are you doing?"

Chapter 976: The fourteenth castle secrets

While Quinn was at the tenth castle, he didn't want to be seen by any of the others. After all, he didn't plan on staying here for a long time. He knew how much the vampires respected leaders and how much a morale boost it would be if he was here, but he didn't want to get their hopes up. Learning that everything was going okay and there had been no problems was enough for Quinn.

"Bryce didn't inform the others of my return did he?" Quinn wondered, as he walked down the castle stairs with Kazz. It had been a while since the two of them talked, but ever since the fight with Bryce and the time he had spent with her, he felt like the two of them were now on neutral ground.

At least no longer enemies that were trying to rip each other's throat out.

"I don't know how much I'm permitted to tell you." Kazz replied. "However, I will say that Bryce seems to be doing more than he is allowed for you. Something like this would usefully have to be voted on by the council and then the king would get a say, or the King can ask for a vote, but no such thing happened. This agreement for you to search the castle is a secret."

Although Quinn wondered why such a thing needed to be kept a secret, he was fine if it did. He would rather not have the other family members know what he was doing in the first place. Because of this, Quinn carefully used his shadow travel to move between the tenth castle to the fourteenth castle.

From the outside, it was an impressive piece of work. Nearly all the castles looked identical apart from three. One of them being the king's castle in the centre, it was larger than the others but still fit in style, the other was the castle they were staring at now.

Rather than being created with rugged spikes and gothic features it had a more classic castle feel with several cylinder towers and long walls. One of the most noticeable things were the giant black chains that would lead up to the very top of the main castle.

"Do they have a particular use or are they just for show?" Quinn asked.

"Isn't that what you here to find out?" Kazz replied. She stood there looking at Quinn as if he was waiting to do something, but even he didn't know where to start.

The last castle that looked different from the others, was now the tenth castle with its new and improved upgrades from the system.

Before approaching the door, a voice in Quinn's head was heard.

'Careful Quinn, remember the tower that Arthur had slept in last time? He had set up a trial for anyone who dared to climb it, perhaps there is something similar in his castle.' Vincent warned.

Taking the warning onboard, Quinn proceeded cautiously.

"Has anyone else entered the fourteenth castle, since Arthur and us?" Quinn asked. Remembering there was one time that Quinn had been brought along, and that was when he had learnt of Arthur's tale as well.

"As I said before, Usually with these types of matters a vote would be cast. After all, one leader entering another's castle is the equivalent of declaring war. Whenever a vote would take place, the result was always the same, to leave it be.

"You see, some thought that maybe going inside the castle would activate something. Warn the Punishers out there that something was up, and the one thing many of the vampires didn't want was for them to come back. While others respected the Punishers and thought it should be left untouched for their rightful owners."

Now, Quinn was starting to understand why Bryce had decided to agree to all of this behind their backs, but as long as it benefited Quinn, he wouldn't care.

Going up to the door, Quinn could see the normal strange lock-like combination. One that was on all of the other castles.

"You don't happen to know the code do you? Or got it from Muka?" Quinn asked.

Hearing this answer, Kazz didn't reply but she was kind of disappointed. It didn't matter though, because with the skill shadow travel, one was able to travel on the ground and they could get past any wall. Another frightening thing about the Punishers to the other vampires.

After using shadow travel one more time, the two of them popped up in the castle, and the automatic light crystals started to light up as they entered each room and walked down each hallway. Although the outside might have looked different, the inside of the castle reminded Quinn a lot of his. Untouched, unused and not lived in.

The search through the castle was quite a tedious one, as there were many rooms and the whole place was vast and large. Quinn would have liked the help of others, but couldn't trust someone else in case they missed something, and at the same time, Kazz wasn't leaving Quinn's side even for a second.

Luckily, Quinn found that with his system, using the inspect skill would usually show him if there was anything worth looking at in certain rooms. Going through each of the floors, searching them physically and using his inspect skill, Quinn was finding it hard to find anything.

'It would make sense, when the Punishers left this place they probably took everything important with them.'

Eventually though, near the top floor, Quinn had stumbled across something. It was either a library room, or an office. It was hard to tell because there was a desk but the room was filled with books from side to side.

Quinn remembered being in here before, one time when Arthur had brought them, there was a secret compartment that was used to hide alcohol. Using his inspection skill, he was able to spot the secret place, which pleased him. It meant, using the inspect skill, he was likely to find something else as well.

It wasn't long either until he stumbled across something. His inspection skill revealed that behind the bookshelf, there was something else, as if it was a hidden room. Using the great vampire strength. It didn't take much for him to move the shelf.

'That certainly seems a bit lax of security to be hiding something like this?' Vincent thought.

However, when they got inside and found out what was in it, Quinn understood why. There were no treasures, ability books or secret powerful weapons. Instead, it was more like another library inside the hidden room. A library where all the books were written by Arthur himself.

Going to the dusty shelf, Quinn had grabbed about five of them, grouping them together, and then sat on the floor crossed leg. Placing the pile of his books to one side and taking one of them.

"What are you doing, are those useful?" Kazz asked.

"Not really?" Quinn said as he started to skim through the first few pages. "It seems like all these books are Arthur's personal journal during his life."

"Then why are you reading them?" Kazz asked.

"Because I need to know what type of person Arthur is."

One by one, Quinn would read through the journals and as expected it really was Arthur documenting his life. What was even more impressive, was the starting journals were written about the time before he had been turned into a vampire.

How he had lived his life as King Arthur. From all the words Quinn read, one after another, he could tell that Arthur was a good king. A good leader for the humans back in their time. A king who would fight on the front line for his people. Someone who cared about each and all of them dearly.

"Did the vampires do something to them?" Quinn wondered. "Is that what set him off? It would make sense if he learnt about the past or something like that?"

Still, only reading the starting journals, Quinn was unable to find out much. Only how Arthur felt, but soon they had gone into a time when Arthur had been turned into a Punisher. It seemed like it had become a habit for Arthur to document everything. They weren't details of everyday life, but details of crucial events or important memories for himself.

He even wrote about the day that he was turned, and when he found all his knights being hurt. Everything was how Arthur had described it to them, and what Quinn had seen in the vision the Boneclaw had given him.

'I guess when you have lived that long, it's nice to have a hobby and do something like this.'

Quinn sat down there reading every single little bit, going through all the journals. He was able to read at a faster pace than a human, as he could process information faster, while flicking through the pages and seeing the words, but it still took quite a long time.

Even Kazz had opened one of the books, but after reading it for a short while she closed it, realising there really wasn't anything important.

However, soon Quinn stumbled across an interesting subject that Arthur was looking into. It seemed like Arthur was researching where abilities had originally come from, and when was the first appearance of an ability, even among originals.

Linking to this, there were a few main things, one he had written details about the True first king, not the Eno family king, but the one before that who had the shadow ability.

'The True King was only captured and not dead. No longer has their ability, but could still be dangerous if woken up. Eno advises to never wake up the True King. Even without an ability he has the power to overcome them all.'

For some reason, knowing that this was written by Arthur, made Quinn shiver thinking about the true king's strength.

'The strongest of the original vampires, but where did he get his ability?' Arthur wrote.

Lastly though, it seemed like he had found a link, but was never able to explore it.

'First abilities, linked back to a giant stone tablet.'

Quinn had never thought much about the world learning about abilities, he just thought humans naturally evolved to learn them, and many kept them a secret, but now knowing what Arthur had found, it seemed like it was more likely to have come from something, or someone.

'Giant stone tablet, that reminds me a lot of that giant stone table that was on the Blade island as well...'

Chapter 977: The Punishers' leader

Quinn continued to read through Arthur's journals, he was starting to become fascinated about learning where abilities originated from. Arthur had written it in such detail that Quinn felt like he was learning about each detail himself.

According to the journals, there were times when Arthur would have a quiet period in his life. Depending on who the king was at the time, and as the Punisher's reputation grew among vampires, less crimes were committed and Eno's goal was starting to work.

These peaceful periods could last for years and due to the Punisher's special ability, even if Arthur was away, the vampires feared that he could come back at any time.

During his search, he had found that there were a few people with abilities starting to emerge. Arthur would be able to connect with them by showing off his own ability, sometimes he would use the shadow, other times he would just show his super strength or speed and play it off as an ability.

When asking how one had learnt of an ability, the answer was often someone taught them it, but this was quite vague as to who, or if it was a family member. The people who would know the real answer were already dead.

However, some people did have knowledge of what their ancestors passed on. Saying that an image of a giant stone tablet appeared in their head before the powers had come to them.

From the current set of vampires, none of them were the original ability carriers. No Originals were awake and at this point and time, Eno had gone into eternal slumber, and he didn't want to wake his friend from his sleep just to answer a curiosity of his that had become a hobby.

'It looks like there isn't any more information on abilities after this book.' Quinn said, placing it down and realised he was coming to an end of all the journals.

After reading the last one, it explained the war that was brewing between the Punishers and the vampires. Having finally decided to take his people and leave the place. The journals ended there. When the castle was abandoned and never updated.

'I wonder if he continued writing journals on the other planet in his tower. Maybe there were some places me and Fex missed, it would be interesting to know if he ever found out about the abilities, or discovered the stone tablet he was looking for.' Quinn thought.

'You have a point, it seemed he was quite intrigued by this. After a certain amount of years, still living becomes quite a chore for some, and I imagine it was even worse for Arthur. Finding the origin of abilities could have been the only thing that kept him going.'

It looked like there was nothing left in the room, so getting up off the ground, Quinn was ready to move. He didn't know how long he had been reading the books for, but Kazz was no longer in the room. Exiting, he could see Kazz had her head on the desk with it tilted on its side.

'Is she sleeping? A vampire sleeping while on duty, her? I must have been in there a really long time for that to happen?' He thought.

Walking up to her slowly, Quinn could see her delicate face, her hair that was placed in two buns making her appearance seem a bit childish.

When Kazz first arrived she acted a bit like a child, but soon Quinn knew it was all an act to let his guard down, she was quite the clever girl, although a little lost.

'Who can blame her when you have a father like Bryce.' Quinn thought.

All vampires were extraordinary in beauty compared to humans, it was as if they didn't have a blemish on their skin. There was no need to put makeup on unless they wanted to make their pale skin seem darker.

Looking at Kazz's face he thought the same thing.

'I think she would look better with her hair down.' Quinn thought, as he got closer, but a crack in the floor caused her to spring up.

"What are you doing!" She said having already extended her fingernails. "Are you trying to kill me in my sleep?!"

"I was just walking around carefully because I didn't want to wake you." Quinn said, as he pointed to the side of her own mouth.

Kazz then could feel something on her chin a little wet and realised that she had dribbled a little while in her sleep.

"Come on, let's get out of here!" Kazz said storming out of the room.

'Isn't it her job to keep an eye on me?' Quinn thought, but admittedly thought the whole thing was quite cute.

'She is a woman who is many years your age Quinn.' Vincent chuckled. 'First Helen and now Kazz, I didn't realise you liked older women.'

'Wouldn't that mean you had also dated a woman who was many, many years younger than you?' Quinn snapped back.

'Careful, that's your great great, so many great grandmother's you're talking about.'

Hearing this, just made the whole thing awkward and Quinn continued his search, seeing that Kazz was outside the door waiting for him.

The search from room to room on each floor began again, and it truly looked like it had been cleared out. What was strange though, was some items seemed to have been moved recently.

'Is there a way for Arthur to return to this place as he wishes?' Quinn asked.

'As I said, I really don't know much about the Punishers at all, but perhaps there are skills that the system does not know of, and things Arthur created himself.'

Hearing this, Quinn was now a little on high alert. From the dust having been moved in certain places, and other things in other places, it certainly looked like someone had been here not too long ago.

If Arthur had returned, was Quinn ready to fight him? Thinking about this, his body started to feel a little sore, from the dreadful beating and state he was left in last time.

Kazz also seemed to be a little uneasy, and Quinn was wondering if she was speaking through Jill, communicating this all back to Bryce.

Nothing of interest was found, even in the throne room, which looked like every other throne room. However, one last room was locked behind another special combination lock. Judging by the size from the outside, it was as equally big as the throne room.

"What's wrong, is something inside?" Kazz asked.

"No, I just find it a little strange that this room is locked," Quinn said, as he used the shadow travel and took them inside.

Getting out of the shadow. The first thing that caught his eye was another throne. Each castle had one like before, but this one was different. The red carpet on the floor went from the doors leading up the small stairs and finally it reached the grand chair, a bright red chair that was quite clear in colour.

Seeing the chair herself, Kazz's heartbeat started to accelerate and beat a little louder. A thought had crossed her mind but she was unsure what the chair was.

Quinn using his inspect skill on the chair, he too was truly shocked.

"A throne made completely of blood crystals...How many vampires were killed to make that thing?"

It wasn't just a chair that had been crafted using blood crystals, like a blood weapon would be, it was as if thousands of blood crystals had been fused together to make such a chair.

"That man is sick!" Kazz couldn't help but say. "How could someone happily sit on a chair everyday that reminded them of what they had done, is he proud?"

No, Quinn knew that wasn't the case from the journals he read. Kazz was right about one thing, it was a reminder. A reminder to himself what his cruel job was. In his journals he felt like a villain at times, and the vampires sometimes saw him that way, and he had to stick to that role, even convincing himself.

Something was drawing Quinn to the chair, he started walking towards it, and was fascinated by the red colour glow. He didn't know what it was about the chair that was drawing him in. Then when he had reached the top of the small platform, he looked at Kazz who looked back at him strangely.

First Quinn, slid his fingers across the armrest, he could feel an energy but it was trapped inside the crystal, then finally, he decided to sit in it.

[The fourteenth castle has been abandoned]

[The castle wishes for a new leader]

Chapter 978: The Punisher Title

When Quinn had decided to come to the fourteenth castle, he expected to find some secrets. Either skill books or maybe learn more about the shadow. What he wasn't expecting, was to find a throne made out of pure blood crystals and once sitting in it, to receive a title.

'Leader of the Punishers?' Quinn read out in his mind. It was clear what the title meant, but unfortunately, Quinn was unable to see the details of the title or what effects it would bring. It looked like the system wanted him to either accept or decline the offer at this very moment.

Titles were very powerful things, given certain buffs when fighting and also other things. Allowing him to gain reputation points and even building the towers at the tenth castle, but this was why he was struggling with the decision.

'If I choose to accept this title, does it get rid of the one from the tenth family?'

So far no titles had been lost, there was even one that could be selected that was a stark reminder of his dear friend Edward, however it could never be used to its full capacity now. Still, it seemed this one would conflict with his others, but perhaps he could just switch between them when needed like the tenth title.

'I believe the system will possibly warn you like in a game.' Vincent chimed in.
'Think about it, when you select yes on this title, it should proceed by saying, accepting this title will get rid of xx title. I played quite a few games in my past.'

'Vincent is a gamer, and he's clearly proud of it.' Quinn thought, honestly if the tenth title did disappear it would only be in the system anyway. Surely, Bryce and the other council members would still think of Quinn as the leader, regardless of what the system said.

The thing he would lose most was the towers. At this point, Quinn was leaning towards accepting the title, and he had nearly selected yes, but there was one last thing that was troubling him.

'What will happen to Arthur, what will he think? Will he know I have taken over his castle, or will he think I have decided to become a part of the Punishers and part of the vampire settlement?'

In the end, it was this thought that caused Quinn to push yes and accept the title. Arthur was coming and he needed every bit of help and power that was needed.

[The title 'Leader of the Punishers' has been granted]

[You have unlocked the fourteenth castle area zone]

[Reputation points will be granted based on how fellow Punishers respect you]

[The store can now be used in the fourteenth zone]

As soon as Quinn accepted the title, the seat started to light up slightly, and Kazz was getting ready to get out of the place, but soon the light dimmed and disappeared. In Kazz's eyes, not much had changed, but quite a few things in Quinn's system had been updated.

The first set of rewards were similar to what Quinn got when he had received the tenth title. He got reputation points that were based on how people from that family looked at you, although he wasn't sure what Punishers meant. Did it include Arthur, or all those that he had taught the shadow skill to.

The good thing was it looked like the reputation points earned from the tenth leader title could be used to build things in the fourteenth zone. On top of this, the titles were able to be switched out to each other. There was no loss of the tenth leader title.

'Maybe it's best not to build anything for now. Although I have accepted this title, I don't want the other families to know about it. Besides, who would attack a castle with no people, who or what do I have to protect?'

The next set of rewards were more based on skills that could be used while Quinn was in the fourteenth area and had the title active.

[While in the fourteenth zone, the user may borrow and give their shadow to other Punishers at will]

Before when Quinn had borrowed the shadow from the others, it was forcefully taken but after speaking to them, they willingly wanted to help Quinn out at the time.

It sounded like as long as they were in the fourteenth zone, Quinn was able to take the shadow regardless of where they were and give it back, or perhaps help those that were weaker.

'It's a shame that it's only limited to the fourteenth area, but it just means I have to increase my shadow as much as I can in the first place.'

Other than that, there didn't seem to be any grand rewards, so Quinn decided to check out the map that would show him to the area of the fourteenth castle. When looking through this, Quinn also noticed something else a bit off about the castle map itself.

When going to his location, he could see that even where he was right now, there was another room behind them, behind the throne.

Quinn immediately stood up, which caused Kazz to jump back a few feet.

"Quinn, tell me now, have you gone mad!" Kazz said. "Has that chair taken over your mind?!"

Quinn looked at her for a few seconds.

"I'm glad to know that you won't outright attack me and at least ask me first," Quinn replied with a smile.

Walking up to the wall behind the throne. Quinn could see a giant rug like material that had been hung behind the wall. Ripping it off to the side, another circle combination lock could be seen.

Going up to it, Quinn wondered something and grazed his fingers against the lock.

[The castle has accepted you as the leader]

[Would you like to unlock the door?]

Quinn didn't think much of it, and the wheel started to turn itself until it eventually unlocked for him on the spot, and started to push itself open.

"I thought you didn't know any of the combinations to the locks?" Kazz asked.

"This one didn't need one." Quinn lied and started to walk through the secret door.

Kazz was a little hesitant following, but soon did, and she stayed away from the red crystal throne, acting as if it was bad luck if it was to touch her.

When they had entered the room, she could see Quinn standing there still, and surrounding him were pieces of rubble all over the floor.

"What is this? Did you do this?" Kazz asked.

"You would have heard me if I did," Quinn said, lifting one of the pieces of rubble, and Kazz had done the same as well.

Quinn didn't know what he was expecting, but he wasn't expecting this. It seemed like the room had several walls that had certain things written on them, or illustrations but it had all been destroyed and quite recently as well.

With Kazz and Quinn trying to put pieces together, they could tell they were illustrations and writing, but it seemed like pieces were either missing or had been turned to dust. After getting most of the larger pieces together, Kazz had figured out what it was.

"Damn him!" Kazz yelled. "This was a training room, one that would teach the others how to use the shadow. Some of the other leaders have rooms like this as well, but it's useless like this."

Quinn had thought the same thing. The words didn't need to be written down in a book, but it looked like all the techniques that Arthur had learned over the years had been drawn out and explained on the walls of this large room.

'In the past, it was a quick way to teach one your ability. You would lock them in a room, and with all the illustrations and text with no distractions, the person would get into a certain state. They would feel as if the words and text from the walls were coming out to them.' Vincent explained.

'Why did he destroy it? Did he think the other vampires would come back and try to learn the powers? Was he stopping them from getting the shadow ability, or was he stopping me?' Quinn thought.

However, perhaps Arthur was missing one important detail about Quinn. He didn't know Quinn was different to other vampires, and different to the other Punishers. For he also had the system.

[Inspect]

Details of each piece of broken rubble were seen, and the system started to fill up a small progress bar.

[Gathering information about the shadow]

[You have successfully learnt more about the shadow.]

[New skills have been unlocked]

Although Quinn still was unable to teach others the shadow properly, he had gained far more than he had expected from this little trip.

'Whatever you were hoping to do Arthur, I'm catching up to you.'

Chapter 979: The return of the king

After using the inspect skill on the pieces of rubble, Quinn had gained three new shadow skills in the system. He wondered if the entirety of the walls was present, and hadn't been destroyed if he would have been able to extract more information from the room.

Perhaps the system only gave him the skills it could figure out from what was there.

'Some large pieces are missing from the wall. Did Arthur take them with him so they couldn't rebuild it back together like me and Kazz was doing? Which means the other pieces of the shadow might be with Arthur, but why didn't he just put all the pieces of the walls into his dimensional storage?' Some things certainly didn't make sense, and there was always the chance that it wasn't Arthur as well, but who else could enter the fourteenth castle and would know about all these secrets.

Looking at Kazz she was frustrated. She was still trying to put pieces together but some of it was just small pieces of dust. She wasn't paying attention to him, but Quinn wasn't going to try any of the skills out, right now. He would do so in his own time, away from the prying eyes of others.

'I've learnt that I never know who will be my enemy in the future.' Quinn thought.

When Kazz finally gave up, the two of them decided to leave the rooms and Quinn also closed the door to the room behind them. Making sure it was locked up as well.

'If I was able to learn a few things from what pieces were present, if they did put it back together then maybe they could find something out as well.'

Having searched every area of the castle now, and Quinn knew this due to the new map of the castle he had obtained, it was time for him to return back to the school. His work was complete, and he would have to try to figure out another way he could teach the others the shadow.

Maybe the information from his system could be extracted somehow, but he could try to figure out that bit later. Walking past the red crystal chair, Quinn looked at it for a few seconds.

'Could we smash it up and take the crystals, maybe we can use it to create something. It's a bit of a waste just having it as a chair.'

'I think you should leave things as they are in the castle.' Vincent said. 'In the first place having blood crystals is considered a crime.'

'So you don't think that now Bryce knows about it due to Kazz, he won't take the crystals and claim it for himself?' Quinn asked, and to this Vincent didn't have an answer

'I believe the throne is somehow linked to the castle and the system. Destroying the chair could very well get rid of your title.' Vincent argued.

Now this was something, Quinn didn't want to happen. He looked at the door ahead, and looked at the lock on it. Looking at the lock behind him, he figured that Muka wouldn't have known the combination to the hidden room, since it was kept a secret, but maybe there was something he could do with the other one.

Walking up to the door, Quinn placed his hand on it, and soon had a smile. Now he was the leader of the castle, Quinn could open all locks, but not just that, he could also change the combinations on them, and he decided to do this very thing.

A clicking sound was heard, but none of the parts needed to be moved, so Kazz wasn't too suspicious about what he had done.

As long as they didn't have the shadow ability, or the combination to the lock it would keep them out. And even if they did try to attack, now as the owner, Quinn was sure the system would warn him like it had done so in the past.

However, Quinn didn't want to rely on the system. He was afraid that there might be times in the future where it wouldn't warn him. Then it would only be his own fault. Maybe one day the system would completely disappear just as easily as it appeared. For now, he would use the advantages it would come with, but try not to rely on it.

Before leaving, Kazz looked at the red crystal throne one more time. She couldn't stop glancing at it, and thanks to her being distracted. His actions with the door didn't seem weird.

"Come on, let's go!" Quinn shouted. "I think you might be the one who becomes possessed by it in a second if you keep looking at it like that!"

Running over to where Quinn was, the two of them entered his shadow and started to go through each of the floors heading down to the very last one.

Now, no longer needing to search each room they were able to go out of the castle far quicker than before, and once they were out, they appeared in the fourteenth inner area. Quinn cancelled his skill, and the two of them popped out, walking on the surface once more.

"So will you be reporting back to Bryce now? Is there anything I need to do or can I just go back?" Quinn asked.

Kazz waited a few seconds before replying and now Quinn was sure of it. Everything that was happening, everything that had been seen in the fourteenth castle was communicated back to Bryce. Through Jill, the two didn't need to be close, and it seemed even now she was asking him what he wanted to do.

"You are free to go back, if there is any trouble we can get in touch with you, and we will keep your Knight, Paul, informed and updated." Kazz answered.

Just as the two of them were about to part ways, a strange black smog in the air was heading towards them. It moved as if it was alive, searching for something and once it found what it was looking for, it latched on to a destination and headed straight towards the two of them.

'That smog looks the same as when the Boneclaw is summoned?' Quinn thought.

And sure enough, when the smog had reached an area around fifteen meters away from Quinn, it descended to the ground and the fog started to form into the Boneclaw it was. It stood there with its long dangling arms and its giant body.

"Hey, isn't that your familiar? What's it doing coming here now?" Kazz thought.

However, Quinn didn't know either, why didn't the bone claw just attach itself to him like it would do in the past. Was something wrong?

The Boneclaw then lifted one of its long dangling fingers that was like a claw and pointed straight towards Quinn.

"You..." A deep voice said. "Prove...yourself."

Quinn wasn't really sure what was happening and it seemed like Kazz had a better idea, as she quickly extended her nails and moved away.

"Quinn, get ready, don't you see what's happening!" She shouted. "The Boneclaw, it doesn't think you are worthy enough to be its master anymore. It's challenging you to a fight to the death."

Quinn had heard the stories about familiars, and how they would rather die than work for a weak master, and if the situation came to be they would try to kill their master. However, Quinn was much stronger now, than when the Boneclaw had first found him, so why would it attempt to do this?

A little dazed as to how this situation came to be, soon the system had given him the answers he was looking for.

[The Boneclaw has regained its lost strength]

[It no longer believes you are fit to be its master]

[Prove yourself and win back the Boneclaw's trust]

The last thing Quinn had expected was a fight with his own familiar. Something that had saved his life a couple of times in the past, but now it was trying to kill him.

"I guess I have no choice." Quinn said, as he activated the shadow and it rose behind his back.

Chapter 980: A tricky opponent

On Fex's execution day, Kazz had seen the power of the Boneclaw, back then, it was able to go toe to toe with her father, until eventually its energy was running low. She knew the Boneclaw was an incredibly strong familiar that not many vampires would be able to handle.

However, Quinn was someone who had even bested her father in a fight. Yet, for some reason, the Boneclaw had attempted to challenge Quinn now. When he was possibly at his strongest.

'Something had to have changed in the Boneclaw's reasoning, is Quinn's desire from before no longer matching up with its, or did something happen to the Boneclaw to make it feel this way?'

Finding out the answer to the question wouldn't help the situation. What she needed to do right now was decide if she was going to help Quinn or not.

'Is the Boneclaw underestimating me?' Quinn thought. 'It has been a while since we separated from each other and I assure you I have gotten stronger. Or perhaps it considers me weaker than its last master?'

[Shadow equip]

Not wanting to underestimate the fight, Quinn made sure to put all pieces of beast gear on his body, and that included the red oni type mask on his face. Making the first move, Quinn cast a shadow path along the floor, heading straight towards the Boneclaw.

'If I slow it down, then I can actually hit it dead on, and for the first time ever, I don't have to worry about killing you!' Quinn thought. As long as there was still a connection between Quinn and his familiar, it meant that if the familiar was to die, it simply wouldn't be able to be summoned for a while.

The shadow path was one of the slower skills of Quinn's, and seeing the attack coming towards the Boneclaw, it simply entered one of its black portals as it opened and disappeared before the shadow could hit it.

A strong claw came out towards Quinn's right side, but the shadow was able to move from his back to stop the attack. However, Quinn was unaware that somehow the Boneclaw was now attacking from his right side as well. He had no choice but to lift his arm to block the attack head on.

The claw scraped and hit his gauntlets.

'Damn, that attack is strong, I can feel the whole blow through my body!' Quinn thought. He knew he couldn't rely on just his vampire strength to push it back, and started to concentrate and form his second stage qi towards his forearm area, and eventually pushed the claw back.

When Quinn regained his composure he could see the Boneclaw was once again, far away.

'The system wasn't lying when they said he's gotten stronger. His teleportation speed and strength, I'm sure, are packing more power and faster than before. If he keeps teleporting everywhere, how am I meant to get him? None of my blood skills will work.'

Kazz who was standing at the side was watching it all carefully, she wanted to step in as she had made the decision herself to help Quinn. But she saw what the Boneclaw had done. While teleporting its body to Quinn's right side and attacking it with one of its arms, it had opened another portal on Quinn's left side, and simply stuck its arm through another black portal it had created.

So the Boneclaw was able to attack two locations on Quinn's body at once. What was even more frightening was, as soon as Kazz took a step forward, another black portal had opened up in front of her, and a large dangling claw had appeared, grazing her arm, now throbbing with pain.

It was a clear warning for her not to get involved.

Trying to trap the Boneclaw, Quinn decided to open up a shadow dome, covering both of them. Whenever he needed to fight a person one on one, Quinn would use this skill and similar to the Boneclaw, he could equally go wherever he wished in the shadow using shadow hop, seemingly appearing out of nowhere.

Thinking he had trapped the Boneclaw, Quinn was getting ready to plan his next attack, but before he could. The Boneclaw created another portal, and now he was nowhere to be seen.

'It looks like he can also teleport outside of your dome.' Vincent said.

It looked like he was right as well, as his Shadow Mc points were going down by the second.

Each hit from the Boneclaw was taking off thirty MC points, and it was rapidly going down as he had the dome up.

Closing the dome quickly, Quinn could see the Boneclaw just outside where the edge of it would be.

"Screw you!" Quinn said, opening his hand showing the palms and then closing it in a fist, the next second the Boneclaw had completely disappeared.

[Shadow lock skill activated]

'You know that won't stop him for long.' Vincent said.

'I know, but I just need time to think. I can't hit him with any of my blood skills, otherwise he will just teleport everywhere, so to be able to hit him I have to slow him down.'

It certainly was a strange fight for Quinn, although he didn't feel like he couldn't beat the opponent in front of him, it was the most trickiest fight he ever had, and just as Vincent said, it looked like the Shadow lock didn't hold the Boneclaw at all, as he seemingly appeared out of nowhere.

'So you can teleport out of that as well?'

Quinn thought that perhaps the Boneclaw would start to attack the shadow space, but there was no need for that.

Still, trying to come up with something that could hit or slow the Boneclaw down, it looked like it was time for the Boneclaw to attack instead. It didn't move from its spot and was still roughly ten meters away from where Quinn's position was.

Moving its large arms, each time a black portal would appear in front of it, and at the same time, another one directly in front of Quinn's face. He whacked it away out of instinct, seeing the long dangling finger.

"He can attack from that far away?!" But the attacks weren't over, as the Boneclaw kept striking the air around him and the attacks would appear in all sorts of different places around Quinn, from behind, from above, and below.

It was as if Quinn was playing the block block game again, striking each of the attacks, and avoiding the more dangerous ones, but there was a huge difference between this and the block block game. The strikes from the Boneclaw were heavier than ever, and he could see the endurance of his equipment were going down by the second.

'Damn it, Alex worked hard on these.'

Now watching Quinn block the attacks desperately, Kazz began to realise something. Quinn's combat skills for a vampire leader were quite poor. He had strong blood skills, but they were powered with a strange power and simple.

Perhaps one of his biggest advantages in fights was due to people not fully knowing what the shadow could do.

However, here, where his shadow and blood skills didn't work well against an opponent, one would be better off trying to use their hand to hand combat, but the Bone claw, who just did fast simple attacks was able to overwhelm him.

Through the barrage of attack, Quinn could see the Bone claw was unmoving, apart from its arms, and he saw this as an opportunity. He moved his shadow to block the majority of the attacks, leaving only a small hole, and through that hole a single finger could fit through.

Firing off, a blood attack infused with Qi through the small hole made in the shadow, he could see it becoming a success. The blood bullet was the fastest attacking Skill Quinn had.

If he couldn't slow it down, then this would just have to do. The bullet went right through its shoulder, and a cloud of black smoke started to appear where the wound was meant to be.

'Did that really do nothing?' Quinn thought.

He came to realise that this time, Quinn wasn't fighting against a beast, or a vampire, where Qi infused attacks would do damage or the beast would feel pain. This was a different enemy altogether.

The next second, the Boneclaw disappeared and a large scratch was made towards his back, going through Quinn's armour and reaching his skin, tearing it easily.

His shadow was too preoccupied with the attacks at the front, and he hadn't moved it behind him in time.

'Is Quinn really going to lose? Someone who defeated my father, and Cindy with the absolute blood skill, to a familiar?' Kazz worriedly thought.

Just what was this familiar that was able to cause so much trouble for Quinn.

"I really didn't want to do this, and I didn't think I would have to use it again so soon. After all the work I did to get the shadow and now I have to use it against you." Quinn said, as he placed his hand on the ground, and all of the shadow sank spreading out.

[Soul weapon activated]

Chapter 981: A waste of time!

Standing by the side, Kazz knew straight away that Quinn had done something. As the last time he had fought with Cindy he had done the exact same thing. When Quinn's soul weapon was active, a faint purple glow would appear around all of the shadows Quinn used.

One of the main benefits of using the soul weapon 'Shadow Overload' was the fact that Quinn could now use the shadow as he wished without the need to worry if it would run out or not. However, this wasn't the reason Quinn had decided to use it now.

The Boneclaw's teleportation speed was far faster than before. But there were more than just one benefit of using the soul weapon. Quinn's soul weapon would also improve his casting speed with the shadow when using skills, and the general movement of his shadows.

'Not that I'm going to need it, Quinn thought as he held out both of his hands, and started to create a dome of shadow over the Boneclaw. The Boneclaw would teleport out of it the same as he did last time, but seeing where it was now, Quinn would quickly summon another dome over it again, in an instant before it could react.

'It looks like my guess was correct.' Although the Boneclaw was able to teleport out of the shadow dome, it wasn't able to attack at the same time and it didn't seem to know exactly where it was teleporting to. It seemed like it would take a few seconds before it repositioned itself and noticed where Quinn was.

While in the dome, the Boneclaw was unable to see, so it couldn't focus where to place its black teleporters. The only thing it could do was look in a certain direction in the dome, and cast a portal to the other side to escape, and soon, when it was busy coming out of one of the shadows, Quinn was appearing directly behind it through his own shadow with a large hammer strike of his own.

However, the Boneclaw was fast, as it managed to create a large portal the same size as Quinn in front of him, and sinking through it, Quinn was redirected to another place, causing his hammer strike to strike one of the buildings in the inner castle area nearby.

A loud bang was heard as his fist went through a building wall, and a couple of the ones behind it crumbled to the floor. Still, Quinn wasn't worried. Compared to last time, he had more MC points to play with. What he didn't realise was although Shadow Overload allowed him to use the shadow as much as he wished, he could still only control only slightly more than his MC points allowed at one time.

With his MC points above a thousand, Quinn was able to control a larger amount of shadow. Having created several domes, he was still able to protect himself using the shadow.

"So you seem to be quite the quick thinker, but I have a lot of tricks up my sleeve!" Quinn shouted as he fired out a blood bullet into one of his shadows in front of him, and it appeared behind the Boneclaw, going through its forearm.

This was a skill that was too quick for the Boneclaw to react to, and when it turned around, it could see several circle shadows floating in the entire area. Quinn had spread them around, hovering as if they were land mines all over the field.

"I think I've got the hang of how far you can teleport at once. Try teleporting somewhere, and you'll run into any of these," Quinn said, as he activated a disk with a razor edge, covered in the shadow.

'If I throw it into any of these shadows, I can redirect it to try to follow the Boneclaw, and I can also throw blood swipes and even escape through them as well.'

In a way, Quinn was using the shadows as a better version of the teleporting skill that the Boneclaw could use. Quinn was able to go through one shadow, and appear out of any of the shadows hovering about at any time.

Quinn was ready to throw the Shadow disk into one of the shadow portals, but stopped himself just seconds before, as he saw the Boneclaw turning into a black mist, and it was soon heading towards Quinn.

"Did I win the fight?" Quinn wondered.

'I don't think you won.' Vincent replied. 'I just think the Boneclaw has accepted you again, for now.'

Hearing this, Quinn didn't like it one bit. Was Vincent saying that he might choose to challenge him again in the future? He already had a headache with Arthur and now had to worry about the Boneclaw as well. It was also safe to say that Quinn was beyond annoyed. He had used the Shadow Overload skill, and now he also had to face the backlash of using it.

He didn't even get to use it fully or for a long time. It was as if the Boneclaw said, show me everything you had, and then decided to just go away when Quinn did.

[Your total MC points are now '1150 points']

The amount of points lost wasn't a deal-breaker, but it wasn't like Quinn could easily obtain points through using the skill Shadow Eater either. Technically at the moment each time he would use this skill his MC points would lower, so it was best not to use it for now.

The other problem was right after using the soul weapon, all of his MC points would go down to 0. Even though he didn't use much of the shadow in this fight compared to with Cindy. He would now have to wait for a period of time for them to restore. If he had used a skill like this against a demon tier beast and then ran into Hilston, he would have been a sitting duck not being able to use his shadow ability.

'Just a word of advice to you as a past leader.' Vincent said. 'Although I wasn't the best when it came to hand to hand combat, and you are currently better than me when I was your age, for a vampire your skills are quite poor. You only know the basics, something taught to the regular vampires, but you are a leader.'

"Since you use gauntlets as your weapons, it would be best for you to try and further develop your fighting skills. So far, you have done well, relying on powers such as Qi, and mixing it with your vampire powers, and also the shadow, but what if you are unable to use both of those things? Just like with the Boneclaw in the future, there may be an opponent that will need these set of skills."

Honestly, Quinn couldn't agree more, but it wasn't like he knew any grand martial artist. Leo was the closest person to one, but he was a master swordsman.

'I wonder if there's something I can do?'

'The second point.' Vincent continued, although we have already discussed this, it's about your blood abilities. It's all well improving your blood control, but just like with the shadow, you need to learn more advanced blood skills. They are currently quite simple."

'Couldn't you teach me, since you used to be a great leader and all.' Quinn said.

'I guess I could give it a go, but through words alone, it would be hard. It would be best for you to see the skills yourself. Maybe you should get friendly with one of the leaders at some point.' Vincent half jokingly said.

Still, Quinn didn't think Vincent was giving him enough credit. Quinn didn't show the Boneclaw everything he had, and there were even the new shadow skills he had yet to test.

Seeing the Boneclaw disappear like so, Kazz was relieved, but witnessing Quinn use his special power again, she truly did feel like she was looking at one of the strongest vampire leaders. Even if he was lacking in certain areas, no one could deny how strong he was.

"Well, let's forget about that little thing, shall we?" Quinn said, looking back at Kazz. "Let's get back."

The incident with Quinn's familiar wasn't something that needed to be urgently reported, since it was his own familiar and didn't involve others. No one had even seen the fight, but Kazz still reported the matter to Bryce. After all, she was loyal to him as he was her father and even more so her king.

Although, Bryce didn't think much of this, and was far more interested in the reports she had made earlier.

"You may leave now Kazz, you did a good job. Thank you." Bryce said, sitting down on the king's throne.

When Kazz left the room, out from the side as if he was almost invisible, Tempus stood.

"You heard about the wall, right?" Bryce asked. "Do you think you will be able to restore it to its former self?"

"Perhaps, we might not get the whole thing, but we should learn something, but I'm wondering what you plan to do with such a wall?" Tempus asked.

"I hate the shadow, but everyone has to admit their power, but the reason why so many people disliked the shadow in the past was because it belonged to the Punishers, a force equal to that of the king. This is something that should have never happened. It's time the king had its set of own shadow users." Bryce smiled. "I bet Arthur will be pleasantly surprised to see them when he returns."

"And how do you expect to get past the doors without informing Muka?" Tempus asked.

"Oh don't worry about that, I have more power than you think. Actually you might already know. Otherwise I doubt you would be standing by my side."

Chapter 982: The strongest fighters in the world

Upon returning to the Cursed ship and hearing nothing terrible had happened at school while Quinn was away, he was in no rush to go back just yet. He had time to think about what Vincent had talked about.

One of the most critical things Quinn had to worry about was getting stronger for the future enemies ahead. One of the easiest ways was to improve something he was severely lacking, and one of those was his combat fighting skills.

He never worried about this much before but did try practising a little when he had no abilities.

'I remember those days, Quinn started to reminisce. 'I thought watching a few martial arts movies and copying them would make me some skilled master, and then I would just get blasted with a green energy blast. Yeah, no karate-chopping skills are going to stop that.' Quinn thought.

However, things were different now. Quinn had a body that could put fighting skills to good use, just like the other leaders did.

Checking his system, Quinn could see the tutorial zone that displayed Vincent's lessons in the system.

'Do you have any more of these?' Quinn asked.

'I mean, I don't, but honestly, I think you're beyond anything that I could teach you through a video. At the moment, you have a body that would be good in any martial art. However, what you need is something that would actually be good in fighting against ability users. This I'm not the best at.'

Hearing these words while on the Cursed ship, Quinn went looking for Leo. Although he was a swordsman, he did know the martial art taught by the military quite well, and perhaps there was someone he could recommend.

While searching high and low around the ship, Quinn couldn't find him anywhere and eventually ran into Sam, walking through one of the hallways.

"Quinn, you still haven't returned. You know the students will miss you?" Sam said.

"It's fine. They have a good teacher. I was actually looking for Leo. Have you seen him anywhere?" Quinn asked.

"Actually, Leo wanted to catch up with you about something, but it looks like one of the planets that Pure has members on is close by, so they have decided to go there. Don't worry, they took Nate along as well, just in case there is any trouble."

There was no time frame for when Quinn needed to get things done, so there wasn't an urgency in him, but at the same time, there was the constant worry that the Dalki, a vampire force or even Pure, could attack them at any point.

Although Quinn was happy they had taken a shadow user along like he asked, he felt a bit unlucky that they had taken Nate. If he couldn't get an answer from Leo, he would have asked Nate, a great martial artist, what to do next.

'I guess I could just teleport there and then travel back, but they might be in the middle of something.'

"Go on. I can see you have something on your mind. What do you want?" Sam asked.

Quinn explained what he wished to do. How he wanted to improve his martial arts skills. Thinking about it for a while, Sam eventually gave an answer.

"Do you remember how the two of you first met through the Power fighters game? Well, there was a reason why Nate would constantly play it. Even for him, there were plenty of strong people there.

"You have to remember not everyone likes the limelight. Some people have strong abilities or are just strong that they choose to hide their powers when they join a faction. Before the civil war, although it was normal for others to fight and such, strong people didn't often fight each other due to fear of how much destruction and death it would cause.

"Do you think the Graylash family ever fought against the Bree family, or the Sun Shields without people getting hurt?"

Hearing this, Quinn thought it would be quite interesting. He hadn't played the game in a while. When he first started out, he used the game often to test out his blood abilities that could be used with no restrictions inside the game.

'I suppose if I play again, I can just not use my blood abilities. Before, I was obsessed with the exp, not that it would do anything for me now. But now I can just fight against ability users, just using my fists. If I lose, it won't really be a problem.'

Quinn thought it was a great suggestion and thanked Sam before leaving off to play the game. There were quite a lot of pods on board the Cursed faction, as the game had always been popular with people, including the Cursed faction.

However, there was one person he thought he should meet before playing the game, asking if he could work out some personal request for Quinn, and that was none other than Logan.

He was inside his usual research room, a room that was given just to Logan dedicated to him to work on whatever he needed. It didn't take long for Logan to turn it into his own personal room, as it was filled with what Quinn could only describe as useful junk all around the room.

He was careful to use the word 'Useful' because often, things that looked strange and that he didn't understand would be quite helpful. A lot of the stuff in the room was brought over from the many locations the Green family owned, the projects his family were working on before they had passed.

"Quinn, that's you right? No one else has as light footsteps as you do. Also, I heard from Sam that you have just returned from the vampire world. Did he tell you about my request?" Logan said, as he was wearing some strange goggles and using his robotic arm, but soon the googles started to deform into the tiny spiders and created some shoulder pads instead.

"Request, I didn't know you had one? I was actually coming to you to ask about something. What did you want to ask?" Quinn wondered.

Logan looked at Quinn for a few seconds and didn't say anything.

"Logan, please, you already helped me a lot. Remember, even with the current situation, anything you need that I can help with, I will do it." Quinn said.

Then, as if Logan was waiting for Quinn to say these words, he gave a reply.

"Great, then I wish to go to the vampire world and go to the lab out in the mountains. I will take my leave tomorrow and make sure to take one of the shadow users with me. I will also take Borden along for protection, so you can't complain. A leader wouldn't go back on their word, right?"

For some reason, Quinn felt like he had just been tricked.

'This is what happens when you have people smarter than you helping you out.' Quinn thought.

"What do you want to do there anyway?" Quinn asked.

"I plan to visit the lab so I can clone myself a new arm. The lab had the ability to create a clone of Vorden, that's how I accidentally made Borden, so I should be able to create a hand for myself if I study the equipment myself." Logan replied as if it was no big deal.

"Wait! What happens if you make another, like a Logan Dalki? I know Borden turned out to be okay, but we can't guarantee that another one will be, can we?" Quinn said worriedly.

"Don't worry about that. There isn't enough energy to create another Dalki. That was the problem in the first place and part of the reason why Borden is so unstable.

Leave the thinking to me. If I tried to explain anything to you, then it would just be pointless. Fighting is your strong point. This is mine so leave that to me."

Although Quin didn't like it, visiting the vampire world last time, it seemed like everything had calmed down quite a bit, and as long as someone like Linda who knew the shadow went along with them, then Quinn could be there if there was any trouble, as for Borden. He was as strong as a leader, so no one would mess with him.

"Talking about fighting, there were a few things I wanted to ask you about..." Quinn discussed his plan and how he would like to join power fighters one more time, but he had some special requests.

"Sure, I can do that for you. As you know, the game ranks you based on your Traveller Rank. So you want me to put you as an A rank traveller, correct? That shouldn't be a problem. As long as you keep winning fights, the system will naturally put you against the higher Travellers and then you will enter the ranking system."

"Ranking System?"

"Each time you win, you get Elo points, which will rank you up and down, putting you in the top hundred of the power fighters game. This is only available to Travellers Rank B and upwards. Win enough times in a row, and you will eventually get put in the top hundred."

It sounded like Sam's suggestion was turning into a good idea, and there was even a goal to aim towards now.

"Wow, an online ranking, who's at the top, is it someone I know?" Quinn wondered. Being in the position he was in now, surely the top would be filled with people he had seen or at least heard off.

"Not really, at least I don't know who they are," Logan replied. "You have to remember a few things. Fighting in the game, although meant to simulate real combat, isn't the same. There are differences. Also, one can not use their soul weapon in the game either. And sometimes soul weapons are a big differentiator when one is fighting in the real world." Logan explained.

It made sense, and now for some reason, Quinn was itching to go into the power fighters game. However, there were a couple more requests Quinn had made.

"And about my other request?" Quinn asked.

"That's fine," Logan said. "I can put in a limiter just for you, so you will be limited to fifty percent of your body's strength. You can increase this in the game as you wish. As for your other request, usually, only one person can be linked with one I.D., but It's me after all, so I can do what I like. We will create a new I.D. for you."

The name Bloodevolver was too famous, and Quinn wasn't going to be using the blood skills this time around. He was going to be testing his fighting skills, so he wanted a new I.D.

"Do you want me to come up with the name for you?" Logan asked.

"No, no, please!" Quinn quickly said. "It's okay. I can pick my own." Quinn said, fearing he would be known as Buinn.

Chapter 983: Noob fighter

The VR game Powerfighters also could copy one's beast armour and weapon. Even though it was capable of doing that, Quinn really didn't want any advantages when fighting. He thought the quickest way to improve was through failure and learning through one's mistakes.

Luckily, there were no consequences for making mistakes in the VR game since it was just a game. However, even if he wanted to use his beast weapon, he really couldn't. Taking his gauntlets out of his shadow equip, Quinn looked at his gauntlets, and they were in a sorry state.

Several dents in places, gashes of torn metal. Quinn imagined that if he didn't have the shadow equip skill and he had to force the gauntlets on his arms, they would become a bloody mess from all the broken pieces hanging on it.

The durability was around that of ten percent, and all the boosted stats were ineffective.

'The Boneclaw's attacks were really strong, stronger than any beast I've faced. I wonder if he would be considered a demon tier beast or something similar if he was one?' Quinn started to think.

There was a feeling that the Boneclaw didn't really show everything it had either during the fight.

Because of this, before entering the game, Quinn decided to go with Alex for a visit.

"Nooo!" Alex screamed with the gauntlets laid out on the table. "What did you do? Did you chuck these things into a blender! Do you know how long it took to make these for you!"

Whenever Alex would work on a piece of equipment, he worked extra hard personally on Quinn's. It wasn't that he didn't equally put effort into everything he did make for the Cursed faction. It was just that Quinn would always be the first of its kind when making things, so it would take more time.

It was the first time he had to use fairy blood and the first time he had used king tier crystals with the gauntlets. He was already devastated when he had heard that his Emperor tier armour set was destroyed. Still, at least that had gone to good use, protecting Quinn's life from the Demon tier crab.

"I told you, it was unexpected. You know me, I wouldn't have let them get hurt on purpose." Quinn said. "Anyway, can you fix them?"

"Fix them," Alex said, slapping his head and still looking at the gauntlets on the table. "First, your gauntlets were made with specific beast crystals to give it the best active skill I could get. It would be quite hard to find those again, and honestly, creating a new pair would be easier than repairing the old ones."

Quinn thought about it for a while. It was time for him to have an upgrade in the first place.

"Do we have crystals to make a new weapon?" Quinn asked.

"Oh, I thought you said you talked to Logan before, didn't he tell you?" Alex replied. "It turns out that the original planet that the Crows occupied is filled with strong beasts in the new land. So strong that Logan was unable to place his device to check out if there were demon tier beasts in the area."

"I know what you're thinking. If you want a new weapon, then you at least want it to be at the legendary tier this time. Well, if you're looking for plenty of high-level beasts with certain attributes, then that's going to be your best bet."

Thinking about it, Quinn wanted another active elemental skill. The first advanced tier crystal gifted by Leo had the lightning elemental power, which gave him a great active skill, and the fire crystals after. It seemed like the elemental crystals gave him the best option in the end.

"I'll think about what to get. I'll ask Sam to send a team to the Crow's planet, and when they find something, they can contact me." Quinn replied.

This way, he could be optimal with his time. Quinn wanted to fight the beasts himself. For one, legendary beasts were quite up the tier ladder, and there weren't many in the Cursed faction that could deal with them. The other reason was Quinn wanted to see what skills the beast had, to see if it was suitable for making his weapon.

With his shadow skill, they just needed a shadow user.

'Maybe Wevil would be good to search the area.' Quinn thought.

With the request sent off to Sam, it was finally time for Quinn to play the game. Entering his personal training room, he could see a pod there waiting for him. He had made this request so the others onboard also wouldn't know what Quinn was doing.

Besides, his fame in the Cursed faction itself was growing and just walking around, he would get stopped several times, and his journey would be twice as long. Quinn didn't want to be one of those people that didn't reply back, and it was nice to get to know the people in the faction.

Although this Pod looked like any other VR pod, Quinn knew there was a difference. This one had been modded, added with the features that Quinn had requested from Logan.

'I remember entering the shop with Vorden and looking at the price tag of one of these things. I never thought I would own my own one. Now, there are several on the ships, and I even have a personal one made for me by the game's creator. When I think about it, there have been some amazing things in my life.' Quinn thought as he started to climb into the VR pod.

Just like when he had entered the other VR pods, the welcome screen appeared in front of him. Before though, after figuring out who the person was, the system would then log in Quinn to his user ID automatically and also use his traveller information, but not this time.

[Please enter your User ID]

'Ah, I really don't care about it this time too much. Last time I tried to write something cool, and that's never got me far,' Quinn thought as he just typed in some words that he didn't really give much thought to.

[User ID has been created]

[Welcome Noob Fighter]

It had been a while, but after selecting his name, his body was chucked into the white space.

'I guess I can't use the Bloodevolver appearance, can I?' Quinn thought and started decorating and altering his avatar. Giving himself spiky green hair, and a plain gold and black tracksuit.

He looked like he was dressed as someone a 1000 years past his time, but he thought it suited him. In a world of no abilities, back in the past when people his age would have fought with their fists.

Checking out the game system, he could see that now there was also a limiter that had been set to fifty., Quinn could even lower this, so he could use more of his strength or increase it.

Before going into a match, he tested out the limiter for a while, practising what martial arts moves he knew, and it looked like it worked.

'You never fail to impress me, Logan.'

Finally, he was ready to start his first matchmaking session. As an A rank Traveller, Quinn would get matched up with those at a similar level to him, but for now, he would be put against some Rank B's while the system was working out his correct ranking level, so the matchmaking would be fairer.

When Quinn's body appeared, he could see himself standing opposite a man who was dressed entirely in black armour from head to toe and had a pair of small axes on his back.

"Noob fighter?" Chan read. "Is this my lucky day? I was on a losing streak."

Checking his opponent's stats, he could see that Noob fighter hadn't been in any fights, so he wasn't quite sure if he was lucky or not.

'I guess it's his first time playing, and I can take advantage of that.'

The match had begun, and Chan immediately threw out the small axe on his back towards Quinn.

Seeing it, Quinn decided to dodge the first axe as he was still trying to figure out what ability the person in front of him had. The next second another axe came towards him, and then several more were flying towards Quinn.

'Crap!' Quinn thought as he started to run around the place and head towards his opponent.

"Hey, this noob is quite fast," Chan said, continuing to throw multiple axes from his back. Although he only had two on him, his ability allowed him to copy and produce the same beast weapon he last touched.

He continued to throw them towards his opponents, dn when the two got close, Quinn managed to duck a wild swing from Chun and hit him in the stomach.

The blow had done damage, but while falling, Chun picked up one of the axes that were stuck to the ground and dug it into Quinn's foot. If he wanted to get out of this, he would have to forcefully rip his foot from the axe.

Picking up another Axe, Chun went to swing it towards his ribs again, but an elbow hit the side of the axe with such force, making it fall to the ground. While Chun was slightly stunned, Quinn went to punch him in the head again, but Chun quickly rolled, avoiding the hit and threw out an axe hitting Quinn's other leg.

"I'm a rank B Traveller for a reason, don't underestimate me!" Chun shouted. After a minute of intense fighting back and forth, a winner was eventually announced.

"Phew, that guy was tough for a noob. I'm surprised I won, his blows were so strong, and he was fast. I guess it had something to do with his ability? Wait, did he even use an ability?" Chun said, thinking about the fight.

Meanwhile, Quinn was back in the lobby and looking at his game screen.

"So my first fight was a loss, huh? Well, I guess setting it to thirty percent was too much to start with." Quinn said.

Chapter 984: The Dalki growth

After getting the go ahead from Quinn that he was now allowed to travel to the vampire world, Logan wasted no time making preparations. In fact, he actually already had everything he needed with him packed away in a special robotic backpack. He would 'Carry' this on his back with the support of his little spiders, making it pretty much weightless.

It was as if he always knew Quinn would say yes, but he was not to go on his travels alone. In a room placed away from the others, which needed a special pin to enter, was the new type of teleporter that would take one to the vampire world.

If someone was to stumble and open it, it would be quite troublesome for them, finding themselves in a strange place. Not that they could go through the teleporter anyway. This new teleporter was based on the vampire's teleporters. On Logan's side, a code needed to be input that would then activate the teleporter, and it was the same on Paul's side.

Communication needed to be made before Logan could come across. However, this time, unlike when Quinn had gone, they did not inform the king or ask for persimmon. Quinn felt like he needed to last time due to entering the fourteenth castle, which was a big deal.

However, Logan was going to a place that he wasn't even sure they were aware of or cared about. It also wasn't like what he was planning to do, had anything to do with them in the first place.

Standing by his side were the two that would be coming with him for this short journey,

"Hopefully, you can make some more of that green serum for me," Borden said as he hopped onto the right side of Logan's shoulder.

"I can try, but I wouldn't count on it," Logan replied. Knowing that there was hardly any energy left in the large tubes.

As for the other one, she seemed a bit nervous to be coming along.

"I kind of understand why you brought Borden along with you, but why did you choose me and not one of the others?" Linda asked.

Logan looked Linda up and down as if it was a pain to explain to her, but letting out a sigh, he did so anyway.

"Have you and I ever talked before?" Logan asked.

"A few times on occasion, but I don't; think we have ever had a full conversation," Linda replied, trying to figure out what his point was.

"And that is exactly the reason why I have brought you. Me and you haven't talked before, so we have nothing to talk about. Which means I can get on my task with peace." Said Logan.

Linda didn't know why, but she felt a little hurt by that comment, but Logan was just upfront and honest from what she had heard from the others. Speaking what he thought, sometimes it was better to have a person like this, rather than someone you didn't know what they were thinking, like Kazz.

Thinking of the vampire world made Linda think of her. She still held a grudge against her for what she had done.

With the preparations done and the very small chitchat made, all three of them went through the teleporter, finding themselves at the tenth castle. Unlike last time, Paul wasn't there to greet them, but Ashley stood in the throne room instead.

He was only there to make sure they had arrived safely and also to turn off the teleporter so it wouldn't be linked to the Cursed ship while they were away.

There were no words spoken, and Logan just continued to walk past Ashley as if it was something he did every single day.

'Well, I can't say the boy isn't efficient.' Linda thought as she was quite enjoying his style.

A few sprays of the special scent were placed onto Borden and Logan. Now they had no worry as they walked through the vampire settlement. Compared to before, the dark streets were full of market stalls, vampires talking and eating irregular meals at their restaurants.

It seemed like an old city in the human world, and Linda found it relatively peaceful.

"If we had seen this and experienced this when we first came, then maybe our opinion would have been a little different." She said.

What was most impressive was how quick they were able to recover as well. Soon though, leaving the settlement, they would walk through the forest, and from there, it was time to head to the mountain where the lab was found.

While walking through the forest, there was a single incident that occurred. It was when a snake-like beast came dangling from one of the trees. It swooped down on them.

Linda was ready to get in the way, but when the snake reached a certain distance. A claw-like machine came out from the top of Logan's back and held it in place, then a blaster formed around Logan's arm, and he fired it a few times, eventually killing the snake on the spot.

'Even though the kid isn't like us, he seems to be quite powerful with all his little gadgets. I guess he isn't just the inventor of the ship.' Linda thought.

Although the two of them didn't talk much, in fact, not at all during the walk, even Borden was just sleeping on top of Logan's shoulder. She quite enjoyed learning more and more about Logan.

Finally, after entering a series of caves, they had reached the lab that Logan was looking for. He had been here a few times, and every time he visited it, it felt less foreign to him. Maybe it was because of the lab's layout, where certain machinery was placed. All of it was suited to his liking.

'It looks like I have a similar taste to my parents.' Logan thought and soon got to work.

Linda and Borden were placed in the central room. They waited there patiently. They explored the place at first together, apart from one room that Logan told them not to enter, but soon found that not knowing what anything was, it was quite boring after a while.

So they remained in the main terminal room while watching Logan get to work. The backpack that he had on him turned itself into a workbench. The technical robotic arms that had stopped the beast from earlier, four of them were being used as legs popping it up like a table. Then the bag opened itself up and was able to supply Logan with every single tool that he needed.

After seeing him going back and forth in and out of rooms, Logan eventually asked Borden for a favour. Using a small syringe, he had taken some of Borden's blood.

"Do you need that again for me?" Borden asked.

On the table was a flask and a syringe red in colour, then using the small amount of blood he had gotten from Borden, he slowly dropped it into the red liquid. Soon, the green liquid started to take over, and made a dark green colour as they both mixed together.

Another larger normal-sized syringe was on the side, and Logan used that to bring up some of the liquid from the flask.

"No, this is for me," Logan replied. His right robotic arm disconnected and fell to the floor. He injected the syringe directly into where the stump of his arm was.

"Logan what are you doing!" Borden said, worried, now realising what he might have been doing all along.

Logan fell to the floor as if he was in pain. The plan was to create. Clone of his arm, like they did so with Vorden and Borden, but why didn't Borden realise it sooner.

The clone that was made was a Dalki, not another human, which meant that Logan couldn't make human parts with the things inside the room.

The pain counted, and sweat was running down Logan's face, but soon the pain would end, and when he stood up, he could feel something heavy where his right side was.

"I won't be useless anymore," Logan said.

Standing there, Logan's arm had fully regrown, but it wasn't what it once was. Hard scales ran all the way up it, and the fingertips were shaped like a claw. Logan had successfully created himself a Dalki arm.

Chapter 985: The martial art god

How many times had Quinn seen this screen now? He had lost count. Due to him being a vampire, there wasn’t much sleep needed on his end, and the matches were ending relatively fast as well.

However, using no abilities, including that of the shadow and blood, limiting his physical abilities and having no beast gear proved to be a little too much of a disadvantage for Quinn.

However, it was safe to say it was working. Due to him not being able to rely on these things, he had to improve on the spot if he wanted to win. The only thing was. It was happening at a far slower pace than he had initially planned.

Quinn was losing matches using 30 percent of his strength. He thought the first few matches, his opponent might have been just strong, and eventually, he would find a way to beat them, but he never did and was getting tired of it.

In the next few games, Quinn decided that he would increase the limit by five percent each time until he eventually would win. At 35 percent his first match had hardly lasted longer than the others. He had, unfortunately, run into a speed user who was faster than him.

With Quinn’s current set of fighting skills, Quinn felt useless and was just frustrated. Soon after, he raised his stats to 40 percent. In his first match at this stage, he had lasted longer. His opponent had a growth ability, allowing them to grow the size of any part of their body and what they were touching at any point and time.

At this stage, Quinn was able to time his Flash Step perfectly to avoid the more vital attacks and had hit his opponents with well timed hammer strikes and kicks, damaging the body well and eventually got a win.

It seemed at 40 percent the increase in strength had significantly helped, but this wasn’t what Quinn was hoping for. He stayed at the forty percent range, and eventually won a few fights, but after winning a few fights in a row, the matching system had put him against some tougher opponents, and Quinn ended up losing again.

When he had reached a stalemate, Quinn raised his stats once more to forty-five percent, thinking maybe it would change the outcome. Which it did, but not for the right reasons, going back to his old ways of relying on speed and strength.

It seemed like the same pattern was occurring. Whenever Quinn would get stuck, he would just raise his limiter to beat his opponents and eventually, he had raised it to fifty percent. Winning nine fights in a row.

"No, this isn't what I wanted," Quinn said while waiting in the white room, pausing, trying to reflect back on the fight that had just happened. "I haven't really learnt any new fighting techniques, have I?"

"I would say so, but at the same time, I can't blame you for raising your stats," Vincent replied. "It hasn't been all for a lost cause. While forcing yourself to just use your body at that level, you used whatever you had to the max. I have never seen you have a better sense of timing, of when to attack and when to defend against your opponents."

"Which was why, whenever you raised your stats and went onto more difficult opponents, your fights seemed to be a lot easier. You are definitely improving, Quinn, but I would suggest you stop at fifty. From what I have gathered so far, at this point and stage, you should be able to defeat your opponents with this level of strength and speed."

Quinn agreed with Vincent, but it didn't mean he was any less frustrated. Losing all the time wasn't fun. He had a total of 32 wins while above three hundred losses on his record. As he got higher in the ranks, he was hoping that there would be those that fought better.

Instead, it was just those that were stronger with their abilities. There wasn't much he could learn from them, other than timing and when to attack. He learned how to analyse patterns better and read certain movements, but there was only so much he could do.

Quinn wanted to improve his own combat skills but had no knowledge or anyone to teach him.

Most of Quinn's current wins had happened while using fifty percent of his strength. Wanting to see how much he improved, Quinn decided that for the next fight, he would use no limiter at all. Even if he didn't learn anything, he just wanted a break from the neck and neck fights.

At that moment, his opponent appeared in front of him. It was Chun once again, with the black armour and Dual axes.

'Hey, wait, it's this guy again? Why am I fighting him?' Chun thought.

After beating the Noob fighter last time, Chun had been on a winning streak. He had been doing so well, he even thought that he might make it into the top 100 anytime soon. Once again, Chun decided to have a look at Quinn's stats.

'How many matches did this guy have after me, and look at how many losses he had. How bad is he?' Chun thought. Still, having between him once, he felt he could do so again, and it would just be a free win for himself. If Quinn was facing him now, it also meant his opponent must have gotten several wins in a row as well.

When this happened, the system would deem the player too strong for the opponents it was matching them up against, and Quinn had won nine fights in a row at his current level.

On Quinn's end, however, Quinn didn't recognise the person. After all, he had fought so many people in a row and was hardly paying attention to what his opponent looked like. In the game, many people had similar avatars.

When the match started, Chun went to grab his axe, but looking up, he couldn't see the person in front of him, and the next second he felt a punch hitting him right in the side of his face.

"It looks like hundred percent of my strength is way too much, and I'm surprised the system was able to replicate my power. Still, it felt good to do that just once. I was starting to feel a little weak." Quinn said with an almost devilish smile on his face.

'What just happened?' Chun thought. 'Did the game bug out.'

Instantly, Chun decided to rewatch the gameplay repeatedly, and he could see from the footage that his opponent had moved so fast and had hit him before he could do anything.

'That guy! I knew he was hiding an ability!'

[You have now entered the rankings]

[You have now taken the 100th spot]

This was indeed quite surprising to Quinn, that using fifty percent of his strength with no abilities, he could take one of the top hundred spots. Although he was a bad fighter, he had enough skills to beat most strong opponents through what he knew.

'But still, I'm going to be fighting the strongest of the strongest, there properly even stronger than any rank 1 on this game. I should at least be able to get this far.' Quinn thought.

After reaching rank 100, Quinn was planning to take a small break, but then, there were quite a few requests for fights that had been sent his way.

'What is all this?' Quinn thought as he was reading all the messages coming towards him. Soon he realised it was due to the public leaderboards. Now that Quinn was ranked a 100, anyone could see his name, select him and send him an invite.

'I guess one more fight won't hurt.' Quinn thought.

Looking through the messages, Quinn noticed that some of them had their rankings in brackets next to their name. The numbers close to him had asked for a match, but Quinn went through and looked for the highest number that had requested him to fight as he could and could see one of them stand out above the rest.

A person who was ranked fifty, and also had the name Martial Art God.

'Now, someone with a User ID has to be good at fighting, right? Why don't we have a little go.'

Quinn thought as he sent his request out.

Due to Chun, having just lost his fight seconds ago, he was frustrated and had looked up to the Noob fighter he had lost to. Then when he saw the hundred ranking by his name, he felt like he could feel blood pouring from his ears.

'Wait, what! why is the martial art's god, and this guy fighting against each other? Who accepts a match from someone fifty ranks above you!'

Chapter 986: Noob fighter vs God fighter

After accepting the request, Quinn was transported to the area where the two of them would be fighting. Stood opposite him was a man who had no top on, having his full chiselled six-pack out on display.

The man had what looked like a piece of red string around his arm and wore nothing but a pair of green shorts. The man wasn't even wearing any shoes and walked barefoot.

'I know this isn't the real world, but we still have a sense of feeling here.' Quinn thought.

It was true that the VR made one feel as if they were really there and they even felt slight pain. Although the pain sensor was set at an extremely low value and the pain felt was nothing like one would experience in real life. Instead, the computer would sometimes have to just guess how one's body would react when taking a hit.

Quinn also noticed that the stages for spectating that would often be empty were now full of spectators, something that hadn't happened until this fight.

'I haven't seen this many people since I was the Bloodevolver.' Quinn thought, looking around.

There were many people who would often watch those that were top-ranked. People liked watching battles between two strong opponents, that's just how it was, but in particular, more people seemed interested than usual.

The Martial art god gave a wave to the crowd of people. They all cheered in response as if it was something that he had done a thousand times. It was routine for him.

'Even if that Noob fighter was able to surprise me and got the upper hand, he won't be able to deal with the Gatekeeper.' Chun said as he watched from the sidelines.

This was another name that was given to the martial art god. The reason why he was called the Gatekeeper was due to his rank, being placed at fifty. All those above the rank of fifty constantly faced each other and the ranking remained unchanged for a long time.

Where as many would fall when meeting with the Gatekeeper, staying above rank fifty.

"It's been a while since I have seen a new person enter the hundred rankings, so I thought it was best to introduce myself to you first. See if you are worthy." The martial art god said.

'Is this guy role playing? I mean, I can't really make fun of him. I used to do the same thing when I was younger, except I had no friends to Roleplay with.' Quinn thought.

'And that is why the internet is a great thing, bringing all these strangers together who have similar interests. There is no need for others to judge you.' Vincent replied.

Towards the upper top ranks, closer to a hundred, they would change quite often with people coming in and out, but the martial art god had already faced them all, which was why when he saw someone new, he was quite interested in this said person.

Before the fight began, Quinn checked two things, that his limiter was now set at fifty again, which was all good, and as for the second thing. He bowed down, out of respect.

"If you are truly a martial art god like your name suggests, then it will be an honour to learn from you." Quinn replied, getting a little bit into the role-playing himself.

"It looks like at least this one knows how to show respect." The martial art god said, as he raised one of his knees and then slammed his foot on the ground.

He had simply gotten in a fighting stance, but even Quinn could tell something was different. For his last fight, he thought he might be able to take it easy, but it didn't look like he could do that at all.

The fight had begun, but the martial art god stayed in the same position, with his left leg slightly in front and both arms raised by his face.

'Is this Muay Thai?' Vincent said. Although Vincent wasn't much of a fighter, he did know a few things about fighting. During his greater years when he was younger, this fighting style was quite popular among young ones.

Since it didn't look like the martial art god was going to attack first, Quinn was going to be the one to instigate the fight.

'I'll figure out what his ability is first, and then flash step out of the way and reposition myself when I get the chance.' Quinn thought.

When Quinn was finally in range of the martial arts god, everyone thought the fight would be over in that second, just like all the others.

Suddenly, Quinn felt a throbbing pain in his thigh, making him stop in his tracks and soon, he fell to his knees.

'What happened, my leg? I didn't see him.' But Quinn saw the next one coming towards him. A lightning-fast kick that had hit his thigh was now coming at his head. Seeing how the kick had affected his thigh like so, he thought lifting his arm to block the attack would do nothing.

He would still lose the fight, and even if his body was great at recovering, his legs weren't good enough yet to use the flash step, so he did the only thing he could.

Twisting his body, swinging out his arm, he attempted to punch the leg coming towards him.

"A mistake, my legs have been conditioned to take out tree trunks, and you think your fist is going to stop my legs!" Martial arts god shouted.

However, Quinn's fist was no ordinary fist. How many times had he punched until his fist broke, how many times had he broken his arms from fighting to the death? His body wasn't human, and his bones had significantly strengthened.

When the two collided, surprisingly to him and the others, the martial art god's thigh kick had been stopped. By now, Quinn had recovered and used his flash step to get behind his opponent and was ready. Learning his lesson from last time, Quinn attempted a kick instead of a punch, not wanting to get too close. Still, suddenly, a pivot from the martial arts god, and he was facing him once again.

He had ducked under Quinn's fast moving leg and then grabbed the back of his neck with both of his arms locking him in. Pulling his head down, Quinn's face was met with a knee, but it didn't stop there. The knees continued one after another.

Quinn tried his best to pull away, but the man had him locked in, and when he finally let go, Quinn's force of pulling away swung his head back and caused him to stumble, while the martial arts god spun around and hit the side of his head with an elbow.

[You are no longer ranked]

As quick as Quinn had entered the rankings, he had left them too. Although Quinn wasn't helpless, the fight was clearly one sided.

The people who had watched the match were a little disappointed. Those that failed to reach the rankings, and even those that had wished to see someone for the first time, surpass and went through to the upper ranks, but it looked like this person would not be the one.

'What did you guys expect?' Chun thought. 'One was called Noob fighter, and the other martial arts god. I'm just glad that the guy that beat me got beat, and Martial art's god didn't even move from his position.'

After the fight, Quinn was back in the white room. Rather than upset by his loss, instead, he was pleased. Finally, he had found what he was looking for. A person who excelled at fighting that could teach him.

'Now, how do I convince him to teach me?' Quinn thought.

Just then, he had received a party invite. This was where people could enter the same white room together and use it as a training room, or one could search matches while others watched.

However, the invite was from the martial god himself.

'Looks like I might not have to contact him first after all.'

Accepting the invite, the man in the green shorts appeared in front of him and turned to look at Quinn.

"I wanted to ask you a question, during our fight, why didn't you use your ability against me? Did you think you could win without it?"

"That's how I fight, is there a problem? I don't believe you used an ability either?" Quinn asked.

"Yes, there is a problem. Fight me again, and use everything you have this time." The man said.

"Wai-"

"Fight me!"

"Just isn'tn-"

"Fight me!"

Quinn was a little frustrated with how this man was acting. He wouldn't let him get a word in.

'Should I just beat him and then ask him to teach me? Maybe he will respect me this way?' Quinn thought as he was getting ready to turn the limiter off.

'No, I have a better idea.'

Chapter 987: Deadly kick

There was a difference in the VR game compared to the real world. When Quinn just didn't want to deal with people, he could simply just log off. In the first place, Quinn had been playing the game non-stop for a while now. Although he was the type of person who could repeat the same task over and over again and not get sick of it, this session had gone on for a bit too long.

'Quinn, I'm a little confused. Why did you suddenly log off like that?' Vincent asked as Quinn was getting out of the pod and giving his body a few stretches here and there. 'Wasn't your whole goal to find someone good at martial arts to teach you. He was right there?'

'Don't worry.' Quinn replied as he exited the room and decided to head off to his own living quarters. 'I've already figured out what type of person the martial arts god is. That person won't stop chasing me now until he gets what he wants. Even more so after what I just did, and I have an idea that just might rile him up even more.'

Once Quinn had entered his own room, he went to the desk that was placed in the corner. It looked plain as if there was nothing on it, but once he sat down, a holographic keyboard lit up in front of him, and a widescreen appeared in front of his eyes.

The first thing he did was search up videos about Muay Thai fighters. Quinn started to watch video after video on the subject. There were plenty of tutorials online, but it was safe to say that the martial arts god was leaps and bounds ahead of all of them.

It was a shame, but old traditional martial arts skills had diminished, especially since the introduction of abilities. Still, it had a bit of a resurgence based on other abilities, but new forms of martial arts were created to suit the beast weapons and take advantage of that power.

Very few people used their fists to fight. After watching some videos for some time, Quinn took what he wanted from them. Downloading them onto his little wristwatch, heading off to his own personal training room.

The videos that he had saved he played a few times while in the training room and slowly started to copy the moves bit by bit.

'Maybe there's a method to his madness.' Vincent thought as he watched him.

The fighting style was undoubtedly different from what Quinn was used to, and there were many points. The striking part wasn't so hard. Throwing out punches, he did this enough, and he was also quite good with his kicks due to the military-style of fighting.

However, there was something different about the kicks in the video. The amount of weight and power was like that of a gigantic whip. The main movement he decided to focus on was the thigh kick. Having experienced it himself, he knew how effective it was.

The other points of fighting style, such as using the elbows, knees and grappling, were a little harder for him to grasp, without a fighting power, and just through a video, he couldn't get the right feeling, as Fex would say.

Quinn went through each of the movements of the thigh kick slowly and made sure he was standing in the same stance as the person before him. He also remembered well the viewpoint of the martial arts god.

'Alright, let's do this!' Quinn said as he practised the kick over and over again.

While Sam was busy with his daily duties, he had heard about a complaint while being on board the ship. That there was a loud continuous bang. Worried that there might be some damage or something wrong with the ship, Sam had decided to go check out where the noise was coming from.

"Is there a reason you have brought me along?" Dennis asked as they walked towards the loud banging sound, which was getting louder, and had a standard beat to it.

"Haven't you seen those alien movies?" Sam chuckled nervously. "Maybe a beast snuck on board the ship and slowly is starting to turn everyone or is running through the vents."

Although Dennis would have liked to poke fun at this, it seemed like Sam was genuinely scared, and everyone had their fears. Finally, they had located the noise of the bang, which had led them to outside a locked door.

"Isn't this?" When opening up the door, another loud bang was heard, and a breeze was felt on both Sam's and Dennis' faces pulling their hair back a bit.

What they could see was Quinn drenched in sweat, so much so that there was a pool of water behind him, but he seemed incredibly focused, and his back right leg was all tensed up, that the veins were showing running up his calf like a root of a plant.

His leg was a foreign part of his body. Lifting it up, Quinn threw his leg and twisted his hips as hard as he could and once again, the loud bang was heard.

Quinn was throwing out his leg so fast, with such force it sounded like when one would swing a real whip. Imagining what would happen to someone's leg at the end of that, Sam gulped.

"I think I'm ready," Quinn said with a smile, only noticing the two of them now.

"Why do I feel like something like his has happened before?" Sam said and left the room so Quinn could continue doing his own thing. An announcement was made so no one would worry about the banging noise anymore. He would also request Logan to attempt to make the room more soundproof in the future.

'You keep getting stronger, Quinn.'

The next day, when Quinn logged into the game again, he didn't get a request from the martial arts god. When checking his status, it seemed like he was in his own fights, which was to be expected since the top rankings fought all the time. Still, Quinn wanted to get his attention another way.

Searching for a game after having come out of the hundred rankings, for the third time, he was matched up with someone familiar.

'This guy again!' Chun thought as he saw who his opponent was. He had been having a good day. Since he was on a winning streak again, and from his calculations, he only needed to win one or two more games before entering the top hundred rankings.

'Okay, whatever. This time I'm going to be prepared for you.' Chun thought

When the match started, Quinn decided to stay in position and just waited for Chun to make his move. He threw a few axes his way, but Quinn would avoid them.

'I know you have an ability, so I'm not going to do what I did the first time.' Chun thought as he took out both axes from his back and held them in his hands.

'I'm quite skillful at using these bad boys in my hand!' Chun thought, running forward, seeing that the Noob fighter was just staying in the same position.

With the first downward strike, Quinn flash stepped behind him, and the kick that he had been practising a thousand times was ready. He wasn't at full strength due to the limiter set on his body, but everything felt the same. Coming out like a whip, his leg had hit the back of Chun's thigh.

If it wasn't a game, he felt like his bones would have been crushed, and the system deemed it so as well since he could no longer move. With him on his knees, as soon as Quinn's leg was back in position, he let it fly out again, this time hitting Chun's head.

[Winner 'Noob Fighter']

After that kick, the match was over in an instant.

'Again! What the hell is wrong with that guy? He beat me twice now and two different ways!' Chun screamed. 'He's a curse, that guy is a curse, he shouldn't be called a noob fighter, he should be called a Curse fighter or something!' Chun continued to scream, but it was pointless.

'And what was that kick?'

Hoping to rub off some of his bad luck on the player, he decided to follow his matches, and what he proceeded to see next was a massacre.

The Noob fighter won his next four matches, only using mainly three moves. A flash step to avoid his opponent's blow, a kick, and sometimes a punch or two, but they were used primarily for blocking.

Soon, Quinn found himself rising the ranks, reaching rank ninety, and had once again caught the attention of the martial arts god.

Vincent had been watching Quinn throughout the fights and was just wondering how quick he was able to progress. 'Quinn, I'll say this again, even though you think you have no talent, I believe you always did. It's just that you never had the body to quite show that talent.'

'You have created a deadly kick without even realising it. Once you have finished and learnt these skills to their most potential, I can't imagine how powerful they will be adding in the vampire aura and the Qi you have learnt as well.' Vincent thought.

Finally, it was time for Quinn's and the martial arts god's rematch. At the same time, the name of the Noob fighter was starting to spread.

Inside his Office, Oscar was sitting down waiting for his daily reports.

"Hmm, what's this? A report from Sergeant Chun?" Oscar said.

"Yes," Jade replied, standing by his side. "You know he likes to play the game of power fighters a lot to look for new recruits, and he says he has found a gem that goes by the name of Noob fighter."

Chapter 988: Surpassing the Teacher

Quinn's little plan turned out to work more than he could have ever imagined. Videos would constantly circulate of those in the top one hundred rankings, of them fighting. Many players watched these using them as research. Thinking that they could emulate or learn from the best, perhaps one day, they too could join the rankings.

That's when Quinn's videos started to gain attention, not because of the difficult opponents he defeated but because of the style in how he defeated them. It was a reminder of how a certain someone named, Martial arts god rose to the top.

These videos also had caught the eye of the Martial arts god himself, and he felt like he had no choice but to send Quinn another request for a duel. He felt like he was being taunted.

In his mind, first, Quinn didn't use any abilities at all in their fight. Now, after a single match with him, he has risen the ranks again using the very attack he had used.

For the outsiders, they just saw another rising of a martial arts god. Now that the two of them were facing each other again, the spectators had increased significantly.

In the crowd watching from the sidelines, a lot of the onlookers weren't currently looking at the two that were about to have a fight, but those that had come to watch the match. The most famous among them was a rank ten.

He was quite the large male with red hair and had several scars on his body. To the audience, he was known as the Red Reaper, but in reality, on the outside world, his true name and position carried a lot more weight.

'Two fighters who don't use abilities and are in the top hundred rankings. Perhaps one of them is the Qi user that 'he' is looking for.' The man who was thinking this.. was named Chris. Although he held a rank ten position in the game, he held the number one position in the organisation known as Pure.

"I don't understand your actions?" The Martial arts god said. "You refused to fight me, and then you copied my technique like so. Even your stance right now is just a poor imitation of mine. Did you just want to get humiliated in front of all these people?"

"No," Quinn replied. "I just want to see how far I can go."

The response wasn't what the martial art's god expected. He shifted his feet and was ready.

The fight had started, but neither one of them ran towards each other. Instead, they inched closer and closer. Each of them waiting to be within range. The two of them were also of similar height and reach, so one didn't have an advantage over the other.

When they finally reached each other's range, in an instant, both of them went ahead with the same move, delivering the intense thigh kick.

'There both are just as fast as each other, and they both look just as strong.' Chris thought.

Due to them both using the same move, it meant that a certain part of their body would collide with each other, and that was their shins. Neither one of them was wearing armour, and when they both hit.

The crowd winced in pain. Hitting one's shin on something alone hurt greatly. They couldn't imagine such strong hits banging into one another. A bang was heard, and at the same time, their foot went back to the position it was in previously. Still, the second they landed on the floor, they both went at it again, throwing their legs out hitting each other's shins.

Each time their legs would hit, the crowd wanted to look away but at the same time couldn't keep their eyes off the scene in front of them. Neither person was backing down with each kick.

'What is this guy's leg made off!' Quinn thought as he continued. Even though his stamina wasn't taking a toll, he could see his game health was decreasing, and because of that, his strength was slightly suffering as well.

Knowing that he would eventually lose this battle, Quinn decided to use the flash step, to move behind.

'Even if you pivot now, you will be off-balance. With the kick, I practised thousands of times. It will reach him!' Quinn thought.

"Your kick is good. You must have practised a lot, but I have practised far more than you, and more than just one thing." The martial arts god said, moving back and causing Quinn's strike to hit nothing but the air.

Soon after, Quinn felt another kick hitting his back leg, the only thing holding up. He was off-balance, and his body had been swept off the floor, soon he saw the white ceiling.

Rolling off the floor, Quinn was ready for a close confrontation, as he knew the martial arts god was going to use this opportunity to clinch or do something else, and Quinn was right. As he got up, he could see him upon him and desperately threw out a punch, which was grabbed by the martial arts god.

Pulling Quinn towards him, he elbowed him in the face, then pulled his arm out, slamming down at the joint, popping it and breaking it. Right after a kick to the knee caused his leg to come out, and standing on top of that leg, the martial arts god lifted both of his elbows and slammed them down on top of Quinn's head.

For the second time, Quinn had lost, and the crowd cheered in response.

'That fight, although the Noob fighter isn't using any type of ability, I could be wrong, but I think the martial arts god was. He would have never won this unfair fight unless he had Qi, of course.' Chris thought, smiling to himself, wanting to seek out this Noob fighter.

After the fight, Quinn once again received an invitation from the martial arts god. This time, he was prepared for his stubbornness, and he was hoping their conversation would go the right way.

After accepting, he had been transported to the same room as Quinn.

"So, will you listen to me now?" Quinn asked.

Ignoring everything he said, he asked his own questions.

"Are you really dedicated to not using an ability?" He asked.

"For this game, yes, I want to only use my fighting techniques. I saw your skills and was hoping to learn them myself." Quinn admitted, hoping it was enough. "I hope I impressed you today with my skills." Quinn smiled.

Hearing this, The martial arts god smiled back.

"Maybe you're the one. Let's see how you will progress."

Quinn's plan had worked. Knowing his character and how he was into role-playing, Quinn just had to imagine him as some grandmaster. Even his user ID, meant that this man wanted to escape reality, so as long as Quinn did something extravagant to get his attention, he thought he would be pleased, and it managed to work out in the end.

The martial arts god explained to Quinn that his fighting style wasn't called Muay Thai like Vincent had expected but was something similar. Instead, his fighting style was something called Muay Baron. A very ancient fighting style used in war in the past.

It was a title given to those that were to protect the king, and a fighting style used to kill its opponents as quickly as possible. Later on in life, the sport was banned, so not many people chose to learn it, but the skills were continued to be passed on, and the Martial arts god believed he was the only person who still knew all the skills of Muay Baron.

The teaching process, as usual for Quinn, was something he was able to catch onto quickly. The martial arts god, didn't say much, so Quinn didn't realise how much he had progressed until he had joined the rankings once more.

He fought using the techniques he had learnt, rising up through the rankings, and people wanted to know who he was if anyone had an idea about him.

But no one knew.

The more Quinn won his matches, exclusively using the martial arts gods skills, the more the person took a liking to him and eventually, after reaching rank sixty, the inevitable had happened.

For the third time, Quinn had been matched up with the martial arts god, who had been his teacher for the last couple of days.

It was unknown to those in the game that the martial arts master had become Quinn's teacher. They just suspected that the 'Noob fighter' Was some genius who had picked up the same fighting style.

So what happened next came as a surprise to everyone

"I forfeit the match." The martial arts god said. "I know when someone has surpassed me, and I know when someone has decided to limit themselves when fighting."

Although Quinn didn't know, during the first fight, the martial arts master realised something that Quinn didn't himself. His movements were slightly awkward. It was as if he wasn't used to the speed he was fighting at.

He didn't know why, and he didn't know how, but the 'Noob fighter' Was never fighting at full strength against him. It was because of this, and after seeing him learn the thigh kick so well, he wanted to see how far this person could go, whether they could go past the wall, he had hit.

"I have taught you everything now. My wish is for you to keep going up the ranks and reach the number one spot using what I have taught you. For me, this will be the biggest achievement." The man said, and soon the whole gaming area disappeared.

Exiting out of the pod, Quinn had quite the experience over the last few days playing the game, and he had achieved his goal.

"Thank you, martial arts god. I will help you achieve your dream...one day." Quinn said. "For now, I have some students that need looking after."

Little did Quinn know, how right he was.

Chapter 989: The fear of him

Before leaving the cursed ship, Quinn did his usual, getting an update status from Sam on things that were happening with the Cursed faction. After all, he was already on the ship to talk to them in person rather than through communication devices.

It also seemed like quite a few of the core team were busy doing other things, so it was good to know how they were doing.

In the command centre, Sam was a bit distracted. He was looking at files on the holographic display but at the same time seemingly doing nothing. Even when Quinn walked in, his face would have been seen through the files since they were slightly transparent, but Sam continued to stare at the screen blankly.

"Is everything okay, Sam?" Quinn asked, approaching him slowly. There were a few times he had seen him like this, but now Quinn was starting to wonder what could've happened that made him this way.

"Oh Quinn, yeah, everything is fine...I think anyway." Sam replied, gulping as well. He was a complete nervous wreck, and he had sweat running down his face. "It's just, I think it's too hard to explain. Why don't you just go see Logan? It seems he has come back from his little trip. Just don't attack him."

Now Quinn was really intrigued because Sam was simply making no sense. With the way he was, he wouldn't have been able to get a clear answer from him anyway.

'Don't attack him. Why would I ever attack Logan?' Quinn thought, walking ahead to the research lab. When entering, he could see Logan busy working away as usual, and at the same time, he had his robotic arm covering most of his right arm, although it did seem a little bulkier than usual.

'Didn't he want to get that fixed?' Quinn thought.

The next second, Logan found himself dropping several items due to his larger clumsy right robotic arm. Before it could fall to the floor, Quinn whisked to his side and caught several small parts, placing them back on his workbench.

"It seems you keep getting faster every time I see you," Logan said. "This arm is a little difficult to control."

"About that." Said Quinn. "Why did you make a bigger arm? Weren't you going to replace it?"

A few seconds later, small little parts of steam were seen escaping from the robotic arm. It split apart in half and fell to the ground, revealing what could be seen underneath. A dark black arm with several scales all over. His fingers were larger than that of a human with fingernails that acted and looked more like dragon claws, although they seemed to have been shaven down for easier use.

"Logan, what the hell did you do! You said you had it all under control, and you would be fine. Are you now a Dalki!? Why would you do that to yourself!?" Quinn couldn't understand at all. Surely Logan would have been better with a robotic arm, and if he could recreate a Dalki arm, why couldn't he recreate a human arm.

"Quinn, I do have everything under control. I did this to myself on purpose, as to your question of why. Everyone has sacrificed so much. How many people have you turned due to them wanting power? Isn't this the same? This way, I can finally be of help. I haven't lost my ability either. They have made their sacrifice, and I have made mine."

In a way, Quinn understood what Logan felt, but he just didn't realise Logan felt this way. He never thought Logan wanted power, and he was always a big asset to the Cursed group, that he had failed to realise how much Logan felt like he wasn't a part of it.

"Besides, I am plenty human. I have put in measures that make it so the Dalki blood can't spread to my body. It also seems to be less contagious as your vampire blood, which rapidly changes one's body." Logan explained.

Looking at his arm, Quinn could see that halfway up past his elbow, there was what looked like a small little metal brace that was almost a part of Logan's arm. Below it, the arm was all Dalki, while above was the rest of Logan's body.

"I thought about it for a while, but perhaps if my parents didn't just rely on their brains all the time, they would have been alive today. I need something to at least protect myself."

Quinn couldn't argue with that. Although he wanted to protect everyone, there would definitely be times that he couldn't.

"So, how is the arm?" Quinn asked out of curiosity.

"Why, don't you see for yourself?" Logan said with a smile, and the next second, Quinn could see a fist coming towards him. His reaction was good, and he had blocked the hit holding his fist in place, but Quinn's hand was shaking from the sheer power.

'It's strong. It's been a while since I have taken a Dalki's power head on, but just how strong is the Dalki blood running through Logan, and does he still have the same effect as other Dalki?' Quinn wondered.

"I know what questions you want to ask, but I still haven't figured out everything myself yet. I need to get used to the arm first, and then I will be able to provide you with your answers."

Letting go of the punch, Quinn looked at the arm one more time.

"Your one crazy guy." Said Quinn.

"I believe that I am not as crazy as a certain vampire boy," Logan replied and got back to work.

Meanwhile, back on earth, inside the beast weapons class, Quinn's students had just entered and were a little depressed. The energy was low. Of course, they would be as their substitute teacher Aden had constantly been telling them every day how horrible they were. How they had weak abilities, and they were even useless at fighting.

Aden had his own methods, and he thought constantly telling them how bad they were would make them work harder to improve and surpass the others. Although that worked on some kids, that was slightly stronger. For most of those in the class, they were already feeling bad about themselves.

They saw the beast class as their one opportunity to still be seen as an asset to the outside world, but now they were being told they were horrible at this as well.

Aden, was in charge of two beast classes and was in charge of the Earthborn classes, so for today he decided to bring in five students from his main class.

"The reason I have brought these guys in today is to show you all just how far apart you are from them. You guys need to work harder, remember you will be fighting soon for points for your house. In return, these points will be used to upgrade your dorm facilities, and those who contribute the most points for their houses will be gifted with high-level beast crystals."

Just as he had finished his speech, it looked as if Aden had gotten a call.

"What happened!" He shouted over the receiver.

He quickly walked over to the five students that he had brought with him.

"Alright, I have to go for just a short while, but I'm going to leave you in the hands of Zhen here and the rest of them. Show them what you got." Aden said, quickly leaving the room.

The kids stayed in their positions, waiting to see what the kids upfront would do. There were three boys and two girls. Zhen looked the most confident out of all of them, he had bushy but straight eyebrows, and his hair was neat, sticking outward slightly to the side.

He had a pair of strong shoulders on him and always had his beast sword by his left side. As for the others, one of the boys who were with them was Erlen, who was no longer his former self. His eyes looked dead and didn't even look like he cared that he was there.

"Alright everyone, you heard what the teacher said, but let's be honest, what can we really teach you in such a short amount of time?" Zhen said, raising his shoulders. "Let's face it, if you choose to fight, then you will only get a beating, and the last thing we want to do is be called bullies. So I have an idea. There will be three groups, the Earthborn group, the Graylash group, and yours, at this event. So what I'm going to ask of you guys instead is to just lose convincingly to us on the day. We won't hurt you guys when there is no need to, and you can let this just be a competition between the Earthborn and the Graylash group."

"What do you say?" He asked.

When speaking, Zhen didn't say these words in an arrogant tone. Instead, he was talking as if he was genuinely concerned for the students and was doing them a favour by coming top with this deal. Because of this, a lot of the students were starting to think it was a good idea.

They didn't know the strength or skills of the other students taking the beast weapons class, but due to how much Aden complained about their skills, they thought it was a lost cause.

"Are you really that strong?" A voice from the students said. "You don't even know if we are weaker than you. You just looked at us and assumed. Besides, isn't this military training for fighting against the Dalki? Do you think we can really just say to them it's okay, we will let you win? No, we can't, we fight so we can get better." Shiro said.

The smile on Zhen's face stayed present.

"I just wanted to help you guys." He said, "You don't need to take us up on our offer. And about what you said earlier. Let's see then, why don't we have a duel if you really think we are on the same level. Maybe you are right, and I was just being too cautious."

As Zhen said these words, Erlen walked forward and grabbed Zhen by the sleeve.

"Don't do it, leave that kid alone Zhen, trust me, it's not worth it. You don't know what will happen if you mess with these kids."

Pulling his arm away and out of Erlen's grasp, he whispered in his ear.

"You've changed Erlen. I know you were some big shot in the elemental class, and I don't know why you decided to move into the beast weapon class, but me and you are not the same. I don't rely on my family's power." Zhen said, walking away and up to Shiro.

Erlen started to shake again, not because of what he thought Zhen would do, but because of what he feared Hardy might do.

"Hey, you two girls, you saw that I took no part in this right, make sure you remember this." Erlen said.

Chapter 990: Activating new power

In the beast class, Erlen and Zhen seemed to be having a disagreement about something. Shiro had confidently walked up to the walls and went ahead, grabbing a pair of dual short blades. One held in each hand and walked to the centre of the room where everyone had already spread out.

To Zhen, it was clear that he had accepted his challenge, and he too decided to ignore the warning given and walked out to the centre of the room. There was no officiator, no ref for this fight, just a match between students who were using beast weapons.

"Hey, don't you think we should try to find a teacher or something? This could go bad. There is no one here to stop the fight if anything happens?" Venus asked.

Venus was with Swin as usual, and the two of them looked around the room to see if anyone else was going to get a teacher. At the same time, they were worried if they left, that things might just get out of hand, and backup from the two of them was needed.

"If anything happens to Shiro, we have to back him up like he did for us at that time," Swin replied.

Pulling out his own sword from his sheath. Zhen held it in his hand. It was made with good quality materials. The hilt's beast parts showed that it was most likely an intermediate weapon. Compared to all the basic tier weapons that had been placed on the wall, this was quite an achievement, as it meant that this was Zhen's own proposal weapon he had brought in.

The swords were something between that of a short sword and a longsword. Not too heavy, but still carried decent range ready to be held in both hands for extra power, or a single hadn't for more options and flexibility.

Activating the beast weapon, new energy was felt moving into his body. He was now stronger than before. Activating a beast weapon to be used to its full potential and gain its stats didn't always show a sign.

However, some weapons would light up when active. They even had beast training balls that would change colour once they sensed the person had activated them already.

Seeing the weapon in Zhen's hand, Shiro's confidence swayed a little, but he gripped both of his swords tightly and knew he had to have confidence in himself.

After meeting with Quinn and Sil, Shiro's opinion did change a little. He no longer worried about which weapon would suit the ability he would get, and just tried using the best weapons or weapons he could at the time, and that's when he had found the dual swords.

Activating two of them gave a slightly better boost compared to other weapons, and although the strength given when using them wasn't much, the speed made up for it.

The fight had begun, and Zhen was seen walking up confidently to Shiro as if he didn't have to worry about a single thing.

"Let me show you the difference between our class and yours. There is a big difference between us. We know how to use the active skills in our weapons. This alone gives us a huge advantage." Zhen said, using his top speed to dash towards Shiro.

To the students watching, this was impressive, and it was the first time those from Quinn's class had seen a beast weapon fully active.

'This is how much speed one can gain from beast weapons?' A student asked but was more amazed at the same.

However, when Zhen got close and swung his sword, sharp fast and confidently, what he didn't expect was it to be blocked by one; of shirts swords, and before Zhen knew it, the other hand that was free and had a sword, was swung at his side hitting him against his armour.

Even though he was wearing armour, the strength of the strike hurt him, and Zhen couldn't help placing his hand over where he had been hit.

"You lied. You already know how to activate your best weapon." Zhen complained, still holding onto his side.

"I never said that we didn't know how to activate the power of the beast weapon."

Hearing Shiro's reply, they had an idea of what had happened. Although Zhen had activated his, and he should have had more power and strength, so did Shiro, allowing him to block the attack and hold it.

"You," Zhen said, placing his other hand free forward. "Do you know why I only hold my weapon in one hand? It's so I can still use my ability."

Before Shiro could move, he felt something wrapping around his arms and legs. Soon he couldn't move at all. The vines wrapped around his arms tightened until he eventually dropped both swords, no longer being able to use them.

"I'm really going to enjoy this," Zhen said, with the same smile he always had. Throwing out his fist, he had the sword guard covering his knuckles and hit Shiro right in the face giving him a bloody nose.

Then, he continued to punch Shiro on his sides and went back to the head again, as if he was a boxing bag.

"Hey, stop, what are you doing!" Venus ran out, and so did Swin straight behind him.

He ignored their words and didn't even care if they were about to interrupt. Shiro looked almost unresponsive, but when Zhen threw another fist until it was eventually stopped by Erlen himself. Holding onto his arm, it started to freeze quite quickly.

"You need to stop!" Erlen said.

"What the hell are you doing?" Zhen asked.

"I'm protecting you. I'm protecting all of us. Please just stop hitting these students." Erlen pleaded.

Zhen looked into his eyes for a few seconds, and he could see worry. This person who is this strong was worried about something, but what were they worried about? He thought.

Because of this, Zhen decided to stop, letting his ability go and dropping Shiro to the floor.

"I guess there is no need for us to show you anything," Zhen said, walking back to the others. "You already have someone that knows how to activate beast weapons, so why don't you ask him?"

Soon, all five of them had left the room, and Shiro was left there on the floor. A busted lip, probably a broken nose and a few ribs, with only Venus and Swin by his side.

The students didn't really know what to do or what to say to Shiro, but they actually thought for a brief second when Shiro had gotten the first strike in, they had a chance, but it all quickly vanished.

"Come on, we have to take him to the medical room," Venus said, lifting him up on his back.

"Let's go," Swin replied.

Just as the two of them, along with Shiro on their backs, were about to exit the room, the door had opened, and the first teacher to walk in was teacher Aden, but the one that followed him was general Hardy.

"Hardy, your back!" Venus said with a smile.

For Quinn, he couldn't; keep his eyes off the injured person who was on Venus's back. The main thing was the smell that was coming off his body. Even a single drop, he knew the student was bleeding.

What shocked him was seeing that it was Shiro who had been beaten once again, but he was in a worse condition than before.

"Venus, take him to the doctor's office and have Hayley heal his wounds," Quinn ordered. "As for the rest of you, I want you to tell me what happened now."

Hearing everything, Quinn wasn't angry. He was more upset with himself due to allowing things to happen while he was away. He wondered what to do. There was a big event coming up, and his class was at the bottom of the barrel.

However, what he was most concerned about, was that Shiro had been beaten up a second time.

'Didn't everything end with that last event? I guess there is more than one rotten apple.'

'I can't do what I did last time and get too involved like that. Clearly, it hasn't helped Shiro as he is still being bullied. I need to come up with something, so none of those in my class gets hurt.' Quinn thought.

Chapter 991: Best in the world

Not too long ago, Aden had gone running out of the classroom and had left Quinn's beast class in control of the other students. His reasoning for doing this was because of the call he had received, informing him that the teacher 'Hardy' Had finally returned and would be taking over the beast class lessons again.

Thinking that his days of teaching the class were over, he rushed out personally to find Hardy. That's when Quinn had finally returned to see his students in their current state.

Venus had done as asked and went ahead to take Shiro to the doctor. However, there was still half of the lesson left. Quinn knew that the incidents wouldn't stop, and dealing with one problematic student wouldn't stop what went on between students.

'So they decided that all these kids will be fighting against the other beast classes. I wonder how much they have progressed?' Quinn thought.

"I'm sorry I have been away for a while. I had some important matters to attend to." Said Quinn. "I have heard about the upcoming beast class event. If you guys can, feel free and show me what you have learnt over these past few days."

The idea was to get the students to try to forget about what happened, call them down, and see where they were currently. The atmosphere in the room was heavy, and one of Quinn's speeches wasn't going to fix that.

Eventually, the students grabbed their weapons and attempted to activate them, while others seemingly had given up and just practised improving the skills with the weapons.

Walking around, Quinn went to those that seemed to have a hang of activating the beast weapon and decided to give them a few more tips. In the past, when Quinn had first touched a beast weapon, his system had activated it all for him, but learning Qi helped him understand the process more.

With the second stage of Qi, Quinn could feel those who were able to summon the energy to use beast weapons, but something wasn't quite there.

He knew of a way to help them but was careful. What Quinn was careful of, was touching the students in case he turned them accidentally.

'Maybe, it won't be a problem anymore. I can not only control the Qi energy but my red aura as well, perhaps..' Quinn thought, as he walked up to a student who was close to activating his weapon and had their eyes closed.

Quinn placed a single finger on the back of his shoulder, closed his eyes and could feel his energy. Immediately it looked like the red energy was attempting to do what it did best, entering the human's energy and taking it over, but Quinn had practised controlling it, and with his new Blood control stats. He was able to move it away, eventually switching it out, and placed a small bit of his regular Qi into a student.

With that small bit of energy, Quinn then started to help the students.

"Can you feel the warm bit of energy that has entered your body? That energy is mine. I can tell you have a sense of feeling for yourself already. You need to follow that energy, and you will be able to activate the weapon." Quinn explained.

A few seconds later, the students had activated the beast weapon and felt the power energising his body. Not wanting to touch the student for longer, he let go of him, just in case something went wrong.

"I did it!" The student yelled. "I finally activated the beast weapon."

Everyone could see the student shouting with joy and the teacher Hardy behind him. So many of them had struggled for so long, and after one lesson of Hardy returning, a student was successful in activating their beast weapon.

"Is he a miracle worker? Maybe he can help me as well?"

"Ah man, I liked Aden at first, but he turned out to be an arse." Another student commented.

Soon, all the students were calling Quinn, asking him to help them out next, but there were over a hundred students, and some of them weren't quite at the stage this student was.

'Even if they all learn to activate their soul weapons, they won't be ready for the fight in time. I need to do something else.' Quinn started to think.

'Don't you think what you had done was a little dangerous?' Vincent asked.
'Touching that boy, you could have turned him here in front of everyone.'

'I know, which is why I only helped him activate the weapon and not anything else. Perhaps if I was to move the boy's Qi, the red aura would try to act more widely, but I have been practising my control of the blood and Qi energy every day. It seems after the blood control stats improved, I can control it pretty well now.'
Quinn replied.

Going around, Quinn helped more students that were already close to activating their weapon, but after just a couple more, the class was over, and they only had a total of three days until the event was to start.

Sitting in his homeroom class, Quinn started to think about what would be the best thing to do. While doing so, he had a visit from one of his students.

"I brought him here because I thought you should know he is all healed up," Hayley said, as she pushed Shiro forward. She looked at Hardy for a few seconds and wondered if she should warn him about how the other teachers were planning something.

'No, it's not my place to get involved. Those generals aren't idiots. They wouldn't do something that would hurt the students.' Hayley thought and was off.

"Shiro, you are free to go as well you know? You don't have to give me a report. Swin and Venus already explained what happened." Quinn said.

However, Shiro stood there by the door, not moving forward. Although Shiro and Quinn were similar in many ways, Shiro lacked the confidence that Quinn had. Maybe Quinn would have been the same if he had never gotten the system, just getting frustrated more and more as he felt helpless each time he was beaten.

Standing up out of his seat, he started to walk over to Shiro.

"You know, when I went to military school, I also joined the beast class, and although you were in a bad state, I believe I was in an even worse state than you. I had been stabbed right through my stomach. The other students had staged it to look like an accident, but luckily the teacher I had at the time knew otherwise."

"Stabbed, really?" Shiro thought, imagining the pain. "How did you survive that?"

Quinn gave a nervous laugh.

"You know who I am now, so you should also know that I'm not that much older than yourself. I just look kind of old. The doctor I had when I attended school is the same one that you have now."

The more Shiro learned about Quinn, the more he couldn't believe it. Of course, after he had found out that Hardy was actually the leader of the Cursed faction, Shiro went to do his research. A student who had no ability rose to the top in such a short amount of time.

It was a tale one would only read in fairy tales. It just seemed impossible.

"Teacher...please can you teach me the shadow. I promise I will be in your debt and will join the Cursed faction. I just...want to have a better life than I have now. Where I don't have to worry about someone else attacking me."

Quinn could understand the frustration, but teaching Shiro, a student the shadow now, would bring him more trouble. Maybe he could teach it to him when he actually did join the Cursed faction and was onboard the Cursed ship.

For Quinn knew there were hungry people out there who wanted to get this power for themselves.

"I can't teach you the shadow," Quinn said. "But maybe I can teach you something else."

The next day, early morning during Quinn's break periods, he figured out a way to help all of the students. Not just learn about activating the best weapon but also how to get better at fighting with the weapon they were using.

The only thing was, he had to ask Oscar if he could get permission to do such a thing.

"Of course you can," Oscar said. "You should never be shy about this sort of thing. If you can do anything to make these students stronger and their lives better, then go ahead."

With the request made, it was now time for the beast class to start again. The students heading towards the class were more excited than usual, having their teacher back, and some of them thought that Hardy could help teach all of them how to activate their weapons.

However, there were digital posters and splattered throughout about the big event of the beast classes in the hallways. They were inviting anyone to watch. It reminded them that even if they did learn how to activate their weapons, it wouldn't be enough for them to win.

"Hey, do you think Hardy will teach us first if we ask him nicely?" Swin asked.

"There are too many students, though. He only got through a few yesterday. Even if we have the whole lesson time today, I just don't think he will be able to see everyone." Venus replied.

When the two of them walked forward, the door slid open. All of the students were stunned at what they were looking at. They were still standing outside and hadn't gone in because they were unsure about what was happening.

"Don't be shy, come on in, we don't have time to waste. For the next couple of days. Everyone here will be your teacher and will teach you to use your weapons." Quinn explained while standing in front of those in the Cursed faction.

Quinn had decided to invite those in the Cursed faction that were excellent at using beast weapons, and they would teach the student one on one, the best way to use them.

"Each one of these are high ranking faction members from all over, from Daisy, the Black rings, and even those personally under the Cursed faction." Quinn said, pointing at Wevil, who was holding two daggers. "Now, let's get on with it, shall we."

Both Venus and Swim looked at each other.

"I think we might have the best teacher in the world," Venus said.

Chapter 992: A touching leader

The class was busier than ever today. It was no surprise as there was double the number of people present in today's lesson. Trying to rack his head for helping his students, Quinn had come up with a solution. It was impossible for him to teach them all personally one by one in such a short amount of time.

This was often a problem when teaching a large group. Different people learnt in different ways and at different speeds. He would need to decide whether to just move on and forget about those that didn't understand or focus on the talented students.

If he did that, it would just be him going against everything he was working so hard for. Instead, Quinn asked Sam for a favour this time, to send over the best beast weapon users that the Cursed faction had.

Surprisingly, or rather unsurprisingly at this point, Sam had gone beyond what Quinn had expected him to do. There were more than just those on the Cursed ship that was part of the Cursed faction. A message was sent out that their leader was asking for the best of the best beast weapon users across all of the factions that were under the Cursed group.

This was their answer, and there were more than enough teachers for every student. They were versatile when it came to teaching. More importantly, they could teach students about their weapons that Quinn had no idea about.

'Things are going well. Some of them are even better at explaining how to activate the beast weapons than I am.' Quinn thought.

'That is a given. What works for one person may not work for another. With the number of people you have brought, every experienced person is able to share their knowledge. I am quite surprised that you came up with this plan yourself.' Vincent replied.

Quinn was quite pleased, he wasn't sure this was enough, but at least the students seemed to be having a good time.

In the corner of the room, Quinn walked up to Shiro, who was there waiting with his duel blades in his hands.

"Alright, should we continue with what I was teaching you before then?" Said Quinn.

The day had ended, and there were still two more days until the beast weapons class event would start. There had already been a few events that others could watch, and points to the houses had been applied.

The students now had a general idea of how events would work and play out.

However, it was almost impossible to hide a hundred and fifty people that had come over to help out the Cursed faction. Complaints had started, with one of them being Aden. He had kept an eye on the class and had heard what general Hardy had done.

In the end, he decided to make an official complaint to his head general of the Earthborn group, Head general Sach.

"This is unfair!" Aden complained. "My students haven't had professional help and personal tutoring from others. It's clear that General Hardy is just doing this before the competition to give his students an unfair advantage. You have to speak to the supreme commander about this."

General Sach, was relaxing in his own office. He was twiddling with a toothpick in his mouth, trying to control the split part of his tongue, and soon broke the toothpick in half.

"Oscar won't do anything. It seems he already received permission beforehand. Oscar claimed that it was something that we could have done to help our students at any time as well and thought it was actually a good idea. Remember, we are not attempting to fight against each other. This event is just in good spirits for the students.

"Are you really that worried that your students will lose?" Sach asked. "Skills take years to learn. There won't be much that they can learn in just a couple of days. I would know better than most."

They weren't the only people displeased with what was happening either, as the students from the other classes felt it was unfair. All of their complaints had fallen upon Aden's ears.

"Teacher, can't you do something like that for us, invite some of the strong ones from the military?"

"Yeah, aren't you some respected sergeant like you keep telling us? You should know some people, right?"

However, it was harder than one thought to just invite people. Even people in factions, those in the military, they all had important jobs to do. The only thing Aden could think of was to try and hire some people from a faction linked to the Earthborn group.

However, to hire a personal tutor for each student would cost a fortune and would just be a waste. He couldn't even imagine how much Head general Hardy was paying those people who missed out on two days hunting.

'There are probably just some F and D rank Travelers from the factions.' He thought.

"Don't worry about anything," Aden said. "The reason why they need to do this in the first place is because of how bad they are. You guys will win this with ease. You can even ask Zhen and the others. they saw what they were like."

Zhen nodded confidently. Teacher Aden never heard about what he had done. Quinn didn't bother to report it, for he and Shiro were planning their own personal revenge.

It was the last day before the event, and Quinn could see that everyone had improved by leaps and bounds. Having a personal tutor was like a shortcut. Making sure the students didn't make the same mistakes they did when they were younger.

The most important thing was that they were all experienced fighters teaching them fundamental ways of fighting.

"Are you sure what you've taught me is enough for me to beat an ability user and one for the top ones as well?" Shiro asked, losing a bit of self-confidence as the days leading up to the event were upon them.

"Of course, I can't guarantee you will win," Quinn replied. "But that is the same if you had any other ability. Just because you have a strong ability doesn't guarantee one to be better than others, but what I have taught you is something that can match against any top ability users. You want to make an impression and prove everyone wrong, right? Then what better way than to beat one of those high ranking ability users without an ability at all."

"Let's show the whole school that they are wrong to look down on those with no ability," Quinn said with a smile.

With the final day of training done, Quinn had all the students thank everyone for their hard work. After all, they couldn't stay teaching the students forever, but it was a great start. The tips they learnt today would help them grow in the future, and now not a single student didn't know how to activate a beast weapon.

Once all the student's left, Quinn also didn't forget to thank everyone in his faction as well.

"All of you have helped me when asked, and I don't want you guys to think that I have done this without paying any of you a favour back," Quinn said. "If any of you ever need help in the future, please don't be shy to ask. I can't help if I don't know what the problem is."

Those who didn't know Quinn that well and were from the other factions were starting to respect him more, not just because of what he had just said but because of the actions he had taken. Some of them thought they were being tasked with taking on a strong demon tier beast. Sam had even agreed to compensate them as if they were doing so with credits and beast crystals.

When they learnt what they were actually doing, they wondered what leader or person would take their time to personally do such a thing. Quinn was on top of the world, and he was here teaching students personally. Something about that touched them more than the leaders who just ordered others to do their bidding.

When returning, Quinn had received a request and learnt of a few details about tomorrow's event. He was to select five of his top students and then one at a time, they would battle it out in a three-way duel. Fighting against the beast class from the Graylash family, and from the Earthborn group.

There would be refs on the side, wearing top beast gear and with the speed ability. They were to stop any serious injuries that were to happen to the students. If a ref was to stop the match, they would then declare the winner and why the match had been stopped. Strikes to the heads were not allowed.

'Five people, it reminds me of the duels we had when I got my seat of power. Tomorrow is going to be an exciting day.' Quinn thought.

Finally, the day was upon them, the beast weapons class event would be starting.

Chapter 993: Three classes

All of the school buildings surrounded the large green field that was placed in the centre. It was where the students had their opening ceremony and also where they had met their head generals for the first time.

Last time, a makeshift stage was built. Even in the past things like this were constructed quickly but with ability users even more so. Today when the students woke up, and looked out of their window, they could see a large almost coliseum looking stadium.

It certainly wasn't there just the day before, but the students knew why it was there today. Because the beast weapons class, would be having an event to display to all the others. All students were told to attend, it was compulsory even though there were some that weren't particularly interested in the event.

Such as those in the elemental class who rarely used beast weapons, still it would be quite the spectacle to watch, and events were always entertaining.

Early morning and the seats in the stadium were starting to be quickly filled. Each section was filled with certain classes and their homeroom teachers would be there to lead them. Not everyone who was in Hardy's homeroom class was part of the beast weapons class and they were being led by Hayley today instead.

As for the teachers who didn't have a homeroom class or were in a higher position, they were told to enter at a later time, and wouldn't be sitting in the stadium seats, but instead would be in a special area right on the ground floor of the arena.

Here, they could see all the battles up close and personal, behind strong reinforced glass. This glass screen and area went around the entire stadium letting one view from any angle they wished.

"Hey, there are a lot of people here today. I kept my eye on some of the teachers that work at this school but some of them I've never seen before." Fex said, who was currently in the special glass area hoping to mingle with others, but he ended up walking with Peter and Helen as usual.

"That's because not all teachers are there. They have invited some of the higher military personnel that aren't part of the school, and it looks like some small faction leaders as well." Helen explained.

"Who cares about them? We are just here to watch Quinn's class perform." Peter said.

"Hey, aren't you meant to be in the stadium with your homeroom class, since you're a teacher's assistant?" Fex asked.

Peter shrugged his shoulders.

"The teacher never asked for my help, so I guess I'm not needed."

For a brief moment, Fex felt sorry for Peter's students.

Not too far from where they were, there were also the head generals of the Earthborn group, Samantha, Innu and Sach.

"Any ideas as to when you plan to do something to that General Hardy?" Innu asked, still feeling anger in his body every time he was reminded of the humiliation he had received in front of all the others.

"Patience." Sach said. "We can't just go after him, remember all of us are meant to be working together and that wouldn't exactly promote unity. If I see the opportunity I will make sure to take it."

Hearing all of this, Samantha wasn't exactly pleased that the other two were still planning something. Of course, what happened to them was humiliating and embarrassing. Maybe she was only okay with Hardy because she hadn't been humiliated.

She understood that, if a single head general as well as a nobody from the Cursed faction was able to do that to the head generals of the new Earthborn group, it would cause a power shift. However, maybe that was just how it was meant to be... After all, the strong ruled over the weak in this world, right?

And she was starting to think with everything Hardy had been able to do so far, she was afraid he would be strong as well.

Currently, inside the arena, now that all the students and guests had arrived, Oscar was giving a speech about what would be happening today. While also generally surveying his audience, to see how the students were doing.

"Some of you may not realise the importance of beast weapons, but today I hope this will change your mind. After all, remember," Oscar said as he pulled out the Demon tier ice sword from his back. "It was because of these beast weapons we are able to match the Dalki in strength."

The students were amazed as they saw Oscar bring out his Demon tier weapon. It was as if they were looking at a grand treasure. Although some students didn't care much for beast weapons, a Demon tier beast weapon was something that everyone could respect, because it even increased Oscar's strength greatly even though he was an elemental user.

"Now, let me introduce you to the three teachers of the beast weapons classes!" Oscar shouted.

The first one to walk out onto the arena floor was Aden and behind him was his class of beast weapon users. They had literally come out from the arena floor, as a hole in the ground was seen, and slowly rising to the top was him and his students.

When they arrived, they decided to put on a little show. With several sword users, spinning their bodies in synchronization. Ability users casting their powers above displaying a vast amount of different colours, and even more with students using their weapons together.

It was quite the show and when they were done, the students watching all clapped in appreciation of the display.

"Next, we have the teacher of the Graylash house, Aysel!" Oscar announced, and through the floor once more a female teacher who wore fishnet stockings and had her hair cut short, came up on the stage with her students.

"How come the Graylash family are even teaching beast class lessons?" Fex questioned.

"Remember, these are just houses so it's not like all the students in the Graylash house are a part of the Graylash family." Helen explained. "Also the Graylash family is large, just like the Cursed faction. Over time they had absorbed strong factions to work under them, just like the Cursed have the Daisy faction."

"So, of course, they would have weapon users under them."

The Graylash house didn't put on a show like the others, but instead they were all lined up perfectly, not moving out of position. Although the students practiced this as part of the military from time to time, the others could tell something was up.

It was almost as if the students were afraid to act, thinking something might happen to them.

"Lastly, coming onto the stage, is the class led by the head general of the Cursed house. Hardy!"

Lasty, Quinn and his student were raised up, but unlike the other two houses, his students seemed more normal. They didn't have a fancy show, and just were nervous looking at everyone watching them from the stage.

The three refs from each house walked forward. On Quinn's side there was Sergeant Fay, who had the speed ability, and two others from the houses Quinn had never seen before.

Soon after, Quinn was to leave the area, and he would take all the other students to the class viewing area with the other teachers, while those that were participating were to remain on stage.

"Good luck guys, remember everything everyone taught you, they will be watching." Quinn said walking away.

What he said was true as well, the event was being broadcasted to others outside of the school, to other factions and on the Cursed ship. Those that had spent time teaching the students were currently watching the event live.

Out of the five students Quinn had picked, they consisted of Venus, Swin, Kim, and the student who he had first taught how to activate his beast weapon named Ru. The last person who had also been selected was Shiro.

The five students walked towards the centre and all fifteen students could now see each other eye to eye.

"Now, each of you will have a number displayed on your watch." Oscar explained, Shiro looked at it for a second and could see the number five.

"When you are not fighting, you are to wait with your teacher in the viewing area. When your number is called, a countdown will begin. All those students with the same number will enter the arena, and the duel will begin immediately. So remember your number well." Oscar said.

As Shiro was about to walk away, he could see Zhen, showing his watch across to him proudly, displaying the number five.

'It looked like fate wanted the two of us to fight again.' Shiro thought. 'This time, I won't lose.'

Chapter 994: Thumbs up

The students who weren't participating in the fight went back to their teacher, watching the match behind the glass screen. Quinn would have been with the others, but he had an obligation to look after the students and watch it with them.

Still, it didn't stop Fex from breaking away from Helen and Peter, who were a bore in his eyes and coming over to where Quinn was.

"Hey, Qu- I mean Hardy, I guess you must be a little nervous, seeing your little runts out there fighting," Fex said.

The students around could hear every word Fex said and looked up at the loud teacher.

"Who's that? Is he someone important?"

"Not really. I think he just teaches that sewing class or something."

"We can ignore him then. Well, I'm just glad I'm not a teacher like him." The students spoke, not caring if Fex heard them or not.

"Hey, hey, my sewing class is great!" Fex said, but seeing all the students looking through the glass screen ignoring him, he knew it was pointless to say anymore.

"I'm nervous, but not for me, for them." Quinn said. "I can imagine for them they think that this moment means everything for their future lives, but honestly it doesn't. I want them to just have fun if possible."

The first number was called out, number one. All students with number one would soon be entering the fighting field. Looking at his wristwatch, Venus noticed that he would be the one going first.

A countdown timer counted down from twenty seconds in the glass room, which just made the pressure even worse. Now he had to watch the count down before the glass door would open and the fight would begin.

"I think you almost forgot this," Quinn said, handing over a grey spear with a sharp blue tip at the end. It was Venus's beast weapon, which was an interesting choice considering his ability. He was so nervous that he had almost forgotten his weapon.

Finally, the number had reached zero, and the doors opened. Venus immediately started to rush out into the open, and the two from the other areas, who were marked number one, had also entered the arena.

"Stay calm!" Quinn shouted, but he was afraid that even if Venus could hear him, he had already blocked out everything and was focused on the fight.

Venus was just imitating what the other students were doing. He saw the two of them rush forward, and so did he. The audience's cheers were carrying the students to do crazy things and not act straight. It wasn't until he reached the centre that he realised who exactly was going up against.

Although he didn't recognise the male student from the Graylash house who wielded a spear as well, Venus did know the student from the Earthborn house. For the two of them used to go to the same school as each other.

It was Erlen, when Venus looked him in the eye and could see the sword being held in his hands, his body started to shake. The three of them were running towards the centre at this point, but suddenly. Erlen took a turn and went towards the student in the Graylash house instead.

'Why is he going for me? Shouldn't we take out the weak one first so the two of us can have a proper match? Isn't that what Zhen told us?' The Graylash member thought.

Taken by surprise, he thrust his spear half-heartedly, and the attack was parried by Erlen's sword. With his other hand free, he grabbed onto the spear, and it started to freeze in place, making it heavier. Charging in more, Erlen started to hit the student with full force using the side of his sword. It had hit his ribs. Then when he was up close, a punch to the cut.

Before he could recover, Erlen had grabbed the student and started to freeze his body all over, attaching him to the ground. While the Graylash students body was frozen, Erlen went to hit the large block of ice with his sword again, but before he could, the ref on standby for the Graylash family stopped Erlen by the arm.

"The Graylash student has lost this match." The ref said. They broke the ice safely and brought the student back to where they were.

It was a completely one sided fight that was over in just a few seconds. People knew Erlen was strong with his ability, but it seemed like he wasn't too bad with the sword either. It was no wonder they had decided to use him for the event.

'Crap! Is he going to try to pay me back in this arena for what happened to his family, but the ref will stop the fight if that happens, right? They'll stop it before I get seriously hurt, just like what happened now.' Venus thought.

However, the question in his head was: What if they didn't stop the fight in time?

"This is bad!" Swin said, being concerned for his friend. "Venus's ability is water, while Erlen's is ice. It's going to be a hard battle for him to win unless he uses his weapon."

The others hearing this agreed with Swin as well, and from the look of it, Venus was still suffering from past trauma dealt by Erlen.

However, his next move surprised everyone as he placed the sword away.

"I beat the Graylash family member for you, I hope this is enough for you to forgive me, and I will forfeit from this match," Erlen said, raising his hand. "In return, all I ask for you is that you at least let my parents work at the company again."

Erlen was bowing down to Venus, something never seen before, and the students watching in the seats had no clue what was going on. Still, Quinn could hear everything, even through the glass with his super hearing.

"They don't have to be in the same position they were in before. It's just they built that company up from scratch, and I can see it's killing them every day to not be a part of it, and it was all my fault. Please, I'm sorry! I don't know why General Hardy looked out for you or what your relationship is with him, but please ask him this favour!" Erlen went on his knees, and he placed his head on the floor, begging him.

Honestly, Venus didn't know what to do. He wasn't practically close with teacher Hardy and didn't have a clue why he had gone so far for them. If Venus wanted to, he couldn't really do anything, and he didn't want to agree and then not follow through with his request.

Hearing everything, Quinn thought about it. Erlen clearly was affected by his ways, and he wasn't like some who could never admit their wrong doings. People could change, and in this instance, what Quinn was most impressed by, was the fact that Erlen didn't seem to be doing this for his own benefit, he could tell.

Erlen was asking for his parents more than anything.

Lifting his head off the floor, Erlen knew that maybe Venus couldn't do anything, but he couldn't ask Hardy. Sometimes asking those you did wrong or the cause of this would make it worse.

Just as he was about to walk away back to his group, he could see a thumbs up from Hardy himself in the distance through the window.

'Wait, is that thumbs up for me?' Erlen thought. Venus was still looking away from him, so it couldn't be towards Erlen. He then pointed at himself to make sure, and he could see teacher Hardy giving him a nod.

'How...how could he hear me through the glass and from so far away!' He thought, but it didn't matter. The emotions started to build up in Erlen, about how stupid he had been. In his whole life, he had gotten away with everything he had done. He had never suffered from the consequences until that day he had learnt a lot.

"Thank you!" Erlen shouted, bowing down and heading back to his classmates.

"Ladies and gentlemen, it looks like we have a winner!" Oscar announced to everyone's surprise. The boy who looked nervous and did nothing had won, giving the first win to the Cursed house.

'I don't know who you are, Hardy, but thank you.' Erlen thought.

Chapter 995: The Turnaround

When Erlen returned to his classmates, it was safe to say that he wasn't exactly welcomed with open arms. They couldn't hear what he had said, and we're all confused why he had quit the match.

When Erlen went through the glass door, he had returned to the others, and everyone was staring at him.

"Tell me now Erlen!" Aden shouted. "Why didn't you attack the student from the Cursed house and just forfeit the match like that. Did Hardy pay you off!?"

With everything going on and what he had seen and learnt of Hardy so far, Aden was starting to think he was just some person who had money. One who had reached such a position in the faction due to connections or something else, and now he was suspecting that Erlen had been paid off as well.

"I just thought I was going to lose a lot more if I attacked him," Erlen said, walking past Zhen, who glanced at him from the corner of his eye. Erlen had wholly ignored him going forward.

This just rubbed something inside Zhen, and soon he turned and grabbed Erlen by his collar, lifting him in the air. Zhen was quite a tall student and had a macular frame. Picking up Erlen wasn't hard, and Erlen's feet were just tip toeing off the ground.

"Zhen, clam down, we aren't the only ones here!" Aden said as he started to panic and looked at everyone looking around them. Technically the glass tube was connected all the way around the arena. Although all three houses were placed in separate parts, one could walk through the whole glass area and see all the other teams.

This meant there were plenty of people walking around at this moment that weren't students or teachers.

Seeing the teacher panic like so, Zhen let go of Erlen's collar.

"Just remember that we are all part of the same house. Your actions affect the whole team. No one will want someone like you to join if you're not a team player. You're selfish." Zhen said, looking away.

"I know I am, which is what I'm trying to fix, and my family is more important than a bunch of fake friends at school," Erlen mumbled, but no one had heard him.

The next fight had progressed, and the student known as Ru from the Cursed house was called and the other number twos. The fight was underway, and something strange seemed to be happening. Those in the Graylash house as well as the Earthborn appeared to be ignoring each other and focused entirely on Ru.

It was as if there was a pact made between them before the match. What managed to take them by surprise was how much more skilful Ru was than they thought. He was being overwhelmed by two sets of attacks but had held his ground for a while until eventually, Fay intervened and declared it a loss for the Cursed house.

"That's not fair!" Venus shouted. "If they hadn't tagged teamed Ru like that, then he would have had a chance at winning."

That's what many people thought as well. Upon his return, Quinn would make sure to give him the praise he deserved for doing well. With Ru out of the picture, the other two fought, and it was a slim win, but the Earthborn student managed to claim victory.

The results were one win to the Cursed house and one win to Earthborn. With three matches remaining. Even if there was a clear winner, all matches would progress for experience and the event, so Shiro knew he had to fight either way.

He just was hoping that his team would win before then, so the added pressure wouldn't be on his shoulders.

Despite having lost twice in a row, the teacher for the Graylash house looked unfazed, and when number three was announced, a smile appeared on her face, as a female student had entered the stage.

'The first match the Cursed were only able to win due to us forfeiting, and the Graylash have some skilled people but not enough to pull this win. We have this in the bag.' Aden thought.

However, when the match started, the female student from the Graylash family threw her sword in the ground and opened up both of her palms. She fired a lightning bolt hitting the students from both families. Then picking up the sword, she ran forward, placing it against the student's neck, causing him to forefeet and did the same with the other.

"Should that even be allowed?" Fex wondered. "I mean, she didn't really win using her beast weapon skills. She just used her strong ability."

It was true, but using an ability wasn't against the rules. Since they were hoping to promote some use of weapons along with an ability. In the end, the win was awarded to the Graylash family, making each team even with one point each.

Finally, the number four was called out, and for this one, on the Cursed house team, Swin had two daggers held in his hand. He didn't say much as he was waiting for the door to open. Everyone cheered him on, and unlike Venus, who was nervous, Swin seemed more steady and ready.

"That's the person I taught. So he's definitely going to win this!" Wevil said, watching from the large screen with hundreds of people from the Cursed faction who had gathered in one of the rooms to watch the event.

The main thing that Wevil had taught Swin, was his state of mind while fighting.

Just like last time, the student from the Graylash family and that from the Earthborn family had gone after the Cursed house. It was obvious what was happening at this point, to where the others were starting to discuss if something was up.

The stadium started to boo. After all, a lot of the students were part of the Cursed house and wanted them to win points for their team.

One of the fighters from the Graylash family was using a staff that they were able to extend and shorten at will. It was a weapon that worked well with the person's ability. This person extended it hoping to hit Swin in the stomach, and at the same time, the student from the Earthborn group leapt up in the air.

"The two of you may be working together, but you don't know how to work together!" Swim said, throwing a dagger off to the side, completely missing the Graylash student. Then with his other dagger, Swin had hit the staff slightly upward so he could protect himself from the large axe the other student was using.

The axe fell down, hitting the pole. The other student was getting ready to retract the pole when he felt a tap on his shoulder.

"You have been eliminated. Stop fighting at once."

The student turned around, confused, only to see that the referee had a dagger held in their hand. Swin didn't miss, but using his telekinesis, he was able to control the dagger and aim towards the student's back, attempting to pierce the heart.

Swin being confident that he would have the Graylash student eliminated from the match, straight away went forward to the Earthborn student. Rolling on the ground, going past the student's legs slicing him on his way.

He quickly stood up and stabbed him in-between his shoulder guards again. There was a wild swing of the axe, but leaving the dagger stuck in the student's shoulder, Swin let go and duck down.

During the fight, Swin had retrieved the other dagger using his ability back from the referee and charged in straight away again.

"Idiot, running straight at me!" The Earthborn student shouted, swinging his axe down, but while it was mid-air, with his hand held out, Swin started to use his ability to dig the dagger deeper into the student's shoulder. It caused immense pain, and for them to stumble missing with the axe swing. At that point, Fay held Swin's hand in the air so the last dagger wouldn't hit, intervening with the fight again.

"I think it's safe to say that the student from the Cursed house is the winner," Fay said in quite an angry tone, wondering why the referee from the Earthborn house didn't intervene.

Oscar agreed with the decision, and in the end, the Cursed faction had been awarded their second win.

"The Cursed house are the winners!" Oscar shouted.

Cheers from the crowd and those watching in the glass room were going crazy. It was the same on the Cursed ship as well. Swin had done far more than anyone had expected. He was just like Ventus, a nobody with a weak ability, but he had defied the odds by defeating two students at once.

"I guess you're a good teacher after all," Linda said, hitting Wevil on the shoulder.

Linda still couldn't control her strength well, so Wevil was rubbing his arm from the pain, but he didn't care much. For he had this overwhelming feeling seeing a student of his win. It was a warm and fuzzy feeling he had never felt before.

With the Cursed faction now having two points, they were the only possible winners of this event, or a sudden draw. It had been a complete turnaround and was unexpected by most. Still, the event would continue on with the final number being called, Number five, which meant Shiro and Zhen would finally be meeting.

'Are you sure he will be okay?' Vincent asked. 'You didn't really teach him much from what I saw, at least not enough to beat a strong ability user.'

'Oh really, is that what you think?' Quinn replied. 'I guess I really didn't teach him much, but that's because of him, not me. Go surprise everyone, Shiro.'

Chapter 996: Own Talent

In his hand, Shiro was holding onto both of the duel blades tightly. His hands were slightly shaking, showing his nerves. He would have still been nervous if he was just to fight against Zhen again, but there was the one from the Graylash family as well, and everyone was watching him and counting on him to win.

'If what I think is happening, is happening, Then as soon as this door opens, both of them will come charging in at me.' Shiro thought. 'Can I do it?'

"You are stronger than you think," Quinn said. His final words as the countdown had ended and the glass door opened.

Rather than rushing in, Shiro decided he would observe the situation from outside. As he decided what to do, it would be his thinking time, but then what he saw next came as a complete surprise.

At first, the student from the Graylash group came running forward, and Zhen too seemed to be walking, trailing behind. There was a concerned look on the Grayish student's face as he noticed Zhen not doing anything. Still, as they continued to run forward, they were suddenly stopped in place, feeling something tug against their leg. Looking down, they could see a root had wrapped around their ankle, making it hard for them to move, and when they lifted their head, a blade was already pointed at their throat.

"Forfeit this match, now," Zhen said.

Gulping, the student did as asked and gave up. It was a victory that was even quicker than Erlen's.

"You didn't think I would let anything ruin our little reunion, did you?" Zhen asked. "You must have known that this would happen if you decided to participate again. I wonder what your teacher was thinking, sending in someone like you. Maybe he has a screw loose in his head as well." Zhen continued to taunt.

Shiro didn't let it get to him. Maybe in the past, it would have, but he was too focused on his breathing right now. Taking in a deep breath at the right time, he charged forward, cutting the distance between the two of them far quicker than Zhen had expected.

He quickly got in a stance seeing this and soon was parrying the attacks from Shiro away. He hit them one by one, not having time to recover or get a solid footing to strike back.

'What's going on? His attacks weren't this strong before? And he wasn't this fast. Is he wearing beast armour, or is it something else?' Zhen thought.

Eventually, Zhen had found the root that he had grown from earlier that had been used on the Graylash student. He was able to quickly cause this to rise and grow in front of them, blocking the path between the two of them.

Shiro cut down a few branches, but the tree was growing at a fast-rate, creating more different components that would wrap around. Still, he continued to attack them one by one, hitting all of the branches and not losing his breath until the entire root was destroyed.

Once again, Shiro charged in, and this time he delivered a powerful blow hitting the sword, making Zhen's arm feel numb. A hit was made towards the side of his chest, but a clanging sound was heard as metal struck against metal.

At this point in one's school journey life, it was rare for a student to have beast armour unless they had a strong family backing, and it looked to be the case here.

Still, even with the armour on, the damage could be felt. It even chucked Zhen's body off to the side. Quickly wasting no time, he built up giant tree trunks, wishing to get more distance between the two of them.

"What is going on? Is Zhen running away?" The students wondered.

"But isn't the other person just using a beast weapon? I haven't even seen him use an ability."

"Wait, that's that kid called Shiro, right? I don't think he even has an ability!"

Word was getting around about Shiro, and now they were wondering if the reason for his vast improvement was due to the beast weapons itself.

'I don't understand. You didn't teach the boy Qi did you? So how did he get so strong?' Vincent thought. He had watched him, so he was sure he had never taught the kid Qi.

'Your right, I didn't teach him Qi, but I helped his body figure it out for himself.' Quinn replied. 'This is all because of Shiro's own talent. When talking to the others, it seemed like Shiro had managed to activate the power of the beast weapon before anyone else. I started to realise that those that could, had a stronger sense of Qi within their body, and it was true for Shiro as well.'

'I remember Sil explaining his family's strange bodies. They too seemed to be infused with Qi, but when I asked him about it, he never knew what it was. Qi is life force, according to Leo, so everyone has it, but maybe through the struggles that Shiro had been through, just like the life and death situations the Blades' go through, he was able to summon some of it.'

"What I just did was show him what he had. Show him the energy around his body. The rest was down to Shiro himself."

Right now, Shiro's body was infused with Qi without him even knowing about it. He would simply think it was the breathing technique Quinn taught or due to the beast weapons he was using. The reason why Quinn wasn't afraid others would find out was due to the small amount of Qi and he also knew that the others would think it was due to the weapons as well.

The match continued, and Zhen's panicking caused him to use far more MC than he realised. Shiro was like a beast, having locked onto his prey chasing after Zhen, and whatever would be used to try to slow him down, he would cut them down.

Eventually, the inevitable had happened, and Zhen had run out of Mc points, no longer being able to use his ability.

He gripped his sword.

"I am Zhen. Who are you!" He shouted, attempting to strike back with all his force holding his short sword with two hands. The blow was blocked with a single hand from Shiro, and then another kick was made to Zhen's chest. Shiro continually attacked at the armour on Zhen's body.

It would bounce off each time, and it was hard for Shiro to know if it was doing any damage or not. However, he thought they would eventually stop the fight and Fay, who was by the side, was wondering why that still didn't happen yet.

'Although students are allowed to wear armour, we are still meant to judge the fight as if they haven't got any on. So why hasn't the referee from the Earthborn group stepped in and stopped the fight yet? Clearly, the boy has lost.'

Fay took a slight step forward but then saw a faint smile coming from the teacher Aden.

'Is this their plan? Do they want me to come in and stop the fight? Maybe then they will say I have stopped the fight too early, and it will give the other student time to rest.'

If this was the plan, it was a crafty one. Because anyone could tell by the way Shiro was striking, he couldn't keep it up forever, and even he could tell.

However, the others didn't know he had one more trick up his sleeve. He knew he couldn't fight on like this. Placing both of his duel blades together. Shiro struck at the sword in Zhen's hand once again. By now, the damage had been building up over time, and as it hit, he had let go of the blade, causing it to fall to the floor, but Shiro had done the same, dropping his blades.

The next step he took, he slammed his foot on the ground and pulled his left fist back.

"Wait, isn't this one of your moves?" Fex asked.

The others knew this strike well, as Shiro threw his other fist out, hitting the centre of Zhen's chest piece like a hammer. It was the hammer strike. Blood sped out from Zhen's mouth as the attack went entirely through the armour.

'Are they still not going to stop this fight? I need to go in now!' Fay thought.

Putting on a brave face, Zhen made it look like he wasn't hurt at all. The rest of the blood in his mouth he attempted to swallow. He stood up fine as if the attack didn't hurt him.

'The attack had to hurt him, I can tell, one more hit, and he'll fall over!' Shiro thought as he went to perform a second hammer strike again but in the middle of its moments.

The blood from Zhen's mouth had finally given in, pouring over Shiro's face. He stopped the attack midway and lost concentration, and in that second, Zhen had picked up his blade again and struck it towards Shiro's heart.

In the last few seconds, it was stopped by the Earthborn referee, and Fay wasn't too far behind, having already pulled Shiro out of the way as well.

"I guess this is a win for the Earthborn group then?" The referee smiled at Fay.

The students never expected to see a fight go this far. Especially between first-year students who were just beast users, but seeing such a spectacle, they cheered louder than any of the previous fights before.

"The winner is the Earthborn group!" Oscar announced.

The cheers continued as the students were taken back to their groups, but there was controversy about who the real winner was. Shiro was walking back fine on his two feet, not having been damaged, while Zhen had to be carried back.

"I lost," Shiro said as he walked through the glass doors.

"Hey, are you crazy? Of course you won that. They should have stopped that fight long ago." Venus said, trying to encourage him.

For the first time, Venus and Swim weren't the only ones talking to him, as everyone started to rally behind Shiro. They stated that he had clearly won the fight bringing a smile to his face.

The real question, was now that there was a draw between two groups, what would happen next.

"Everyone, as you know, there are two points awarded to the Cursed house and two Points to the Earthborn House. I have just been given a suggestion from the Earthborn leaders that maybe we should make the tiebreaker a little more interesting.

"But I want everyone's opinion here about it. How about for the final point, we have the two teachers of each class face off in a duel!" Oscar asked.

Hearing this, the students got excited thinking about seeing two experienced supposed fighters going toe to toe. The crowd roared in response.

'Wait, does this mean they want me to fight?' Quinn thought.

Chapter 997: Hardy strong?

The teachers that were teaching the beast classes were meant to be quite skilled using beast weapons themselves. Otherwise they would have never been selected to teach those classes in the first place. The students were excited after just witnessing a spectacular match to see real beast weapons being used by the two teachers. Which was why the response was so great for this change of events.

"Wait, isn't the beast weapons teacher for the Cursed House, teacher Hardy? Isn't he the one that just made that speech at the opening ceremony. If he fights, will we even have a chance of winning?"

"Maybe he doesn't have a good ability, but that's why he teaches the beast weapons class?"

"I heard that he was meant to have Emperor tier beast equipment, one of my classmates told me."

"Emperor tier, that has to be a lie."

"We'll soon find out, right?"

Behind the glass area, all the students were looking at their teacher, Hardy, wondering if he was going to take part. They had mixed thoughts about whether he should go and fight or not. They had grown to like him as a teacher after he had helped them all so much, and they had seen him do some amazing things. But whether he was a good fighter, was a different question altogether.

What they were more concerned about now, was if their teacher went out there and lost, the others would say bad things about him.

"Hardy, you don't have to fight." Venus said.

"Yeah, can't you call and ask Wevil to come and replace you? You have the connections and called him before, right?" Swin asked.

The students continued to comment on their worries, and Quinn soon realised why they didn't want him to go out and fight. They were worried about him, all of them.

"Don't worry guys, I will go and get a win for the Cursed house." Quinn said.

Even if their teacher's words were confident, they couldn't shake this uneasy feeling. They had seen the other teacher, Aden, show off his skills. While teaching them, he had shown off so many times during their lessons.

'Wait, he said he had Emperor tier beast equipment right? So he should have better beast equipment than Aden, so there is a chance he can win this!' Venus thought.

Then, he saw Quinn go over and pick up a pair of basic tier gauntlets and placed them on his arms. At the moment he didn't have any gauntlets on him since giving the ruined ones to Alex.

"Didn't you say you had Emperor tier equipment? Why are you just using the weapons we use?" Venus asked.

"My equipment is a bit damaged at the moment. Don't worry, these will do." Quinn said, putting them on. They felt light, as if he was wearing nothing, but in this situation he thought it was a good thing anyway. Since he would most likely need to hold back in the fight.

Walking out from the glass door, the students still cheered, as they had expected Hardy to not participate. Even if he didn't win, they at least honoured the fact that he chose to not run away, although many in the Cursed house thought it was a loss already. Especially after seeing the equipment on his body.

'Damn, I guess that stuff about defeating Emperor tier beasts and having Emporeir tier equipment was a lie then.' The students thought.

At the other end, Aden walked out from the other side, but he didn't have a beast weapon or any armour on, and he wasn't alone. Standing by his side was Head General Sach, who wore a monstrous looking pair of boots. It appeared as if they were made from bones, stuck together with a black substance.

It was quite a horrifying thing to look at.

'As I said, if you are patient enough, the time will come when we can show him up.' Sach thought.

"This is fantastic, I never thought we would get to see such a thing!" Innu was excited. "This is perfect. We will be able to humiliate him, and get him back in front of everyone!"

Samantha wasn't too sure about that though. There was a certain confidence that Hardy always carried and even more so, she was wondering if Oscar would do anything to stop such a thing that was about to happen.

"I request that I substitute for teacher Aden." Sach requested. "You see, Aden is just a sergeant, a beast weapons teacher, while Hardy is a Head General. We all know a head general's strength, so the match should at least be against someone of his own strength right, don't you all agree?" He lifted his hands, and those that were in the Earthborn group cheered as loud as they could.

A head general fighting for them would increase their chances at victory, not that any of them thought they were going to lose, before.

Oscar looked at Hardy for a second, who seemed unchanged about who his opponent was going to be.

'A head general is no easy opponent. This might force you to use your ability and reveal your true identity to everyone here, but if you haven't got a problem with that.'

"Agreed, I think this is a fair request!" Oscar shouted, and everyone cheered as the decision was made.

Aden was a little annoyed that Sach had decided to come and replace him. He thought this was going to be his chance to show off, especially against a useless teacher like Hardy, but he had to comply, as Sach was his boss after all.

On the Cursed ship, everyone was surprised to see their leader walking out and was about to participate in a match.

"Quinn's really going to fight. Is he going to use the shadow?" Wevil asked.

"I hope he doesn't. It would ruin the whole purpose of why we sent him there in the first place, but Quinn is Quinn." Sam replied, almost sulking.

"Don't worry." Logan spoke calmly. "Do you really think he will have to use the shadow against someone like that? Quinn's enemies are a much higher level than anyone here. If he has to resort to using the shadow here, then he would consider himself a failure. Besides, what do you think he had been doing on the Cursed ship the past few days?"

Although Logan didn't tell anyone, he had watched a few of Quinn's matches in the VR pods. Of course, when one would become popular in the game, Logan would hear about it, being a moderator as well as the creator. But there was one thing that he had found out during his search, something he thought about telling Quinn.

'It shouldn't matter too much. If those two are meant to meet, then they are meant to meet.' Logan thought.

Walking towards the centre, Sach could see the poor equipment Quinn had on his hands, while the pieces on his legs were at the Emperor tier level.

"I don't want to face someone when they are at their weakest. I hope you aren't taking it easy on me?" Sach asked.

"Don't worry, I will not be taking this match lightly, but I can't use my full strength. After all there is no one here who will be fast enough to stop me if I were to kill you by accident." Quinn stated.

Sach was unsure if he was joking or not, but assumed that the words spoken were just there to unsettle him.

"Then I hope there won't be any excuses when the match is your loss." Sach spoke.

"Can I ask you just one question?" Quinn asked. "You have a strong chest piece underneath, right?"

"Yes, all my equipment is at the Emperor tier level." Sach replied.

Quinn said nothing else, and even used his inspect skill to confirm it with his own eyes.

"Let the fight begin!" Oscar announced.

The first thing Sach did, was charge in with his strong Emperor tier boots. With each step, the arena floor was crumbling and being lifted off the ground, while Quinn remained unmoving and still.

'You might think your ability will save you? As long as I don't make eye contact with you, then I should be safe from your mind control.' Sach thought. He believed this was the main reason Quinn was acting so confident.

When Sach finally got in range, Quinn took his stance that he had been taught in the VR game by the Martial Art's God. When the timing was perfect, he swung his right leg out, pushing his hips, and trying to hold back some of his power. He hit Sach right in the ribs with his bare foot, slamming the chest piece, and cracking it slightly.

Sach, was flying through the air, and was heading right for the reinforced glass, but standing in front of it was Peter, who held his arms out ready to catch him.

One second, the students could see Sach charging forwards. The next second, a devastatingly loud bang was heard and Sach's body was limp being held in Peter's arms.

Chapter 998: Respect for you

'Oh no!' That was the first thought that came to Quinn's head after delivering his kick. He had performed the thigh kick. A move he had practised many times, but everything he had initially planned had gone wrong or different to how he had expected.

For one, Quinn had only planned to use half his strength, hoping to match what he had done in the game. He thought he had the speed and strength down so he could imitate that quite well. However, this was real life and not the game.

For one, Sach was far faster than Quinn had anticipated, so while he was getting prepared, Sach was already upon him. Lifting his leg, if he was to hit him, he would need to move his leg faster, and with that, more strength was added into the snap. The last thing, due to the way Sach ran forward, he had his body bent slightly downward and instead, the kick was meant to be sent to the thigh, which had hit the side of his body.

'The kick was stronger than I thought it would be as well.'

The crowd was cheering just moments ago, expecting to see a tough fight, or some even expected to see a one-sided, but not in the way they had panned out, had gone silent. The result was unexpected, and they weren't quite sure what happened. They didn't even see what Quinn had done.

Very few people had seen Quinn move his leg, but what they could see was Sach being held up by Peter, holding him by his armpits like a child who refused to go to bed. His legs weren't standing firm but were being dragged on the floor.

"This can't be real! Did General Sach just get beat with one hit!" Innu shouted, not being able to hold in his shock.

"It looks to be that way, and it seems we have underestimated him," Samantha added. "From now on, I think it might be best that we leave him alone. If this wasn't an official match and we got on the wrong side of him, we could very well end up...." She didn't continue, but she was shaking inside.

From everything she had seen General Hardy do, she just couldn't make sense of who he was from the Cursed faction. How could someone so strong, with so many connections, be kept secret from the world.

At one point, she had made a guess as to who exactly this person was. One of her main guesses was Quinn Tallen, the leader of the Cursed faction, a person could change their appearance or find a way to if they wanted, but there were many reasons why she thought it couldn't be him.

Quinn Tallen was a person who had the unique shadow ability, something not seen by others, a mysteriously strong ability, but she had seen Hardy use some form of mind control on that day, and now had also seen him use feats of strength beyond human capability without beast gear.

One of these things had to have been an ability, so it couldn't have been Quinn. The fact that the Cursed faction had someone this strong on their side was a frightening thing and Samantha was starting to understand why Oscar wanted them so badly on their side.

A few seconds later, Sach was seen moving about.

"What happened?" Sach said.

"Wakey wakey sleepy head, you were just knocked out for a few seconds, that's all," Peter replied.

Quickly getting away from Peter, Sach noticed a piece of his chest piece had fallen on the floor, and when he looked to his side, he could see that it had cracked all the way up. He looked at Quinn's legs which seemed fine, and could only see the gauntlets on his hands.

What had surprised Quinn and Peter was how Sach was walking. He didn't seem hurt or in pain and was walking towards Quinn like he was fine.

"Stop, I know you are okay Sach, but it was clear that you were knocked out, and Hardy chose not to attack you further," Oscar announced from a special area that was in a glass box shape designed for him in the stadium. "I'm afraid even if you can continue to fight on, I have to give the win to the Cursed house."

Hearing those words, the crowd from the Cursed house section broke their silence as they cheered with joy. They didn't quite understand what was happening but were just pleased that their House, who they never expected to win, was able to pull the victory. The left side of the stadium was rumbling and shaking with excitement while the others sulked, still confused at just what was going on.

Usually, an attack using half of Quinn's strength would break some bones. If something was strong enough to destroy emperor tier beast amour, Sach should at least be hurting with each breath he took, but he walked over completely fine.

He stopped about two meters away from Quinn and smiled.

"It seems the two of us got off on the wrong foot. I just want to apologise for what I did." Sach said, still having the biggest grin in the world.

Based on his scary looking appearance, Quinn found it a little creepy, and with the sudden change in attitude, it felt like he was talking to a different person.

"You know, I always knew you were holding back. I just never knew by how much, it's why I never chose to fight you, but I guess now I know. I'm glad I picked the right person." Sach walked up to Quinn and placed his hand on his shoulder.

Quinn could tell there were no longer any intentions for him to hurt him, so he let it be.

"I hope you can make my dream come true," Sach said, walking off to his side, leaving Quinn standing there in the centre of the arena.

'Why do those words sound so familiar?' Quinn thought when it had finally hit him.

Those words about making someone's dreams come true were spoken by the martial arts god.

'Wait! That person is the martial arts god, the green-haired split tongue dude? That can't be possible!' Quinn thought, as his mind was blown away. 'But their personality, from when we first met, and the person in the game. They're like two different people. Even his movements just then.'

'Do you remember what I said to Quinn?' Said Vincent. 'About how it seemed like the man was roleplaying. In the game, he probably chose to act a certain way, and when people respected him for that, he kept that act and image up. It is the character he has chosen to be.'

There were a few things the others didn't know about Sach, but he was actually recruited from a recommendation from sergeant Chun after playing with him in the game. Only Oscar knew his skills with the Muay Baron, but he also was able to fight in several different styles, and he had done so in the past against others.

He never chose to display his Muay Baron skills against others. When asked why his answer to Oscar was he didn't want to kill anyone by accident. It was a martial art meant for killing. Of course, there were some moves that could be used, such as the thigh kick that Quinn had performed, but moves like that could be part of any martial art.

Another fact was he had also been discovered by Logan, who had checked the game logs. When he found out Quinn was training with the martial arts god, he found that it was linked to someone in the military base but didn't know who.

Now that Quinn had found this out, and how he managed to beat his gaming teacher in the arena with one hit, he wondered what rank he would be in the game if he allowed himself to use his full strength.

"Innu, I won't be taking part in your schemes anymore. Everything that happened to us that day was deserved by us." Sach said as he went ahead and joined Samantha.

Innu couldn't understand what was happening. It was as if Sach had been hit by some enlightenment when he had been kicked.

'So what if he's strong, so what if he has money? There have to be ways to get at him.' Innu thought.

"I must now call to the end of the event and thank Hardy for a spectacular ending. The winner of today's event is the Cursed house!" Oscar shouted and looked at Quinn as he had headed back to all the others.

'Quinn, you managed to do that without any beast gear on? How many secrets are you hiding? If we want to win this war against the Dalki, we are going to need your help. "

Chapter 999: Hypocrite

There was a brief moment when Quinn returned to his students, where he could celebrate the victory with them. Walking through the glass door, unlike the others who were stunned and didn't know what to say, his beast class immediately gave him a cheer seeing their teacher.

"Hardy, you were always so coy about your strength, why didn't you tell us how strong you were?"

"Yeah, you just went on with that lame speech at the opening ceremony. You could have just kicked a rock and smashed it to pieces or something."

"So what's your ability, or is that all to do with beast gear?"

For the military, these students had an odd relationship with their teacher. They felt like they could freely speak to him, cheer him on and ask personal questions without getting in trouble. If this was another head general, or a person with high power, none of them would have openly spoken to him like so; but Quinn made their relationship like this.

"Everyone, remember what I said, if there are any problems, you can always talk to me or any of the Cursed house generals about it." Said Quinn. "I hope you all realise that the Cursed faction is a great place to be, and if you want to join it after your training. I will happily accept you all with open arms."

Saying these words, Quinn thought that Sam would be proud of him. It was the perfect opportunity while everyone was caught up in the moment, to advertise the Cursed faction to them and it seemed to work, as the response was great. The kids shouted 'Of course!' and 'I want to see Weevil again.'

It wasn't just his efforts that made these kids want to join the Cursed faction, but those of the Cursed family as well.

"The event is over, and it has been a long and tiring day, so all of you get some rest." Quinn said.

Returning to the dorms, the students couldn't stop talking about three fights in particular. Swin who skilfully took on two people at once. Shiro's fight, a person who had no ability beating Zhen, but at the same time people thought he had lost, and finally Head General Hardy, whose identity was still a mystery to all.

However, with good rumors, soon bad ones spread about him as well.

"If he was so strong and had that much power, where was he during the Dalki war?"

"I think it might have something to do with his ability, perhaps he learnt of it only after the war."

"Then what about the Civil war? He could have stopped or saved a lot of people's lives then."

"Remember he is part of the Cursed faction, and their leader doesn't exactly do the best of things. Do you remember the beasts he would unleash upon shelters and force the people to join his group?"

Despite all the negative rumors going around, there were those students whose minds couldn't be changed, because they knew the Cursed faction first hand. Quinn's homeroom class and also those who took Quinn's beast class.

Later that day, as the sun was starting to set and the black sky would soon be upon them. Quinn had received a call to head to a certain place.

'I was expecting this to happen, but so quickly?' Quinn thought, as he headed over to the main centrepiece building and headed to the top floor.

Entering the room, Quinn was in the large office and could see a female with a green outfit and glasses on her head. Wherever she would be in the school, Oscar would be next to her.

"Quinn, you put on quite the show, I was honestly surprised you accepted at first and I thought you were going to reveal your identity to everyone there." Oscar said.

"Of course I could have declined, but I think you know what you were doing by asking me to fight." Quinn replied with a smile back.

The atmosphere between the two was quite light, even if Oscar was scheming or trying to get Quinn to do things, it just didn't seem out of ill intent which was why it never made Quinn angry like it would do with other things.

"You've grown stronger Quinn, stronger than the last time I saw you. To be able to beat a head general with no beast gear on and pure strength. Then to have one of your students, who had no ability, able to beat one of our best students. I know all the equipment was basic tier and they shouldn't have that much effect.

"Quinn, I'm not forcing you to tell me what you did, what it is or how you did it. These are your secrets to keep. Just like how originals hide their abilities and don't share it with the rest of the world. I'm not going to force you, not that I could anyway." Oscar jokingly chuckled.

"However, I will say this. Our scouting teams have monitored that the Dalki are starting to make unusual movements, now this could just be a false alarm like the times before it, but I have a feeling this time it isn't. We are running out of time. If war breaks out, these students will have no choice but to fight. Don't you think they all deserve an equal chance to live?" Oscar said.

Quinn expected something like this to happen, the good news was Oscar wasn't trying to force him, but in a way he was emotionally blackmailing him.

"Did the military care about everyone when there were those who were weak and useless in our fight against the Dalki? Why is caring about everyone such a big concern now? I'm not saying I won't do what you say." Quinn said as he turned around and walked out the door. "But Oscar, even you are being a hypocrite."

"Well that meeting went better than I thought, what do you think Jane?"

Pushing up her glasses, Jane answered.

"Of course, there is some truth to his words, but people's views change based on the situation, and circumstances. When the war broke out, there was no time to focus on the weaker ones, and soon after the war, the system naturally fell into place. I don't believe this is what you're doing.

"To control the whole human race as a single person is an impossible task, I think even as he rises he is learning of the struggle. Not everyone thinks the same way, and one person's definition of right, is not the same as another." Jane answered.

While Quinn was enjoying his life as a teacher, there were others in the Cursed faction that were not quite in the same boat. On planet Tryneve; currently Leo, Erin, Layla and Nate were walking through a busy street filled with people.

It was one of the more modern planets that they visited. Well developed with skyscraper buildings, and spaceships flying in and out of the planet, could be seen in the air above them. Even the ground they were walking on was made out of metal, while the sides were covered with greenery that was clearly put there just to give the place some colour.

Planet Tryneve was a trading planet, the most popular trading planet due to its location. It was a planet that wasn't owned by the military or one of the big four powers of the past. This was due to the many rich corporations that would choose to make their base of operations there.

Each of them had hired their own mercenary group to protect their companies. Making it well guarded. At the same time, due to its location being in the middle of all the beast planets, the place was also used by all factions. So it was in their interest to not cause any trouble.

"Pure has to do trade just like everyone else, so they have quite the base of operations here." Layla explained. "I wouldn't be surprised if they take a cut, or are even protecting some of the big merchants in exchange for things, but here is where we might be able to find out the most information. After all, whatever they get here, they have to send it back to the base somehow."

"They are here." Leo said. "I can sense strong Qi users all around us."

Chapter 1000: Familiar name

Those from the Cursed faction had been roaming the trading planet for a while now. The three young ones, Erin, Nate and Layla, were treating it as a nice little break. It was good to not worry about things and just enjoy looking at the shops and everything else the street was filled with.

After all, Quinn had stated that if they found out anything, they should contact him first before acting, which is why they weren't so uptight and worried.

Layla, who had learnt a lot about the planet when she was at Pure, explained to them what she knew and why Pure had even chosen to establish such a place. The atmosphere was still relatively light until Leo had mentioned that he could sense Qi users in the area.

Ever since learning the second stage of Qi, and now after figuring out the third stage, while using his ability, he could sense others around him to a finer degree and from a greater distance.

"Qi users, doesn't that mean that they are in the higher rankings of Pure?" Erin asked. "How many of them are there?"

"At the moment, I can sense two people, and they are about to head into that grand hall over there," Leo explained.

The four of them were standing on a busy shopping street, and at the very end of the street was a large building. A hall that many people were entering and leaving, but those that were entering seemed to be dressed somewhat differently compared to the rest of the public.

"The auction house?" Layla said, wondering what members of Pure would be doing heading into there.

"Doesn't it make sense? It might not be their base, but maybe they want to buy some expensive beast crystals or something else." Nate commented. "And we don't really know if they are high ranking users in Pure. Don't you remember they said that they would eventually be teaching all their members Qi?"

"What you say is correct, but I assure you, these aren't weak members of Pure. Not unless they have managed to learn this Level of Qi quickly." Leo said, noting that it wasn't impossible as one student of his had learnt it at an extremely fast rate.

Leo started to walk forward and head into the auction house while the two girls decided to follow.

"Wait!" Nate called out. "What are you guys doing? Don't you remember what Quinn said about how we should notify him if something happens?"

Layla and Erin both looked at Leo for answers as they had decided to just follow his decisions while they were with him.

"I promise I will notify him if the matter turns into a big one, but these two won't be any trouble," Leo said as they continued to walk forward and try to enter the auction house.

At first, the four of them were stopped just outside the entrance by two guards. All of their weapons and armour were being kept in Nate's shadow space as to not make them suspicious and seem like they went a threat. Still, the reason they were stopped at the gate wasn't for a reason like that. Instead, it was because they didn't exactly recognise them as their kind of clientele based on what they were wearing.

"Not just anybody can come into the auction house. The public can get an advanced booking if needed." The guard said, who was wearing decent beast gear on his body but no weapon, making them appear to be elemental users.

"Don't worry," Leo replied. "We are here from the Cursed faction, hoping to buy a few things."

The two guards looked at each other and were unsure about what to do. The Cursed faction was one of the great powers. However, people tried to claim they were from all sorts of groups just to get in. The problem was the Cursed faction was relatively new, and no one knew of their identities well. Especially of the higher-ranking members.

Knowing this, the guards would ask them to come back at another time, when they had proof or at least could confirm their identity. However, just as they were about to speak, they had received a message.

"Let them in." A voice spoke into their ears. A second after, they had no trouble and were let in.

The place was filled with expensive things, the floor and walls made of marble, a material that was harder to come by these days and chandeliers. The whole city smelt like money, but this place was a little over the top. Following the Qi users, eventually, they were placed in the auction house. There were several seats and many people wearing strange masks to hide their identity.

"Maybe we should have put ours on as well," Nate commented, and when he turned to look at the others, he could see they all already had their masks on, and he was the only one who hadn't put on his yet.

"What the hell? You guys don't tell me anything!" Nate complained.

The group was on a higher level, looking down at the stage. They were in the standing area since all of the seats had already been filled, but the good news was that the Qi users who they assumed were from Pure, were also standing.

The auction had begun with an announcer coming onto the stage, and items were called out one by one. Beast crystals and beast weapons were the most common items being bid on, and they were of quite a high level as well.

The next set of popular items were ability books and skill books. Seeing all of this and how much money was being thrown around, the young kids felt it was quite a sad sight to see.

Books that should be available to everyone and anyone were being hoarded and not shared by these rich people. Once obtaining one of these books, they could make as many copies as they wished, or none causing the price to rise or keeping the power.

"So much money is being spent here. There are too many zeros that I don't even know what number that is." Nate said, looking at the screen above that would show the number as the bidding increased.

"Whoever owns this place must be getting quite the profit then," Erin said.

The two men from Pure didn't bid on a single thing, and it looked like they were communicating with someone on the other end as each item came up. However, whatever they were looking for never did appear, and when the auction ended, the two men left as well.

Leaving the auction house, they followed the two men, hoping to find out where they were going. They walked through the shopping district they had come from and saw them enter a few shops before coming out again.

"So, what's the plan?" Nate asked. 'We can't just keep following them like this. This is getting us nowhere.' He complained.

Still, they continued to follow the two men and moved closer and closer as they tailed them. Which was just making Nate more nervous that they would be found out. He couldn't understand what Leo was planning on doing.

In the end, the men left the main busy district and started to head out to the more quiet areas. Finally, they could be seen walking into a jungle area that took them away from the city,

'This is it. This must be a pure hideout. It makes sense for it to be all the way here.' Nate thought.

When the group followed them into the jungle, they could see the two men had turned around and held weapons in their hands. One with two scimitars, while the other had a large silver chain in his hand.

"Why are you guys following us? Do you know who we are?" One of them said.

"You thought we didn't know? That's why we brought you out here."

"I knew we would get found out, we were following right behind them for so long, and we didn't even try to not make it look obvious!" Nate complained. "What kind of plan was this?"

"What are you talking about?" Erin looked at Nate. "This is the plan all along. Out of their own will, they have taken us to a quiet place, where we can ask all the questions we want."

"Of course, we know who you are," Leo answered. "Otherwise, why would we be following you? Now I'm just going to ask you some questions." Leo said, and for the first time, his eyes were glowing red.

The men took a step back as Leo's eyes looked devilish, being mostly white with a circle red ring glowing around it.

Just as it looked like the two groups were about to clash, the sound of clapping could be heard off in the distance.

"Excellent, I see you certainly do have a certain style. However, while you guys were concentrating on following them, it seems like you didn't realise that you were being followed." A voice said.

The direction of where it was coming from was hard to tell, and Leo hearing this, decided to expand the range of his ability. Even he couldn't sense the person, but when he did, he could see who it was, and it confused him even more.

'What are they doing here?'

The next second before the men could react, both of their heavy bodies fell to the ground, and now standing in front of them was a strange man in a butler suit.

'Did he just knock those two people out, but they were high ranking members of Pure?' Layla thought, trying to figure out who this person was.

Erin's eyes started to glow yellow as she looked at the man, and Nate had an odd sense of familiarity like he had seen him somewhere before, but that wasn't quite right.

"Let me introduce myself." The man said, bowing down. "The names Brock."

Chapter 1001: The grand master

Hearing the name Brock didn't ring any bells to any of them. No matter how hard they tried they just had never heard the name before. Instead, they were trying to see if they could match his appearance to someone they knew, but again, other than his butler outfit he was wearing they didn't recognize anything else.

Yet, for some reason, Nate was the only one that felt like he knew this person.

'Why is my brain having a big massive fart at a time like this?! I hate when I can't remember things.'

What was worrying Layla, was the reaction Leo and Erin had towards this stranger. Leo was clearly on guard and Erin's eyes wouldn't stop glowing yellow. The only time she had seen Erin like this was when she was about to face a vampire.

"Wait, is he a... a.. vampire!" Layla asked. Now she was understanding why the other two were on guard and how he was able to defeat two Qi users so easily like so.

Leo nodded, giving confirmation. He could tell by his aura and more importantly both Erin and Leo could tell due to his smell. Sniffing the air a few times, Nate too could smell the difference now that Layla had said what had happened.

"It's a little upsetting that you don't remember me." Brock said, looking at Nate.
"It's because of me that you're still alive."

Finally, something clicked in Nate's head, he knew why he recognized this person. It wasn't his looks or his outfit, it was his voice. When Nate was on the verge of death, he could hear someone instructing Sam on how to turn him into a vampire.

"So it was you that told Sam what to do?" Nate said, shocked.

The others now, were even more cautious, and gave the signal so Nate could use the shadow to allow them to equip their weapons. It was a skill that was later developed. Depending how far away people were from a shadow user, they could also use shadow equip on their allies.

After the shadow disappeared the weapons were now on display and they were ready for a scuffle.

"Wait guys! Nate you know him, is he friendly?" Layla asked.

"I'm not sure myself, but he did save mine and Dennis' life back when Hilston attacked us, but other than that I have no clue who he is."

"Oh, that's a shame, I thought I might have met one of the others from the Cursed faction here. Honestly, it was a complete coincidence that the two of us were after the same set of people." Brock tried to explain. "I assure you though, I, or we, are not an enemy, not unless you see us that way. My master is hoping to meet with Quinn, and I'm sure Quinn would like to meet him as well. So it's in our best interests that the two of us work together."

What was worrying for Leo at the moment was he couldn't gauge the person's strength in front of him. Some of the vampires were able to suppress their auras strength. From his experience the only vampires that could do this were either vampire knights or leaders, and during Leo's time as a vampire knight he got to know all of them well, but this was a person he did not recognise. What Leo didn't like doing, was getting into scuffles or messes that he didn't know much about.

"You said you wish to meet Quinn, and you're on our side. Then why did you knock out those two before I was able to extract information from them?" Leo asked.

Brock took a step forward, and before his foot had landed on the ground, his whole body disappeared, and soon he was seen walking out from where they had come in, behind them.

"It's up to you if you want to follow me or not, and I can explain on the way." Brock said, as he continued to walk.

Leo was sweating, and the others were a little startled as well. The level of skill that was being shown was that of a vampire leader. They knew that if this person wanted to escape, or not be seen he could have well chosen to. Which made them trust the stranger a little.

"Can you tell us, who is your master, that you were talking about before?" Erin asked, as the group followed him.

Brock walked with his hands behind his back with his back straight up and wore a pair of white gloves. He was confident when he walked and he was certain where he was going as well.

"Me and my master have been trying to decide who to team up with to help the humans fend off the great Dalki." Brock started explaining. If they weren't sure if he was a vampire before, from the way he called them humans, it was obvious he was one now. "We had already done an evaluation on the military. We knew the group wasn't strong enough, and at the same time, their system was broken. The way they were handling things, soon they would self-destruct and it seems like we were right when Civil War broke out.

"However, what we never expected was for the human race to recover from the Civil War and be more united than ever before. For what we have found, it's all due to you guys from the Cursed faction. You were what our calculations never predicted.

"Still, before that, we had originally thought about the idea of teaming up with Pure. They had a much higher chance of defeating the Dalki, they were confident and seemed to never worry about them as a threat, so we tried to find out why.

"They showed us many different things, but it still felt like they were hiding something, and along the way an option to team up with another had come up that wasn't there before." Brock said, glancing at those still following behind.

"We wanted to look into Pure a bit more and it turns out they were hiding something. Through my own investigations it led me to this place."

Before they knew it, in another part of the jungle, the group had reached a large facility that looked almost like a factory. However the strange thing about it all was how quiet the place was, and as soon as the others had arrived they could tell something was up, because they could smell blood.

Walking forward, Brock pushed the double doors open and it was a sight they never expected to see. Human bodies were seen laying on the floor, glass tubes broken and equipment destroyed. However, what stuck out most was there seemed to be beasts that were dead, lying on the floor as well. All of them were the same type.

"As you can see, I have already been making progress and have stopped them from their wrongdoings. It turns out that Pure were running their own little experiments. They were trying to create their own type of beasts. A beast that would listen to them.

"When I arrived, I found that they had strapped many stray members of the Bree family. They had been trying to extract MC cells or use their powers to control the beasts. With cloning technology they wanted to create something that is completely loyal to them."

"Pure....was doing all this...but how? They couldn't have known about this. My mother would have never let this happen!" Layla shouted, in disbelief.

"When an organisation gets too large, sometimes not everyone knows what is going on behind the scenes." Brock replied. "Your mother could have very well known nothing about this. Still, we decided that this needed to be stopped. After all, it would be horrible if humans were the ones that created the next Dalki, wouldn't it?"

The group started to look around, as Brock just stood there in place while they did. They were trying to see if they could find anything, any information. The only thing that was found was some more numbers on some of the members' backs, guaranteeing that they were members of Pure.

Even Layla had recognised some of the lower ranking members from when she was at the Pure base. However, other than that, they were unable to find anything at all. No additional information, nor a terminal unbroken.

"You destroyed everything, and took all the information for yourselves." Nate said.
"We can't learn anything, it's like you're blackmailing us."

"Blackmailing?" Brock replied. "Definitely not. Like I said, I wish for all of us to work together. Go ahead, tell me what exactly you were hoping to find from these people and I will help you."

The group paused for a second. They were still wondering if all of this was some trick or setup. Even the information they gave there was no way to tell if it was true or not, but Leo, unafraid compared to others, spoke up.

"There are two things we want to know. Where is the Pure base located, and who is the leader of Pure?" Leo asked.

Hearing this, Brock smiled.

"If that is all you are asking, it seems like the Cursed faction isn't up to date with events as we thought. If that's all you wanted to know, then I am happy to answer both of them for you."

Chapter 1002: Important date

It seemed like a normal day for Sam on the Cursed ship, there were no panicking events going around on the beast planets. No internal disputes he had to solve over where certain things should be placed, or a different department asking for a big budget. It was peaceful.

It was these moments that Sam liked best when everything seemed to be going smoothly all over. Signing off the last thing that needed to be done, Sam sat in his chair which was at the head of the meeting table for the Cursed faction leaders.

The table was on a slightly raised platform with spiraling stairs that would go downward to the control centre of the whole ship, the good thing about Sam's seat was he could swirl around and see outside the glass while also looking below at all those working hard away.

"I guess I should just double check there is nothing important, or maybe something in the future that needs to be done so I can free my work up later." Sam said to himself.

Without a doubt in anyone's mind, Sam was a workaholic. Even though there was nothing to do, he still felt like there were things needing to be done. When opening up the calendar, Sam looked at the current date. It was July 23rd, yet for some reason it was marked red.

'Did I do this, I wouldn't have marked it for no reason?' When sweeping through the date though, there were no notes like he would have usually done for other dates.

He tried thinking what the event could be, but he could think of nothing, nor why the date was important. If it was such a big deal, surely someone else would have contacted him about it. Closing the calendar, Sam looked out the window once again.

"Argh! This is going to drive me crazy. If I don't find out why that blasted date was written down!" Sam thought in anger. He gave a call to those in the Cursed faction that were currently on the ship.

Going through each one of them though, none of them seemed to know anything, until eventually, he had decided to contact Logan. Logan was often busy so Sam didn't like to call him, but it was bugging him even more that no one knew why he had marked this date down, and he was sure he hadn't done so by accident.

"Sorry, I don't know why either. Although I can try to cross reference some systems to see if there is anything going on." Logan asked.

It seemed to be a lost cause but Sam asked him to do it anyway. If Logan couldn't find anything then he would just have to give up and assume that either someone else had tampered with his calendar or he had mistakenly done something.

However, it didn't take long for Logan to call Sam back.

"I believe I have found the reason why that date is so important. When cross referencing those things I looked for all events on our field to do with that date. I then matched it to events related to those in the Cursed, and sorted them by-"

"Err Logan, I know you work really hard, but do you mind?" Sam interpreted.

"Oh sure, it's Quinn's birthday today." Logan said, and quickly hung up the call.

Now Sam realised why he had marked the date down. It was a rare occasion anyone got to celebrate their birthday, but for Quinn, last time he had been so busy that it went past with no one noticing. Because of that, Sam wanted to plan a big event for him, but got interrupted before he could organise anything and write down any notes.

Immediately, Sam got to work. Quinn was still at the school teaching, although it was the weekend so he shouldn't have been too busy, but for what he wanted to do, they needed to get someone on the inside to distract him. At first Sam was about to contact Peter, but instead he decided to contact someone else.

"So you want me to distract Quinn for half the day or at least for a few hours because it's the boy's birthday." Helen replied.

"Yes, and make sure he doesn't find out about it either, can you do it?" Sam asked.

"I have the perfect thing in mind." She replied.

When the call ended, Helen immediately decided to try and locate Quinn, and surprisingly she had found him in his classroom doing some paperwork.

"You seem to be quite the hard worker no matter what you do." Helen commented. "You know, you don't have to do that, you could ask one of your assistants to do that for you."

Quinn didn't look up at who it was but could tell from their voice, it was Helen.

"It's okay, I enjoy doing this. When I'm here, being a teacher, it makes me forget about everything for a second." Quinn said, placing the tablet down and looking at Helen with a smile.

"Be careful there! Give any girl a smile like that, with the light shining on you in the background, and they are going to eat you up." Said Helen.

"Eat me up?" Quinn replied. "So what did you want exactly, other than food." Quinn misunderstood.

"You owe me a date, and I think it's the perfect day for a date, don't you think? Birthday boy!"

"How do you know?" Quinn replied, surprised.

"I should know everything about my future husband, right?"

Quinn never thought this day would come, he always thought he would be too busy but things really had calmed down a lot. Although he could have been training or thinking about other things, he was just so caught up in his life as a teacher, he just wanted a break. Especially on this day.

Right now, he was riding the levitating tube that was taking them out of the school and into the main city area. A place for the military family to relax, play and enjoy life. A modern city for fun and entertainment, with games, movies and more.

'Well, I did say I would, but I just never thought she would be so aggressive.'

While on the train, Quinn stood up, as the train was busy on the weekend. He was trying to be a gentleman and let Helen sit, but instead, she stood up as well and pushed her body towards him.

She was a few inches away from his face, and now he was able to get a closer look at her. Her long straight legs, her plump plum-like bum, and her current pink hair that went with her red lipstick she was wearing.

Her hair colour would often change but Quinn quite liked it pink, it made Helen look a little dangerous.

'Into the dangerous type, huh? Don't you get into enough trouble? I can hear your heartbeat inside here.' Vincent teased.

They had finally reached their stop and Quinn quickly got off from the train. He didn't know what would happen if he continued to stare at her longer.

'Is it like a reverse charm effect or something?' Quinn thought.

'You're a teenager who has just turned eighteen. These feelings are normal.' Vincent argued.

The rest of the day went as planned, as they went to watch a movie together, took a walk in the park where they fed some pigeons and got to look at the smiling faces of family members. Finally, they managed to get to a restaurant and eat a large meal.

"Were you not hungry? You hardly ate anything." Helen noticed.

In fact, Quinn was starving, but not for what she thought. Luckily the restaurant had some meat that he ordered quite rare, allowing him to be satisfied for the time being .

"It's okay, I just prefer my own home cooking." Quinn replied. "I was wondering, Helen. You're a good looking girl, strong and was the leader of a strong faction. You could have anyone you wanted. Why do you like a boy like me?" Quinn asked.

Helen placed her spoon down that she was digging into her ice cream with, and looked at Quinn like it was a stupid question to ask.

"Quinn, do you not know who you are? As you said, I should have high standards right, because I can get anyone. You are the leader of the Cursed faction and one of the world leaders. But it's not just because of that. You're different from the ones that have your power, Quinn. A lot of people make promises, but when they reach the top they fail to deliver them, or give up when it gets too hard, but not you Quinn. That's what attracts me to you." She said taking a big scoop of ice cream.

"But I'm only eighteen? Isn't it strange?"

"And I'm twenty-four. What does it matter? You look like you're in your mid twenties, and you certainly don't act your age at times Quinn." Said Helen.

"You're only twenty-four? I thought...I thought you were..."

"Older? A lot of people do, because of the position I was in. I didn't start the Daisy faction. My sisters are older than me, but later on my talent was discovered and my sisters who always looked after me. They put me in the position and gave me the place."

It was a completely different upbringing to what he had suspected. At a loss, now that he looked at Helen, she really did look her age. It was just because of how mature she acted, that Quinn thought differently.

"So do you like me now then?" Helen asked.

Quinn thought about it, but there were a few things hitting his mind at the moment. There were others appearing in his head and on top of that Helen was human. Could a real relationship work between a vampire and a human, and if Quinn told her now, what he really was, would she run away?

At that moment, a message was received on Helen's communicator. It was time.

"Alright, you don't have to answer me now. Let's head back."

On the journey back, Quinn didn't speak much, as he had a lot on his mind again. But he had enjoyed the day out, and it was a lot better than his last birthdays. All the previous ones he had before that, there was no one around him.

When they reached the school, Helen said that one of the teachers had asked him for something, and to meet him in the beast class teaching room.

As they were approaching the building, Quinn could hear several heartbeats inside, and the light scurrying sound of several feet as it quietly ran across the floor. He was wondering why he would be called at such a time, and why there would be so many people in the room.

Walking up to it, the doors slid open and several bangs and pops were heard all at once. Balloons flew in the air and there was a giant "Surprise!", everyone shouted at the same time.

Everyone who knew Quinn, had come to throw him a surprise birthday. There was cake, tables set out, and a load of gifts in the back as well. For the first time since Quinn was a young boy, he was having a birthday party.

Not for a second, even after hearing the heartbeats, did Quinn expect a surprise birthday party. He just thought that no one would care, and to see how much effort had gone into such a thing...

"Thank you so much, everyone. This is the best birthday I have ever had." Quinn said.

During the party, as Quinn mingled with everyone, Sam noticed that he had received a message from Nate, stating that they were on their way back and they should arrive in a few days,

Chapter 1003: Sil's anger

It was another regular school day. Although another and regular were rarely put together. With everything happening so far, a regular day seemed strange for Quinn and the gang. He had a great birthday party which he would remember for the rest of his life, but soon everyone else had left to do their regular duties.

'I guess it's a good thing that they can work so well without me.' Quinn thought as he reminisced about yesterday.

In the homeroom class, he noticed that the students were full of life and excited unlike before, and none of them seemed to be covered in bruises and marks. What happened to Erlen had gotten around and seeing Swin and Shiro put on a great display of skills, made the others no longer view their class as weak.

Although it wouldn't completely get rid of the problem, all of Quinn's actions so far had certainly helped. Still, there was one thing he was debating about and that was teaching the students Qi.

'Is it really a good idea to teach everyone it, just like abilities there are some that are talented in Qi and others that are not, it might just cause another problem.' Quinn thought.

'You have to remember there will always be others that are better at certain things. Some kids are better at writing, while others are better at maths. This might be something that you just can't stop. And remember, Pure might be teaching all their members soon, the military at the moment is weak.' Vincent explained.

'Yeah, but you can't kill someone with maths...I think. My point is if I teach these kids Qi and it gets out of hand it will be all my fault.'

It was a tough one for Quinn to figure out, he agreed with both Oscar and Vicnent's reasonings. Everyone seemed to think it was a good idea to teach others Qi, at least for their own sake.

'Maybe I should wait to counsel Leo when he's back, it still doesn't feel right for me to just teach others without asking him first.' Quinn thought.

In the school the students were currently having their lunch break, Sil with his new disguise looking like Chucky, didn't stand out anymore. As expected it was as if he was an invisible person.

This was good for two reasons, the first, no one would attack them. Before when others learnt of Sil's ability or thought he was a weak boy, people would try to take advantage of that, but they couldn't even remember Sil was in their class now.

The second reason, being invisible allowed them to attempt to copy as many abilities as possible, but the ability that was needed or one they thought would help was just never found.

The two of them were sitting opposite each other on a table alone. Chucky was taking a bite into his sandwich as if he had no worries while Sil was ripping up the pieces of bread and eating it slowly.

'This kid, he's usually in a mood but today...' Chucky thought.

"Hey, I don't know much about what we are trying to do, but we will find the ability you are looking for eventually. We have Logan, who has access to all the databases. So any new abilities that are recorded he will be able to find out, and Quinn is one of the World leaders now so getting information will be easy."

Hearing this, Sil just nodded and continued to shove a small piece of bread into his mouth. Chucky's attempt at cheering him up had failed.

A few seconds later, Shiro, Venus and Swin were seen taking the seat next to them. Ever since Sil and Chucky had saved them, they had been thankful and if they saw Chucky on his own. They would come over to sit with him, even though they didn't know who the other person with him was.

The three boys were excited as they seemed to have earned new fame. Passing students in the hallway would talk about them all the time which was a first for all of them. After excitedly talking and boasting, they noticed the boy's depressed mood.

"Hey, is your brother okay?" Venus asked.

"My brother?" Chucky replied back, and he noticed they were talking about Sil, since his appearance was now similar to his. "Oh yeah, he's just upset about not getting something."

Shiro would guess based on the fact that this boy had the same demeanour as Sil, and was hanging around with Chucky, that this was Sil. He wanted to do something to cheer him up, after all, the words Sil said that day had really hit him.

'I wonder what type of life Sil lived to think like that?' Shiro thought. When Sil looked back at him, he turned around to avoid eye contact and knocked his carton of juice on the floor. Going down to pick it up, something had gone past all the, at the table and due to Shiro ducking at a particular time the object had whacked Sil right in the face.

"What the hell happened, did someone just throw something at us?!" Venus said, looking at where the object was thrown from.

"Shiro, let's fight again right now!" A boy shouted, from across the canteen hall.
"I'm sick and tired of everyone saying I lost to you when I won. Come on, if you're so strong we can fight right now!" Zhen shouted.

With how students were talking about Shiro and the others, whenever they saw Zhen it was the same, but they didn't speak positively about him and instead thought he had received a fake win. In fact, Zhen was getting paranoid over this himself. While walking around he thought he could hear everyone talking about him, lips moving into the words winner and loser, and he thought they were being directed at him.

'Haha, I didn't even lose a fight and everyone is talking about me like this! Well fine, I know exactly what to do!' Zhen thought, as he carried around with him, one of the practise beast balls for activating one's ability. A large round black heavy ball. A few seconds ago, he had hurled it towards Shiro as he could see him smiling happy and smug.

Zhen had good aim, but what happened was unfortunate as Shiro had ducked down from dropping his juice box on the floor, and instead the ball had hit another. It had hit Sil who had been lost in his own world.

"Are you okay?" Shiro asked, as Sil was standing up and blood was falling to the floor, dipping from either his mouth or nose but it was hard to tell since Sil was looking at the floor. What was strange though, was Shiro could see pieces of dirt falling to the floor as well.

"Come on Shiro, fight me here and now!" Zhen continued to shout.

Those next to him tried to calm Zhen down, while Shiro was more concerned for Sil at this moment, but when he lifted his head, he took a step back slightly. For Sil's face was disfigured, half of it seemed to be falling off, cracked from the top right and around the mouth area, where it was bleeding quite severely as a couple of his teeth were broken or made loose.

'Is it some type of mask?' Shiro figured it out.

Sil, immediately picked up the back ball from the ground, then placed his hand on Chucky, Sil and lastly Venus as well. He walked forward and his mask started to crumble away as it would no longer work and a bloody faced Sil could now be seen.

"What the hell, are you his pet boyfriend or something, get lost? I don't want you!" Zhen shouted.

Everyone around was taking a glance at Sil and that's when some people started to recognize him. "Hey isn't that the guy who managed to beat the Graylash head general in the elemental class?"

"Yeah he went missing and no one could find him."

"I think I just saw his face change."

Zhen could no longer take it and started to charge forward, but the second he did, the black ball came hurling towards him at an incredible speed and it had huge weight behind it. As it hit Zhen's chest it cracked his bones inside, and pushed him back through the air. The ball continued to move, pushing him more, his body hitting other students as he was thrown through the air, until eventually he was slammed into the wall and the black ball fell to the ground.

However, it wasn't over yet, as Sil walked forward and used his telekinesis ability to pull Zhen from out of the wall, and bring him towards him, hovering in the air.

"People like you never learn, and now you have broken my mask!" Sil shouted. Soon Sil was pulling at each of Zhen's limbs, as if an invisible force was stretching him. Zhen started to scream in pain, and no one wished to get close.

"Sil, you'll kill him stop!" Shiro shouted.

"He had a chance, and now he is running more than one person's life. If he continues to live he will just ruin more!" Sil shouted.

The teachers who were in the canteen were soon on the move. Seeing the students fighting they were attempting to jump in and stop it, but they just found themselves being hit away by several lashes of water that would appear out of nowhere.

All of this was being done by Sil.

Now all of the students were staying well clear of Sil and Zhen, and soon a big pop was heard as Zhen's shoulder had been pulled out from his socket.

'Damn, if Sil is like this, then no one can stop him.' Chucky thought.

"Quinn, answer me, come to the canteen straight away, something has happened with Sil, he's out of control!"

Chapter 1004: Spoiled Brat

A desperate call was made to Quinn, but Chucky was unsure if it had gone through or not. He was too panicked and just shouted a message down his receiver, hoping it would go through and Quinn would know what to do because if someone didn't step in to stop what was happening, there would be a dead student on the canteen floor.

If this was to happen, Chucky truthfully didn't know how the Cursed faction would recover from such a thing.

He knew that Quinn was making great efforts to convince others that the Cursed faction was the right place to be, but once this got out, that the Cursed had sent their own men in the school under disguise and ended up killing a student. No one would want to join a group like that.

Grabbing the black balls around his belt, Chucky threw them, aiming for Sil's legs.

'I'm sorry, Sil! But my job is to protect you, and this might hurt a little!'

However, as the black balls got close, they were stopped mid-air, and with the hand that was free, he slowly made the balls come towards the palm of his hands and held them in place. While the others continued to hold up Zhen.

Once again, another pop was heard as Zhen's other arm had been dislocated.

"He can do that with one hand. Just how strong is Sil?" Swin thought, now he was starting to think that the rumours of when Sil had defeated the head general weren't exaggerated at all. With this level of strength, he could tell Sil was immensely strong. No one currently in the room could stop him.

The reason Sil's telekinesis was strong was because not only had he gathered the powers of those close to him, but in the morning, still sticking to his task, he had touched other students as well, attempting to find their ability, so Sil abilities were amped up to the maximum.

"Did you forget I have your ability as well?" Sil said, holding the back balls.

"You're not going to hit me, are you!?" Chucky shouted. "We're on the same side."

"Really, didn't you just attempt to hit me?" Sil replied.

After hearing this response, Chucky knew he was in for a load of hurt. Something had snapped to Sil, and he was beyond reasoning. The balls had left his hands, and the speed accelerated, hitting him in both of his thighs, crushing the bones underneath his muscles and causing him to fall to the floor.

All thought of Venus and Swin intervening and trying to stop Sil had gone out the window, but not Shiro.

"Sil, what are you doing! Didn't you tell me not to kill someone before? How I would regret it for the rest of my life. You would too, wouldn't you!?" Shiro shouted out and pleaded.

"You're right, because look at what's happened to me," Sil said in a voice that sounded like it was in pure pain. Shiro didn't know how heavy Sil's words were.

"Where the hell are you, Quinn!" Chucky shouted.

At that moment, the doors opened wide, and someone could be seen running through all the students.

"I'm not Quinn, but I'm just as good!" Peter shouted as he jumped up in the air and entered the open area where the two were fighting, but he stood there still for a couple of seconds as he was confused.

"Wait, what?!" Peter thought.

'Did he not get my message? I thought Quinn had sent him, I guess it was something else, and he doesn't know what's happening.' Chucky thought.

"Sil, stop Sil, he's gone crazy!" Chucky shouted.

The reason why Peter had arrived in the canteen was due to his soul weapon returning to him. Peter could only create one mud mask at a time with his soul weapon, and when it was destroyed, Peter knew something was up.

Based on the current time, he realised that all the students would be in the canteen. However, he thought Sil would be the one that was hurt and not the other way round, hence his confusion. Seeing Chucky on the floor hurt, and everyone spread out everywhere, he was trying to figure out what happened.

"Sil, put the stupid student down, I know they're annoying, but this is too far!" Peter demanded.

"Isn't this our goal? Isn't this what we should be doing? Getting rid of these people that make the world worse. This is the easiest way. People like him made Vorden and Quinn's life harder at school. I'm helping everyone even if they don't realise it." Til said.

Hearing these words, a vein started to stick out from Peter's head, one of his hands opened wide, straightening his fingers, and he began to walk forward.

Seeing this, Sil attempted to use his telekinesis power to slow down Peter, and it worked, but Peter pushed through with his strength.

"Sil, let me go and give you the slap that you deserve, you spoiled brat!" Peter shouted, stepping through the force. It felt like he had an elephant that weighed several tons on his back, and it was attempting to drag him back, gritting his teeth, he continued to move forward. "You think people can't change, especially kids? What about me!"

"You must have known what I did to Quinn back then. According to you, I deserved to die as well! And I might agree with you, but I try everyday to make up for what I have done!" Peter shouted, moving forward again.

Now, Sil had no choice but to drop Zhen to the floor and use both hands to stop Peter back, who was now around two meters apart from him.

"General Peter is strong." Swin thought, knowing how much power Sil had to be using right now, and Peter was walking through even that.

'Sil, I know you're upset, I know you want Vorden back, I know you're angry, but don't take it out on these students. Take it out on me! You think you're the only one that doesn't miss Vorden! He and Quinn were the only friends I had during school. I would do anything I could to bring him back right here, but I can't!

"You doing any of this crap is helping no one and is only bringing more trouble to the people that are still here!" Peter said, finally raising his hand above his head, and moving it slowly down. Sil stood there still using his ability as Peter's hand touched Sil's face.

It was hardly a slap, as there was no speed giving no power into it, but it was the only thing Peter could do as his fingers brushed his cheek.

"Sil, stop it now!" Quinn said, having rushed in.

Everyone seeing General Hardy now arrive were relieved, but after hearing the rumours and witnessing Sil's power, they were all still afraid.

Quinn looked at Peter, who was still, and the student on the floor. He couldn't imagine what happened, but when he looked at Sil now, his face was full of tears.

'Did Sil do all of this? Did I make a mistake thinking that he was ready to be with other kids? I thought that bringing him to school would make him better, but it might have made him worse. I shouldn't have forced him into a situation he didn't want to be in. Part of this is my fault.'

"I'm sorry, Quinn, I don't know why...." Sil managed to blurt out and finally dropped his hands.

In dropping his hands, the powers that were being used on Peter were finally free, and Peter could move again.

Everyone seeing Sil cry in place was wondering just what was going on. Was it all over? Or was he soon going to attempt to blast everyone in the room? No one dared make a move in a situation like this. It was just common sense.

Lifting his hand up again, Peter swung with a strong force and slapped Sil across the face, sending his body spinning a couple of times before he eventually fell to the floor and had passed out.

"I told you I would give you a slap!" Peter said. "The crisis has been stopped."

Chapter 1005: Young master

It was a daring act, to say the least from Peter. The students thought that what he had done was reckless, and at the same time, they were touched. For Peter had risked his life getting in the middle of a crazy student to save all of theirs.

A round of applause had started as the students thanked him for saving their lives. However, there was one little slip up that had occurred.

"That was the one that defeated the head General, right? Well, I kind of believe those rumours now. He could have killed everyone. Was he really going to pull Zhen's limbs off?"

"Thankfully, General Peter was here. The Cursed faction really has some strong people."

"Speaking of, did you hear what Sil said at the end? He was saying sorry to Quinn?"

"Quinn...Quinn Dilfus? Wait, you don't think he was saying sorry to the Cursed faction leader, Quinn Talen, did you, and he was looking at...."

A few of the students had caught on to what Sil had said at the end. Many people were named Quinn, but the one person he was looking at when he said these words was General Hardy, when he had entered the room.

'It looks like my luck is up. What else can I do now?' Quinn thought.

However, before he had revealed himself to all the students, another person had a brilliant idea.

"Did this student say, Quinn!" Peter said out loud in a booming voice so everyone could hear clearly. He even stood facing the crowd as if it was a theatre performance. "Could he mean the 'Cursed leader' Quinn Talen, but that's my faction leader." Placing his hand on top of his head, Peter started to look through the crowd and looked past everyone.

"I don't see my faction leader anywhere. The boy must have gone mad!" Peter said.

Seeing what he was trying to do, another student decided to help out. Shiro walked up to Sil and started to kneel by his side.

'Here it goes.'

"Oh Sil, you always wanted to impress Quinn from the Cursed faction. I guess you felt guilty that he might find out about what you did. Now you will never be able to join them!" Shiro said.

Although the students found it weird how they were emphasising certain words, they could see no signs of Quinn when looking around. At least they were unable to see a young seventeen-year-old boy with curly black hair in the room.

They didn't have much time to think about it either. It didn't take long for Hayley, and a few other teachers to enter the room, and they were starting to deal with the problem. Healing the injured students and getting a report of what exactly happened.

'Well, let's hope that works. I might be out of trouble. But I can't say the same for Sil.' Quinn thought.

A lot of students were at the canteen when the events had happened, so it was impossible to hide, and everyone had already learnt of what happened. There were two key factors that were being passed around.

Sil really was as strong as the past rumours said and was a frightening uncontrolled, unstable student. Peter was a fearless god in their eyes. The said general who went up against that exact person.

The good news coming from this, was the Cursed faction's reputation had increased once again with people looking up to Peter, deciding that they wanted to join and follow someone like him.

The bad news, as expected, Quinn was called into a meeting with Oscar. The two of them were in the office, and they were sitting opposite each other at a desk. For some reason, Quinn felt quite embarrassed. Last time, Quinn had said some words to Oscar, and now he was in here because of one of his problems.

Oscar had just finished giving Quinn a detailed report of everything that happened. The injuries caused to the members of staff, students hit that were in the crossfire and even Chucky's injuries.

"Quinn, I believe I am quite the reasonable person, despite what you may think," Oscar said. "I understand, after what I had seen those Blade's do, I know how hard it must be to control someone like that, but when you asked him to be a student of ours, I thought you would have at least had him under control."

"Now, if you insist on him staying, I will have to -"

"It's okay, Sil will leave," Quinn said, as he was already prepared for all of this. "Honestly, there is no other choice. I already tried to cover up his tracks once. If you're going to ask me to make sure this won't happen again, I can't say I can, unless he is by my side twenty-four seven, and if that's the case, then there is no point in him being here." Quinn said.

"That's good to hear, and it makes it easier on us," Oscar replied. "Honestly, Innu was already blaming all of this on you. When they found out that this involved

Shiro and Sil from your class and you had tried to hide him, he thought you had planned this.

"Thankfully, since Zhen is actually under head General Sach, he decided to not get any more involved in this matter. This answer should satisfy Innu." Oscar claimed.

Back in the classroom, it was the end of the school day, and Quinn was standing while Sil was sitting alone on a single desk amongst many others that were all empty.

"Are you going to tell me what happened then, or is it going to be a silent match between the two of us?" Quinn asked.

Finally breaking the silence between the two of them.

"It's been building up," Sil said. "I keep hearing things, things I don't like, things that Vorden hated in the past. Things that Raten would have dealt with if they went too far. When I got hit today, I just thought..my mind went black...I was asking for answers, but I never got a reply."

"You mean you were asking for answers from them, inside your head? Are you talking about Vorden and Raten?" Quinn asked.

Sil nodded in response.

"When I didn't get a reply, and there were no answers, I didn't know what to do. I wanted someone to just tell me what was right and wrong. I thought if I just kept doing something, anything, they would come back."

It appeared that Quinn had made a mistake. It was too soon for Sil. There hadn't been enough time, time spent where Sil was alone in his mind.

"I think you know that you can't stay here any longer, but I don't want you to think that your time was wasted here. Before you go, there are some people that want to say goodbye." Quinn said it was the signal for the door to open, and three students were seen walking in, Swin, Venus and Shiro.

"We heard that you won't be at the school anymore," Shiro said.

"Yeah, Hardy said that the Cursed faction has agreed to take you in and they're going to teach you personally. If you ask me, that's a lot cooler than staying here. You're getting a head start!" Swin said excitedly. Venus hit him with his elbow, as this wasn't meant to be something exciting.

"Sil, thank you," Venus said. "Just don't beat yourself up over this too much. If I had your power, there were times where I would have probably done the same thing to people who were picking on us, or worse. I think we've all had those thoughts."

"We also want to say it won't be goodbye," Shiro added. "If you're going to be in the Cursed faction, then we will see each other soon because when we finish school, we want to join the Cursed faction as well."

Sil didn't say anything, but he did smile, which warmed Quinn's heart a little.

With the goodbyes said, it was time for Sil's journey at school to end, but Quinn would still remain for the time being. Escorting him back to the Cursed ship was Chucky as they flew through space.

"You know, going back to school was kinda nice," Chucky said while flying the ship. "It was different compared to last time, and it also reminded me of all the stupid things I used to do at school."

Of course, as usual Sil said nothing, so Chucky was just left to talk to himself, but when they had finally landed and docked into the Cursed ship, Sil said something that caught his ear.

"Thanks for helping me while I was at school," Sil said, walking forward.

Just ahead, not too far from where they were, they could see that another ship had docked not too long ago. In fact, the people still hadn't left the landing bay, as for who was there, it was Leo, Erin, Nate and Layla.

"Oh, hey guys," Layla said with a smile. "What are you guys doing here?"

"It's a long story," Chucky replied and then noticed someone he didn't recognise.
"Who's he?"

Turning around, in his butler suit, his eyes fell upon Sil.

"Now, this is a surprise to meet you here, isn't it, young master?" Brock said.

Chapter 1006: Who is the strongest?

When the others had heard what Brock had said, they were confused for a second. Throughout their whole journey, Brock had been avoiding a certain question. Whenever speaking, Brock would constantly talk about his master, and now when he saw Sil, he was referring to him as little master?

They were wondering what exactly Sil had to do in all of this. Looking at him for some answers. Sil had already lept back several feet and had both his hands out in an attacking position. He was constantly darting his eyes around the room.

Sil recognised him instantly, from when he was younger to his times when Vorden was in control of his body. This man had worked at the Blade mansion and wasn't just anyone, but was the head butler there as well.

One of the strongest members outside of the main family, but this wasn't Sil's concern. If Brock was here, he feared that perhaps Hilston was here as well.

"Worry not, young master," Brock said with a smile. "Hilston and the others are not here. In fact, although I am the Brock you know, I am not the same Brock that they knew."

Tapping his face, in almost a second, Brock's appearance had changed, and now instead of the dirty blonde hair colour he had before, it was greyed out, and a scar had formed over his right eye. His neat look from before was gone as his tangly black hair was flowing from both sides.

"I can see you are shocked, but there is too much to explain, and I would hate to have to explain myself twice. Besides, before that, didn't you lovely ladies say you would give me a tour?" Brock asked as he bowed down to Layla and Erin.

Even they couldn't get used to his sudden change. The ability that was just used had to be something similar to Peter's transformation ability.

"Come on, let's get to it!" Brock said. He was tired of standing around and was now ignoring Sil. "Remember, we still haven't decided what to do yet. This is your chance to impress my master and me."

The others all awkwardly looked at each other, and Sil had eased up a bit, but before doing anything, they thought they should call for one person first, Sam. He had been given a few details about this man, that he was a vampire, and Sam was told everything that Leo and the others knew about him.

It was only because of his okay that they let him on this ship. When Sam finally arrived, he looked at Brock.

'If I'm right, then this man is related to him.' Sam thought as he gave a smile and started the tour around the place.

It might not have been the wisest choice to show an enemy the base of the Cursed faction along with all their powers and supplies. Still, Sam knew that this man was alone, and even if he was strong, he wouldn't be able to take them all out.

Besides, that wasn't their goal anyway. If they truly wanted to team up with them and wanted to defeat the Dalki, then they would want to keep them alive as long as possible.

The tour seemed to be going well, or at least Sam thought it was as Brock didn't say anything and just nodded. Sil, although he wasn't meant to come along initially, had decided to tag along at the back.

He was still worried that something might happen, and if so, he would be there to stop it. However, things went a little strange when they entered a particular room.

Sam thought this was a must on the list if one was to impress someone because people were consistently impressed by his skills. They had entered Logan's research room.

The sound of clanking and tinkering was heard as they entered the room. As usual, Logan wouldn't look at them until he had at least finished what he was currently working on.

While they were waiting for him, they looked around the room, and that's when Brock noticed a few things, such as a teleporter designed after the vampire ones. As well as a particular device.

"So this is the device that might cause us a heap of trouble," Brock said, looking at it.

Although Logan wasn't finished working on whatever he was working on, hearing the voice, he had stopped in the middle of doing something for the first time. A first for everyone. He lifted up his goggles and dropped the tool in his hand.

"Oh, false alarm," Logan said, getting back to work.

"I guess we have both changed a bit since you last saw me," Brock said and tapped his face again to change it back to his butler appearance from before.

After having just picked up the tool, Logan had dropped it again.

"Brock, Brock from Blade island, is Eno with you!" Was Logan's first words.

Sam and the others didn't quite understand why Logan had said this, but it looked like Sam's guess was partially correct. Brock did have something to do with Eno.

"Wait, is the master he keeps referring to is Eno? The same Richard Eno that Quinn has been looking for, for so long!?" Layla figured it out.

Back when Logan was on the Blade island, he had been set free by Brock and even told where to go to escape the island. He didn't understand then, but he did know that Brock was trying to keep him going. He told him to search for Richard Eno.

In fact, with Brock being his only lead, Logan was thinking about going back to the Blade island to find him, but he never thought that he would see him on the ship.

"I guess now you all have too many questions to ask that we can't continue our wonderful tour," Brock said. "Very well, you guys have been patient enough. Let's have a little chat, shall we?"

Inside the command centre, for the time being, the place was cleared. All those that would usually be sitting away at their terminals had been asked to take a break. This ship could mostly run on autopilot anyway, and Logan was there if anything serious happened.

Not everyone in the Cursed leaders had been called, only those that were present at the time. Sam still didn't know what information should and shouldn't have been shared. So currently present was Nate, Leo, Erin, Layla and from the other group, Sil, Sam and Logan.

"I know you have a lot of questions, and I know a lot of you are interested in who I ...Who we are, so I would say please hold any additional questions you have until I have at least told my whole reasoning for being here, and again Sil, as I told you before you can relax. I assure you I am not part of the Blade family. In the first place, I am a vampire and always have been."

"However, my relationship with the Blade family is genuine, and I know everything about you, Vorden, Raten and all of the other kids at the temple."

The piece that they finally needed was here. Logan wanted to know the truth, the truth of why his parents trusted Richard Eno, and what they have exactly been doing this whole time.

"First, I think it's only right of me to answer the questions you have about Pure first. as stated before, me and my master work together, and you are correct. He is Richard Eno. We were deciding who we should put all of our resources into helping out."

"After all, the humans strongest forces were divided, and while they should have been fighting together against the Dalki, they were split. So Eno had no choice but to stay out of the limelight for a while, figuring things out as they went along.

"Also, there are far more moving parts than everyone here at the table probably realises. One change could affect a whole leap of change going on. Now about Pure, unfortunately, their base is located on a giant submarine, and their location is always on the move deep in earth's waters.

"However, now that I have provided you with this information, then I'm sure you can figure out a way to track them. At least Logan can. If he could finish creating that Demon beast locator, he can create something that would be able to find a device as large as a submarine.

"As for the other question you had, I'm sorry about this, although we do know the answer, I do not. That will have to be a question for Richard Eno, as he is the only one that has personally met him.

"I only follow what he says, so I only know so much."

Clenching his hand, Leo was a bit annoyed by his answer. He was expecting to find the person but now was told to wait even longer. However, after taking a deep breath, he realised being impatient would change nothing. He had waited so long, and finding out if his suspicions were correct or not, wasn't a big deal. He would continue doing what he had been doing, assuming it was that person.

"Now, what I'm about to tell you all next is very important, so listen up. This is about the Dalki, the vampires and the humans. If I was to ask you the question of who the strongest human in existence is, what would your answers be?" Brock asked. "Don't worry, you can speak."

"Oscar, the supreme commander," Erin said.

"Owen Graylash," Nate answered.

"Quinn?" Layla shyly answered.

"Quinn is no longer human," Leo answered. "For this question, I would have to have faced every human in existence to know it."

"No, you are all forgetting someone, someone that we don't even need to fight to know that they are the strongest human. Hilston Blade of the Blade family." Sam said.

"Correct, Hilston Blade, The Blade family," Brock said, looking at Sil. "They play one of the biggest roles in all of this, and they don't even know it."

Chapter 1007: Protect the Blade family?

After meeting Brock and finding out who he is, or who he was as well, Sam had his suspicions that the Blade family would be involved in all of this somehow. Due to Brock working at the Balde family. The fact that he was using some sort of disguise and how long he had to have been there for it just made sense.

Richard Eno, just didn't seem like the type of person to do things on the whim. Everything he did, everything that happened was done with caution. In a way, it reminded Sam a little of himself, but the difference was, while Sam was playing chess with one opponent, it felt like Richard Eno was playing with four at the same time, and each one of the moves he made was intertwined with the others.

"We as a group over the years have worked very hard to make sure that we have eyes everywhere." Brock continued to explain. "We have eyes in the Human world. We know everything that happened, from the start of the Civil war to before most of you here were born. We have kept eyes in the vampire world. We know what happened with Quinn, and Fex. However, we are unable to get involved so much there.

"Last, we even have eyes in the Dalki world as well, which is why we have decided that we can't just sit back and watch to see how this plays out, we have to act now. Some things that Eno had predicted didn't come true, and at the same time, unpredicted things have happened."

Sam being the type of person he was, so badly wanted to interrupt Brock at this moment. For each thing he was telling them there were hundreds of questions he wanted to ask, even things about the past before he was born.

However, he wouldn't do so, and he had a feeling Brock had already been told what he could and couldn't tell the others.

"For now, I will tell you what you need to know." Brock said. "From the beginning the Blades were an exciting group of people. From generation to generation they had the goal that was passed down of becoming the greatest human ever alive, and even before abilities, they had somewhat achieved that goal with their super being bodies.

"They would even give vampires a run for their money. However, our interest in them grew, not when they had discovered their ability, but when they had discovered a giant stone tablet. "

Hearing this, Logan and Sil knew exactly what they were talking about. Anyone who had been to the Blade island would. For the giant tablet could be seen when approaching the island, and Sil had grown up on the island itself.

"That tablet was special, I thought it was just a giant rock?" Sil interrupted.

Brock didn't give him a telling off, but instead smiled at Sil. It seemed like Sil probably was the only person who would be able to interrupt Brock without him making a fuss over it.

"That rock is more special than any of you know, but again, the details about that will not benefit you in any way." Brock said. "What is important is that the Blades decided to set their base of operation around the giant tablet. Building a castle and a place to call home. Due to them finding the tablet, Eno had kept their eye on them, on top of that they were extraordinary humans that seemed to keep getting better by the second.

"At the time, the tablet was important to Eno's research and what he wanted to do was keep an eye on it. So he asked me to personally infiltrate the Blade family. With my abilities it was an easy task to do. I could change who I was at any point. My main goal was to keep the Blade family a secret so no one would find out about the giant stone.

"I believe I did my task quite well, silencing anything about them and as generations passed it became a practice within their own family to keep it a secret. Even though they didn't know who or why someone was doing it before.

"However, this didn't become an important factor until a later time." Brock turned to Logan. "Logan, if you have discovered the base then I believe you already know the answer to how the Dalki were created. From a great demon tier beast that was shaped like a dragon. I don't know if you know the details. Still, the demon tier dragon originally had two heads, and it had a special ability, allowing it to split its body into two.

"The vampires had only managed to capture half a demon tier beast, and that is why the Dalki are incomplete."

Logan knew most of these details already thanks to the logs his family had left him. It seemed he was correct and the reason the Dalki were attacking earth was due to the search of the other half of the demon tier beast.

"The Dalki have been searching for the other half of the demon tier beast, that is why they haven't given up on attacking, and they never will until they run out of their lifespan. That other half of the dragon one day had actually arrived on earth, and the people who had dealt with it were the Blade family. Before anyone could even attempt to see it. But they didn't defeat it, instead, it's under their control and is still at the Blade island."

"Wait!" Logan interrupted. "We were on the Blade island, but me, Peter, Quinn and Borden, we never saw the Dragon!"

"The dragon was there." Sil said. "It has always been there, they keep it by the giant tablet."

Now Sil understood what Brock meant. The Blade family just saw the Dragon as a pet. They had no idea that the Dalki were after it.

"One half of the dragon is in the vampire world, one half in the Human world. The Dalki already have found out about the one in the vampire world, however they still do not know the location of the one in the Human world." Brock said. "The Blade island was meant to be kept a secret to all except a small few."

"But then someone had gone searching for the Blades. Someone that shouldn't have known about them and succeeded in finding them."

The others could only guess that this was referring to Quinn.

"Now, with Hilston in control of the Blades, he no longer cares about hiding himself from the world. Even worse, our line of protection is no longer there."

"That day when Hilston went to search for you Sil, I was on board that ship as well. I knew that the Blades had decided that they would no longer be hiding themselves, so we needed to come up with a new plan."

"I was the one that had chosen to advise you Sam, and Paul, on how to turn your companions. At the time I also took Mona from the Bree family, she is safe with us. We did so, because if need be, and we need someone else to move the dragon, there needs to be someone who can control the dragon and copy her abilities."

At that moment, everyone on the table looked towards Sil. Even Mona didn't have the power to control a demon tier beast. Which meant the only person that could was one that had an ability as strong as that of Hilston.

The fact that Mona was still alive and was with Eno came as a shock to a lot of them, and they needed time to take everything in.

"You have always been an interesting person Sil, and we have also kept our eyes on you, just in case something like this has happened. The only thing we didn't expect was Hilston to lose that day and go into hiding, and for you to be taken away by someone else. The Dalki are going to move soon, and we need to protect the dragon at all costs."

When Brock said he had a lot to talk about, he wasn't wrong. Still there were many things everyone wanted to ask him. Logan wanted to ask about who killed his parents, what their relationship was, but before all of that, Sam had another question before everyone else.

"I don't think we have the right to go ahead and be making decisions on our leaders behalf like this. I know everyone wants to ask questions, but there is one person that needs to be here, and that's Quinn." Sam said. "He should know about all of this."

Brock started to smile again.

"I'm afraid I have already told you everything that I can say. So any question you do wish to ask I will be unable to answer them. However, if you wish for me to clarify on some things that I have already spoken about then feel free. As for Quinn, you do not need to worry about him. I'm sure, Eno and Quinn will be talking right about now. And when everything is settled they will either return here together, or apart."

Chapter 1008: Visiting an old planet

Quinn had been in a bit of a sombre mood after what had happened to Sil. He couldn't help but feel bad for his situation, but there was really nothing they could do for now. In a way, he also didn't think that just bringing back Vorden and Raten would help things.

It would undoubtedly stabilise the situation with someone as powerful as him, but from the way Sil spoke, Sil was the original owner of that body. At any point and time, he could take over if he wanted to. So if in the future, even with Vorden and Raten, something terrible happened, Sil would still need help.

'Maybe we can figure it out with Raten and Vorden when they are back, but we still haven't found anyone with an ability that could help.' Quinn thought. 'Even if that ability has reappeared in someone, it could be dormant in their body, or the person could just be a baby. I wish I knew more about abilities and how they worked because right now, it's like looking for a needle in a haystack.'

Today, before school was to start, the homeroom teachers had been called in for a meeting. It was a bit more casual as the meeting took place in the Teacher's lounge, where teachers generally just relaxed on the sofa or prepared for their lessons.

The one who was giving the meeting was Samantha. Quinn went ahead and sat down with Fex and Peter, who were both teachers. But Helen wasn't one so she hadn't been invited.

"I've called you all here today to talk about the first portal outing that will be taking place," Samantha announced. "Now, as you know, we fear that the tensions are quite high at the moment. So we have banned portal outings to orange portal planets for students, so they will only be able to visit the green portal planets.

"However, since there are larger groups and far more students this time, there will need to be more teachers. Now Head General Innu has agreed to go on the expedition for support. I will also be heading out, despite neither of us being teachers.

"All homeroom teachers must attend with their classes for this expedition, and students will only hunt within an area with their teachers. This is just for them to experience hunting. We will still award points for Beast crystals that will go to certain houses, but students will not just be able to go off and explore on their own. Does everyone understand?"

Quinn was actually quite pleased with the new measures they had put this time for the hunt. Although the students wouldn't have a real-world experience compared to when he went out, it was safer this way. If they had done this last time, then maybe fewer students' lives would have been lost to the Dalki.

"Are other teachers allowed to come on this trip if they wish?" Fex asked, raising his hand.

"I don't see why not. The campus will mostly be empty, so if you wish, you may." Samantha replied.

Fex was happy that at least he wouldn't be left out of this one.

With the meeting over, Quinn returned to his class and delivered the news. After doing so, a lot of the class was quite depressed.

"What's wrong? Did something happen?" Quinn asked.

Venus looked around at all the unhappy faces and decided to answer for them.

"Teacher, we aren't stupid, and we honestly don't know why the school has decided to do this, but each of us was the weakest of our schools, and they've grouped us all together. Doesn't that mean our class will do the worst?"

It seems that self-confidence was a huge issue, but rightfully so because what Venus had said wasn't a guess. It was a fact. Even with beast weapons, it only gave them a fighting chance. Perhaps they would survive but to beat the other classes in a hunt was another story altogether.

On top of that, not everyone in Quinn's homeroom class was part of the beast class. Only about half of them attended, so they were in an even worse position.

"Okay, listen up, if you want to get stronger, then when your lessons are over, instead of heading to your dorms, head back here to your homeroom classroom. I'm going to teach you all a little something." Quinn said with a smile on his face.

He had finally decided that these kids at least needed a fighting chance. Oscar was right, it would be best to prepare everyone for the war upon them, but there was a problem. Teaching everyone Qi wouldn't change the balance.

The strong would possibly just get stronger, making the gap between students stay the same. Although it might be unfair for now, Quinn had decided to teach the weakest kids in his class Qi so that they would be on an equal level as everyone else.

'I think Leo will understand what I have done.' Quinn thought.

When the lessons ended, Quinn expected a few of his students to return to him, not all of them. However, every single one was now in his classroom, wanting to see what he wanted to teach.

"Today, I'm going to teach you something that will improve your natural body strength. Your punches will be stronger, your body will move faster, and when you get hit, it will hurt a lot less, but there's one thing I want you all to promise me now." Quinn said.

"I don't want you to try to get revenge after this. If you become stronger than those that used to bully you, then take pride in that. Don't become what you hated."

Some of the students started to talk to each other, wondering why they would ever do that? But Quinn knew that some people would, and he hoped when they were put in a similar situation, they would think back to what he said right now.

"Also, it's safe to say what I'm about to teach you all should be kept a secret. Otherwise, others outside of this class might abuse the power." Quinn explained.
"What I'm teaching you all today is called Har..."

When teaching the kids Qi, Quinn had chosen to rename it to Har. His reasoning for this was that he didn't want the military to know what he was doing just yet or Pure members. Word would get out of what was happening eventually.

Unfortunately, Qi had a negative stigma of being attached to Pure, but at the same time was highly sought after due to the display of its powers.

Naming it Har, a technique that would just improve one's body, didn't sound that great, and that was exactly what Quinn was aiming for.

Over the next few days, the students began practising every day. There were even some students that decided it was a waste of time and had stopped showing up. Still, those that continued to learn the techniques and, using Quinn's guidance, had prevailed. It was finally time for the class to go out on their first outing.

Quinn looked at his class all geared up, ready to go through the green portal, while Peter and Fex were by his side.

"Ready class," Quinn asked, and they nodded.

Going through the teleporter, when they arrived, it was a place that Quinn recognised quite well. The shelter was larger than it was before, but there was an unforgettable feeling of the planet.

"Do you remember this place?" Peter asked.

"How could I forget? It was where we first ran into the Dalki back then." Quinn whispered back.

It was a primarily desert planet all over, and the orange buildings made from sandstone stood out. In their memories, an unforgettable place.

Samantha made sure everyone was present from Quinn's class, and then they would head off to a specific hunting area together. Classes were sent in hour intervals to not overwhelm the hunting areas and give everyone an equal amount of time.

While Peter had decided to go off with Quinn and the students, Fex chose to do a bit of exploring.

'I originally came here to explore what Human life is like, and all I've done is hang out at schools. Let's experience real human life.' Fex thought.

Walking away from the training area and he headed to the main Shelter centre, where the place was filled with shops and merchants but what Fex was looking for was something else.

"That's it, this place called a bar? There's meant to be some really good drinks in here." Fex said with a smile, but he stopped for a few seconds as he pushed the door open.

'No, it can't be. Why do I smell a vampire here, and it's not Quinn.'

Chapter 1009: Something in the air

The destination had been set for Quinn and his students to leave. He had been given a map and was to guide them to a certain area, on the map one could also see the other areas and the other users with a map as well. Some of the other areas were fairly close, with the borders touching. Quinn was a little worried that this might cause some trouble, but this would always be the case with how many classes were hunting on the same planet.

It was vastly different to before when Quinn had to do his assessment. In the past, one would have to do everything on their own. From researching the best areas for hunting, to gathering the map themselves.

He had learnt a lot from those days, but it looked like the military were fast tracking things with the new students and being extra cautious. Once researching the area, Quinn was then to start a device that would time them. Then, the students in his class in groups of five, were free to hunt.

"Hey, won't this be a little unfair?" Shiro complained. "I mean, what happens if there's just more beasts in the other area."

"The other teachers have assured me that they have attempted to make this as fair as possible." Quinn replied. "However, I do have to admit, that it's nearly impossible to make it entirely fair. Take this as a lesson Shiro, nothing in life is completely fair."

The students got to work, and were fighting basic tier beasts, some of them were frightened of the beasts unable to perform well. Just like before, the class were currently going against the sand worm, who were a similar size to regular humans but had razor sharp teeth spiraling on their insides when they opened their mouths.

What surprised the students was the fact that they fared better than they had expected. Even when scared, they were able to dodge the oncoming attacks, and using their weapons they were able to tackle the beasts with ease.

'Looks like they are using Qi quite well.' Quinn said, as he felt a bit relaxed compared to his usual tightness from before.

'I have to say, I am quite surprised as well.' Vincent added. 'The Qi that you have taught them isn't so noticeable when they are fighting. I suppose when you used it, it had more of an explosive effect due to combining it with your blood powers, but with the kids, unless they were to physical show off their superhuman feats, it doesn't stand out too much while giving them an edge at the same time.'

'Yes.' Quinn replied. 'We can actually thank Shiro for that, I noticed it after his fight, that no one really seemed to notice his change so much. Students and others are used to seeing incredible humans due to the beast gear, and beast gear isn't always visible on the outside.

'Of course, this would be different if I was to attempt to teach them the second stage of Qi, but there is no need for that. At the same time, I feel if they are relying on Qi then it means that they will no longer focus on their abilities when they need to.'

Shiro, Venus and Swin were doing well using a combination of their abilities. Venus was using his ability to lure our the Sandwomrs while Shiro would then pluck them into the air, lastly the one that would attack them was Shiro with his duel blades. The other two students in their group, would be protecting the ability users.

Swin and Venus could also use weapons if need be when they were in trouble.

While Quinn was in the middle of watching this, he had heard a massive scream come from his left side. In an instant he had appeared by where the screaming student was, and could see that a worm had latched onto a female student's arm. Quinn quickly with his bare hand dismembered half of the Worm's body, then grabbing onto the other half, he used his second stage of Qi to create a very thin layer around where it's teeth would be. It was like one was putting a thick piece of cloth under the teeth. Now Quinn could safely pull it off and cursed the worm with his bare hands.

"Are you okay?" Quinn asked. He could then see that the worm was unable to pierce through the students armor, the girl was completely fine but she had just screamed from fear.

However, what Quinn didn't realize, was that he had just gone from one side of the hunting area, to another in an instant.

"Hey, wasn't general Hardy on the other side of the hunting area just now, how did he get here so fast?"

"I don't know maybe he ran, or he was actually closer then we thought."

"No, I'm sure he was just with Shiro and there group, and there literally on the other side."

Hearing these comments, Quinn just noticed what he had done.

'Damn, I guess I'm still worried about the students. My own experience from last time is effecting me.'

Quinn wasn't relaxed at all, this place had brought a lot of bad memories for him, and he just couldn't shake the felling that something was going to happen.

Over where Fex was at, he decided to enter the bar anyway. Inside the place was dimly lit and there were tables with stools placed all over. It was meant to be designed similar to the bars around a thousand years ago.

The people inside all looked to be middle aged men, with a few females here and there. However, he wasn't in the happy mood he was expecting to be, instead Fex was on guard. For the smell from earlier was coming from this very bar.

Fex looked around, but he mostly let his nose lead him, and that's when he found himself at a table with two dark red sofas either side. A man wearing a type of cowboy hat could be seen covering most of his face, and he had a drink in front of him.

Without saying anything, Fex sat down opposite the strange man.

"Before I would have probably dragged you from the bar, and taken you back to the vampire world myself." Fex said. "But the new me is going to ask what exactly you are doing here. There are a lot of human students on this planet and as a teacher if your going to cause trouble, I can't just turn a blind eye."

The man took a swing from his drink, and then placed the glass down, he then lifted his hat a bit so he could have a look at the youngster opposite him.

"You seem quite strong, for someone so young, but if you think you could drag me out of this place, you would have to be dreaming." The vampire stranger replied, then he took off his cowboy looking hat and placed it off to the side.

It was a vampire with a twirling gray mustache and long gray hair in a ponytail could be seen.

Seeing the vampire clearly, Fex didn't recognize him at all, and it was blatant by the look on his face. The man then lifted up two fingers.

"It looks like either the vampires no longer teach about me no more, or you aren't one to study." The man said.

"I was never the studying type at school, but I can tell by your smell your just a regular vampire." Fex said. "Now, I'll ask you again, what are you doing here, or do I have to take you back myself?"

The man picked up the glass one more time and took a swig until it was empty, then with the glass he slammed it on top of Fex's hand that was placed on the table.

The glass had crushed Fex hand showing the man wasn't messing around.

"Very well, why don't you teach me a lesson. I wanted to get an idea of how strong the new generation are anyway."

A different message than usual. My story My dragon system is ending tomorrow with an event. If you guys didn't know it is the prequel to My Vampire system set many years in the past and has a lot of links that people have already found interesting.

Chapter 1010: No big event?

Time was going by quite quickly for Quinn, and now he was more cautious about when he would use his skills, or at least his full power. At the same time, he took this as an opportunity to practice himself. With the second stage of Qi, he was able to sense others' Qi more clearly, and could even stretch it out from his body.

However, he couldn't separate it from his body, which was what Quinn assumed was the third stage of Qi. Quinn was careful closing his eyes, listening and watching his surroundings. Seeing the flow of everyone around him, if a student's energy was disrupted or afraid he could tell they were more likely to make a mistake compared to others.

'These are the ones that need help the most, and if I can help them before there are any problems that will be great.' Quinn thought.

Acting before needing to act. It also seemed like the students had mostly forgotten what he had done, since they were far too concerned with the task at hand. As time went on, the student became better at hunting beasts.

"Hey, I think our group may be able to do something, and get a decent spot." Venus said as they were taking a break looking at everyone around them.

There was another advantage Quinn's class had over other classes and it was the fact that they could hunt for longer without stopping. Some students had already figured out that when their MC cells were up, they could fight with Qi instead, and when their Qi was depleted they could switch to their MC cells to defeat the creatures.

Of course, not everyone could do this, as others needed both Qi and their abilities to defeat the basic tier beasts, and although Quinn thought this was an advantage, it really wasn't. As those with a higher level ability tended to have more MC points to use their ability for longer in the first place.

The good news was, that Quinn had to get involved less and less with his students as they gained more confidence. However, that didn't last forever. As people were actively defeating more beasts in certain areas, they were becoming more scarce.

So, Shiro and his group decided to move towards the outer edge of the hunting area. After all, this wasn't just a competition between classes, but even in their classes, their groups would receive a certain amount of points.

When going towards the edge, they found what they were looking for and continued their hunt once again. The five of them were on a large mound of sand, killing sandworms rapidly, when something unexpected had happened. A worm from their left side leapt in the air towards them.

The worm seemed to already be injured with wounds on its body, but not wanting the beast's teeth to dig into his flesh, Shiro ended up cutting it on the spot.

"Hey, that was ours!" A group of kids said, yelling as they ran over, but when they saw who was on the mound they stopped for a second and started whispering to each other.

"What do I care?!" One of the boys said as he walked over. "The beast was already nearly dead and was from our area, so hand over the crystal."

Like a magnet, Shiro and the others seemed to attract trouble.

"Wait, were you guys attempting to steal it!" Another boy said coming up from behind and could see a girl from their group had already carved the Crystal and had one in her hand.

"You know you're not meant to get involved with the other hunting areas. I'll tell you what. You hand us three crystals for that one and we'll keep quiet about this whole thing." The boy said.

The girl's hands were shaking and she had pulled out two more crystals from her pouch and was ready to hand it over to the other boys, when Swin stepped in front of her, blocking their path.

"No, if you had just asked for one crystal then we might have given it to you, but you can't just bully and demand a crystal. We won't be pushed around anymore."

The boys started frowning as if they were annoyed at what they heard. They thought just like in the past, if they were to ask someone who was weaker than them to do something, it would be done, but they were actually arguing and fighting back.

However, a smile soon appeared on one of the students' faces.

"Teacher, these kids were hunting in our hunting area and won't give us our crystals!" One of the boys shouted.

It didn't take long for their homeroom teacher to appear. A male with glasses but he looked like he permanently had a vein sticking out of his forehead.

"What is going on, the rules were made clear from the beginning, I didn't think I would have to deal with this stuff." The teacher said. The man took one look at the kids from the other class, he didn't ask any questions at all and had already made his decision.

"You guys, hand over all the crystals that you hunted in our area."

"Another one of these teachers?" Venus sighed.

"Don't worry, I can't believe they called the teacher because they can't deal with the problem, but the two of us can play that game. Hardy we need help!" Swin shouted.

A gust of wind blowing up the sand in the air flew about everywhere. They covered their eyes to see a figure appear through them, and Hardy was there. Seeing how fast Hardy was appearing to all the students, Swin knew saying they needed help Quinn would be here in an instant, and he was.

"What exactly is the problem?" Quinn asked.

As soon as the teacher saw who it was, he started to sweat.

"Oh no, there's no problem at all, I think just both groups were hunting near the border so there was a little disagreement about who's beast belonged to who. I'll take these guys a little more in and keep an eye on them."

Before Quinn could even say anything, the teacher was already off.

"Well, that wasn't what I was expecting, where was the big fight, the epic moment where Hardy shows them how much better he is than the others." Swin asked.

"I guess it's no longer needed, after what Hardy did to Head general Sach, I think no one wants to mess with him now." Venus replied.

In a way, the students thought that perhaps the pressure they received from other students might have been over for them.

In the middle of the shelter, people were seen scrambling out of an establishment that was simply named 'The bar'. They were unclear what was happening, but just knew two people were inside having a fight and the whole place was completely wrecked.

From outside several crashes and bangs were heard and the noise continued to be heard from within the bar, until eventually someone was seen being kicked through the air. Breaking the doors on their way out and landing on the hard orange ground.

"Frick this guy is tough." Fex said getting up and wiping the blood from his mouth, his hand had already healed from the first wound. "After talking all cool like that, and then I get kicked on my backside. No this ain't happening, not to a nobody."

A few seconds later and the man was seen coming out from the bar.

"Whoever the owner is, I'm sorry for all the damage we have caused. I promise to pay it in full whenever I can."

"Hey everyone!" Fex shouted standing on his two feet. "You're kind of distracting staying here, do you mind if you scoot out of here a little bit so I can take this guy on?" Fex said.

"Oh, still haven't given up. It's good to know that the new generation have heart. Even if they are weaker, but it seems like after so many years no improvements were made. Weren't you meant to be a direct descendant of the thirteenth family? If this is a direct descendant power, then the vampires may not exist for much longer." The man said.

Fex was a little annoyed, after the man had pretended to not know him at all, now he was telling everything about him.

"That's right, sorry, you now belong to the new tenth Cursed family is it, well it seems they are clearly the weakest of the families. " the man said.

"Really, well let's see if you've seen this before." Fex said, as he concentrated and in his hands a giant needle was starting to form,

"A blood weapon and without using a blood crystal, now that is impressive, maybe I was wrong after all. Let's go for round two then." The man said.

Chapter 1011: Can I stab you?

It didn't take long for the mysterious Vampire to figure out what had been summoned seemingly out of nowhere from Fex. However, it did seem to surprise the Vampire as well.

"I'm interested in finding out if this was something you found out yourself or a technique shared amongst the new generation." The Vampire said.

This gave a brief break for the moment. Right now, the two of them weren't being confrontational. In all honesty, Fex's mind was racing at the moment.

For one, his wounds were healing slower than his opponents. He had gotten a few hits in while fighting in the bar, but there didn't seem to be a scratch on the man.

The second reason was what he was now holding in his hand.

'What the hell am I meant to do now!' Fex thought. 'I summoned my blood weapon in a panic, but there's no one to use it on.'

Fex's blood weapon, which was black in colour but clear like glass, needed blood to activate it. This was true for all blood weapons, but Fex's needed blood as an even bigger requirement. The needle itself had to be filled with blood, and then either injected into humans to empower them with strength, or the needle could be injected into himself.

'I can't exactly just stab my needle into one of these random onlookers. They would never let me do such a thing, and it's wrong if I just force them.'

"Is something wrong, or do you need me to attack you first?" The Vampire said, charging forward and now was directly in Fex's face. Lifting up his fingers, red blood strings rose, tangling the Vampire's legs up.

"I wasn't just doing nothing but standing still!" Fex shouted. Using his blood control, any red string left on the ground could be moved slightly without requiring it to be attached to his fingers. Then grabbing the needle, Fex stabbed it right into the Vampire's shoulder, digging in a few inches before it had stopped entirely.

"It's weak, but perhaps because you have no blood, there are plenty of people around you. Why don't you use one of them?" The Vampire said, taking a step forward with a smile.

Looking into the Vampire's eyes, Fex could feel something odd, and at the same time, no regular vampire should ever be this strong. He was one of the strongest nobles. Why was he afraid?

"And what the hell is with this taunting!" Fex said as he pulled his needle out with his string attached to the little loop at the end and started to swing it wildly like a windmill in the air.

Once again, Fex swung out the needle straight, and it came out fast and heavy. This time the force seemed far more substantial than before. Still, the strings seemingly around the Vampire started to disappear, and the Vampire had avoided the attack.

"Yes! That's it! You have a difficult opponent in front of you. Use your mind to evolve more. One can't magically get stronger in the middle of a fight, but they can use their mind to their advantage!" The Vampire shouted. "You need to show me everything you have."

At that moment, through the crowd of onlookers who still had refused to run away, a female in military uniform was seen running in.

"Teacher Fex, what is going on here? Who is this man you are fighting?" Samantha asked.

While head general Innu went out with the students, he would be in charge of the teachers and the students, and Samantha was left behind to stay in the Shelter. Coordinating if anything was to happen. She had been alerted that there was a commotion going on but didn't expect to see another teacher in the middle of a fight.

"This is.." Fex was struggling to come up with an answer. He had actually started the confrontation, but he couldn't exactly just say he was a vampire, but what reason could he give.

While Fex was unfocused, a fist came out from the Vampire, but a wall suddenly rose in the middle of the two of them. Samantha immediately decided to act once she saw her teacher was about to be hurt.

However, the fist had gone through the wall, breaking it to pieces, but it allowed Fex enough time to avoid the punch coming his way. Instead, he wrapped the arm with string, and then using all of his strength he lifted the Vampire in the air, and slammed him into one of the buildings on the opposite end of the street they were fighting in.

"He's from Pure!" Fex finally figured out a good excuse, and saying those words finally got most of the people to clear the area.

Samantha rushed over to Fex's side and looked at him for a few seconds, up and down. She even patted him in certain areas, which made Fex blush a bit while smelling the scent coming from her hair.

"Good, it doesn't seem like you're hurt," Samantha said.

The sound of rubble could be heard moving, and the Vampire stood up with his head bleeding, but the rest of his body looked to have hardly been injured. Fex didn't think it would be over for a second, but just wanted a small break from the constant fighting.

"Hey, do you mind if I ask you something?" Fex said as he pulled over his black needle with a piece of string towards his hand. "Can I stab you with this?"

"What are you crazy!" Samantha shouted. "A person is attacking us right now, and you want to stab me?"

"Wait, let me explain! Think about it. There's a reason I asked. I didn't just want to stab you!" Fex argued, but the Vampire was increasingly getting closer. That's when Fex noticed, the Vampire wasn't charging forward.

In fact, the Vampire hardly charged forward during the fight, as if he was always waiting for Fex to show him something.

Then for a brief second, the Vampire looked up towards the corner of the sky and looked back down at the two.

"I still don't know if you are ready for what's about to come, but it seems somehow you truly are united with the humans, but that will soon be put to the test." The Vampire said.

"What do you mean!" Fex asked, no longer wanting to engage. If the other Vampire wasn't attacking, it would give him at least time to recover.

"Sometimes, people are unable to see what's right in front of them." The Vampire said, looking at Samantha this time, and feeling a little uncomfortable, she shifted towards Fex, but then seeing the black needle in his hand, she moved back away.

"Around two years ago, the Dalki came to this planet. It was an event that was recorded and spread to the whole world. It would be impossible for you to not know of it."

Of course, Samantha knew exactly what event the man was talking about. At the time, the student known as Quinn and a few others had run into a Dalki here.

"Do you think that was a coincidence, that a stray scout would just land here for no reason? Did no one stop to think if there was an alternative task, a mission that it was sent here to do?" The Vampire continued.

Of course, the military had done some research into it, but it really looked like a stray scout from the Dalki had attacked, and they were unable to find anything else.

"The Dalki are smarter than you humans take credit for, especially with him pulling strings. They will soon be upon us. It will be interesting to see if you still keep your resolve to not hurt humans when it comes to their life of yours." The Vampire said. "I have run out of time." and as quickly as he appeared, he promptly disappeared as well.

The two of them were left there to take in the mysterious person's words. The one thing that stuck out to them was that the Dalki was coming, and it was quite clear he was claiming that they would be coming to this planet.

The question was, when?

Chapter 1012: Who, who, who

Out in the hunting field, it was almost time for the students to finish up with their first hunt. They were down to the final fifteen minutes, and even though it was exhausting for them, they needed to slug through if they had any chances or hopes of becoming one of the top classes.

After the hunt was done, they would go to meet Head general Innu, who was in charge of the expedition.

Innu wanted to count the number of crystals each class got in front of them all to see how well each group did. The Shelter didn't have a space large enough for all the students and teachers to gather, so instead, Innu had picked a different place for them all to meet. It was located outside the Shelter not too far from it, a zone that was void of beasts, and even if there were some, basic tier beasts would be too afraid of a gathering of that size to do anything.

During this hunt, what had surprised Quinn was the fighting that had happened moments ago between his students and others. When he had been called, he expected one of the teachers to talk back to him. However, everything was solved with him just appearing.

Even he was surprised about this.

'I guess showing your power off once in a while can be a good thing.' Quinn thought with a smile.

'Careful there.' Vincent said. 'You don't want to turn into them, do you? It would be best if you also heard both sides of the story before just claiming your students were in the right, no matter how likely it might be the other side.'

'I know, I know, it's just nice to not have any arguments for a change.' Quinn replied, but his voice at the end started to trail off. The reason being, a scent had entered his nose. It wasn't just any scent either. It was clearly one of another vampire.

Turning his head around, he attempted to see where it was. Maybe Fex had come back or someone else, but he didn't see any of them. Eventually, Quinn spotted someone in the desert off in the distance. Slowly making their way to Quinn and the students.

'What do I do? It's a vampire, all the way out here. Why would one be here, and he's coming towards the students. I have to stop him or see what they're doing here.' Quinn thought.

However, he couldn't just leave the students alone unattended.

"Peter!" Quinn shouted. Although Peter wasn't acting as Quinn's assistant in this little assessment, his hunting ground wasn't too far away from theirs, and he was hoping he would hear his call.

It didn't take long for Peter to be running across the desert, kicking up piles of sand as he ran heavy-footed towards Quinn's side.

"You called me?" Peter asked, but it didn't take that long for him to see what Quinn was looking at. Although, it was hard to make out precisely what the figure looked like due to the heat waves warping the image of the man.

"I need you to look after the students while I go and see if this is trouble," Quinn replied.

"That's okay, my teacher doesn't need me. I kept looking for a chance to leave." Meanwhile, Peter's teacher was actually tossing and turning, looking everywhere for him. He hadn't said a word about leaving. Still, she wasn't worried. He was the unkillable zombie, after all.

"But Quinn, let me know if you need back up," Peter said.

Walking out into the desert, Quinn was wondering who he would meet. For some reason, his heart was beating rapidly.

'I think I caught a glimpse, but I can't be sure.' Quinn thought.

The students who saw their teacher Hardy leave, when he reached a certain point, it was as if Hardy had just disappeared, and it was true for Peter as well. Looking out in the desert, he now couldn't see a thing, the man he saw before or Quinn.

"Don't worry everyone, get back to work. You guys want to win this beast hunting coalition, right!?"

When Quinn had finally arrived, he was standing opposite the man, they both looked at each other, and he could now see who it was clearly. The man had a curly moustache, and his hair was done up in a ponytail, but everything else Quinn had seen before.

The deep wrinkles on his forehead, the narrowness of his eyes and the confident look he had with him at all times.

"At least you aren't quick to act and attack me like that other one, so should I introduce myself?" The man asked.

Quinn shook his head.

"There is no need. I already know who you are, Richard Eno."

Finally, Quinn had met the mysterious man after all this time, the grand scientist of the human race and also the first king. So many questions were running through Quinn's head he didn't know which one to ask first.

Why did he decide to trick Arthur, why wasn't he asleep in his tomb, what was his goal in helping Vincent create the vampire system, and was he on the humans' side, or the vampires' side. For all Quinn knew, he could be working with Jim in helping the Dalki, stringing them all along just for some sick game of his.

"Close." The man said. 'But I'm not really Richard Eno, so all those questions you have you can keep in your head for a second while I explain what I'm doing here, and you should hear me out because I don't have much time. "

Even though Quinn didn't understand what Eno was saying, everything seemed like a wild goose chase. He wanted to do everything he could to just run over to Enos' side and strap him in before he could run off, but his first line had shocked Quinn a bit.

'He isn't Richard Eno?'

That didn't make any sense. Quinn was sure of it, he certainly looked like the Eno he had seen, and even Vincent had confirmed that he looked similar to the man in the books. Still wanting to find out what Eno at least had to say, he kept his mouth shut, for now.

"What you don't know, is currently at this moment, there are three others with a very similar appearance to myself meeting with others and delivering a message. This is a test Quinn, a test to see if you can succeed."

At the same time, over where General Innu was, a man with a similar appearance was standing in front of him. One of his sergeants who was by his side had gone to try and intercept the man from getting closer, but after grabbing his wrist, twisting it and kicking him at the back of the leg, almost too fast for them to see, they were sure to listen to what the man had to say.

And he was saying similar words to Innu right now, but for Quinn, there was an additional message.

"You have managed to accomplish what I never thought was possible, but somehow currently, the Human race is working together again, and without realising it, I think the Cursed faction is the glue that is holding it all together.

"With all three of your forces, I see a chance of you defeating the Dalki. Alone it is impossible. I need to see how strong that glue is, Quinn, how strong, and how long do you think that glue will last? You are hiding secrets from them, deep dark secrets that if they found out about them, would they see you as a friend or an enemy.

"Maybe, we'll find out today," Eno stated and moved his arms, dragging them across the desert.

For a second, a screen appeared in front of Quinn, but it was distorted. It was the system screen, but it looked as if it wasn't working correctly and was struggling to do something. Finally, the screen appeared, but the surrounding areas were all flashing red.

Chapter 1013: Taking over

It was the first time Quinn had ever received a message about his system being overridden, and he was wondering just how it would have affected such a thing. After the system had been overridden, the main thing that had occurred was receiving a sudden quest, and it was a quest Quinn wasn't expecting at all.

'Did he override the system just to give me that quest?' Quinn thought as he lifted his head to confront the man who had dropped this giant of a bombshell, but he was no longer in front of him.

"Damn you, Richard Eno! You can't just go off and treat everything as if it's a game. People's lives are at stake!" Quinn shouted in anger, but there was no one to hear his words.

Without the man responsible to ask any questions, Quinn now had to figure out things for himself. Usually, Quinn would receive a quest when he came face to face with an enemy, but this time was different. There wasn't a Dalki in sight.

He could only assume it had something to do with the system being overridden. Still, he knew that they would be coming soon, because Eno had used the words, 'Running out of time' And if he had disappeared so quickly, it was most likely the case. The main worrying thing was the apparent invasion that was coming soon were a group of 50 Dalki.

It was only two years ago that Quinn had come face to face with a single Dalki. With him and his group of friends, they still didn't kill the Dalki and had to rely on Leo to save them.

Thinking about this, the first thing Quinn attempted to do was pull up the system to see if everything was working all okay. It seemed to be fine from a few test abilities he had activated using the system, and it looked like he could use it combat wise.

'With fifty Dalki, depending on the number of spikes they have, I don't think everyone that is here is currently going to be enough, not when the students also need to be protected.' Quinn thought.

The beast hunts were done in phases, and currently, two groups of classes were out together. In total, that would amount to 30,000 inexperienced students. The last thing Quinn wanted to see was all of them lying on the floor dead.

'To save as many lives as we can, I'm going to need as much help as I can get. If I can call Sil, Logan, Linda and all the others, we can stop this.'

Straight away, the first thing he attempted to do was get in contact with Logan through the mask. However, after several attempts, there was nothing. Not even a connection or signal had been made. No matter who Quinn tried to get in contact with, it just wouldn't work.

'Is this Enos' doing, or the Dalki?' Quinn thought, but he couldn't get Enos' words out of his head that this was all some test. Right now, Quinn was afraid, if he used a shadow link to travel to one of the Cursed on the ship, how would he get back?

And he was right to think this way because all of the teleporters and communication devices throughout the whole Shelter had been jammed.

There was one more thing Quinn thought he could try, and that was summoning his vampire knights.

'I'm sorry Leo, I know you're busy, but you will understand.'

[Error]

[Override in place, this skill may not be used]

When using the other skills throughout the system, no such message had appeared. It was only when trying to use this skill.

'It has to be Eno, because of what he did. When he said this is a test, does it mean I'm not allowed to get any outside help?'

'This truly meant that Quinn was now alone. He didn't hesitate and, using all his speed, ran back to where all his students were and surprisingly they had already been gathered up by Peter. They all saw Quinn come in at super speed but hiding his powers was the least of his worries right now.'

"What's going on?" Quinn asked.

"It wasn't too long ago, but while you were dealing with your thing, I received a message from Innu, telling everyone to meet up at the arranged location immediately. It sounded pretty urgent, but we wanted to wait for you." Peter said.

He was curious and wanted to ask Quinn some questions, but from the serious look on his face, he thought it was best to ask a little later.

'Innu asked to meet up quickly. I remember Eno saying something like he was delivering the message to three other people, was Innu one of them? If he's gathering up all the students, is he trying to get it so all the teachers can protect them or head back into the Shelter?'

'If all the students are gathered together, this might be a good thing, it's going to be difficult, but if we can defeat the Dalki without having any of the kids get involved, I can protect them all if they're in one place.'

Peter and Quinn were both off, and the students didn't dare ask questions about what was going on. It was the first time they had seen Head general Hardy have such a severe look. For Swin, Venus and Shiro, it was the same look he had when he was filled with rage at Erlen.

On the way there, Quinn informed Peter of the possibility of what they could be going up against and soon they had arrived at the meeting point.

Quinn's group were one of the last ones to arrive, and he could see all hundred teachers equipped with their best gear on and had a concerned look on their faces.

Using his inspect skill, Quinn was trying to see what help he had. Honestly, the teachers were a mixed bag. There were a couple of sergeants that Innu had brought with him, but the teachers, some of them were only a little better than the top students when it came to fighting, and Quinn wouldn't doubt that there were some strong students as well.

Quinn had asked his students to line up, in their position with the other students, while in front of them, all hundred of the teachers had huddled in a type of group while talking to each other, and Innu was taking the lead.

"Now that all the teachers are here, I can go through everything from the beginning," Innu said. "We have just been informed that there could possibly be a Dalki invasion on this planet any second now. We don't know if this is true or not, but I will treat it like the truth. We have to for such a big threat."

For once, Quinn was thankful that he was being reasonable.

"I have tried to communicate with the Shelter, but it seems like no one else or I can get through. We don't know where the Dalki will show up, but the Shelter is probably what they will be looking for and is the most essential thing that needs protecting.

"I want everyone to remember that we are soldiers, and even the students out there have trained so they can fight as well. I can't imagine the Dalki sending a force larger than ten to deal with this planet since the forces are low, but I bet they weren't expecting us to be having our expedition out here at the same time as their attack.

"We don't know where they will be attacking, so I suggest us teachers split up into groups of ten, taking a squad of your strongest students, and a core of us will stay behind to protect the shelter."

Hearing this, Quinn thought he had spoken too soon. There wasn't enough information to be making risky moves like Innu was suggesting, and at the same time, Innu was wrong. There were fifty of them coming.

"Innu, we shouldn't do that." Quinn interrupted.

Innu looked at who was speaking and saw that it was general Hardy, he didn't like him in the first place, and now he was interrupting him while this was a chance for them to claim glory against the Dalki.

"We don't know how large or strong of a force the Dalki will be, and the students at the moment haven't graduated. No matter how much we treat them like soldiers, this is only their first outing. You put them out there to rely on, and they will freeze. All of their blood will be on our hands as teachers!" Quinn shouted.

By now, the students at the front were able to hear everything that was being said, and they were nervous talking between them as they heard the words Dalki. They were already shivering with fear.

"Look what you have done!" Innu shouted, "Of course, the students will be frightened to do battle now, but when forced, humans do extraordinary things."

"So you weren't even going to tell the students what they would be up against? What they would be risking their lives for! You're sick Innu. I don't care anymore. You are to step down, and I will take command from here on out!" Quinn demanded.

Innu started laughing.

"You think the teachers here will agree to that? Do you think anyone will follow you? Who are you, Hardy? You are a nobody. I personally fought in the last war and rose to the rank of head general. You may have the same rank as me in name, but it means nothing. I don't take orders from you!" Innu shouted back.

It was clear Innu wasn't going to listen, and with him taking command, he was sending all the students to a bloodfest, Quinn had no choice.

"I order you to listen to me!" Quinn shouted. "I will now be taking command of everyone and all the students here."

"You can't do that, you fool! Didn't you listen to anything I said?" Innu shouted again.

But Quinn's eyes started to glow a ferocious red, making him back away and remembering their first meeting.

"I did listen, but I'm not a nobody," Quinn said, looking at all of the teachers. There was one thing Innu was right about, that they respected and trusted Innu more than him. He could see it in their eyes. So he only had one choice.

"I am Quinn Talen, head of the Cursed faction and one of the three world leaders. I will be taking over as commander from this point onwards!"

"He's who..." Innu said.

Chapter 1014: A mistake!

It took a lot for Quinn to finally reveal himself. He didn't want to but what was the point when his main goal was changing the system so people's lives would be better. If the people were dead, then it didn't matter how much he changed the system.

After announcing his name, he thought that would be the end of it, but suddenly some of the teachers started to crack. They let out a few stifled laughs and even Innu started to laugh hysterically.

"We know you're just some unknown from the Cursed faction!" Innu laughed. "To actually claim that you are their leader, what would a world leader even be doing attempting to be a teacher? Even a head general being a teacher is a stretch!"

However, the students from Hardy's class weren't so quick to judge. They knew that Hardy was from the Cursed faction and knew that he had done so many amazing things, so they had tried to do their own research to find out just who Hardy was.

When looking however, they didn't find anything, but when they started to search the Cursed faction and watched videos of the leader fighting, although Hardy and the leader from the videos weren't exactly identical, they did notice some features that were similar.

However, Innu disregarded that a world leader would ever become a teacher and put their senses straight.

From the odd looking eyes of the teachers, Quinn was annoyed.

"Do I really need to prove who I am by showing you? I guess even showing you the shadow ability wouldn't be enough." Quinn said, as he entered his shadow space and shadows started to surround his hands.

The second Innu saw his ability, his eyes widened and his heart began to thump so incredibly loud that a pain was felt in his chest for a second. Innu was so confident that this person wasn't Quinn and this was just an excuse. He believed he already knew what his ability was - a form of mind control, but now seeing the shadow there was a possibility he was telling the truth.

The shadow soon disappeared and now held in his hands in front of everyone, was Quinn's platinum ID card, placing his fingers on the front, the card started to light up slightly proving that it was him.

In nearly an instant, the teachers who were making fun of him, all started to bow down out of respect and fear. They had to treat him just as they would treat Oscar, after all he supposedly controlled a force that was equal to the military's in strength.

Quinn was a single person who had so much power that no one would dare cross them.

Innu took a good look at the platinum card and stumbled a few steps back before eventually falling on his backside. He got up quickly and also bowed.

'Damn him, is this a trick! It can't be, that's the platinum card only given to the world leaders. What the hell was a man like that doing being a teacher? What happens if my words and his make it so the two groups clash against each other!' Innu was panicking, but Quinn didn't care for all that now.

"Wow, so he is the Cursed faction leader. We had the leader teaching us this whole time!" Swin said with a big smile on his face.

The students under Quinn were even more impressed that the Cursed faction took so much time to look after students at the academy. The world's opinion of the Cursed faction was bad, but perhaps Quinn in the few weeks he had spent as a teacher had managed to change some minds.

"Okay, everyone listen up!" Quinn shouted in a voice so loud and booming that it could even hit the students at the very back of the thirty thousand student group. This was because he was able to use a form of Qi to project his voice louder than humanly possible.

"The Dalki are coming to attack this planet. It is not a question of if but when. They are coming and we need to prepare. If you want to live, I need you to do whatever you can to listen to me, does everyone understand!"

"Yes sir!" All of the students shouted in unison.

For some reason, the students were empowered knowing that a world leader was with them. Still they were frightened, they had only just fought against beasts not too long ago and now were supposedly going up against the Dalki. They could have never imagined such a thing just a few hours ago.

Quinn continued to give instructions, organizing the students based on what abilities they had, trying to set up a strong formation. He had the teachers help him, including Innu. Surprisingly to Quinn, Innu was good at something as he had the information of the strongest students and more in his head that could be put to good use.

'It was clear Innu didn't like being ordered around, but even he understood not to question Quinn.'

While the students were getting ready, Quinn wondered if they should head back to the shelter as it could possibly be a better place to protect, but it was some distance away from where they were currently.

'Eno, just what is your goal in all of this? If you knew the attack was happening and you wanted to save humans lives, then why won't you let me get any help? Are you trying to reveal my secret to everyone?'

There was also another question on Quinn's mind, there was the possibility that depending on what happened, his secrets would be revealed. But right now that wasn't his main concern. If his secret now had to be shown to the whole world, of what he could do and who he was, as long as he could save the others lives then that was fine with him.

At the same time, Oscar, who was still at the newly built school base in his office, had received an urgent report from one of his head generals that was in charge of the scouting section.

"Supreme commander, we have a problem. A ship has suddenly just teleported in the area of planet Caladi."

Oscar knew straight away it was where Quinn and the other students were currently.

"Send them support immediately, we can't let those students be harmed, and get everyone to return to Earth as soon as possible." Oscar ordered.

"Sir, that's the problem. All of our teleporters on the planet are currently not working. We can't get through on any communication devices either. I have sent a support ship with my own strongest men, but even going through the teleport station it will be a while for them to get there.'

This had never happened before, even the Dalki in the first war and when having confrontations on other beast planets had never been able to jam their teleporters. It was a first for the human race going up against this type of thing.

'So the war has started and Quinn, you are in the middle of it. In a way I am thankful that at least you are there. Please Quinn, I am counting on you to make this the first victory for the human race. It will give us great morale as we go forward.'

'Also, protect as many lives as possible.'

Back in the sandy desert, after organising the students into certain squads and assigning teachers to lead them, Quinn was ready to move out. If possible Quinn didn't want any of the students to fight, but with fifty Dalki, even Quinn couldn't guarantee that they wouldn't get past him.

The aim was with a teacher leading a squad of students they could fight at least one until Quinn could come and help.

'I still haven't seen them arrive yet, we might have time to head to the shelter.' Quinn thought as he was ready to make the announcement.

At that moment, all of the students could see behind Quinn something falling through the sky. Turning around after seeing their concerned faces, Quinn could now see it too. There were black pods falling from the sky, burning as they went through the planet's atmosphere.

Most of them were heading towards their direction and that's when Quinn had realised his mistake.

'Wait, Eno said he spoke to three people? If that includes me and Innu, then that means he spoke to another. Were they in the shelter?'

The pods came crash-landing in the desert ahead of where the students were, each landing created giant piles of sand thrown in the air, and the force shook the ground violently.

The number of pods didn't stop falling into the ground.

"How many Dalki are invading?!" Innu said as he saw the pods land, knowing full well how tough of a battle this would be.

At the same time, several pods had also crashed into the shelter.

'Damn it! They landed at the shelter as well! I just hope there is someone there that can deal with them.'

Chapter 1015: The Noble vampire

Inside the Shelter Fex and Samantha were left standing there looking at the destroyed house in front of them. The onlookers that had gone away for a few seconds, soon returned to have a look once again.

However, making sure no one was being nosy with what was going on, Samantha quickly built two walls at the end of the street so no onlookers would come to where they were.

"Okay, it's time for you to explain yourself." Samantha said.

"Me explain myself, what do you mean by that?" Fex asked. He thought he had just gotten out of the fiery pit of trouble, and now someone else was giving him a grilling.

'When I wanted an adventure this wasn't what I had in mind.' Fex thought.

"What I'm talking about is what that stranger was saying. He was saying some things that sounded a bit odd, as if he knew you? At least he made it out that way." Samantha questioned.

"How am I meant to know what he meant?" Fex said, getting defensive and moving away from Samantha. "There's a bunch of crazy people in this world. He literally slammed a glass on my hand out of nowhere."

Seeing Fex lift up his hand to show the wound, Samantha looked at it strangely, scrunching up her face, because she saw no such wound on his hand at all. It looked completely fine.

"I'm starting to think maybe you're the crazy one, when I get back I'm going to request that a psych evaluation be put on all our teachers to check your mental health. We can't have someone like you teaching our students. What do you even teach anyway?"

Even though Fex thought he was a little in the wrong for what had happened, he started to get annoyed at how this girl was treating him.

However, soon his eyes were locked onto something else, high up in the sky and coming towards them.

"Look out!" Fex shouted, using his strings, he soon wrapped Samantha up in them and pulled her towards him, carrying her under his arm. A few seconds later and a loud bang was heard. Following it, a violent shake of the ground with parts of dirt falling from the sky like it was raining.

When the shaking had stopped and the rain of dirt ended, she could see that her and Fex were on a house roof quite away from where they were before.

'How did we get up here so fast?' She thought, but soon her thoughts were concentrated on something else.

"What is that black egg looking thing?" Fex asked, looking down at the destroyed Shelter. It wasn't just where they were, there were five space pods in total that had landed in different places around the Shelter. Causing a large crater and destroying everything within thirty meters as it landed.

A few seconds later, and a piercing siren noise sounded, going off. Loud enough for everyone in the Shelter to hear.

"What's that sound?" Fex asked, still startled at everything happening.

"Didn't you go to school, and you're a teacher!" Samantha said annoyedly, hitting Fex on his thigh so he could set her free. "That sound, it means the Dalki have arrived. The Dalki are attacking!"

The sounds of screams filled the air, from panic, as they headed to the emergency protection zones, and Samantha, just hearing them started sweating frantically. In the distance she could see mechs being piloted, landing where the other pods were. She then jumped down from the building, and created a platform for herself with her ability, moving it towards the black pod.

She got in a fighting stance and was ready. The black pod started to produce steam as its front doors were being opened up. She knew how hard the outside of the Dalki ships were and the pod looked to be made of the same material. It was pointless to attack such a thing, but she was prepared.

The ground around her was raised into nine different moving forms of tails. They swirled about in the air moving far more flexibly than any earth ability. At the tip, sharp pointed ends all pointing at the pod.

Then, when the door started to lift itself open, a hand could be seen reaching out with a claw on the end, it pushed itself forward and its large body with its scale-like features could be seen.

'That thing, it looks like Borden, so these are the Dalki that Quinn is always talking about. If they are as strong as Borden, and there are five of them. We're in trouble.' Fex thought.

As soon as its upper body was out from the shell, Samantha moved all nine of her sharp tails and shot them straight towards the Dalki. The tips of her tails suddenly changed a slight colour as she activated her soul weapon wasting no time.

The Dalki still wasn't completely free from whatever it was trying to get out of, and was a sitting duck to the spikes as each one pierced its body. Green blood then started to ooze from the attack, and it shouted in pain.

"You bitch!" The Dalki groaned and soon kicked open the bottom part. It was at this point that Fex noticed the strange egg looked like a type of ship inside, but the black material was something similar to what the vampires would use as well.

What was strange, was even though the Dalki was full of holes from the tails that had impaled its body, it was smiling. At that point, it lifted its arms and swung them down smashing all of the tails, breaking them leaving the pointed parts in its body. Pulling one of them out that had dug into its shoulder, it threw it towards Samantha, and then pulled out the rest, throwing them all towards her.

Her own attack was being used against her. Raising a wall was the only thing she could do, but the attacks had gone through them all, which came as a surprise to her, but the very last wall it looked like it was losing momentum.

"No you idiot, the Dalki is still coming towards you!" Fex shouted as a fist was seen breaking through the last wall, ready to grab Samantha, but she suddenly felt her back bend slightly, it wasn't an action of her own, and the Dalki could now see some red string wrapped around its hand.

"Screw you!" Fex shouted, pulling himself towards the Dalki, and kicking it in the chest away from Samantha. It stumbled a little backwards, but soon pulled on the red strings that Fex was using, dragging his body upright.

The two of them now were in a tug of war match with Fex's string, with the Dalki's hard skin the string was unable to pierce through like it would usually do, as for Fex, although the string was being produced from his fingers, he felt like his hand was going to snap off at any second.

'He's holding his own in a battle of strength against a Dalki?' Samantha thought.

A human couldn't match the strength of the Dalki. Even some with the best gear couldn't, so how could an ordinary teacher.

What she was surprised at was how her initial attack hadn't killed the Dalki in the first place.

If it was coming from another earth user she would understand, but Samantha was a head general. One of the strongest people the military had to offer. If they couldn't kill a Dalki, the human race would have already lost this war. When looking at the Dalki closely, that's when she noticed it wasn't a one spiked Dalki, but two.

Soon, Fex knew he would be pulled forward so he had no choice.

"Hey, can you promise me something, you have to keep this a secret okay?!" Fex grunted, and then with his other hand free, he fired off a single large blood swipe towards the Dalki. Taking the hit on, it pierced the Dalki's skin slightly. While having the Dalki in place, Fex continued to use the red aura strings on the Dalki.

It was risk he had to take. He knew the opponent in front of him couldn't be beaten with just his physical strength and string. He needed to use his abilities.

The red strike hit the Dalki again and again, and more blood was being spilt, but Fex just felt that the tugging was getting stronger, not weaker. Eventually, he had no choice but to let go of the string holding the Dalki.

"This guy just won't fall. He was already injured by you? What's it going to take to kill this guy?!" Fex said.

"Watch out!" Samantha shouted, but it was too late. The Dalki had already hit Fex straight in the face, sending his body flying and hitting a building crashing through the walls.

Seeing it, Samantha partly felt like it was her fault. After her initial attack had failed, she had done nothing to help while he was busy fighting. But it was safe to say that no human would be able to recover from something like that.

The two spiked Dalki, now on the verge of death, were moving faster and stronger than ever.

"ARGHH!" Samantha screamed as she summoned the nine tails again and attempted to hit the Dalki. Still, it managed to avoid the first two attacks and avoided the sharp coloured tips. It then punched the earth part of the tails, destroying them.

The Dalki had already figured out that only her soul weapon, part of her ability, was what managed to injure it.

'A two spiked Dalki, are the rest of them two spiked as well? Why would they send such a large force to deal with us? On a small planet like this?'

Not giving up, Samantha summoned her tails again, draining her of her MC points. She attempted to move her tips faster, then when all nine of them came at the Dalki at the same time, she saw something else speed past her.

The Dalki smashed through all of the tails with his hand, but a black haired young man, with a black needle in his hand, had pierced the Dalki right in the stomach. Soon it started to fill up with green liquid.

Taking the needle out, she was wondering what the young man was going to do next, lifting up the needle, he stabbed it into himself.

"What the hell is he doing?!" She thought.

Chapter 1016: The power of green blood

The Shelter was dealing with more trouble than they could handle. It was chaos inside, but most of the citizens had managed to go to the underground emergency locations in the Shelter. They were built in case anything like this did occur.

There was also a teleporter in these locations, but today they did not work, and they just had to hope that the glathrium metal bunkers they were in, would hold. The Shelter just wasn't that well equipped to deal with this type of attack.

Even though only five black pods had landed in the Shelter, the Dalki that had emerged from them were stronger than they had expected. Two of them were one spiked Dalki. The military personnel, including the Travelers, were fighting against them.

They were slowly damaging the Dalki, but it was only making the situation worse. Thankfully the mechs were able to hold them where they were. The travellers that were assisting weren't high level and didn't even have decent beast gear on. This was because it was a green portal planet.

The only beasts that would appear on such a planet were basic and intermediate tier beasts. Attracting beginners and those who wished for a safe life.

However, the situation was a lot worse in another area. For a two spiked Dalki other than the one Fex was dealing with was causing a rampage. The mechs that had come to deal with it had already been destroyed, along with the buildings around it.

Civilians that hadn't escaped were crushed, and those hiding in their homes had no chance of surviving.

In the centre of the Shelter, standing on top of a tall building on a flat surface, was a man with a grey ponytail.

"The military is doing as expected, but that vampire boy is doing better than I thought. This is quite interesting. Still, a head general and a vampire noble who is a descendant required to take on a single two spike. This was not the hope I was looking for." Eno commented, at that moment, something large landed behind the man. He could feel the vibration of the ground he was on.

Eno turned around and could see another two spiked Dalki standing behind him, staring at him.

"Did you think you could hide up here?" Dalki spoke.

"I should have known," Eno said. "There were five pods, so three of them were two spikes and the other two, one spikes. I underestimated the level of forces that you would send. Three two spiked Dalki will be too much for them, I guess I should attempt to help them out a little bit."

Charging in, Eno's hand was covered entirely in red. It looked like blood hardening but soon shaped itself into a spiral and spun like a drill. The Dalki didn't know what to do as the movements were far faster than it had expected.

It raised its hands, but the blood drill went through the hard, almost impenetrable skin, and once it went through its arms, it continued to go through its chest, spinning the blood in all directions and even landing back on Eno's face.

"There is a great weakness you Dalki have," Eno said. "Your race may be a threat to humans, but you're no threat to me. Do you know why? Because your blood was meant to empower us."

He placed his bare hand on the wound of the Dalki and licked it, allowing the green energy to empower his body. Then jumping up in the air, he punched the Dalki as he went back down, causing the two of them to crash through the building, going down from floor to floor.

However, with the Dalki's wound being a serious one, he too was getting stronger mid fall. The Dalki grabbed Eno by the legs. Before he landed at the very bottom, he swung his body like a baseball onto the ground.

Now, Eno's body was unmoving, but his eyes were still alive.

'Maybe me trying to help has just made the job harder since I could not finish the job. It looks like my time is over, but I will report everything I have seen to the others.'

The Dalki, standing up from the ground, roared in anger before stomping on top of Eno's head, spattering it like a tomato.

Over where one of the other two spiked Dalki was battling for its life, Fex had just stabbed the needle into himself. The power from the Dalki was injected into him, but the energy inside him was far more than he expected.

'What is this, what is going on.' It was almost too much for him to comprehend.

What Fex didn't realise was his blood weapon already increased his abilities when used with human blood. Putting Dalki blood, he was having not just the effect of his blood weapon but that of the blood as well.

The Dalki wasn't just going to stand there and decided to throw a punch towards the boy standing in front of him, but his arm had been stopped by red pieces of string. It was coming from the boy, but he was a lot stronger than last time.

Pulling strings with his hand, he was able to pull the arm away, and then punched the Dalki in the chest. It took a step back, but that wasn't the only hit, soon after, a flurry of punches came towards the Dalki's chest as Fex felt more powerful than he ever did before.

"It's like I'm super Fex!" He shouted punch after punch. Now the green liquid was spewing as its hard scales were doing nothing. Fists of green blood were now splurging out.

'No, you can't injure him slowly like that.' Samantha thought, watching. 'The Dalki, it's hard to tell when one is on the verge of death. At this rate, if the Dalki doesn't die, then it means it will just get stronger until it can match up to that teacher again.' Samantha thought.

This was why she had attempted to finish off the Dalki right away, always using her most powerful skill.

What was working was, for now, Fex was completely overpowering the two spiked Dalki with his bare hands. Seeing this as an opportunity and not making the same mistake as last time, Samantha was going to help this time. The nine tails of earth grew behind the Dalki, and just when the Dalki could feel his energy rising to make a comeback, the nine tails had pierced it right in the back.

It hadn't gone through deep enough, but Fex, having seen the tails moments before, put all of his strength into punching faster and harder, hitting the body further into the tailed spikes until eventually, the Dalki stopped moving.

"We did it!" Samantha shouted.

At that moment, Fex's legs felt like jelly as the powering effects of his blood weapon and Dalki blood were over.

"Those things are so hard to kill." Fex said, gasping for air. While punching, he didn't take a breath, afraid that the Dalki would have attacked back if he did.

While the two of them were taking a short break after their victory, the sounds of screams could be heard, rumbling and buildings being destroyed. The fight was far from over, and they had only defeated a single Dalki.

"Can you still fight?" Fex asked.

"I'm completely drained of MC. I will need time to recover." Samantha replied, knowing that their best chances of defeating the rest would be with this strange strong teacher.

"Well, you saw what I could do once I stabbed myself with this needle, so will you let me stab you now, and let me control your body?" Fex asked.

Although she was reluctant at first, she had no choice but to agree. Before leaving, Fex stabbed the dead Dalki with his needle once more, filling it up. The two of them then went to high ground on one of the few uncrushed buildings to have a look at the situation. Although Samantha was looking at where to go next in the Shelter instead, Fex was looking far off into the distance, far further than human eyes could see.

That's when he spotted that an army of Dalki were heading towards a group of students.

Quinn and the other teachers were staring at the trouble they were facing out in the desert as they could see the Dalki were marching through the sand towards them.

"If the Dalki gets past me, survive, survive long enough for me to come and help you!" Quinn shouted.

"If the Dalki gets past you? What are you talking about?" Innu asked.

In a split second, Quinn had left his position, and he was running straight ahead into the forty-five Dalki. While the students and teachers were to remain where they were.

"That person's a dead man." Innu could only think.

Chapter 1017: A single warrior

Charging into a group of Dalki would be frightening for anyone. If someone had told Quinn in the past that he would be doing exactly that in the future, he would have never believed them. Yet here he was, charging straight towards a deadly enemy.

For some reason, his mind was completely clear; he knew what he needed to do and he wasn't even shaking.

'Is it because I know the lives of everyone behind me count on it? Or is it something else?' Quinn wondered.

Looking at all of the Dalki in front of him, he used the inspect skill. It scanned the whole field and condensed it into information that was useful to him.

[Total number of Dalki: 45]

[Number of two spiked Dalki: 10]

[Number of one spiked Dalki: 35]

At first Quinn was surprised to see some two spiked Dalki among the group. Other than Borden, he had only fought against one spiked Dalkis in the past. Even back then he was helpless against them. Yet now he wasn't just facing one, but many two spiked Dalki.

'I'm not the same as I was back then, things are a lot different now.' Quinn reassured himself and he was right.

His stats back then were nothing compared to what they are now. Before he was only a vampire but now he had evolved into a vampire lord, he also didn't have great equipment back then either. At the moment, although he didn't have a pair of good gauntlets, the rest of his equipment was still leaps and bounds ahead of the past. His blood skills, fighting skill, and everything about him was a different person.

Standing roughly twenty meters away from them, Quinn took a firm fighting stance, pushing his leg out forward.

"Is he planning to do that same kick as he did on Sach?" A teacher commented, watching Quinn bravely stand against the Dalki.

Even if Innu didn't like him, he had to admit that not many people could stand there as the humans greatest threat in existence stood in front of them.

"If he is, I don't think it will do much against them."

Quinn wanted to damage the Dalki as much as he could before they would reach him. Moving the Qi to his back right leg, the power was rising inside. The red energy was being prepared and at the same time, the second stage of Qi was being produced as well.

"HUH!" Quinn shouted, as he lifted his leg off the ground so fast and shot out the blood crescent thigh kick infused with both stages of Qi. Unlike with the kick against Sach, this time the kick had the intention to kill.

Quinn had the intention to use as much power as he could gather while also using the blood crescent kick with it.

A loud bang was heard as if a gun had been shot out, and a giant line of red aura had left Quinn's leg. It moved so fast through the air with so much energy it looked like a red lightning strike.

[A significant amount of blood energy has been used]

[Minus -20 HP]

[80/100 HP remaining]

The blood crescent kick usually took 2 points of Hp compared to the blood swipes singular one, but without realising it, while having more control of his blood, Quinn was also able to pack more of his blood power into the attack.

Some of the Dalki attempted to dodge the attack while others knew it was hopeless and took on the strike head on, but for those that did, it was a big mistake. Their bodies were torn in half immediately, limbs separated from their bodies and some were heavily injured but still moving forwards.

[6/50 Dalki have been defeated]

Quinn's attack had only killed five of them, he could tell using his inspect skill so he could only assume that the other one had been killed inside of the shelter.

"That kick, what was that and that loud bang!" Swin said shocked.

"I don't think some of the Dalki are moving." A teacher spoke and they were right.

"You're telling me with a single kick, he managed to kill the Dalki just like that!" Innu grunted, as he also gulped, thanking his lucky stars he never tried to go further against this person.

"Wait, didn't you see that red aura attack, I think I've seen it somewhere before." Another said.

"Yeah, it looks like the same type of thing the Bloodevolver from power fighters produces." Erlen spoke, leaving his mouth wide open.

Just who was Hardy, no, who was Quinn?

"The Bloodevolver, now that you mention it, those attacks do look the same."

Before the Dalki had reached Quinn, his leg was temporarily out of commission and he was using the blood bank to heal it. The rebound from a strong attack had affected his leg slightly, and it was something Quinn hadn't expected since it was his first time using it. So instead, he was throwing out blood swipes as much as he could towards them, hurting them as much as possible.

"Yeah, it's exactly the same, so Quinn is the Bloodevolver from power fighters!"

Not everyone knew what the students were talking about, since the Bloodevolver's fame was short lived, still, it brought confusion to those that did know him. How did Quinn, the leader of the Cursed faction, have two abilities?

However, they soon didn't care and were just happy that he was on their side.

The clash between the Dalki and Quinn had started, as he lifted his leg kicking one right in the chest pinning him to the ground, another threw out a fist towards him that was blocked by the shadow, and Quinn blasted him away with a blood spray filled Qi fist.

The students were seeing a single person knocking Dalki away one after another. Once in a while though a hit would go through hitting Quinn, but he wouldn't let it affect him and continued on. However, then they could see he was starting to get overwhelmed.

No longer could they see Quinn, but just a bunch of the Dalki around him.

[Blood hammer strike]

Two Dalki were chucked in the air, even if they couldn't see Quinn anymore they could see what he was doing and he was hanging on. Mainly thanks to the shadow and the new Muay Boran skills he had learnt. He had locked a Dalki down by the neck and shifted his body, causing the Dalki to hit their own, before kneeing it in the head away, and finishing it with a blood crescent kick.

However, even with Quinn doing so much damage to them, he had only done that, 'damage'. His attacks were only making them stronger while only a couple more had been killed.

[8/50 Dalki have been defeated]

Quinn then saw one of the Dalki, moving away towards the group of students and teachers, throwing his shadow path on the floor. He slowed down its movements and wanted to stop the Dalki, but another jumped in front of him before he could.

The teachers, and students were prepared, although at first they were impressed by what Quinn the Cursed faction leader had done, and they knew how strong he was, the Dalki would be coming towards them.

Going past Quinn, they started to head towards the teachers and students.

"Everyone, prepare yourselves, they will soon be upon us!" Innu shouted.

"No! If I let them pass me like this, the students they'll be killed. These Dalki are too strong, I can't defeat them slowly like this, I can't let them get past me!" Quinn screamed, and soon his arms started to go bloody.

Five of the Dalki had run past the ones that were huddled on Quinn. A smile appeared upon one's face as he continued to run towards the frightened humans. Then, he felt something hit the back of his legs causing him to fall over, several more cuts were made on his hands. The others felt something wrap around them as they were pulled back, and Quinn finished it off with a hammer strike right at the top of its head.

Leaping up in the air, standing in front of the Dalki, Quinn was now in front of them once again.

"I will not let you get past that easy." Quinn said.

"What is that?" Shiro and the others said, looking at Quinn.

Standing there , Quinn's arms were bloody as strange blades were sticking out along his forearms and long razor-like chains were dangling on the floor, dripping with blood.

Quinn had activated his Item type soul weapon, the Twin Tail chain.

Chapter 1018: A bigger enemy

Although Quinn wasn't getting badly hurt and he could still fight on against the Dalki, there was another issue. He couldn't stop the Dalki that would ignore him and continue to charge on.

He needed a way to fight more of them at once to defeat them quicker. There were quite a lot of Dalki still there and Quinn believed he had hurt them as much as he could using some of his blood skills, so he had no choice but to use his soul weapon, the twin tail chain.

The others watching could see it in sight for a second and it looked like Quinn was in considerable pain. His blood began dripping onto the floor as the blades could be seen piercing through his skin. The blades even seemed to move as if they were alive, constricting and tightening around his arms.

"What is that?" A teacher asked. "A beast weapon?"

"I have no idea, but based on it appearing out of nowhere, I can only assume it's a type of soul weapon." Innu guessed.

It wasn't long until they could see it in action, for Quinn had no choice but to start slaying his enemies as quickly as possible with the weapons. For every second he used the weapon his life would be drained, but after hitting the first set of Dalki from behind, Quinn realised something.

The blood of the Dalki that was consumed by the bladed weapons also empowered him. He had gained a boost in his stats more so than ever.

Swinging out the one of the twin tails, it lengthened and hammered down, hitting a few of the Dalki. Some attempted to grab on to stop it, but as Quinn pulled it like a ripcord, it shredded the Dalki's hands, causing some of them to lose their fingers and the top half of their hands.

[You have received a twenty percent power boost]

One of the Dalki that had been hit was a two spiked Dalki, which gave Quinn even more strength. Although the ten percent and twenty percent boost didn't seem to stack. Realising this, Quinn knew what he needed to do. He ran through, searching for what he needed and when he had found the two spiked Dalki, he would hit them slightly causing light scratches on their bodies. Green blood would splatter but they wouldn't be severely hurt.

'If I hurt these guys too much, they'll just get stronger.' Quinn thought. 'But they give me the strongest power boost, so with the extra power, I'll finish off the ones that are the weakest first!'

Jumping up in the air, Quinn spun his body like a tornado, spinning the twin blades around him. Any of the Dalki that got close would be cut apart and they were quick to learn their lesson. Now seeing them from up high in the sky, Quinn used his inspect skill.

Since it had levelled up, Quinn could tell which Dalki were fine and which were in a critical state. Some looked more injured but were actually better off than others. With this, Quinn was able to pick and choose the Dalki that he could finish off in a few hits. Coming down, he swung his blade as hard as he could, tearing off one of their arms from their shoulder.

When a Dalki attempted to punch him, his other twin tail retracted, making it smaller but more solid and the blades laid flat on its side, creating a type of shield taking the brunt of the attack. Kicking the Dalki away with his empowered attacks was enough, and he continued his plan of getting rid of as many of the one spiked Dalki as possible.

[14/50 Dalki defeated]

At the very back of the group, one of the Dalki who hadn't quite rushed in with the others seemed to be concerned by what he was seeing.

'The commander didn't come with us, he went to the shelter.' The Dalki thought.

"Be careful of the man with the strange weapons, continue charging forward!" The Dalki ordered at the back.

Hearing this, those that were the weakest had caught on to what Quinn was attempting to do. Due to them feeling stronger as they got weaker they were fearless, but the Dalki that spoke seemed to help them realise it wasn't working out.

However, when one Dalki attempted to avoid the strike of the twin blade, it had fallen on his shadow instead. After hitting the shadow, the Dalki still fell to the floor feeling a great pain in its head where it had landed on the shadow.

The other Dalki were stunned by this and they didn't know what to make of what had just happened. What were they feeling right now, they truly didn't know.

[16/50 Dalki defeated]

Still, with the Dalki's orders some of them were now ignoring Quinn and were attempting to run past him. Quinn, upon seeing these, went ahead to strike his twin tail on them, but was kicked in the side of his rib in the process, causing his twin tail to hit nothing but the sand.

Ignoring the kick, Quinn got up and wrapped the twin blade around the Dalki next to him and hurled him at the Dalki running away, before leaping forward in the air and blocking their path again.

For a second as Quinn had landed, he stumbled onto the ground and was now on one knee.

'This damned soul weapon, why does it hurt so much to use it, and they're digging into my arm even more!' Quinn thought.

Even though he was fine health wise and was stronger due to the Dalki's stats, the soul weapon hurt more than ever to use and he was unable to take a break, otherwise his weapons would eat him alive.

"He needs help!" Shiro shouted.

"Shiro's right, Quinn is out there fighting on his own, what are we doing just standing here? Look, he's hurt trying to protect us, are we just going to wait for him to die first?" Venus pointed over to Quinn.

Innu and the other teachers were still shell shocked witnessing what Quinn could do, for the first time. For a second they didn't even feel like they were in their own bodies, it was as if they were watching a movie of some kind. They never thought they would see anyone survive that long against the Dalki.

A single person was fighting against forty-five Dalki, it was a tale that no one would believe unless they witnessed it and something that deserved to be passed down in history books forever.

Gritting his teeth, Quinn stood up on his feet again.

'If it was Arthur, he would have been able to deal with this many, he could have protected them all, right!' Quinn shouted in his head, which spurred him to continue swinging the twin blades as fast as he could at the oncoming enemies.

Another Dalki had run past him and as Quinn turned to stop him, the pain was too much and he had to pause for a short moment, but that was enough time for a two spiked Dalki to hit him breaking his ribs in the process, blood spewed from his mouth.

It was then that Quinn had a realisation for the first time that he was facing a different type of problem. It wasn't that Quinn was unable to defeat the fifty Dalki. If he had enough time and no one to protect, he had many ways and techniques that he could have used.

However, the problem now was that he was unable to protect others.

'Is this what Arthur felt like when he woke up to find all his people dead? What was the point of having all that power, if you can't protect the people you care for.'

Quinn thought.

As Quinn was ready to get up and try to fight the Dalki again, he could see one had been sent flying past him. He was shocked to see its body laying there on the floor.

[20/50 Dalki have been defeated]

Immediately after, abilities were seen firing off from behind, hitting the Dalki and sending some of them back, while others brushed off the attacks like they were nothing. The important thing wasn't that they were being injured, but that they were being kept busy.

"I'm sorry we waited too long, you did a lot better than I ever could have thought!" Innu said, standing by Quinn's side. "I don't care what happened between us in the past. Even if I think you're an arsehole, right now there are even bigger arseholes in front of us."

Smiling, Quinn couldn't agree more.

Chapter 1019: A order powered by will

Away from all the fighting, standing on his own in the middle of the desert was the man known as Eno, but at the same time claimed not to be him. He was so far away from the battlefield that if a human was to look out to the desert, they wouldn't be able to see him. As for Eno though, when he looked at the battlefield, he could see everything that was going on in the distance. Everything he needed to see.

'The humans have decided to come and help you, but this will be where the real test happens, Quinn.' Eno thought. 'As for the shelter, with how many strong forces they sent, I'm surprised that it's still standing. It's a shame the other one is no longer there to send information.'

'Did they send this many people because he knew I was going to be here?' Eno thought.

'Maybe I should send the other one to the Shelter to help the others, if any of them are still alive.'

Out on the field, the students who had ranged abilities were firing off non stop. The ranged ability users were targeting the Dalki that were on the far edges and towards the back, while the stronger ones had formed units with the teachers to fight them toe to toe.

The teacher that seemed to be the most effective out of them all, was Peter. He had equipped his beast weapons known as the Tonfa that had been especially made for him. It was a strong baton-like object that would be placed under Peter's forearms and also stuck out a bit longer than his arms could reach.

With this, he was able to strike the Dalki at full force without having to worry about his own body taking damage. Even if he didn't feel pain, at times when using his full strength it would break his own limbs. This object had solved most of those problems and he was able to do more damage than before.

Shiro, who was fearless, had dived right in with the teachers even though he was asked to stay at the back. However, when he had reached a Dalki and was staring one down, he froze for a brief second. The Dalki swiped and Shiro attempted to dodge but through his movements he knew he would be too slow.

Before the hand could reach Shiro, Peter had slammed it down with his weapon to the ground and then put both of them together and hit the Dalki in the stomach like a baseball bat. Soon several ranged abilities were also hitting the Dalki in the head, causing it to stumble backwards.

"All students, do not engage!" Peter shouted. "They're faster, stronger, and will kill you in one strike!" Peter shouted.

With the help of everyone, the Dalki forces were quickly dropping.

[24/50 Dalki defeated]

However, this wasn't what Quinn wanted. Having used his soul weapon for too long he had no choice but to cancel the soul weapon. The pain was affecting his whole body and was making it hard for him to even move. Now he was left fighting using his shadow and his fists like before.

Quinn had quickly thrown out a blood swipe and caught it with his shadow creating the shadow scythe. Swinging it outward, he had hooked a Dalki by the neck and slammed it down into the ground.

Now that he had the second stage of Qi, if Quinn coated the red aura with it, it would last until the Qi vanished as well. This would give Quinn a permanent shadow scythe to use. He hadn't brought out two since he needed to use his other hand from time to time.

When the Dalki was pinned to the ground, that's when Quinn could see the chaos that was happening. A teacher had been slashed by a claw of a Dalki, and had split through the beast armour slicing them in half.

Another Dalki had jumped over the line of support, ignoring the teachers and was just hitting the students left and right. Each hit was devastating and it was clear the students wouldn't recover from the strikes. They all continued to blast and hit the Dalki, but the abilities did seemingly nothing.

'The students are too weak to even do any damage to them!' Quinn thought seeing this. 'As soon as we knew the Dalki were going to attack we should have sent them off somewhere.'

But where could Quinn send them? Even at the shelter the Dalki had landed.

'Eno, what the hell are you doing!' Quinn shouted with anger.

A group of students were currently on the floor, shaking and they had wet themselves making a puddle in front of them. Their teacher had just died trying to protect them and a Dalki covered in blood was looking at the three of them.

Seeing this, Quinn placed out his hand and when the Dalki was ready to attack, they disappeared into the shadows. At the same time, another Dalki took this as an opportunity to punch Quinn in the head, knocking a tooth out.

Most of the Dalki were still centred around Quinn, they knew he was the biggest threat. What was distracting him more than ever were the Dalki who were jumping into the centre of the students just to hurt people that stood no chance.

Continuing to try to protect the students around him, Quinn used the shadow lock skill whenever possible, putting them into a space where the Dalki couldn't get to. At the same time, Quinn also raised shadow domes over other students. Although this wouldn't do much in terms of helping him attack or get rid of the Dalki, it made some of them hesitant to move forward.

Each time Quinn would be distracted, he would be hit by the Dalki as he was not able to raise his shadow in time, and his health was getting lower and lower by the second. When it got to a certain point, Quinn went searching for a weak Dalki. Upon finding one, he made his hand in a claw-like shape, then performed the hammer strike.

This time, due to his hand being in a claw-like shape, his entire arm would go through the body. It was a move that wasn't focused on being an internal attack. Once he had their blood on his hands, Quinn would take it in, giving him another power boost and healing him slightly.

[29/50 Dalki defeated]

'Damn, I'm surrounded again!' Quinn noticed and was getting frustrated that there was a certain group of Dalki that wouldn't get off his back. To make matters worse, they were all two spikes as well. Their hits hurt and he couldn't slack while fighting them. Whenever he did to save a student, he would pay for it.

"Get out of my way!" Quinn shouted, swinging his scythe and stretching it out, he planned to hit all four of the ones that were constantly on him. Three jumped out of the way, while the last one took the hit. It had pierced his hands and they were bleeding, but at the last second while being skidded across the room, he let go jumping and Quinn could see his scythe heading straight for the student. He quickly had to get rid of his shadow, dropping the red aura from the end of it to avoid touching the student.

In seconds the other Dalki were upon him again.

"I can't do anything!"

Whenever Quinn attempted to fight the Dalki, even if he couldn't see the students the worst thing for him was that he could hear their cries.

"I just wanted to see my parents one more time before I go. "

"Why did this happen to us, will someone stop them?"

"It hurts, it hurts so much."

Gritting his teeth and blasting blood sprays of fists at the Dalki, Quinn was beyond frustrated.

"Attack me, fight me! Why do you have to go for them!" he screamed, punching his enemies in front of him, hoping they wouldn't get back up, but they did.

Looking around, Quinn was trying to figure out an answer. The Dalki weren't fighting this smart before so something had to have changed, and that's when he noticed that a Dalki at the very back hadn't gotten involved.

'It's him!' Quinn thought, staring at him. 'I have to kill him, I need to get to him!'

Quinn was punched but he blocked attacks with his shadow and continued to use Shadow lock on more students. However his MC points would soon run low if he continued to do that. It was a demanding skill, and blocking the strong attacks even with his newly acquired 1000 Mc points, were going down fast.

"That guy..he needs to die!" Quinn shouted at the top of his lungs, Quinn shouted covering up his head as two Dalki punched him at the same time.

Blood spilt from his mouth, but he continued to stare at the Dalkii at the back, focusing on all the cries of pain, all the words he heard towards him.

'Get rid of him!' Quinn said almost as if it was an order.

At that moment, a black mist appeared from his body and started to float through the sky. It went over all those that were fighting and a black portal started to appear behind the two spiked Dalki who had yet to move.

From the portal. A large claw came out, striking the Dalki. At the last second they had spotted the creature but even lifting their hands, the claw shed through their strong skin. Jumping back quickly, the Dalki thought it was safe, but the Boneclaw appeared through a shadow behind it and stabbed it through its body with one of its hands before swiping with its other giant clawed hand, hitting its head. The claws went through easily and the head was no longer attached to the body falling to the floor.

"The boy still has the Boneclaw." Eno said, surprised and still watching the fight from a distance. "I knew he had obtained it, but to still have it at this stage. In that case, maybe Quinn isn't too innocent after all." Eno said with a smile.

Chapter 1020: Fex's Secret (one)

While running through the destroyed shelter, Fex and Samantha realised that more destruction had been done than they first thought. There was hardly a structure that was still left standing in the area they were in. Even if one of the buildings hadn't been directly hit, the shockwaves of fights and ability users all over had caused them to crumble.

The only thing that was still holding strong was the shelter walls that surrounded the whole place. This was due to part of them being built out of Glathrium. However, for a shelter as unimportant as this one, there wouldn't be much put into the walls.

While running through the destruction, Fex could suddenly hear someone shouting for help, the voice was weak and faint. He quickly changed direction from where he and Samantha were heading and headed to where the noise was coming from.

"There's someone under this rubble!" Fex said.

'How did he hear that? We were so far away and there was so much noise around us.' Samantha thought, but carried on helping Fex. She was going to use her ability to move some of the rubble, but before she could, using his bare hands, Fex had moved the rubble until he had eventually found a mother and a young boy.

'I almost forgot that this boy had strength to match the Dalki, there's also the string ability he used, his strong red aura along with that soul weapon of his. This teacher, he's from the Cursed faction, right? Why is everyone from that faction so... strange.'

Fex didn't know the way to the emergency centre but lifted them with ease and went to Samantha who was deep in her thoughts.

"Tell me where I should take them." Fex said in a rush.

"Oh, follow me." Samantha led the way. Even if Fex was strange, at least he seemed like he wasn't a bad person.

When arriving at the emergency centre, Samantha noticed that there were a couple of Mechs there standing guard next to a giant trap door that led underground, and there were a few men in military uniform dotted around.

"Head General Samantha!" The general said after one of them went to guide the injured into the emergency centre. "We couldn't locate you so we thought something happened, I'm glad you're..." Before finishing his sentence, the military man noticed that General Samantha wasn't okay at all, she was out of breath and sweating with torn clothes.

If they didn't find her straight away, it could only mean she was dealing with a Dalki of her own and now the soldier was reluctant to tell her, but continued anyway. It was his duty.

"Report, the Mech's along with sergeant Mark of the shelter have been able to defeat one of the invading Dalki. They are currently moving onto the next. However, there is an issue. A two spiked Dalki has destroyed all the forces we have sent out to it.

"We haven't been able to get in contact with Mark since he went off, we are hoping for some orders based on the situation. For now, we have guarded the two emergency centres." The soldiers said.

Guarding the centres was good and a bad thing at the same time, Samantha thought. In a way it was telling the enemy that all the humans were hiding in this place, but if they didn't defeat the Dalki, how long could the humans survive in the shelters without the teleporters being turned on?

Because of this, Samantha took charge and made the decisions.

"You guys, come with us and we will head off to face the two spiked Dalki."

When she said these words, she could see the worried look on the soldiers faces.

"But Ma'am, are you able to fight? I know you are strong, but against a two spiked Dalki you will need to be in top shape."

For a second, Samantha looked at Fex.

"We can both fight," she said. "We just need you for support."

Soon, the group of them were off. Two mechs, five soldiers, Fex, and Samantha were heading to deal with the two spiked Dalki. While two remained to help any more injured that would arrive.

While running ahead, Samantha had many questions on her mind.

"When you stabbed yourself with that black needle, you got stronger and you said the same thing would happen to me, right? Then will it give me a little boost with my MC cells?"

Samantha had recovered some of her cells, but not all and she was afraid of just how long she could fight for.

Fex looked at the needle in his hand with the green liquid. He was sure the green liquid would do nothing to empower her, so it was best he injected the liquid with the needle in himself first and then used the needle to control Smantha.

There was one big problem however, even if the needle did give her additional MC points to use, Fex couldn't make much use of her. The main reason for this was because having the needle in the human also made it so he could control that person from a single point.

However, controlling Samantha wouldn't do much at all. Since she wasn't a physical fighter and was one who relied on elemental powers. Fex couldn't control how one could use their elemental powers but only their body.

This was why he preferred hand to hand combat, or weapon fighters like Erin and Dennis.

"The Dalki, you were trying to kill it in one shot right?" Fex replied. "When I stab this needle in you, you will be on your own. You will have enough energy to use your nine tail trick one more time. At that point, you need to do what you can to kill it." Fex said.

It didn't take long for them to find out where the two spiked Dalki was, as the ground started to rumble as it caused meaningless destruction. It had punched a partial building causing it to completely collapse. It also hadn't moved too far from the crater of the black pod that it had landed in.

Fex went ahead of the others and the first thing he did was stab himself with the green needle. The green blood effect would last a while but the power of the needle would only last while it was in one's body, so he couldn't have both effects of it while using it on Samantha.

"Fire shots only when you think they are necessary, try to injure it as little as possible!" Fex shouted.

The soldiers and the two mechs looked at each other.

"Listen to him, he will be in charge of this fight." Samantha said.

No questions asked, if Samntha ordered it they would follow this stranger to them.

"So I'm really going to be doing this again." Fex said, walking forward and looking at the giant Dalki that had lifted both its arms in the air and slammed it into the ground.

Fex had moved out of the way and placed red pieces of string on the ground, there was the perfect chance to hit it but he didn't and the others in the mech and soldiers were itching to fire.

"Don't, trust him!" Samantha said, seeing they were about to attack.

Fex then climbed on its back, passing red string over the back of its body and attempted to go through the gap between its shoulders and arms. However, he wasn't quick enough as his legs had been grabbed and he was slammed to the ground.

The Dalki was then ready to stomp on Fex, but the ability users and Mechs fired first, hitting the Dalki. Even if it didn't pierce its skin or hurt the Dalki much, it did give a split second so that Fex could move out of the way.

The others seeing this were surprised. A human had just been slammed into the ground by a two spiked Dalki and was fine. Taking the flask out on him, Fex drank a bit of the blood he still had left. He had injuries and he needed blood to heal them.

"Why is he taking a drink during his fight?" A soldier asked. When the Dalki prepared to kick Fex, he managed to dodge this time, moving to the side and getting closer. When he reached its body he slid underneath the Dalki.

'The big guys are fast and strong, but with the power of the needle I'm just as strong!' Fex thought, finally his preparations had been made, to take down the Dalki.

Chapter 1021: Fex's Secret (two)

Everything Fex had been doing so far was for this moment. Red strings came from his fingers, and at the same time, red strings formed all over the Dalki. On the floor, the string also rose as he controlled it with his blood. So much red string had been created while Fex was busy avoiding its attacks and had tied up the Dalki in crucial places.

Now taking the needle out of himself, he chucked it towards Samantha. She knew what she needed to do and ran forward, allowing the needle to stab her in the back.

The soldiers were confused by this, but as she spun around and clapped her hands she commanded.

"Get ready to attack!" The nine tails with her soul weapon the hardened tips rose. Fex now no longer having the needle in him was finding it hard to hold the Dalki in place but he just needed to for a few more moments.

His muscles felt like they were tearing apart and his whole body was shaking trying to hold the Dalki in place. The nine tails had struck all towards the head, stabbing into the Dalki. The sheer power from the elemental users and also the Mechs continued to fire in as they charged forward.

No one had stopped attacking, but Fex felt his arms give out and the string was released, the Dalki wasn't dead yet. In fact, it was getting stronger as it was getting weaker.

"Arghh! Screw you." Fex said, leaping up into the air. Using his blood ornament to cover his hand, it was covered in a red aura and with all his might he had jumped into the line of fire, getting hit by the mech and a few elemental shots from behind. Squinting and grunting, fortunately he still managed to deliver his punch right to the Dalki's head.

He cried in pain, tumbling to the ground with his back wounded and fell to the floor, where he just laid there.

At the same time, the Dalki too had fallen to the floor and had been defeated. Samantha, upon seeing this, immediately ran to where Fex was. His wounds were bad and she could see his back had been quite hurt from the mech's beast laser shots.

"Damn it, I'll get help, I'll call a healer!" Samantha shouted.

"It's okay." Fex grunted.

"It's not okay, come on, don't die. You need to live, I don't even know your name."

Fex smiled.

"It's Fex." And pointed to his flask that had skidded away from him.

She looked at what he was pointing at and dashed over to reach it thinking it was something important. When she picked it up the lid was open and she could see that blood had fallen from the flask.

'It was blood inside that flask? Why would he be drinking blood?'

Nonetheless, she brought the flask back over to Fex, who attempted to pour it into his mouth. With only a few drops coming out he needed more.

For some reason, he had attempted to drink the blood and she didn't understand what was going on. However, seconds later and a loud crash was heard. She turned her head and seemingly out of nowhere another two spiked Dalki had arrived and smashed one of the Mech's with a single hand.

The soldiers attempted to attack it but were killed in an instant and the other mech was picked up and lifted into the air before being smashed into the ground. The mech was punching back, trying to fight, but it was clear there was an easy winner that would be decided between the two of them soon.

What was noticeable about this Dalki, was the fact that it had green blood all over its body. This meant that it had been in a fight before, and whoever had fought it had managed to injure it greatly.

If it was a beast this would be good news, but not for a Dalki who got stronger based on these types of things.

"No, crap! What should I do?" Samantha asked, slamming the ground out of anger for how weak she was at the moment. She had counted that there were five pods and this was quite possibly the last of the Dalki in the shelter, but she couldn't do anything.

Her MC cells had been spent and when Fex was injured, the soul weapon had disappeared.

"Blood...." Fex called out, as he looked from the corner of his eyes and could see the Dalki heading towards them.

"Blood, what are you talking about at a time like this?" Samantha shouted. She was wondering if she should try to flee on her own or grab Fex and flee with him, but it would be impossible to outrun a Dalki.

"If you give me blood, I can fight again!" Fex shouted. Although Fex had to hide his ability as a vampire, at the moment, he knew that both of their lives were at stake. He knew he was the only one that could save them.

'This boy, he keeps saying crazy things, but he did drink that flask in the middle of the fight, so maybe he's telling the truth!' She had to gamble, and that's exactly what she did. She quickly formed a sharp dagger with her earth ability, cutting the palm of her hand.

"This is what you need right, this will let you fight. Then please help us!" She shouted at Fex, allowing the blood to fall from the palm of her hand and drip into Fex's mouth.

Almost instantly as the blood entered Fex's mouth, his wounds on his back healed at a fast rate.

"Just what is going on, it actually worked?"

However, there was no time for celebrations or explanations as the Mech that was fighting with the Dalki had finally stopped moving, and now the Dalki's attention was only on the two of them.

"Was it you two?" The Dalki asked. "Were you two the ones that killed the others!" The Dalki shouted.

At that moment, Fex managed to stand up. Although his wounds had healed, it was a different story about everything else. He was completely drained after having two tough fights in a row, and he wasn't even sure he could produce string anymore.

The Dalki screamed loudly, making a roar similar to a dragon. The gust of wind was felt from his roar and was so strong that it knocked Fex and Samantha over.

Attempting to do the same, Fex took a deep breath in, and shouted back.

"Roarrhh!" Fex screamed at the top of his lungs. When he did so, he wasn't the only one that had screamed. He was confused and thought he was going delusional with tiredness, but Samantha had heard it too.

"Fex, you can rest now. Don't worry, leave it to us." A voice said from behind but it wasn't just one person, it was five of them.

"You guys, you're here, how did you make it here?" Fex said, as his eyes were slowly fading. Just as he fell, Linda managed to catch him and slowly put him on the ground.

"Do you mind looking after this idiot for a while?" Linda said with a smile, putting her next to Samantha. "I think we have something else to deal with."

Seeing these people, Linda wondered who they were. From the way they were speaking they clearly knew who Fex was. Which had given her a hint.

"Wait, are you from the Cursed faction?" Samantha asked.

Nate gave a thumbs up without turning his head, thinking that he looked cool and it would impress the pretty head general.

Members from the Cursed faction had arrived, and it wasn't just any members, but some of the strongest from the Cursed faction.

"Be careful, it's at its strongest at the moment." Samantha warned, but it seemed like her warning had no effect on them whatsoever as each of them stood there confidently, ready to take on the Dalki.

'The Cursed faction...Fex, just who are you guys?' Samantha thought as she looked down at Fex's tired face.

Chapter 1022: Cursed teamwork

On the Cursed ship, when Brock had revealed to the group that Quinn would be talking to Eno right now, they didn't take that as a good sign. Instead, Logan and Sam were thinking along the same lines.

They were worried. Richard Eno wasn't someone they could fully trust yet despite what Logan's parents told him, or believe that he was the great scientist that helped out the human race in times of need. There were just too many secrets for things to go smoothly.

After learning of this, Sam suggested that they keep a close eye on Quinn and find out where he was. They knew the schedule of the military and what planet they would be on, and because they had an inkling that Eno would try something, they were ready having organised a few things beforehand.

Of course, as soon as the communication devices were down and the military had put out a report for anyone in the nearby area to be careful of the Planet Caladi, they were already one step ahead of everyone else.

This allowed them to arrive before anyone. Linda, Nate, Dennis, Wevil and Sam had teleported to the planet closest and already had a ship prepared to head to planet Caladi.

"Remember the plan!" Sam said, and at that moment, the Dalki came rushing forward. Wevil, Sam, Nate, and Dennis stood in front of Linda and each one of them raised their shadow. They used their abilities to equally take part of the attack.

Alone, their MC points were probably enough to just block a single attack from a Dalki, but then they wouldn't be able to fight using their ability anymore. However if they mixed their shadows together, they would contribute evenly to the attack and it wouldn't drain them so quickly.

'The shadow ability, isn't that Quinn, their Cursed faction Leader's ability? Does this mean that he taught it to others in his faction as well?' Samantha wondered. In a way, one wouldn't think this was too surprising - it was a strong ability that should be shared. However with such a strong ability, some people might have decided to keep the power only to themselves.

It was strange but humans were quite jealous beings, if someone was seen as stronger than them they would try to trample them down. People always wondered if there were others in the Cursed faction that knew the shadow ability and it seemed like today they had gotten their answer.

However, with the shadow ability alone, this couldn't be the only reason why they were confident.

Samantha had noticed that Linda didn't use a shadow ability, but instead started to grow in size while being surrounded by shadows. As she began growing slightly larger than the Dalki, her beast armour was being equipped through the shadow equip skill.

Then when she was ready, the others quickly moved out of the way and the Dalki and Linda clashed. Their hands netted closely together, pushing against one another hoping for one to give in.

For the second time today, Samantha had seen another human match a Dalki in terms of strength.

'Do the Cursed faction have a lot better beast gear than we thought?' She wondered, and she soon started to move Fex and herself away from the danger zone.

"Everyone quickly, get to it!" Sam ordered and Wevil's body started to transform into the dangerous bug man he was, turning into his tiger beetle form.

At the same time, Dennis had moved his shadow to form small wings on his back. Sam, using his own shadow, had somehow allowed it to also attach to Dennis, letting his wings grow bigger.

Dennis hopped onto Nate's broad shoulders and soon added his shadow too, making it so Dennis had formed his own pair of shadow wings. Using his strong thighs, Nate crouched down before jumping up and pushing up Dennis into the sky.

He flapped his wings giving him extra air time and speed, and then he stayed still for just a second as he looked down at the Dalki.

"I never thought I would ever be able to fly again after losing my ability, it's not quite the same but this will have to do." Dennis said as he started to descend, spinning his whole body. At the same time he activated his soul weapon, creating a golden aura around him.

Soon, Nate and Wevil launched forward to the Dalki, attacking its legs as hard as they could. Nate had formed a blood punch of destruction and Wevil now transformed into his tiger beetle-like form, he charged forward and with his strong claws smashed into the other leg.

The Dalki tumbled to the ground and Linda at that moment quickly let go of the Dalki's hands to give it an uppercut, hitting its head upwards. At just the right time Dennis used his soul weapon and at high speed he came spinning down, slamming onto the Dalki's head and crushing it within its own body. The sand on top of the hard ground blew out and Samantha had to cover her eyes before she was hit by the aftershock.

'Is he okay?' She thought, for one to land with such force it was almost a suicidal attack.

The wings on his back had spread out onto the ground creating a soft landing for Dennis so he wouldn't be hurt further from the initial impact. The five that had arrived seemed perfectly fine after their turbulent entrance and the Dalki was no longer moving.

'Did they just manage to kill a two spiked Dalki that was on the verge of death?' Samantha thought, as she saw them walking towards her.

She could see that Dennis also seemed uninjured after her initial worry about the impact of his attack. In the last war they had mainly only fought against one spiked Dalki. Two spiked were a very rare occurrence and three spiked were the highest that anyone had ever encountered.

Even back then it would take a great force to kill a Dalki. Some even thought it was just because of the humans' sheer numbers that they were able to somewhat win the first war, but the human race's numbers had greatly dwindled after that.

If the Dalki actually had stronger forces than that then the humans would have no hope, which was why the military were being so strict on gathering tools to defeat the Dalki as well as training the students.

'How powerful is the Cursed faction for only five of them to defeat a Dalki without getting hurt? And if they have the shadow ability, how are they able to do things that would require an ability? It seems like we hardly know anything about them. I don't even recognise any of the people here and the same goes for teacher Fex back there.'

"If you don't mind, I think we'll take him." Sam said with a smile as Linda lifted Fex and hurled him onto her back.

"I think you should head to the others, and it looks like your own commander has arrived." Sam said, pointing to the sky.

Looking up, one of the Bertha ships that was operated by the military could be seen entering the planet's atmosphere with several smaller faster ships around it.

At that moment she realised that the shelter probably wasn't the only place that was attacked, there were the students out on the expedition.

'What if five or more Dalki came to where they were, I have to get in contact with them.'

"You guys, you need to make sure the students are okay, the Cursed faction-" Samantha was trying to explain, but Sam just placed his hand on her worried shoulder.

"Don't worry. The fight is over, we can tell." Sam said, and he wasn't wrong either.

With the connection they each felt with Quinn, they could feel when he was fighting close by, but they could also tell there was something else going on, but what could it be?

Standing out on the sandy desert, Quinn was surrounded by several bodies of Dalki he had defeated, the Boneclaw that had come out to help had done half the job for him and soon disappeared right back to where Quinn was.

When the students and teachers realised there were no more Dalki left, they all started to cheer, roaring with happiness and relief.

But as Quinn stood out ahead of them and looked around, he could see the students and teachers who had been injured and killed. Many lives had been lost in this battle.

'This isn't the victory I wanted.' Quinn thought.

[Quest has been completed]

[50/50 Dalki have been defeated]

[Rewards will now be given]

Chapter 1023: Sacrifice continues

A few moments before the fight with the Dalki had ended, Quinn had successfully summoned the Boneclaw out. Vincent, who was watching everything in the system, was unsure if even Quinn knew what he was doing or not, as he had just given a command from his darkest will and the Boneclaw had answered coming out to his call.

With the Boneclaw out, it dealt with the Dalki giving orders at the back relatively easily. The Boneclaw had its full strength compared to what it was in the past and it was able to attack the Dalki army from behind, giving less pressure on Quinn.

Still, Quinn was worried about those around that were still getting attacked while fighting the Dalki. He raised his hand and used shadow lock again, protecting a bunch of students, but he had nowhere near enough MC cells to protect them all and the Dalki were taking advantage of these openings. Getting hit each time his focus strayed.

"Quinn, you need to listen to me. You can't save them all, some of them have already died and that's a fact!" Vincent said. "What you need to do now is focus on defeating the Dalki as quickly as possible. This is the best way for you to save the most amount of lives."

Quinn didn't want to admit that he wasn't strong enough to protect everyone, but he knew Vincent was right. He knew a change of strategy was needed.

There were still four Dalki that had surrounded Quinn and he was away from where all the teachers and students were fighting. Quickly, he placed a large shadow dome over the four of them.

Using the shadow hop, Quinn was able to sneak around the dome and hit them with blood crescent kicks and more, even raining down on one of them as he dropped from above blood swipes. Before landing, spinning his body he hit the side of a Dalki's head with his elbow, a fatal blow for the Dalki after all the punishment it had already received.

Throughout the whole fight, Quinn had been pacing himself so he could fight against the fifty Dalki, but now he had another goal - to defeat them as quickly as possible. The Dalki had hard skin, especially where their scales stuck out more such as their forearms, chest, and head. These were the attacking parts of the Dalki and the more critical places that needed more protection.

Firing off a blood bullet from his fingers and hitting the forehead of a Dalki, Quinn realised it wasn't enough to defeat another, but firing off five of them at the same place and then charging in, Quinn was ready with a hammer strike towards the head, weakening the scales and defeating yet another Dalki.

At this point, the other two that remained inside started to punch the walls of shadow around them hoping to get away. Quinn knew this because with each strike his MC points would be depleted and too busy dealing with the Dalki that was nearly defeated, his MC points had finally hit 0. The dome was collapsing but Quinn wasn't relying on just the shadow anymore, he had his Muay Boran skills, and his different stages of Qi with blood skills.

Finally, after defeating the last two Dalki, Quinn stood there with several dead Dalki lying around him and the quest complete sign had popped up on the system, telling him the fight was over.

The rewards started to come in, but Quinn didn't care about that for now. While the students were everywhere celebrating, Quinn was looking at those that were injured and being looked after. He could hear their cries of pain.

Going over to where he could hear a student screaming, several wanted to thank Quinn for what he had done.

"General Hardy, I mean Talen, thank you for saving us."

"You were so strong, I just can't believe we are still alive."

"I want to be like you someday."

Ignoring them all, Quinn eventually managed to reach the student whose mouth was filled with blood, their friend was next to them holding his hand.

"Please, please live!" She shouted.

The boy wasn't dead yet, but he was in a critical state and Quinn went down to his side.

Innu who was also looking for Quinn had rushed over to where he was to see what he was doing, and could see him making a cut on his hand.

'Quinn, what are you doing, think before you act!' Vincent shouted in his mind.

'What do you think I'm doing, I'm saving his life, I'm going to turn him!' Quinn shouted back.

'So you're going to turn everyone who is on the verge of death? Have you taken a look around to see how many people there are? You can't save them all, and how are you going to pick those that deserve to live and those that don't?' Vincent questioned.

'But how, how am I meant to just stay here and do nothing when I know I can save him?' Quinn asked.

'A life of a vampire isn't for everyone, and you can only turn a finite number of people. What happens in the future when you want to turn someone you truly care about, and you can't save them? I know you care for these students a great deal, but in every war you face there will be casualties and if you are going to go against the Dalki in a full out war, they will be forced to fight again and even more people will die.'

While he and Vincent were busy arguing away, the boy had passed, taking his last breath. It was too late for Quinn to do anything.

Innu was actually hoping to come and congratulate, even praise Quinn for what he had done. Being close to someone with that much power would be a good thing, but after seeing the student die and how Quinn and the others were so upset, he realised how selfish he was being.

'How the hell can there be this good of a person in the world?' Innu thought, as he looked at Quinn crying tears over a student that he didn't even know.

However, those tears soon started to turn into anger, as he grabbed the floor and pulled the ground into his hand, turning it into fine dust.

"Eno, if it wasn't for him overriding the system then we could have saved more lives. Did these kids really deserve to go through all that?!"

Getting up off the ground, Quinn started to look around, tossing and turning his head to see if Eno was anywhere near. He then ran through some of the students at a quick speed not holding back and looked out wide, before running through them again and searching in another place.

Quinn was moving so fast that Innu couldn't even keep track of him.

'He can move so fast and he has so much energy. This person, with mind control and more.' Thinking about all the things a single person could do, Innu's body was shaking. He wasn't sure if they should get someone like that on their side, or if knowing there was such a strong person, that it should be something they should get rid of.

Making a note of everything he saw, he was sure to report it back to the Supreme Commander Oscar including the concerns he had.

Eventually, looking out north, Quinn had spotted Eno, or at least the vampire he had talked to before off in the distance.

"Peter, make sure everyone is okay. This might take a while." Quinn said, as he dashed off into the distant sand dunes and made sure not to get too close to Eno this time.

"You don't trust me now?" Eno asked. "Well I don't blame you. It's a good way to live through this world, not trusting anyone. I'm also surprised that you're not attacking me on the spot, or are you afraid, after using that much energy that you might lose?"

Quinn gripped his fist even harder, it was true most of his energy was spent. If he had to have another big fight then he would need to gather more strength, but if that did happen he still had one more move that he could rely on, the shadow overload skill that was still available.

"I think I still have enough to beat you, but that wouldn't answer any of my questions." Quinn replied.

"Very well. You have passed my test for you, and as a reward I think it's time for you and I to speak. Do you have somewhere more private?" Eno asked.

Opening up his hand, Quinn and Eno disappeared into the shadow lock space to have their one on one conversation.

Chapter 1024: A dangerous man

The large Bertha ship didn't land on the planet as they had expected. Instead, it stayed hovering in the sky like a giant island. However, smaller ships did depart and immediately descended to two locations in particular, the shelter and a short distance away where the fighting had taken place in the desert.

Support had arrived, only it was far too late and all the damage that could be done had already happened as the Dalki had been dealt with. Oscar had personally decided to arrive along with the support team.

It was the first full scale attack from the Dalki since the peace treaty and Oscar was pretty sure that after the investigations of what happened, that an announcement would have to be made to the whole human race - that they were in the middle of a war.

Inside the shelter a few medium sized ships had landed. Deboarding from the ship was Head General Sach and his trusted sergeants that were usually helping him organise his platoons when he was doing school duties.

What was noticeable about them, was that they had no beast weapons on them, but did have high level beast armour. Along with them each ship carried around twenty people and a total of twenty ships had landed in the shelter. More were to be sent from the large Bertha ship, but when they noticed that there was no longer any trouble, the other troops were sent away.

The first team had even carried with them the portable teleporters. They weren't quite sure if they worked but if so, they could get others to escape or bring more support with them. What was interesting was that the teleporters started to work as soon as the Dalki were defeated.

The Head General, Samantha, and the Cursed members were ready to head out of the destroyed shelter, with Linda carrying Fex over her shoulder. That was until suddenly five ships had descended in the area. A male and female sergeant deboarded from one, while the captains and their squads rushed to Head General Samantha's aid.

'That wasn't too slow of a response from the military.' Sam thought. 'But if we didn't arrive and Fex wasn't here, they could have lost a head general today.'

Sam walked forward and the rest followed him, when a female sergeant with an eyepatch covering her right eye stood in front of them with her sword. Her ten men from behind also surrounded them.

"Halt!" She stated. "No one is to leave this area. We are to take you to the emergency centre with the others and shall take your weapons. There you shall give a full report of what happened."

"Is this seriously happening right now?" Wevil said, as he looked at the others who just shrugged their shoulders.

Dennis tried moving forward and ignored them, but soon he found one of the men attempting to stop him. It was a larger man than Dennis, who looked strong and had tried to bully him back, but the second the man's hand touched Dennis' chest, he grabbed it and threw the large man to the floor.

"What are you doing, are you disobeying orders right now!" She shouted as several men were preparing to fight.

"We don't belong to the military. We work 'with' you, not under you." Dennis said.

"He's correct, we are part of the Cursed faction." Sam answered.

"Even so, we have to make a report and learn of what happened here. Surely the Cursed faction aren't so foolish to not even know the basics of war." The sergeant replied.

Sam walked forward, unafraid of the person in front of him, it was the first time he had felt this way. Before becoming a vampire he had felt weak and powerless but something had sparked in him when he looked at the girl.

"Look. I don't know if you know this, but someone very important to us is on this planet and doesn't appear to be in this shelter. Until we know he is okay, we won't listen to anyone's orders. Not even the supreme commander himself." Sam said, as a single eye started to glow red, but before they completely turned, Nate cleared his throat, bringing his friend back to reality.

A shiver had gone completely down the sergeant's spine, but still she wanted to make it clear that nobody could bully her, not when they had important duties to attend to, so she had planned to retaliate.

"Let them go." Samantha said from far away. She had received minor first aid by some healers and many of her injuries had recovered. "They can make a report when they come back. They are free to leave and make sure no one stops them. That's an order." Samantha said.

Hearing this, Sam walked forward and the rest of the group followed as they left the shelter. As quick as they had arrived, they seemed to disappear just as quickly.

"Are you sure that was the right thing to do, Head General?" The sergeant asked.

"Yes." Samantha replied. "I know now what Oscar was talking about when he said we should be doing everything to get them on our side. The Cursed might be what we need if we have even a chance of winning this war." She then looked at the multiple dead two spiked Dalki.

It was clear that the forces they had used in the first war wasn't everything they had, either that or they had evolved and gotten stronger.

Sam and the others had eventually arrived at where the other students and teachers were recuperating. Here several ships from the giant Bertha had landed as well and this was where Oscar had decided to arrive.

The students thought that those from the Cursed were either just travellers or more military personal, but then some of the students had recognised Wevil.

"Hey, isn't he the one that helped us in the beast weapons lesson?" One of them commented.

"Wait, so are those people from the Cursed faction? It would make sense why they are here if their leader is here."

Overhearing what the kids were talking about, Sam had an idea of what might have happened, it looked like Quinn had to reveal himself to the others.

'Those are the guys from the Cursed? They don't look impressive, I don't even recognise any of them.' Innu thought. 'They took over so many big name factions after taking over Daisy and the other beast planets, and they sent these guys to pick up their leader? If it was Owen, a whole platoon of the Graylash' strongest would be sent and they would have made quite the entrance.'

Turning around, Oscar managed to catch his eye on one of the Cursed members and walked over to greet himself while his assistant stood by his side.

"It's great to finally meet you in person after talking over video all this time. You're a lot smaller than I thought." Oscar said, looking down at him.

"Do you know where our leader is?" Sam asked to keep it short, because he was afraid that something else might have been revealed other than Quinn's true title.

"We don't actually know much about that. I think it's best if you talk to your other head general, Peter. He seems to know more and just said that he would return eventually." Oscar replied. "Before you go, I know you're in a rush but I just want you to think about something. You seem like a smart and capable person based on our previous communications. You don't have to answer me now, but why do you think the Dalki attacked this place?"

"I'll be sure to think about it." Sam said as he walked off towards Peter.

Honestly Sam was already thinking about this question himself. He could see in person the amount of Dalki that had attacked. At first he thought that it might have been Eno's doing, but from the information they had learnt from Brock it would make no sense for him to do that.

'Did the Dalki come here because they were after something, or someone? What if they were after Eno, maybe he's been hiding on this planet this whole time and someone finally found him. Why would the Dalki be after him though?'

The second reason Sam could think of was more likely to be the answer, but he was worried if this was the case. Eno's goal was to protect the demon tier beast that was on the Blade island. If he knew the Dalki were going to attack, did he use a plant? Maybe he gave fake information that the demon tier beast was here. It was quite possible he also knew the movements of Quinn. Tying the two things together he used it as a test for him, and a way to throw the Dalki off the real scent. If Quinn had failed, he still would have killed a lot of Dalki and their goal wouldn't have progressed any further.

Looking around, Sam could see and smell how much blood had been spilt from the students. Hundreds of them had been brutally murdered.

'If that's the case, then Eno is a really dangerous man.' Sam thought.

Chapter 1025: Three questions

The shadow space was filled with pitch black shadows so that nothing was visible but their own bodies, which would illuminate slightly while they were inside. If one was to walk through the vast space it would feel like they were walking forever with no destination.

From the inside, one could destroy the space but from the outside, it was nearly impossible for others to interact with. Now inside the safe space, Quinn and Eno were standing opposite each other.

A lot of pent up frustration was already aimed at Eno before what had just happened, but now even more anger was pointed towards this mysterious person. What Quinn needed more than anything however, was not revenge but answers.

"Richard Eno probably doesn't know about me putting myself into the system, even though it does seem quite likely that he was the one that helped me create it." Vincent said. "So I think it's best if we keep it a secret."

Still, Vincent was unsure about this. It seemed like Eno had installed a type of backdoor without him even realising it, allowing him to do things like he had done before. The worrying thing was to what extent could he control Quinn's system.

Could he make it so the bonus stats Quinn received from blood were worthless, or was his control only limited to system only related skills that Eno could stop? Because of this uncertainty, Vincent wanted Quinn to be more on the cautious side.

"Vincent, thanks for the words of advice. You have always been a great help." Quinn replied.

"Hey, even though he is related to me, you are as well. This is one crazy family, and he's the start of it." Said Vincent.

"I know you must have a lot of questions and since you have successfully passed my test, as a reward I will be happy to answer three questions on your mind, and I will answer them fully for you." Eno said. "You might think you have me trapped in this place, that you could fight me and force me to tell you more, but this is not my real body. At any point in time I can leave this place whenever I wish."

Quinn never thought Eno would be straightforward, he never had been, but he also could have left during the battle with the Dalki. It was clear that Eno stayed because he too wanted to talk to Quinn and had questions of his own for him.

"Why only three questions?" Quinn asked.

Hearing this, Vincent wanted to go out of the system and start shaking the boy, but all he could do was shake his head.

"I haven't had enough time to evaluate what you have built up." Eno answered. "You are a person that was never originally in my plans. I had an inkling about what Vincent was planning to do when he had made his request to help him, but I had no ulterior motives when helping him.

"I helped because I sympathized with Vincent's situation a lot and I thought it made sense to help out in this way. Also it was an...experiment. How strong would a vampire with a system get? Anyway I'm derailing from the original question now. But it is related. At the moment, I don't know how strong you or your faction is, nor how strong you can get.

"I believe you not knowing everything and trying to find out the answers yourself has made you even stronger."

Eno then lifted his hand and placed one of his three fingers down. It was at that moment that Quinn realised his general question had been counted as one of his three permitted questions. He thought he had shot himself in the foot, still Eno was giving a lot of information in his answers at least.

The problem is, did Quinn believe him?

With only two questions left, Quinn was really limited to what he wanted to ask. He wanted to know why Eno had made it so he couldn't summon or call the others for help, but that would have been a waste of a question.

"What is your reason for doing all this, what's your goal, what do you get out of this?" Quinn asked.

"A good question." Eno smiled. "It's broad but I'll give you an answer. To put it simply - I care about the humans, maybe even more than Vincent did. During my time as king, the vampire race was doing well, but how could I confirm that would be the case once I slept? Could I go peacefully knowing there was a chance all the hard work I did would have gone to waste? Absolutely not.

"It looks like there are some vampires who are doing everything in their power to crush everything I have built up, and there's a chance it could still fall. As for what I'm doing right now, my goal is the same as the humans, to get rid of the Dalki.

"Right now, that is an impossible task for humans to do without a bit of help, and this is where I come in. If you don't believe me, you don't have to. But I have always been helping them even during the last war and I will continue to help them. The Dalki are stronger than anyone knows, even the vampires should consider them as a threat with the way they are at the moment." Eno answered.

Placing another finger down again, Quinn thought he was pretty serious about only answering three questions which was now making him a little nervous about what to ask. Based on how elusive Eno had been so far as well, he was most likely telling the truth about not being here in person.

'What do I ask about, the system? About Jim and the Dalki? The Green family? What he plans to do now?' There were just too many questions on Quinn's mind and it was driving him a little crazy.

Until he thought of one thing. What Quinn needed to figure out more than anything was what type of person Eno was and whether he could just trust what he was doing. If he was against the Dalki, at least for now the two of them were possibly on the same side.

"Why....Why did you lie to Arthur?" Quinn asked.

When asking this question, Eno's face changed a little.

"I'm afraid you're going to have to be a little clearer on that one, what do you exactly mean? Why did I give him the Shadow ability, why I chose to make him a punisher? Remember although I have an idea of your movements, even I don't know exactly what you have done." Eno replied.

"Why did you frame the original First family leader for killing Arthur's men? Do you know how much that must have hurt? Do you know he's even looking for you right now?" Quinn asked.

For the first time when answering a question, Eno was quiet for a moment beforehand.

"So you managed to learn the truth somehow. I don't know how you got this information, but it seems like Arthur now knows as well." Eno said, sounding remorseful about it.

"Remember what I said before, I would do anything to protect the humans. Now let me make this clear, Quinn. I will do anything to protect the human race. When you have lived as long as me, you realise that individual lives in the total scale of things don't matter.

"The First family leader always wanted to rule over the humans. I saw the opportunity to get rid of someone who would constantly be trouble, and the best way to do it while restraining the vampires by giving Arthur his shadow power.

"Perhaps you are still young and haven't lived long enough to understand what I mean, but you now control a force and even in the small fight you just had then I'm sure you understood. I saw what you attempted to do, so let me ask you. Why didn't you save that boy's life when you could have?

"Quinn, don't you hate the system that values strength over everything? Were you worried that in the future if you needed to turn a friend that you wouldn't be able to? In a way, now those that have a closer relation to you are allowed to be saved, while those that don't can't.

"Does that mean that the boy's death was only because you didn't care about him?" Vincent asked.

Hearing this, the image of the student that was about to die appeared in his head again, and Quinn was feeling slightly sick.

"Quinn, don't listen to him. There were more reasons than that as to why you didn't save him and remember, we couldn't have been able to save them all. You weren't controlling the Dalki, you didn't tell them to attack. It's not your fault."

"I know his death is on my hands," Quinn said, "and I've accepted that. But can you say the same? You say you care for humans, but what about the vampires? I'm sure there are some vampires you care for. Otherwise you would have just attempted to massacre the vampires to extinction. But that was never an option for you, was it? You picked Arthur to restrain the vampires, to stop them from attacking the humans, but now that's pretty useless right? I don't know what happened, but now Arthur doesn't want to restrain them - he wants to kill them all and that's all your fault. You made Arthur into what he has become."

"What do you mean?" Eno asked.

"I guess you really don't know everything. Did you think I learnt this shadow ability from Arthur? No, he beat me near to death and he left me with one last message, that he was coming for all the vampires."

Eno's eyes widened as it was made clear. This was something Eno had no idea was happening, that Arthur had joined the Dalki's side. Perhaps this information had just thrown a giant spanner in all of Eno's plans.

Chapter 1026: A condition

Outside on the field after getting their reports from the students, they were the first ones that had been sent back to the school base located on Earth. Their treatment wouldn't stop there.

They knew there was more work that needed to be done, not just treating physical injuries but it was important for the students to recover mentally as well. Seeing your friends and fellow pupils die in front of your eyes wasn't something every single person could cope with in the same way.

Oscar had remained out on the field with a few other soldiers who were taking the Dalki bodies in for research. His reasons for staying were the same for the Cursed faction members who continued to stand in the heat.

*Ding

A ping came in on Jane's tablet, Oscar's assistant who was standing right next to him.

"The reports have come in from the Shelter and Head General Samantha, would you like to read them?" Jane asked, since Oscar for once was seemingly doing nothing.

Whenever she saw him like this, she would remind him that there was always work to be done around the place.

After giving it a detailed read, Oscar was quite surprised about what the reports said.

'In the report, Samantha makes note of the teacher Fex using string abilities and a strange red aura as well. The aura that is described is almost exactly the same as what Innu described, and the same as what I saw Quinn do previously.'

'Also, it states that there were other shadow users in the Cursed faction. This red aura that keeps getting mentioned, it seems to be quite powerful. It seems like Quinn isn't just hiding one or two things but is holding more cards than he has let on. This could be a problem.' Oscar thought.

The reaction that Quinn was seeing after what he had said was not what he had expected. Throughout the whole conversation, he was the one on the back foot and Eno was the calm, all knowing one. However, now it seemed like he didn't know every single little thing that was going on in the world.

For a brief second, and it was only once, his heart beat had beaten out of sync from the regular pattern it had before.

'I realise now, in my head I was building up Richard Eno to be this untouchable God pulling the strings on everything that was happening, but now I see that's not the case at all. He is just another person.' Quinn thought.

After regaining his composure, Eno finally spoke again.

"You have just provided me with additional information that I did not know about before." He admitted. "You seem to have been more valuable than I realised, and now there are questions I even want to ask you. You keep surprising me even after I have raised my expectations. I hope you can continue to do that."

"Because of this, I will grant you to ask one more question." Eno said.

It was already a head scratcher coming up with the last question, perhaps he could ask where Eno really was, but he could always move after that happened. Or he could ask why the Dalki have decided to attack now and here.

Thinking about what to ask, Quinn started to think about the students, and that led him to think about one more person.

'How could I forget? He has waited long enough and has done so much for us.'

"I know what I want to ask. There is a boy with me that you might know, he goes by the name Sil. His situation is a little... complicated." Quinn went on to explain the details of what happened to Sil, not the full story but just enough for him to know what he needed.

"Yes, I actually know a lot about the Blade family." Eno replied. "What did you want to ask, did you want to know if I knew a way to bring back the other two?"

Quinn nodded.

"I do know, but remember I said you could ask three questions, not three favours and this would be a favour if I were to help you with this, wouldn't you agree?" Eno suggested. "If you wish for me to help, then I have a favour I need in return."

Watching carefully, the Cursed members were starting to sweat buckets with the hot sun scorching them. They hadn't moved and just looked out in the desert waiting for Quinn.

"Can't they upgrade these rings a little?" Nate asked, playing with his finger.
"Maybe make something that can also make the heat not affect us."

"We are all experiencing the same thing, Nate." Sam said. "And you don't hear us complaining. Why don't you just imagine that a girl is waiting on the other side of that dune for you, then you would stand there for hours."

A few seconds later, two black portals opened in the distance and they could see Quinn emerge.

"It looks like Quinn didn't need my help after all." Peter said.

When Quinn moved closer, Oscar was happy to know that he looked to be fine. He actually had a lot he wanted to ask Quinn. That's when he noticed that he wasn't alone and a strange man was standing next to him, it was someone that Oscar didn't recognise.

The others wanted to run up to Quinn, but didn't as Oscar was the one who walked forward first and Sam had stopped the others rushing up, to remind them that Oscar was a world leader. Besides, they were just happy that Quinn seemed to be fine.

"Quinn, a lot has happened here today and it's because of you so many people could have survived." Oscar congratulated him. "We have to have a party in your honour to celebrate."

"A party, for what happened?" Quinn replied back, not really understanding what a party would be intended for. People had died at the end of the day.

"Quinn, I think it would be good to celebrate. There are many things to be pleased about and the people need a break before they hear what is about to be announced." Oscar said. "I think your days of being a teacher will be over, so it would be nice to celebrate your time here. Most importantly, it is to announce the achievement of getting a first victory against the Dalki before war is declared."

Meeting Richard Eno, Quinn had kind of forgotten what had happened since he was blaming Richard for everything. But if it really wasn't Richard's doing moving the Dalki, it meant that this was the first official attack from them.

The whole world would soon find out about this and when war was declared, all factions and groups would be on the move just like before when Quinn was a kid.

"If it's something that has to be done. You can organise it with Sam later." Quinn said.

"Yes, you deserve rest, feel free to go back to the others, but before you go, I don't want to be rude. Do you mind introducing me to the person next to you?"

Quinn looked at Eno and was wondering what to say about him, but he didn't have to, because Eno stood forward himself and gave a bow.

"I believe you may know me, but have never met me. My name is Richard Eno." He said bowing down, and walking off with Quinn.

'Richard Eno!' Oscar shouted in his head, even Jane nearly dropped her tablet. Richard Eno was a man everyone was searching for, just as much as they were searching for Jack Truedream but no one could find him, and now he was right there in front of him. The question was, why was he with Quinn? Had Richard Eno been with him the whole time? What was their relationship?

All sorts of questions were running through Oscar's mind, but they had already left and the moment was lost to ask.

When Quinn arrived with Richard by his side, everyone stared at him like he was insane. They could tell it was a vampire standing by Quinn's side due to his smell, and they could also guess who he was.

"It's nice to meet you all, I'm sure we will all get to know each other quite well." Richard said.

"Erhh Quinn, what does he mean by that?" Peter asked, unafraid and ignoring Richard.

"This is Richard Eno, and he will be staying with us on the Cursed ship for a while." Quinn said.

On the condition of helping out Sil, Quinn was to grant Eno a favour back, and he had asked to observe the Cursed faction.

Chapter 1027: Help from an enemy

A special event had been announced the next day. Inviting all the important figures around the world. Giant corporations, manufacturing companies and more. On top of that all the teachers at the school, and high level military personnel had also been invited. Those from the Graylash family weren't left out, including the family head Owen Graylash and finally those from the Cursed faction.

Quinn was ready to head back with the others but when he had received the invitation to the event and told how soon it would be, he decided that he would stay at least till the event was over. Considering how many important people would be there.

An invitation was extended out to those Cursed that had also arrived before the others who were on planet Caladi. The invitation that stuck out the most though, was one that was given to Quinn claiming that they wished for Richard Eno to come along as well.

Before leaving the planet these invites were all given to them in person by Oscar, and now they had arrived back at the large new school and had been given top of the line rooms filled with everything they could ever need to stay in for the time being.

As for Richard, he said he would be coming, but he would be there when he was needed, and seemingly disappeared without saying anything else, he didn't go through a teleporter with them, and just disappeared into the desert, so he was not at the school with them.

Everyone would freshen up, and take a few minutes rest, before Sam requested for all of them to meet up in the same room. Sam wanted to know more about what happened between Quinn and Richard, as well as the fight between the Dalki. It was time they knew more about the bigger picture and all this vampire stuff so they had a better understanding. Through that, they could help out Quinn more.

At the same time, Sam wanted to inform Quinn of everything they had found out from Brock, to do with the Blade island and the role of the Blade family.

Lying in his bed staring at the ceiling Quinn was wondering what was going on.

'Richard Eno, why would you reveal yourself to the world like that, in front of Oscar. Everyone's been looking for you. Are you just trying to cause more trouble for me, or is this one of your tests again.'

Thinking back to Enos' personality, when Quinn had asked for the request to help Sil, he had come back saying that he wanted to stay with the Cursed faction for a while. It had come as a complete surprise to him.

Eno could even tell Quinn was struggling with the request when he had spoken about it.

"Are you worried that I will learn about all of the Cursed faction secrets? It would be the perfect way to destroy a faction from the inside out if you were a thorn in my side, but trust me that is not my goal. If you do think I'm an enemy, have you ever heard of keeping your friends close but your enemies closer?

"Besides there are a lot of people that want you dead Quinn. If they knew everything about you, and how much of a threat you could possibly be they would be hunting you down quite quickly. I don't think anyone ever expected you to get as strong as you have done."

In the end, Quinn had decided to accept Eno's request. He had a feeling the whole time Eno was telling the truth. Even if he was still acting in his strange ways.

'But I remember you did the same thing back then as well, and you even gave the same reason.' Quinn said.

'That was because I thought it would help with your progress, and I was just trying to get you to avoid certain dangers that were out of your power for the time being.'

Vincent argued.

'Do you think that's exactly what Eno is doing then? He states the same thing. Perhaps he thinks at the moment I, or the Cursed faction isn't strong enough. If he told us all the information, or the Humans, they would try acting on it when they couldn't.'

Still it was impossible to figure out without knowing everything. While waiting for the others, and thinking about getting stronger, Quinn did decide to check out one thing, all of the rewards he had received due to completing the quest.

To be honest, Quinn thought the rewards were a bit lacklustre, especially considering what he had done or been through. He could only assume this was because it wasn't a quest given by the system and instead was one given by Eno when his system was overridden which was a scary thought in itself.

[Level 62]

Quinn had levelled up a total of 9 times to reach level 62. It was quite the amount of exp he had gained for defeating the Dalki. He didn't get any instant level ups, so all the level ups he did achieve were from pure exp, but now since he didn't level up every ten levels the exp requirement was just getting bigger and bigger.

At this point, Quinn thought there were only three ways he could now level up. From defeating Demi-god, demon tier beasts or the Dalki. Through defeating beasts and the Dalki he could gain a level up through exp points, or if they awarded him an instant level up. The other way, would be receiving an instant level up quest from the system itself.

'I wonder what level I need to be to complete that Quest.' Quinn thought.

He was thinking about the quest to find something beyond the level of a vampire lord. Would he reach it at level 70, 80 or maybe even a hundred he didn't know. What he did know was with each level up he could feel his body changing into something.

With the stat points awarded Quinn did his usual. He tried to keep his points as balanced as possible, raising them all up to the nearest ten bracket for the best effect. His current stats were like so.

[Charm 60]

On Vincent's advice Quinn had stopped increasing the charm stat, since he was told at this level there would just be people he could control and people he couldn't, no matter how high his charm stat was.

The following stat was the interesting one, and it had risen to be his highest.

[Blood control: 164]

Steadily Quinn's blood control would grow as he used his blood abilities more often and it was the same during the Dalki fight. After fighting Cindy and Bryce it had increased a lot and using it inside his body all the time he did the same.

'I wonder how high someone's stat would be if they had the absolute blood book?' Quinn wondered.

'Now that your blood control is high enough, it would be nice if you learn some new blood abilities, apart from the basic ones you have been using this whole time.' Vincent said. 'You've trained in fighting and it has reached a good level. If you're going to be fighting using your full strength a lot more, you will no longer be able to hide the fact that you have blood powers, so I think this should be your next step into growing.'

'I remember you saying this before.' Quinn replied scratching his head, a habit when he was struggling. 'But you also stated you couldn't really teach me anything and that I should find a teacher. I think I'm already past the point where Fex could teach me things, which means the only people that could teach me better skills are vampire knights or a leader and I don't think any of the leaders are willing to teach me.' Quinn replied.

What Quinn also noticed when checking his system was while not in the vampire world, he didn't gain any reputation points from his family. So they wouldn't continue to build up while he was away and he couldn't just come back and start making all sorts of improvements using the points.

It was one of the reasons; why Quinn was a little upset with the rewards, he was expecting to get a new title like 'Dalki killer' or something that would help him in the future.

'There will be one person next to you that seems willing to help you. I'm sure they could teach you some new blood skills.' Vincent suggested.

'Are you crazy, you can't be suggesting what I think you're suggesting? You want me to ask Richard Eno to teach me?'

Chapter 1028: Quinn missing?

By now, Quinn knew to take Vincent's silence as a yes and honestly, he didn't think it was a bad idea. To ask Eno to teach him a few things. Eno was a vampire who had lived longer than any of the leaders, a vampire original. He was sure to know of all the tricks the vampires had come up with when using their blood powers.

The problem was, the type of person that Eno was.

'I'm sure even if he did want to teach me, because I asked him for a favour he would also want one in return, and based on what the favour is, it might just not be worth it.' Quinn thought. Talking to him for a small amount of time was difficult enough, and he couldn't imagine him as a teacher.

A short while later, the rest of the Cursed faction had finally entered Quinn's room.

"What the...I thought our rooms were amazing but yours is as twice as big as ours and is even fancier. Is that a golden tap?!" Nate said excitedly, as he started to play with the tap expecting something else other than water to come out of it.

"Our rooms are nice as well, but it makes sense for Quinn to be treated this way, now that he is a world leader and all." Sam said.

Quinn didn't actually notice that his room was any different than the others. He had been used to the simple life so much that he was happy with just a bed, kitchen and bathroom, he didn't really need anything else. It was a shame that he didn't really have the time to appreciate the luxuries around him.

"This isn't the room they usually give me, I think they just put me up in here for now." Quinn replied modestly.

"Yes, Oscar told me about that." Sam replied. "It looks like our plan worked somewhat, you made quite an impression on those kids and they have been asking non stop to see you. Not just because of who you are but what you did for them. Oscar couldn't just let you stay in the normal teacher dormitories now everyone knows you're a world leader."

After their little chat, it wasn't long until they got down to business. Inside Quinn's room there was even a dining table that was large enough to seat them all and that's where they decided to sit for the time being. In Quinn's room were Sam, Wevil, Linda, Nate, Dennis, Peter, and Fex. In other words, it was all the leaders of the Cursed faction that were on Earth at this moment and time.

Quinn started to first explain what happened with the Dalki attack and how he had met Eno beforehand. He didn't see any need to talk about the system as that was his own business, but he would speak to Logan about it later on.

He then went on to talk about what was discussed with Eno when he had asked his three questions and also his request with Sil. The others already knew about Arthur and more, as they had to learn about the situation from Leo and the others when living in the vampire world. Now they had a better understanding of what was going on, and from what they knew about Brock, they were able to put the two things together.

"I see, well that might make things a little difficult with your request." Sam said, as he went on to explain what they had also learnt from Brock, that the Dalki were after the second half of the demon tier beast and it was on the Blade island.

"So you think that Eno is going to want to use Sil to copy Mona's powers and help him move the demon tier beast?" Quinn asked.

"Honestly yes, otherwise Brock would have never told us about it. From what you have told me, maybe Eno's condition would be to help you only after Sil has helped him." Sam said.

Quinn nodded as he understood, but Nate looked around the table and he wasn't the only one confused. "Why?" Nate had to ask.

"Because of the way Sil's ability was before." Sam answered. "When Raten and Vorden occupied his head, Sil was only able to use three abilities at one time. To control a demon tier beast is something that not even Mona can do. Once Sil copies the ability he also needs to find other high MC cell users to power up the ability. With three abilities it's a gamble whether or not he can control the demon tier beast.

"However, with six abilities it's probably easily done. If Eno brings back Vorden and Raten, Sil could lose his ability to copy six abilities and will be back to the three, same as before. I'm sure due to Brock having lived on the Blade island he knows about this as well and he will use this information and the fact that Quinn wishes to help him against him."

Now everyone had a better understanding of what was going on but there were still many questions on everyone's mind.

"What happens if Bryce finds out about this?" Fex asked.

This was something that Quinn hadn't really been concerned about. He was treating the vampire world and the current war with the humans and the Dalki as two different matters.

"I don't know." Quinn replied. "The other half of the demon tier beast the Dalki are looking for is in the vampire world, I don't even think Bryce and the others know about it, nor that the Dalki are looking for it, and it's the same for Eno. The only one that I told about Eno still being awake was Arthur, and we know what he plans to do... At the moment, we can't protect two places at once and for now nothing has happened in the vampire world.

"Although I don't want to say this, if something does happen, we just have to trust that Bryce and the others will be strong enough to fight off whatever attack happens to them." Quinn replied.

Although, even Quinn was concerned with what Arthur would do, did he really wish to kill all the vampires including those from the tenth family. If so, maybe he would have to step in and get involved.

After the meeting was over, the rest decided to head back to their rooms for a good night's sleep, including Quinn. The next day would be the event where everyone from all over was invited. When the morning sun rose, everyone was dressed in their most formal clothing.

They were already woken by the ships that were constantly flying all morning to the new school. Some of them were nervous, others were excited to be meeting people they saw on TV all the time.

When everyone was ready, they met up in the hallway and headed towards Quinn's room. Upon entering however, they found a note that had been left behind.

[I will be a little late to the event. All of you head on without me, there's something I need to do first.]

"If we turn up without him, I'm sure there will be a lot of people who will be asking us questions nonstop." Linda commented.

"Quinn will be there." Sam said. "Besides, I'm sure it's something important to him."

Nearly all of the teachers and important figures were invited to the ceremony and the students' training would be cut short. Today, after the special announcement was to be made, they would be sent off to join the factions of the different squads in the military. Their training would continue there as they prepared for the fight ahead of them.

Right now though, all the students were to stay in their classrooms where a substitute homeroom teacher would be looking after them. Here all the students could watch the event and announcement live on TV. An exclusive crew had been allowed to enter and they would go around talking to guests and interviewing them to broadcast to the entire planet.

All of the students were in their seats, patiently waiting and wondering what the event was, but they weren't in the best of minds. It wasn't too long ago they had just come back from a devastating event.

"Alright, kids the event should start in the next hour or so, you are allowed to eat snacks during the event, but talking has to be kept at a minimum so everyone can hear, okay?" The teacher said.

"Man, I can't believe we didn't even get to say thank you to Quinn." Swin said.

"I know, after everything he has done for us. I still don't understand why a world leader would care about our class or kids like us." Venus replied.

"I think I have an idea." Shiro said. "Quinn said that he was like me. He had no ability and was weak. Remember all of his speeches? I don't think that was an act, but you're right, I wish I could at least say thank you."

Suddenly, the students started to talk loudly amongst each other as they pointed to the front.

"What's he doing here, isn't he meant to be at the event?"

Shadows started to disperse as the shadow cloak skill was cancelled and Quinn had appeared in front of his old homeroom class.

"Before I go off to this god awful event, I just wanted to say one thing. It really was a joy for me to teach all of you. I wish I could have taught you for longer. I promise I will remember these days for the rest of my life and I hope you can remember me as well. I know not all of you will join the Cursed faction, but it would be great to see your faces again." Quinn said.

As quickly as he appeared, he had vanished and was off to the grand event.

"Quinn! Wait, you were the best teacher we had!" Swin shouted.

"Seriously, how can you leave without us saying thank you to you properly!" Venus said.

More of the students shouted as they truly were thankful for Quinn saving their lives that day. Without him they all knew the situation would have been devastating. They would never forget him for as long as they lived.

"Thank you, but this won't be the last time I see you. I will return the favour when I join the Cursed faction." Shiro said.

"I look forward to it." Quinn whispered.

Chapter 1029: The most important figures in the world

Despite what Quinn's note had said, the group decided that it might be best if they tried waiting for him for at least a little while. They headed to the location that they had been instructed to go to and up ahead they could see what could only be described as a grand mansion.

It was only a short way from the new school that had been built but was also out of sight, covered by a few of the main buildings. It made people who worked at the school wonder if it had always been there or if it had been built just for today's event.

Regardless, it had a grand finish. The mansion had two huge spiralling staircases that would lead up to the balcony on the second floor, which was large enough to fit a few hundred people. On the ground floor at the entrance there were pillars laced in a special glowing silver substance and even had the most beautiful of beast crystals wrapped around it.

The dozens of people walking past them were wearing much more glamorous clothing than any of the Cursed group, so much so that some of them started to get cold feet as they felt they didn't belong there.

Leading up to the mansion was a stone walkway and a wide red carpet had been laid out for the attendees. The arriving guests walked in on the red carpet while hundreds of camera and video drones were flying through the air, snapping the event.

The Cursed members knew that no one cared about them coming to this event, it was all about Quinn. They also knew if the Cursed faction turned up without him, there would be questions.

"What a waste of beast crystals." Peter said, looking disgusted at the ostentatious pillars.

"You have a point, we risk our lives fighting beasts so we can create better weapons, not so they can be used as decorations." Wevil added, looking at an obviously rich couple walk past. The woman had a timeless black dress on and on her ears she donned earrings with a beast crystal on each.

In a way, the rarer the beast crystal someone had showed how much power a certain family had. Powerful beast crystals would go for a lot of money mainly so they could be turned into weapons, but if someone could purchase them and use them as a fashion accessory, it would show the world how little an expensive beast crystal meant to them.

"I don't think we can wait much longer. Most people have arrived and if none of us enter, then it might be a problem." Sam suggested and reluctantly they all followed him walking along the red carpet.

While doing so, some of the other guests who were also walking started to stare at them. They could see they were trying to guess who they were, if it was anyone they recognized. However no matter how hard they tried, they couldn't figure it out.

"It must be some of the teachers that worked at the school or a captain of a squad." One of them whispered to another.

"They could be from the Cursed faction, not many people know what they look like." Another replied.

While making their way along the red carpet, they did spot two people they did recognise, Bonny and Void, the two reporters that they had met when facing the demon tier beast.

It was the reason why people were waiting to get inside, Bonny and Void would interview each person as they entered. They were standing just past the red carpet at the entrance of the mansion into the main hall, and quite a lot of figures were nearby grabbing drinks and listening to who was at the event.

When Sam and the others walked through, Bonny recognised them immediately and gave them a smile, before placing a microphone in front of Sam.

"Now we have approaching the door, finally some high ranking members from the Cursed faction. Please could you introduce yourselves to those watching at home and also tell us your role within the Cursed faction." Bonny asked in her best interview voice.

For the first time ever, while Sam stared into the lens of the camera, he froze. It was half because it was unexpected and half because the Cursed faction didn't really give out roles, everyone kind of just did what they wanted. On top of that, there were a lot of ears listening in.

"The leaders of the Cursed faction... where's the leader? I don't see the person named Quinn?"

"He is meant to be here today right?"

"Of course, Owen and Oscar are at this event too. This is meant to be a gathering of the Earth's strongest powers. The Cursed being one of the new powers should have arrived before everyone else to make an impression."

Listening to all these comments was making Sam stumble even more. That's when Linda decided to step in.

"This here is our trusted Vice leader of the Cursed faction. If Quinn isn't present then we follow what he tells us to do. Then we have Peter, who is not only the Head General, but is in charge of our defences on the Cursed ship.

"Wevil and I work together in communications with the other factions. We work closely with Helen from the past Daisy faction who you might have already met before us. We try to make it so if any of the other factions have a problem they can talk to us. Finally, Nate is in charge of our hand to hand combat division. As you can see, we have brought quite a few of our high ranking members here because we understand how important this event is." Linda answered proficiently.

The others were quite surprised that Linda was able to give them all roles so easily, but now that they thought about it, she really did just describe what a lot of them did for the Cursed faction. Although Peter's position was a bit of a stretch, at one point he did protect the ship alone from several attacks.

"That's great to hear. A lot of people don't know about the Cursed faction since they managed to grow so quickly, but Oscar has said that they helped greatly during the demon tier hunting expedition, and Owen has always spoken great things about your leader, Quinn Talen. I have to ask, will we be seeing him tonight? He hasn't made an appearance yet."

Finally, Sam was ready to speak.

"He said he will be here so he will definitely be here. If there is one thing the Cursed faction is good at, it's doing what they say they will do. He just has important matters to attend to." Sam said, while walking off and the others soon followed him.

With seemingly everyone having entered the large hall they could now rest for a little while. The announcement would be made later on and it was time for everyone to mingle and get to know each other, although it was harder for some. Owen stood next to Oscar and there were many that were afraid to even get close to the two of them as they talked.

Meanwhile others were talking while looking their way. Bonny and Voiid continued to go around interviewing others, asking them questions about what accomplishments they had done and more.

When together the group were standing awkwardly to the side of the room. They clearly felt like the odd ones out as everyone seemed to know each other.

As for Nate, he was looking at a certain person in particular. He was looking over in Helen's direction.

"Hey, you know that she likes Quinn, right? I don't want you to cause drama." Sam said as he spotted Nate staring at her.

"No, I'm not looking at her, she brought her two sisters along to this event as well. Is it alright if I go over?" Nate asked.

Sam looked at the time and the mingling session was apparently meant to last for an hour, then Oscar would finally make an announcement and congratulate people, calling them up to the stage that was placed in the room.

After that, there was meant to be an after party where there were no cameras.

"I think it's fine, but just be careful. Bonny and Void might come to interview you at any point and you need to be careful if you answer their questions. Everyone is out to ruin our reputation at the moment. Let's meet back in an hour." Sam suggested, but Nate was already off before Sam had finished speaking.

Peter was fine doing nothing, just leaning up against a pillar looking at everyone. Wevil and Linda were enjoying each other's company. They talked to each other a lot these days, while Sam had plucked up the courage to try and make a few connections.

It was important after all, unless the Cursed faction were planning to take over the world which wasn't Quinn's intention. Sam thought it would be nice to talk to the people they would be working with for the foreseeable future.

At the same time, he would keep an eye out for when Quinn arrived, and when Eno did as well.

This left Fex on his own, who had managed to spot Samantha trying to grab some appetizers from the waiter's walking around, but there were people standing in her way.

A large man, who wasn't paying her any attention had blocked a special seafood dish she was just dying to try. Then suddenly, it started to float in the air, before it landed in her hand.

"Was that what you were trying to get?" Fex asked with a warm smile.

When Samantha turned to see who it was, she was quite startled.

'I knew I might run into him here, but I didn't expect him to come up to me like that.' She thought, as she started to panic.

"Oh thanks, that's exactly what I was looking for." She replied, and was now trying to make a quick exit from the awkward situation, but she could feel Fex's eyes not moving from her.

There was a reason Fex had approached her and when the two made eye contact his eyes started to glow red.

"Do you remember what I asked, I said to make sure you didn't tell anyone about what I did back against the Dalki. Now tell me, did you keep our little secret?" Fex asked.

"Now it's not very nice to speak to a lady like that, is it?" A voice said from behind Samantha.

Seeing the man's red eyes reflect back at Fex, he straight away knew who this was.

"Richard Eno..." Fex replied back.

Chapter 1030: Close connection

Hearing the voice closely behind, Samantha had no choice but to turn around. For a second, she wanted to thank this person for getting her out of such an awkward situation, but then when she saw who it was, an older looking gentleman with a grey ponytail who was largely smiling back at her, she took a step back and immediately went on guard.

"You, you were the person who attacked us at the shelter!" Samantha said, recognising the man.

"Oh, I thought you didn't like the boy, but when a dangerous situation occurs you go jumping to his side. I see how it is. One should be more honest with their feelings, especially since human lives are so short." Eno said. "Besides, I believe I only attacked the man behind you, I never attacked yourself, and I didn't even get to explain my own position, anyway I guess I'll leave you two for now."

Eno started to walk around the place, and Samantha was getting ready to stop him. He was a member of Pure after all or so Fex claimed, but just as she was about to run, she felt Fex grab her arm.

"What are you doing?"

"Leave him." Fex said. "He was invited here."

At the time, she hadn't really processed what Fex had first said when he had met the man, but now the words became clear, he didn't just say any name. The name that was spoken was the one and only Richard Eno.

"Wait! is it true? He's the great scientist known as Richard Eno, the one everyone has been looking for?" Samantha asked.

Based on how Quinn said Eno had already revealed himself to Oscar, and the fact that he was here, Fex thought it wasn't really a problem telling her the truth.

"He is." He answered.

The fact that he was here, Samantha quickly realised that Oscar must have already known who he was, but the question was, why were the two of them fighting when they first met then, and why did Fex lie. This popped her to think about the question Fex had asked when the two of them just met.

"I'm sorry." Samantha started off. "I know you told me to keep what you said a secret, but I read the reports about your leader Quinn Talen, it says he too used a special Red aura, and one of the men that was presumed dead was actually still alive and had seen everything as well. So I had no choice to tell them about it."

She was still taking in the fact that the Head General Hardy was actually the Cursed faction leader Quinn.

Hearing about this, Fex tutted and kissed his teeth. His plan was to wipe her memory before she could say anything else, but if a report already stated that Quinn had used the red aura, then it didn't seem like it would be something he could avoid.

"About the other thing, I didn't tell anyone about that. I didn't tell anyone about what was in your flask or what you told me to do." Samantha whispered. "You saved my life, so of course I would keep it a secret, and who cares what strange things you do if you are helping save our lives."

Although what Samantha said was true, she actually thought there might be more to it. Fex had healed due to her blood and also was able to use a red aura, the same as their leader Quinn Talen. She was afraid that blood was the answer to how they were able to do these things.

It could have very well been a Cursed faction secret. If she told people this secret she didn't want to end up disappearing in the middle of the night.

'She didn't tell anyone about the blood, maybe it's best if I remove her memories now then.'

"Richard Eno, you have finally arrived!" A loud deep booming voice spoke.

Hearing this, everyone turned their heads at hearing the name for two reasons. The one speaking was Oscar, and his voice tended to carry across the room, the other reason was because of the name that had been mentioned, Richard Eno.

When Fex looked back, he noticed that Samantha had already made a break for it, in the confusion.

'Damn, I guess I should leave it for now, she hasn't told anyone yet, but I can clear up the misunderstanding later.' Fex thought, while he went to where everyone else was standing, for they wanted to listen in on the conversation and have a look at the great Richard Eno.

Richard Eno walked over to where Oscar was, he had formal clothing that matched everyone around them so he didn't look out of place at the party. While everyone else had been afraid to walk up to where Oscar and Owen were, Richard was not as he approached them with ease.

What was surprising was the first ones to show respect was both Owen and Oscar as they both bowed.

"You are a difficult man to find." Owen said, lifting up his fan to cover his face as usual. "You have achieved great things for every family, and it's great to finally meet you. When Oscar said he had a surprise guest, I never thought it would be yourself."

Not failing to get a scoop, Void and Bonny had quickly stopped interviewing Head general Innu, who was in the middle of bragging about his group's achievements and rushed over to listen in and record the conversation between Eno and the great leaders.

It was the first time that anyone had also got him on video, so it was an opportunity that they couldn't miss.

"If you're not too busy these days, it would be great if we could have a formal meeting at some point. Perhaps you could even stop by some labs of ours." Oscar suggested. "I promise we will do anything to make you feel at home."

Owen started to chuckle and gave a glance at Oscar.

"You should enjoy the event, there is no need to talk about work. I'm sure looking at the military labs might even bore the great Eno. He is a man that loves seeing new discoveries. There are many things the Graylash family have that haven't been shared with everyone yet, that he might prefer to see."

It was as clear as day to everyone there. Even though they might have been playing it off as just simple invitations, they were both trying to win him over by making it so he came over to their side.

"In due time, I think it would be great to see both of those things. Although I'm surprised you don't have more questions for me?" Eno replied.

Hearing this, one pushy girl reporter shouted out from the crowd that had surrounded them all.

"Um, I have some questions for the camera if you don't mind." Bonny said.

"Bonny, Richard Eno is a special guest and I'm sure he has his reasons as to why he has kept himself quiet this whole time, I don't think it-"

"It's okay." Richard replied with a smile. "I'm sure there are questions people want to ask."

By now, all of the Cursed members at the party had gathered and were watching what Eno was doing, unclear of what his aim was.

'Why accept an interview?' Sam thought.

Bonny and Void had come out of the crowd to go closer to the area they were in. When they got closer, Oscar was giving them a stare while Eno was giving a giant smile. It felt like she was stuck between a devil and an angel, but she had to get an interview with Richard Eno, no matter what the cost.

"You are the Great Richard Eno, who helped the human race figure out how to create beast weapons, and even gave us technology such as teleporters and more. They say you are one of the great heroes of the past war. Which is why a lot of people were wondering, just where were you during the Civil war?" Bonny asked.

It was a direct question that not many thought Eno would be happy answering, but he continued to have a smile on his face making it look like he didn't mind the question at all.

"The world was in a bad place at the time. Although I worked mostly with the military in the past, it was never my intention to be linked with the military. It was just at the time every one of the other strong families worked for the military.

"I didn't want to take sides or ruin my relationship with any of the families. At the same time, you have to remember that I am just a scientist, not a fighter. I was afraid for my own life as well. At times there may be groups who think if we can't have him, then it may be better to kill him. I care about my own life as well, of course."

Bonny had been given an answer far greater than she had anticipated, and the others thought it made sense as well what he was saying. While he was still here, she had to continue to question him.

"Then why the sudden return now? We heard that you had been invited by Head General Oscar. Do you have any plans at the moment?" Bonny asked.

"I'm sure a lot of you will find out that Oscar has a serious message for you all, that will affect everyone else's lives, as for me. I have decided at the moment I will stay with the Cursed faction as I have a close relationship with them." Eno said.

This was the type of thing Sam was worried about. The others were already learning that the Green family, one of the strongest non fighting families, had a close connection with the Cursed faction, and now if Eno was to say this, the others would fear that one of the great powers had too much power compared to the others.

Even in the past, they would stop corporations from having a monopoly over things.

"Close relationship with the Cursed faction," Bonny repeated. "Do you mind elaborating what you mean by that?" She asked.

"Of course," Eno replied. "Quinn Talen is my grandson after all, wouldn't you consider that a close relationship?"

Hearing this, nearly everyone's jaws dropped to the floor. Bonny didn't even know what to say after that. She had prepared many questions in her head for what to ask next but had no clue. At that moment, shadow started to disperse right next to Eno, and Quinn could be seen appearing out of them and held Eno by the shoulder.

"What do you think you're doing?" Quinn said.

Chapter 1031: Announcement to the whole world

A few in the room thought they might have misheard what Eno had just said, but when looking at each other and sharing their whispers, they came to the realisation that they hadn't misheard at all. Not only that, but the Cursed faction leader, Quinn Talen had appeared out of nowhere.

Of course, not everyone knew this was Quinn as his new appearance still had yet to be shared around the world, but there were two things that gave it away. The first was the shadows that briefly flickered when he had appeared, and the fact that Quinn was now grabbing onto the shoulder of such a great person, with no trouble at all.

Not anyone could do that.

"Wait, is what he is saying true?"

"The Cursed faction actually have a close relationship with the great scientist Richard Eno. Is this why they were able to progress so fast? Maybe that's how they funded themselves to grow so quickly."

"But, I also heard that the Green family were sponsoring the Cursed factions as well. It seems like those rumours are true as well. I heard the green family recently bought out a manufacturing plant but when I went to do business with them, some of the personnel working there claimed to be from the Cursed faction."

As for Oscar, he was more stunned than the others. Because he knew about Quinn's upbringing.

'Didn't his parents die in the war, he also was meant to have no known relatives. Wait...' Oscar thought as he remembered one crucial detail. 'There was something that was strange about Quinn's upbringing that stood out.'

'It was true that on Quinn's file it claimed him to be an orphan, but he had his own apartment growing up. He was getting financial help from someone during his time at school. They paid for his apartment, food, clothes and everything. Could it be Eno was the person responsible for all those things? And why would Eno need to lie in front of everyone about having a close relationship with Quinn.'

At this moment, even though Quinn's hand was on Enos' shoulder, he didn't really know what to do. On his way here after saying goodbye to his students, as soon as he saw the red carpet and floating drones, he had activated his shadow cloak skill.

Using this skill, Quinn was planning to join the party, then naturally blend in. Cancelling the skill and acting as if he was always at the party. When he heard what Eno had said, his instinct kicked in to reveal himself and stop Eno, but now he was unsure what he wanted to do.

"What's wrong Quinn, did you want to give your grandfather a hug, in front of all these people?" Eno said. "Don't tell me you're shy, that I'm your grandfather, are you?"

'This crazy old man, what the hell am I meant to do with him. He's too unpredictable, and he's just making my life harder!' Quinn thought, but took a few deep breaths and smiled.

"As you can see, with his age this old man has got a few screws missing in his head. I think it might be time for me to put you in a home." Quinn replied.

There were gasps and even more from the crowd as people heard Quinn say this. How could someone say this about the genius of their time? What could this person be thinking? On top of that, based on how Quinn was treating this person, it only made it clear that the two of them must have a close relationship.

Sam off to the side was just shaking his head, if only he could go in there and drag the two of them out, but in a way he was hoping the situation would somehow resolve itself.

"Quinn, don't be embarrassed. You see everyone." Eno spoke facing the crowd. "We didn't want to make our relationship clear for a simple reason. We didn't know we were relatives for a while. In fact, Quinn had achieved everything he had built up with the Cursed faction even before we knew of our relationship."

"He was afraid you see, afraid that if people did find out, that they would assume I was the one sponsoring and helping him out this whole time, but that's not true at all. Anyway, let's all continue to enjoy this party." Eno said, lifting up a glass that seemingly appeared in his hand like a magic trick.

Lifting it up, everyone else in the room lifted their glasses as well, and as they took a drink. He gave a quick wink to Quinn.

Seeing this, Quinn really didn't know what Enos' game was nor what he was planning. He decided maybe it was best for him to leave him alone and went ahead to join Sam.

'Didn't help him get the position to where he is now? Who is he kidding?' Innu thought. 'Obviously even if Quinn didn't know about it. Richard Eno being who he was pulled the strings for him, now I understand why Oscar let him become one of the world leaders so easily.'

"Are you still thinking like that?" Head General Sach said, as if he could read Innu's thoughts. "Remember what he did out on the field, how he saved your lives. He is strong, and even with the great scientist Richard Enos' help, I don't think everyone could reach the position that he has done. You have to give the young boy some credit."

Bonny and Void wanted to go ahead and interview Quinn next, but unfortunately they had run out of time, as Oscar had climbed up the stairs, and invited Quinn, along with Owen with him. The stairs led to a podium that was inside the grand room.

Floating drones were hovering in the air capturing everything and standing in the centre was Oscar with a serious face, and Owen and Quinn on the either side.

"I hope everyone has enjoyed the celebration today, and I hope the whole world is celebrating with us, because today there is an announcement that is to be made to the whole world. After I inform everyone of what has happened, and what will happen, I want you to continue to party until the night is over." Oscar stated, as a drone moved and zoomed into his face.

"I'm sure many of you at home will already know what has happened. As your children have called you soon to let you know of the tales, and some of you had been informed with bad news.

However, this day was always coming and in my eyes it should be celebrated as a victory."

Behind Oscar, a display started to appear showing a map of planet Caladi.

"A few days ago, the students were on their first hunting expedition on planet Caladi. This is when an invasion of fifty Dalki had come to attack them."

The simulation showed the black pods hitting the planet from out of space and made them realise it was quite real.

Those below that were smiling just seconds ago, stopped drinking their drinks and were listening intently. Not everyone had children, or children who were going through military training so this was new news to them.

"Fifty Dalki, it was the first time a force had been sent out to attack us. Of course there have been scuffles when fortresses have been found on Beast planets before. But ever since the treaty this is the first time that a force has been sent out to a beast planet that is clearly owned by us.

"What was worse, no teleporters and communication devices were responding, so the students were left stranded without help other than their teachers there for support."

The others thought rather than a story about a great victory, it was a horror story. They couldn't imagine themselves being in that situation nor what they would do.

"Now how is this a victory, you might ask, because we managed to defeat the force of 50 dalki, with a little over a hundred casualties. Their names will never be forgotten, and have been engraved in the school walls. The teachers and the students, and their families will be looked after."

The chatter in the room started once again, as they came to the realisation of how impressive the victory was. Fifty Dalki, yet only a hundred or so students had died. How was that possible in the situation they were in.

"There is one person we must thank more than any other, and that is Head general Quinn Talen, the leader of the Cursed faction." Oscar announced pointing towards Quinn, as military personnel came up and placed a medal over his head.

On the Cursed ship itself, nearly every room was watching the broadcast and as soon as they heard his name, they were cheering for their leader. It was the same for those on the planets that the Cursed faction owned.

They knew how well they were treated and it was all thanks to this person.

Lastly, the students in Quinn's class couldn't help but shout at the top of their lungs at the screen, even the substitute teacher was blown away at how passionate the students were.

"A lot of you may not know this, but some of you at home do. Quinn Talen was a teacher at our school, and I am thankful that he was there at the time. Without him, there would have been many more casualties. Alone he managed to defeat over half of the oncoming force, and I know he did everything in his power to protect the students."

No matter what thoughts people had against the Cursed faction in that room at the time. They couldn't help but congratulate this person who was practically a stranger to them. They all started to clap and looked up to the young boy. His achievement was not something many could have done.

"Today is a celebration for the human race, for we have achieved victory over the first Dalki attack, and it might be the last one we have in a while. Because after today, I will declare that the whole world, the whole human race, is now in the middle of the second war with the Dalki race."

Chapter 1032: Rude or a pass?

The announcement had spread, that war had finally been declared. It was something everyone knew was just over the horizon, it felt so close yet at the same time so far away. Constantly mentions of tensions brewing between the two sides, of small scuffles with the Dalki here and there.

Everyone had been on edge for so long waiting to hear this news, which was why it was such a big deal for everyone, to finally hear these words.

Now that war had been declared, the day after everything would move into motion. The shelters on every one of the planets that was owned by the humans would be on high alert. Drills after drills of what the military and factions were to do if an attack would happen, would now be practised on the daily, rather than once in a while.

And of course, all of them had to be prepared to attack and be on the attack whenever possible. Today was the last day of peace for everyone as they knew it. After dropping quite the bombshell on the whole world, OSCar went on to explain what the military had been doing in the meantime and how they planned to win this war this time.

They had attempted to contact the Dalki like they would with any other attack but there was no response at all. In the meantime, they would be on the defensive while looking for opportunities to attack where and when they could.

What Oscar didn't mention was the main reason why they were on the defensive. This was due to the most recent attack. Where they had found many two spiked Dalki in their forces. Based on this, it was assumed the Dalki hadn't attacked with the full strength of their force during the first war, but Oscar wanted to encourage everyone and would keep these worries to a select few people.

Once the announcement was all done, Quinn was descending from the staircase, it would soon be time for the cameras to be turned off, but before that. Bonny and Void would be able to broadcast peoples reactions to the news that they had just heard, and her aim was to grab the person who was currently everyone's centre of attention.

"Quinn, would you mind me asking a few questions?!" Bonny said, bombarding him at the bottom of the staircase. "The medal around your chest, is the same medals that were given to the people deemed the Heroes of the first war. It's quite the accomplishment to be receiving that right out the bat at the start of the second war.

"Could you please explain to us how you feel about receiving such a thing and how you managed to kill so many of the opposing Dalki." Bonny asked.

Quinn didn't reply straight away, but he had stopped. It was at this point that Bonny was able to see how much he had changed since the last time they had met. For some reason, every time she met him he looked more handsome.

Last time, something had urged her forward to kiss him out of the blue, but this time her heart was beating quite loudly on its own.

After hearing no reply for so long, Bonny decided to order Void to place the camera down, and she approached him gently.

"Quinn are you okay, sorry if I asked something that brought up bad memories. I was just trying to do my job." She said.

Seeing that this might be an intimate moment, Void decided to continue to go off and film Eno, who was also surrounded by several others.

Still not answering now, Bonny was feeling a little bad.

"Let's just forget about the question, okay. I hope we can meet at the after party?"

At that moment, Bonny could see another female approach Quinn and gave him quite the slap on the back.

"Answer the cute girl," Helen said. "Don't worry, this one isn't used to all this stuff, you have to remember it's a lot to deal with someone who is his age."

Bonny had almost forgotten due to Quinn's appearance of a young middle-aged man, he actually was a young adult who had just turned eighteen. Of course, this was a lot for anyone to take in.

"About your question." Quinn finally answered. "How do I feel about it all?" Quinn lifted up the medal around his neck, and pulled on it, breaking the strap. It was gold in colour, a rarer material than ever nowadays. Grasping it in his hand, he started to squeeze on it until the edge began to bend inwards, and finally he crushed the entire medal in his hands.

Some of those that were around seeing him do this, were quite shocked. It was a reward of honour. It was something that everyone in the military greatly respected.

"How many of these do I have to get? How many of these do I have to get to bring all those that died back to life?" Quinn asked, but of course Bonny didn't have an answer.

As things were getting interesting again, Void turned on the camera and zoomed into the crushed medal in his hand, and then back to Quinn's face which was one not quite of anger, but not quite sadness either.

"The only thing I wished I could have done, was saved more lives." Quinn said, leaving the room, and Helen followed after him.

Walking through the crowds of people, they started to make their way to the exit, and soon those in the Cursed faction joined Quinn as well to walk out of the place.

"Hey wait, aren't you going to join the after party?" Bonny shouted.

Sam who was at the very back turned to everyone.

"I am very sorry, but the Cursed faction have to make preparations for the announcement that has just been made. I'm afraid we won't be joining the after party."

Soon after, Eno had joined the back of the group as well.

Those in the room were unable to hear what Quinn had said, and thought the Cursed faction were now quite arrogant. Having thrown their reward given to him like so. Treating it like it was nothing.

However, those that had watched the program and had fought side by side who had lost those close to them understood what Quinn was going through right now. No amount of rewards would change how he was feeling at that moment.

With war happening, Quinn wanted to continue on and improve so the same thing wouldn't happen again.

Right after the event, those from the Cursed faction had got onto one of the ships that was docked for them in the new school, and was off, along with Helen and her sisters. They would come along for now and then use the teleporters to go back to their faction and planet making preparations.

What Sam said was true as well, he needed to organise the Cursed faction well. Including the three platoons that would be given to him by Oscar to command. They had quite the large force and that many people in Sam's hands, the pressure was already getting to him a bit.

While flying through space and heading back to the Cursed ship, everyone noticed that Quinn's mood was still quite sombre, and what was worse, Eno wasn't talking to anyone or saying anything to Quinn either.

It was like they had made a pact to not talk to each other.

"So is Eno really his grandpa, or was that just some kind of act?" Helen asked Sam who was at the front of the ship looking out into space.

"I believe, it's quite complicated. I don't even think they know what their relationship is quite like" Sam replied.

It was a long and tiring trip, and while the others were sleeping. Sam decided to watch the recorded event back to see how they were portrayed. Bonny had asked many large figures what they thought of the Cursed faction, and some of them gave quite political answers.

It seemed like what they had done so far was sit on the fence. Neither saying negative nor positive things about them. Whereas before they were outright against the Cursed faction. Still, there were those that still seemed to hate them. People didn't like change, and the Cursed faction was doing a lot of that.

What was most important to Sam though, was how Eno and Quinn had come across when the two of them were arguing, and when Quinn had crunched up the medal. Judging by the comments from the video he was watching, it was mixed.

Some agreed with what Quinn had said, while others just thought he was being ungrateful.

'I'm glad that the microphone was able to pick up what he said, otherwise that would have been another PR disaster.' Sam thought.

Eventually, setting it to autopilot and swapping out with Helen, they were able to get some sleep, and after a short while they had arrived.

The first one to stand by the exit of the ship was Eno, and no one wanted to step in front of him either. It just felt awkward and even more awkward he was already treating like he owned the whole place.

Once the railing had gone down to the floor, Eno took a step on the Cursed ship for the first time.

"Alright, let's go and fix this Sil boy you were talking about earlier. You kept your side of the deal, so I will do mine as well."

Chapter 1033: You should be dead

When getting off the ship, some of the others thought they might have some time to rest. Even though they had slept on the ship it wasn't the same, their bodies were sore and their minds still weren't prepared for what was about to happen.

However, Eno seemed to be ready for action as soon as they had landed.

"Do not worry, you guys can relax for a bit. I can take care of Eno while he is here." Quinn said. "Besides, I'm sure the rest of you have some important things to do, we don't all need to be keeping an eye on him twenty four seven."

Although Quinn said this, a lot of them felt too uncomfortable leaving a stranger in the Cursed ship, especially one that was a vampire. However, whatever Quinn wanted they would do so and Quinn was right, they did all have their own things to do.

Now that war had started, some wanted to contact their parents and get them to move from whatever planet they were on and have them come on board the Cursed ship, where they believed it was the safest place for them to be.

"Correction, you don't need to keep an eye on me at all. I won't cause the crew any trouble, I want everyone to do things how they would do as if I wasn't here. Remember, I am here to observe just how great the Cursed faction is, I don't want you to put on an act." Eno said.

Sam gave Quinn another look, trying to see if he was really okay leaving the two of them alone. Eno hadn't exactly been staying out of trouble, but was being nothing but trouble so far.

"It's easier this way, I wanted to get straight down to business." Quinn replied. "I had my rest at the school, so don't worry too much about me."

Even though Quinn reassured him, Sam was worried. Also what type of rest was Quinn even talking about? While at school he had run into so many troubles and even was in the middle of a fight with deadly Dalki, if anything he should be the most tired out of all of them.

Still, Sam couldn't babysit Eno all the time, and there probably weren't many on the ship that could either, so he thought this might actually be the best course of action if he and Quinn were together all the time.

'I just hope those two don't get into some type of huge argument.' Sam thought, leaving the two on their own.

As the group split off to do their own thing, Quinn went ahead in order to look for Sil, getting straight down to business.

'I wonder how Sil has been since he was sent back?' Quinn thought.

Remembering that he was a bit unstable, but it was the only thing he could do at the time.

However, while on his way to the school centre on the ship, where he thought Sil would be, he could see a small boy running towards them out of breath.

He had his hands on his knees and was gasping for air, it was clear the person didn't do much physical activity often.

"You...You...you're Eno!" The boy said, lifting up his head, and Quinn could see that the person who he thought was a young boy, was actually Logan.

"Ah, I know you. You are the one from the Green family, correct? Brock has been keeping quite the eye on you and your development has been exceptional." Eno said, looking at the boy with a smile, but Logan wasn't smiling back.

Now that Logan was looking up at him, the person he had been looking for this whole time, he had frozen. His mouth was twitching but the questions just wouldn't come out, until, he eventually said a few words.

"My...My parents...did you kill them?" Logan eventually managed to stutter out.

Eno then knelt down to eye level with Logan and looked him in the eye.

"Tell me. If I said I did, what would you do?" Eno taunted him.

Quinn knew all about the situation with Logan's family, their past and their history with vampires. He was now wondering what the hell Eno was doing, saying these words.

What happened next, Quinn didn't expect at all. Logan swung his right hand out, it was his new Dalki hand that was encased in a special metallic material in order to cover it up. However, as soon as Quinn saw the movement from Logan, he didn't know why but he had moved forward.

His body stepped in front of Eno and he had blocked the attack, lifting up both his hands to do so.

'Damn, this hit is heavy, it really does feel like I'm getting hit by the Dalki.' Quinn thought, but had successfully protected Eno.

"What are you doing Quinn, after everything I have done to help you!" Logan shouted. "Why are you getting in my way, didn't you say you would help me?"

Honestly, Quinn didn't even know what he was doing. When he saw Logan attack he felt like he should have stopped it and he did.

"Logan, think about it, this isn't like you at all. You never usually act on emotion but probability, correct? So think about it, what are the chances that Eno is really the one that killed your parents. Can you be hundred percent sure it is him?" He asked.

"I can answer that for you." Eno said, putting his hand on Quinn's shoulder.
"Thanks for taking that hit for me, it would have left quite the bruise if you didn't. I didn't realise you cared for me that much."

Hearing this, Quinn wished he would have just let Logan punch him up a couple of times before stepping in to stop him.

"I didn't kill your parents. The Green family has been supporting me during my entire lifetime, I'm sure you know. I was the one that had given them their power and in return they were to help me."

Now Logan was sure of it, this man really was Eno because he would be the only one that knew about this fact. Unless of course Quinn had told him, but why would he have done that?

"I am deeply sorry for what happened to them. I should have kept a better eye on them. Both your parents were smart people, I'm sure they knew they were in trouble. I thought if they did they would have tried to seek me out before anything had happened, but for some reason they never did."

Hearing this as an answer, Logan stood there not really knowing how to feel. This was the person his parents had told him to seek if he was in trouble, but now that he had finally met him, the only words he can say is sorry.

'What did I really expect though.' Logan started to think. 'That he would bring them back, was I hoping he was my parents' killer so I could exact revenge?'

It was then that Logan realised he didn't really know the answer he was looking for. This whole time he was just following his parents wishes and directing his anger at Eno, but now, he was completely lost.

'No, I can't just take what this person says as the truth. We know nothing about him. My parents might have trusted him, but they are dead because they did. I will learn and find out everything about him.' Logan thought, as he turned around and could see him walking ahead.

"Logan, if you need to speak anytime, please come and see me." Quinn said. "I am always on your side, and I have never forgotten how much you have helped me. No matter how busy I am, there will always be time for you." Quinn said.

Walking ahead, Logan wiped his face, he wasn't sure if he had shed tears or not, but did so out of reaction.

"Wait Quinn!" Logan shouted. "I'm coming with you, just for the time being. I also need to make sure it's a hundred percent not this man, and if it is, I will be sure to let you know first." Logan said. He would not make the same mistakes his parents did of trusting this man or putting the lives of his friends with this man.

Following behind, the three of them continued to walk forward and finally had entered the classroom where Borden could be seen with the kids, along with another person Quinn didn't quite recognise, but they were busy teaching the kids math.

'Well, I'm glad they found someone normal to teach them.' Quinn thought.

They saw Brock sitting at the back of the class in a seat with his arms folded. He was still wearing his butler uniform, and next to him, sitting at the very back was Sil as well. He was sat upright but his eyes didn't seem to be focusing on the lesson at all, they looked a little hollow.

As soon as Eno entered the room, Brock shot up like a rocket and gave a bow.

"Master, it is a relief to see you in such good health." Brock said.

At the same time, for a second Sil's eyes lit up as he saw Quinn, but soon they seemed to die down again, as if he was lost in his own head. It felt like not even he could cheer up or get through to Sil anymore.

'Did going to school really make him worse? I guess it was going to school and then taking him out of it.'

After exiting out of the room, Borden had decided to come along with them and instead of looking at Sil, Eno's eyes couldn't stop looking at the short man who had hopped on top of Logan's shoulder.

"Hey, why does that man keep staring at me?" Borden whispered inside Logan's ear.

"It's because you." Eno said, not taking his eyes off Broden. "You should be dead." Eno said.

Chapter 1034: The real Eno

Everyone standing in the hallway just outside the kids' classroom had a knee jerk reaction to what Eno had just said. Apart from Brock that was, who kept his hands behind his back and was just keeping an eye on everyone's movements.

"Hey, who the hell is this guy saying I should be dead!" Borden said. He was so angry that he had jumped up and down on Logan's shoulder but was careful not to use his strength.

Honestly, he wasn't the only one upset by the words, Sil had a brief reaction, as did Logan. For Quinn, he was starting to get used to Eno just saying what was on his mind without thinking of the consequences, and he was also starting to think his words weren't so serious, that he was just trying to stir up trouble in the Cursed faction.

If Quinn really thought what he said was true, and Eno was anyone else, Quinn would have reacted as well, and not in a small way either. Borden had been a great help in saving Fex, helping on the Blade island to save Sil, and even himself. Quinn owed Borden a lot and for someone to insult him in front of him, he didn't want to see that.

'Quinn,' Vincent called out to him. 'You might already know this, since you haven't said anything, but I believe that Eno is trying to test the Cursed factions bond. Your group has come together in strange ways and haven't exactly been together long. Maybe he is trying to test your group.'

Even if this was true, Quinn thought this wasn't the right way to be doing it. He did say he would just be observing for a while, he certainly didn't mention anything about causing friction on the ship.

"I'm just saying what will eventually happen to him." Eno replied. "The Dalki race is something that needs to be exterminated at all costs. If you knew what I knew, I'm sure you would all be thinking the same way. Not a single one of them can live, and that includes this one." He pointed at Borden.

"I'm actually surprised you could even have a Dalki on board this ship, how do you trust him?"

After hearing what Vincent had said, Quinn managed to keep himself quite calm. After observing his actions it really did seem like Eno was only doing this to ruffle up some feathers.

'Also, why don't you just tell me what you know about the Dalki then?' Quinn thought.

"Shut up!" Sil shouted. "Who are you? Why would you say that to him. Borden is like a brother to me!" Sil shouted.

It was surprising but it was actually the first time Sil had spoken since he had gotten back to the Cursed ship from the school. Before being sent to school there were two people that Sil could interact with, one of them being Quinn, and the other one being Borden.

"Eno, how can you even question our group when you know nothing about us." Logan said. "You might think you know everything due to watching us from behind the scenes, but not everything can be sorted into groups and piles of information."

It was clear that Logan was still upset with Eno, because he was the type of person to sort those into groups and piles of information.

Sil had stepped forward and looked like he was about to do something he may later regret, but before he could, Brock had stopped him.

"I understand how you feel, young master." Brock said, speaking to Sil. "However, Eno was just pointing out a decision that you might have to come across in the future. Of course you will have to face the decision and he is not forcing this decision upon you, only prompting you to think." Brock tried to explain and be the moderator in the midst of it all.

However, Brock's words seemed to fall upon deaf ears as Sil was still breathing heavily. Seeing this, Quinn thought he was about to act out and who knew what abilities he had and didn't have at this moment.

"Sil, this man might be able to bring back Vorden and Raten." Quinn eventually said.

Out of all the things, this had gotten through to Sil the most. His heavy breathing had stopped, and he looked at the man differently. "Really.." Sil spoke quietly.

Even Borden, who was still angry at Eno, was happy that perhaps the one who he deemed as his real brother, could be returning.

There was silence between the whole group as they moved from the hall to one of the training rooms. There were a few people inside, and when Quinn entered they all congratulated him. Quinn asked them nicely to leave the room for the time being and of course they obliged, heading to one of the other rooms.

The boys were all standing next to Sil, checking if he was okay and he seemed to be, as he continued to stare at Eno.

Eno and Brock appeared to be discussing something together once in the room. Quinn found it strange while looking at the two of them, he couldn't hear what they were saying. He didn't realise it at first because they were standing quite far away and seemed to be whispering. In the past, even if people were whispering, Quinn's sensitive ears should have been able to pick it up, but he couldn't.

'Is this a type of skill, or something to do with Eno?' Quinn thought.

After their discussion had ended, Eno walked up to the rest of the group along with Brock who was by his side.

"Brock has explained to me and caught me up with what has happened. I already knew of some of your situation but now I understand it a bit more. Still, I'm sure Brock has already explained to your group what we wish Sil to do."

This was what Quinn and the others had expected Eno would do, he needed Sil and his ability to move the demon tier beast and he wouldn't bring back Raten and Vorden until Sil did his task for him.

"Because of this, I want Sil to first agree to help us with our task. I don't want to force the boy and I am a fair person. A favour for a favour." Eno said.

This had come as a surprise, Quinn hadn't expected this but he was a bit annoyed, wasn't this his favour to help Sil? And now he was getting Sil to do another favour for him in return.

Before Quinn could even voice his concern though, Sil had nodded immediately.

"I will go through anything to bring them both back." Sil agreed.

Still, it was unclear if Eno would keep his side of the bargain after Sil had done the favour.

"Now, just be patient. I just need to touch your head for a second." Eno said as he walked forward.

Quinn found this a bit weird, but didn't think much would happen.

'Quinn, I think that's the real Eno that is on board the ship right now.' Vincent suddenly said.

'What do you mean?' Quinn thought.

Due to Eno claiming that the one he was speaking to before in the desert wasn't the real Eno, Quinn assumed this one wasn't the real one either.

'Because right now, by touching Vorden's head he is activating part of his ability.' Vincent replied.

A few seconds later, Eno had let go of Sil's head and had a concerned look on his face.

"Is that it!" Sil said in an excited voice. "Are they back, Vorden, Raten!" He called out, but he couldn't hear or see anything.

"It won't be that easy." Eno replied. "The conditions to bring back the other two are a little difficult." Eno explained. "I will present to you two options in order to bring your friends back and it is up to you which one you choose.

"Many of you may not know this but I will let you in on a little secret. The abilities that humans have learnt, nearly all of them in our current world have descended from one thing, a giant stone tablet. I have investigated this tablet and I am not sure how it really works but, when it finds someone suitable and deems it necessary, the ability will be passed on to a human.

"When one dies with their ability, it returns back to the tablet and will only leave once again once it finds someone suitable. If the tablet still has not found someone then the ability can very well still be in the tablet. If so, then I will be able to give it to someone with no ability.

"For this to work though, you would first need to go to the tablet, and secondly find someone with no ability. I did the same thing for the Green family long ago, so I have done this before." Eno stated.

Quinn knew what the problem was straight away, the tablet was on the Blade island and they didn't know if the Hilston family still occupied it, or if the dragon was there. While there, it was most likely Eno would want them to move the dragon first.

"I'm sure you already know the problems with this by the look on your faces, and now I actually plan to bring back the other two before asking Sil to complete my request. After all, what if I was to fail?" Eno stated.

'Did he just say to bring them back, before Sil was to help him with his request?'

"Wait, Eno." Quinn said. "I'm sure you know this and I don't want to stop you from helping Sil, but I also don't want you to bite us back later. When Raten and Vorden were in Sil's mind, he was only able to copy three abilities at one time, it wouldn't be enough to move the demon tier beast."

Sil thought about this as well and so did the others, which was why they thought that Sil would have to complete his favour first.

"Who said I would be bringing them back into Sil's mind?" Eno answered.

Chapter 1035: Another option

If Eno was planning to bring back Vorden and Raten and not by bringing them back into Sil's mind, Quinn and the others were starting to think of what Eno was exactly planning to do. That's when it hit them, that maybe Eno already had something in mind.

After talking to Fex, and learning of what happened to Innu before Quinn had arrived to the others on the desert that day. Quinn realised that just as Eno had said, three people that looked identical to him had appeared in front of each of them.

At first, Quinn thought maybe they were using an ability of some sort, but it seemed to be something beyond that,

'Does that mean that Eno is able to create clones, or something similar with his ability?' Quinn thought. It certainly wasn't out of the realm of possibility. After all, Borden was created and he was nearly an identical copy of Vorden before he transformed into a Dalki and used up all his power.

Also, the Dalki were created trying to find a replacement for their blood source problem, and sometime later, the vampires eventually managed to create a blood replacement. However, Quinn never found out how that replacement was made exactly. When using his inspect skill though, a lot of the blood was sourced from the same people.

Thinking about his led him to another thought. At one point and time, when Quinn was trapped in one of the labs that he assumed was owned by Eno, there were human body parts that were used to feed the Wendigos. When they went up through the caves above they had discovered a large glass container which contained countless human bodies, yet all of them looked similar to each other.

'Were they all clones as well?!" Quinn thought. 'Is that how the vampires are able to get a constant blood supply without having to rely on the humans anymore?"

This in itself was a scary thought, and Quinn thought surely there had to be a downside to using clones that Eno was perhaps not telling him. Just like there was a problem with the Dalki.

"Are you talking about, creating bodies for the two of them?" Logan was the one who had eventually asked, thinking along the same lines as Quinn.

"That is certainly one option, but if you were to obtain the ability you wouldn't even need to do that, you would just need to have two empty bodies prepared, or they don't even have to be empty. Just move their minds to somewhere else and place the others in the other bodies instead. Although, bare in mind that the new bodies cells would be different. So if you wanted them to have the same ability as before, they would have to have no abilities or have already learnt the abilities," Eno explained.

Quinn didn't know why, but going down this path seemed like quite the dark one, and it just sounded like there were too many risks on top of risks. Esseintley in the first place they would need at least three people, possibly five. One person who would obtain the mind swapping ability, and then two bodies to move Vorden and Raten into, while moving the other minds out of that body.

The whole thing just seemed beyond what Quinn was happy to deal with, so perhaps creating the clones would be the best thing.

"Wait a second." Quinn said, "Earlier you said that there were two options, what about the second option?"

"The first option doesn't require me to use much of my ability which is why for me it's less trouble, but the second option isn't easy either. There is actually no need to obtain the ability at all. I am able to use my own ability to transfer both Vorden and Raten out of Sil, if they are still there."

"However, with my ability there is a cost, and that cost is either two Demi god tier beast crystals, or another Demon tier beast crystal." Said Eno.

"But even if we don't have someone learn the ability, does that mean you would have to prepare two bodies for them to be transferred into?" Quinn asked.

"Correct." Eno replied.

After learning of the two options, if they wanted to attempt to solve the problem quickly the first option was a good one for them. However, they needed someone to learn the ability from the tablet, but who would be loyal enough to help them and had no ability,

It was Rare for adults apart from those from Pure to not have an ability. Then a certain student came into his mind.

'Shiro...but could I really do that to him? I could always give him the option.'

Even if Shiro accepted Quinn's request, he didn't want to force it upon him on top of that there was still the problem of where the tablet was. It was on the Balde island, and there was a huge risk the Balde's were still there.

Although they would rely less on Eno with this option, it was just too risky. As for the second option, even with all the planets they owned they had yet to come across these sorts of beasts, and Quinn still remembered how much effort it took to take down a single demon tier beast.

"Let me think about this for a little while." Quinn said.

It was getting late, and it was a decision that needed to be slept on.

"If you speak to Sam, I'm sure he will have a room and place for you to rest for the night." Quinn said, and both Brock and Eno were ready to head off, but before they left the room, Eno turned around to say one last thing.

"Quinn, I am a man of my word, I understand that your favour has turned into Sil's favour, so feel free to ask me for anything that you might need." Eno said leaving the room.

"Quinn, do you really trust him? I know you were thinking what I was thinking." Logan said. "It seems like Eno had the ability to also create clones. We're not sure how this works, and I'm also not sure if Eno plans to include this in his deal to help Sil, or if we requested bodies from him he would ask for something else."

"I'll take a look into what I can do in terms of that situation as well, but it might be best that I head back to the vampire world to find out more at the lab." Logan suggested.

"No, I don't want you to go to the vampire world for the time being. Not without me anyway." Quinn replied. "Not when the Dalki war has already started, I'm sure that Arthur is planning to make his move and I don't want anyone to be caught up in the middle of that."

"I think for now, we shouldn't worry about the 'bodies that are required'. I'll ask Sam to see if he can send a scout team to the Blade island, to see if the Blades are still there. For now, I think we should get everything that is needed to set up the transfer then we can decide."

"Besides, even if we don't use the Demon tier or Demi-god beast crystals we can still use them for other things, so it won't be a waste of our time, and we will need to check out the Blade island anyway, if Eno is planning to use Sil to move the beast."

Looking at Sil, Quinn could tell he was frustrated. An impatient person that just wanted to bring RAten and Vorden back. He was quite surprised that Sil didn't say anything during the whole conversation, but Quinn knew what Sil was like.

If it was for Vorden and Raten he would do anything, which meant he didn't care about the lives, or bodies of the people Raten and Vorden would live in if he got to see them again.

"Sil, you just need to wait a little longer. We need to make sure that Vorden and Raten can return safe and sound." Said Quinn. "If we get the ability, then we don't have to worry too much, we can always keep moving them...."

When Quinn said this, something struck him, a third option that Eno didn't think was possible, something that didn't require extra bodies and would keep Sil's powers.

'But will it work? I just hope Vorden and Raten don't mind what I'm thinking of doing.' Quinn thought.

Chapter 1036: Making a deal everywhere

Quinn wanted to act without Eno knowing what he had planned for now, that way he couldn't play any of his games on him. At the same time, choosing either of the options relied on Eno quite a bit which Quinn didn't like.

Still, for his new plan to work there were many moving parts he would have to do himself, and he also needed to check if it was possible. He and Logan would have to work closely on this one, while making it seem like Quinn had chosen one of the options for now.

As for Eno, he had been left to his own devices, allowing him to travel around the Cursed ship along with his 'friend' Brock. Although the relationship between the two still wasn't clear. The Cursed leaders apart from Megan who was still in the dark about the others' secrets, were to keep an eye on Eno when they could.

Although, ever since the broadcast, everywhere Eno went it was hard to not know where he was, for even the Cursed faction members wanted to talk to him and knew who he was.

When talking to the regular members on board, he had asked simple questions about the Cursed faction, such as when did they join and what do they think of the group. It didn't seem like he was stirring up trouble like with the main leaders.

After so much observing, they found out that Eno was really doing what he said, just wandering around and observing. Quinn couldn't stay with him forever so It was deemed fine to leave him alone.

Of course, one of the only reasons this was allowed was because of Logan, who had access to the cameras around the Cursed ship, and also had one of his small spiders following Eno at all times, but he wasn't an idiot. He knew most likely Eno and Brock had an idea they were being followed, and could turn off or interfere with his equipment.

Eno was one of the few smart people who could actually go against Logan, but if anything strange did occur, then that would also be a sign and Quinn would be informed straight away.

Currently, Logan while working away on what Quinn had tasked him with, was watching what Eno was doing. The pair of goggles he would usually wear over his eyes while he did work, was showing a video feed that allowed Logan to see everything in the top left hand corner.

At the same time, he could concentrate on doing his work, and through his ability the spider would inform him if it thought it had seen anything suspicious as well, in case there were a few things he had missed.

As for what Eno was doing at this very moment, he had entered a training room that was producing noise even through the soundproof rooms. It was also clear that the other members of the Cursed faction were avoiding the room, so naturally Eno was interested.

When he entered the room along with Brock, the sound of constant clashes could be heard even clearer now, and in the training room, sparks were flying off while two swords were doing battle.

The two that were currently training were both Leo and Erin.

"Did you sense them?" Leo asked, as he continued his strike and it was blocked by Erin.

"Of course!" She shouted back, trying to swing a heavy strike of her own, but she was tired and overextended, allowing her body weight to shift for a brief second. Leo used this to move in and gave Erin a shoulder barge as she came in, knocking her to the ground.

Both of them were completely covered in sweat. For vampires, this was incredibly rare as it took a lot for them, based on how large their stamina was. Even when training, hardly anyone pushed their bodies to this point.

"Let's stop for now." Leo said, it wasn't because their tank was empty, but he just didn't like the fact that the guests were watching their every move, and Leo and Erin had some secrets they didn't want to particularly share with outsiders.

"Oh, you two don't have to stop just because we came in, it was just getting good." Eno said with a smile. As the fight ended as well, Erin's hair started to change back from the black colour going to its original blonde.

This was something that she had eventually learnt to control based on who she was around at the moment. However, when battling using certain strength it would change to black. Eno looked at this and it looked as if he wanted to say something but had decided not to.

"Brock." Leo called out. "Is this the master that you spoke of before?"

"It is." Brock replied.

Leo started to walk up to the two of them, and was cautious while Erin followed from behind.

"Although the two of us have not met, I hope I am not rude by requesting this." Leo bowed. "I was hoping you could help me with some information." Leo asked, looking towards Eno.

"Ah yes, Brock did inform me that someone was quite interested in Pure, I assume that you would be the one, but you must not know me very well and if you don't you will do. I only tell people what I wish, if they are to do me a favour or have something that I want in return. An equivalent exchange.

"Information on the Pure leader's appearance is very valuable information, which means you would owe me quite the big favour." Eno said with a smile. "So I would be happy to tell you, as long as you comply with one of my requests."

When looking at Eno, something was sending goosebumps inside Erin's body. She didn't like this person. She had felt this way when seeing someone else from the vampire world, which was Bryce. Someone who didn't seem like an outright bad person, but it didn't mean they weren't a bad person.

"I'm sorry to hear that, but then I must decline," Leo replied. "If it is information worth warranting a deal over, then perhaps I shouldn't know about it in the first place."

Brock could tell that his master was quite surprised by this person's response. It was clear that Leo was very interested in knowing who the Pure leader was, but then why wouldn't he attempt to make a deal?

"Maybe you can help me with another thing," Leo said. "Perhaps you could inform me and tell me, who do you think is stronger? Surely you must know the Pure leader's strength?"

"I would say I have a pretty good idea, but I do not know your strength so I would be unable to find out that answer." Eno replied.

After that, Leo didn't say anything else, and just decided to walk past Eno with Erin following behind him, leaving the room. For a second, Eno was left there in his own thoughts, thinking about what had just happened.

Later that night, nearly everyone on the cursed ship had fallen asleep. Even Logan, who was a late worker had fallen asleep, but not without ordering his spiders to continue to follow Eno and to see if there was anything strange.

It followed him into his room and followed him everywhere, not noticing anything out of the ordinary, and Eno had gone to sleep.

Meanwhile, in the hallway itself, another figure that looked exactly like Eno was standing outside of a certain door.

'The Green boy is suspicious of me but I don't blame him. He is doing well and this is how he should act. However, he is unaware of what I can do, and that is where he will fail.'

Seemingly entering the room, he was silent, walking towards the bed. The person's blonde hair could be seen, trailing off her bed.

'A Dhampir is no one's friend. It might be better off to kill her now before she causes more trouble for everyone.' Eno thought.

Taking a step forward, his hand was glowing red, and his eyes at the same time, but he stopped. Almost hesitating with what to do.

'Should I really interfere? The Cursed faction has done well because of the group of people Quinn has managed to surround himself with. This may ruin everything.'

Letting the red aura go, Eno turned around, only to have a blade pointed towards his neck, and the one holding the sword was the bald blind man he had seen earlier.

"Maybe we will find out the answer to my question."

Chapter 1037: Trapped between two

"I have to ask." Eno said. "How did you know I would be here?"

With a blade pointed an inch away from Eno's neck. He seemed pretty calm and it didn't look like he was fazed at all. Judging by his aura, Leo could tell this as well.

"Was that a question?" Leo asked. "I thought you only answered questions if you got something in return. You seem to be quite the composed person but unfortunately for you, I can see more than others ever could with their eyes. For a brief moment, perhaps you didn't react but your aura did when you saw Erin's hair colour change."

"It is my duty to look after those in the Cursed family."

"You have the right attitude to be a vampire knight. If you were a real vampire everyone would be fighting to have you as their knight." Eno said. "It looks like Quinn has found a good one, but my question wasn't directed towards you."

At that moment, shadows started to disperse and another person was seen present in the room, and that was Quinn. He had been in the room from the very beginning and was ready to jump in to save Erin at any moment, but what had surprised him was Leo being there as well.

"Coming from someone who made those comments about Borden, I don't see why you wouldn't feel a similar way about Erin either. Besides, for someone who had put me through a pretty cruel test, do you think I would trust you on the ship so easily?" Quinn said.

It was at that moment that Eno realised that Quinn wasn't as naive as he thought. He had given him an illusion that he was free to do as he wished while continuing to follow him.

"Congratulations, but what will you be doing to me now then, seeing as I attempted to kill one of your precious members? Don't you still need me?" Eno said.

At this point, Quinn was sure that Eno was trying to get him to act out for some reason, and even Eno was wondering why Quinn was so calm even though one of his friends had nearly just been killed.

He looked over at Erin who appeared to be sleeping away, even through all of their talking. She was either quite the deep sleeper, or exhausted.

"What's the point of getting angry at you?" Quinn said. "After all, you're not the real Eno, right?"

Eno's eyes widened.

'How did he know? I'm sure he couldn't tell the difference before. How was he able to catch on so quickly?' Eno thought.

Even Leo wasn't sure how Quinn knew. The aura that Leo was sensing now, and the one from before were identical to the one he had met earlier today. Unless even from back then, it had been the fake Eno as well.

The truth was, Quinn didn't know. The person who had informed him, was Vincent. He was the real person who was able to tell which one was the real Eno and which one was the fake. It was all based on the action he had seen partake with Sil.

Vincent couldn't quite explain it, but what was clear was, the clones didn't have the same ability as Eno. Even if they were vampires, and could use blood skills they didn't have the equivalent exchange ability and this was what tipped Vincent off.

"Well then, I guess it won't be a problem if my blade were to pierce through his neck." Leo said casually.

Hearing Leo say these words, were even frightening Quinn a little. He had never seen him so aggressive, but lately Quinn hadn't even had a chance to catch up with Leo. At the moment, he seemed to be on edge far more than usual.

"Let's see you try!" Eno suddenly said, stepping forward having encased blood around the tip of the blade. Even with Leo pushing his sword forward a stream of blood hardened around it and it was unable to do anything.

The next second, Eno lifted his hand, and controlling the blood around the blade he lifted the sword up and away from him. However, a few seconds later, and using the second stage of Qi, Leo was able to surround his blade and take the blood off to attempt to attack again.

"Interesting, no wonder you are so interested in Pure, you share the same power as them!" Eno said, soon covering both of his fists in spirals of blood.

When Leo went to attack again, the spiral flattened out like a shield blocking the attack, and even with Qi disrupting the flow of blood, the shield would constantly regenerate itself holding the sword in place as it spun around.

With his other hand free, Eno attempted to attack, but soon felt a kick to the back of his leg, causing him to fall to one knee.

"You getting involved in our fight, I thought you were just going to stand there and watch." Eno said, looking at Quinn behind him.

"Leo, don't kill him. Capture the clone and I'm sure we can learn a lot about him." Quinn said.

He didn't know how strong this clone of Eno's was. Perhaps it had equal power to Eno, or a little less, but with the two of them, he was sure they could capture Eno quite successfully.

While down on the ground. Eno attempted to spin around and kick the back of Quinn's leg. But Quinn naturally lifted it up, and when he put his foot down he stomped on Eno's leg. A strike from Leo's sword came from above, and Eno combined both spirals of blood surrounding his hand, to block the attack once again.

Then, after stopping the sword in place, the blood started to move upward, branching off like tree branches and was heading straight for Leo. Quinn was trying to hurry and pushed his shadow over to help Leo, hoping it would get there in time, but it wasn't needed.

As a strange invisible force, soon pushed all of the tree branches of blood back to where it was. Seeing this opportunity, Quinn stomped the back of Eno's legs two more times, and then pulled both of Eno's arms back.

At that moment, abandoning his sword to be held by the blood, Leo rushed to the side and grabbed Eno's head. A strange sudden burst of energy was felt, and soon Eno's eyes were closed as his body went limp.

"What was that?" Quinn asked. "Did you kill him?"

"That, I guess I haven't had time to tell you, but I think I have managed to perfect the third stage of Qi." Leo answered. "Don't worry he is not dead, but why did you want to capture him?"

Quinn suspected that capturing the real Eno would never be as easy, but in truth he actually wanted one of Enos clones. "Let's take him to Logan and have him do a little check up, we just need to find what exactly this, or he, is."

'I would be a little careful Quinn. Remember, the real Eno is still out there, and we don't yet know what these other Eno's are capable of.' Vincent warned. 'They might have some way that they are able to communicate and pass on information to each other. Or perhaps they each have a mind of their own, similar to Borden.'

It wasn't that Logan was prepared for restraining Eno if something was to happen. The way he explained it, was that he just happened to have been working all day today, on special restraints that would be able to hold a vampire leader.

It was based off the black material from the vampire world, and glathrium. They were similar to a pair of cuffs but far thicker and gave no space for movement of one's hands or legs at all. Making so one couldn't build up power to break them.

At the same time, the strongest sedation that Logan had was being pumped into the Eno clone, not that they knew if it worked or not anyway. Besides if that all failed, Leo and Quinn were ready at any time to restrain him once again.

At the moment, a blood sample was being taken and all sorts of body checks were being done on the Eno clone. Hoping to find out if it really was a clone, or something else, and maybe they could help Sil without his help.

Quinn never planned to resort to anything like this, but after what Eno had done he felt like he had every right to do what he was doing at the moment.

The spider that Logan had continued to monitor what they believed was to be the real Eno, who was currently wide awake himself.

'Should I let things just play out as they are going now? So far they are doing expectantly well.' Eno thought. 'Perhaps they deserve a few rewards.'

Chapter 1038: The secrets of a clone

What everyone assumed to be a clone of Eno, was strapped up into a chair with the special restraints on his arms and legs. Logan was quite confident this could hold a vampire but would constantly look back, wondering when he would wake up. Needles had been injected into him for sedation while Logan was running a few tests.

When looking at what was happening to Eno right now, even if it was a clone, Quinn felt a little bad. He somewhat used to imagine this was what his life would be subjected to if they ever found out about his secret.

'You can't feel bad Quinn, remember you would have never done such things if for one, Eno was straight up and honest with you.' Vincent said. 'And two, Eno attempted to attack those in your group first.'

It was true, Eno actions in the end had led Quinn to do this, and in a way it wasn't like they were torturing him. In fact, Logan wasn't doing much to Eno, other than taking a few samples here and there, what was clear to them was that this Eno was a vampire and was treated like one.

Any wounds that would be made on his body would heal at a fast rate, and his cells had a reaction to human blood. After testing for a few hours, it looked like Logan was finally done, but he wasn't jumping for joy or had much of a reaction.

"I guess you didn't find the answer you were looking for?" Said Quinn.

Logan shook his head.

"I can answer a few of the questions we might have had, but I don't think it was what we were looking for Quinn." Logan answered. "It's quite clear that this Eno is a clone. Based on what you have told me. When looking for MC cells there seems to be none. What I'm not sure about is if it's because the body can't produce MC cells or if it's out of choice."

"When trying to reverse the process or create a cloning process similar to this clone, it seems to fail nearly every time. At least when trying to create a clone with another clone. I tried using the techniques I learnt from the vampire lab, the same way I created Borden and the same way I created my Dalki hand. I used my own blood but the cells just deteriorated too fast."

"I assume this was the original problem in the first place when creating a clone, and that's why they needed to mix beast blood strong enough with human blood to sustain the clone. So I'm afraid I can't create a body for Vorden and Raten. Maybe the way Eno does it now is different."

"What if you were to use my blood?" Quinn asked.

Perhaps they couldn't create another human, but what about using vampire blood.

"I already attempted something like that at the vampire lab, where there were samples of vampire blood. It won't work."

"If you were looking to find out anything else from this clone. Whether information is passed through each other or something else, I'm afraid I won't be able to tell just with this equipment."

From their investigation at least they had gotten one answer. That Eno was somehow able to create clones of himself, which meant he probably could do something for Vorden and Raten. Looking at Logan now, he seemed a bit defeated, he didn't turn his head away from the lab screen while talking to Quinn at all.

As if it was annoying him that he couldn't figure out something that someone else could.

'The struggle of geniuses.' Vincent sighed. 'You wouldn't understand Quinn. Would you mind asking Logan if I can take a look at the data?'

When Quinn lived Vincent's life, there were some things he experienced but he didn't understand the way Vincent's mind worked. He was able to see him experience and do things, but it was far too advanced and was just a bunch of numbers and strange letters to Quinn. Which was why he often forgot that Vincent was actually a great mind himself.

"Do you mind if I have a look at what you found out?" Quinn asked. Of course Logan was fine with letting him have a look, but didn't have much hope that Quinn would spot something that he hadn't done.

After reading through everything for a while and letting Vincent look at things, all Quinn kept hearing was a 'Ah I see' or 'that makes sense.' But nothing else, until eventually he explained what he had found out so far.

"It seems like your friend is facing a similar problem that I faced when I was also trying to create a blood substitute. There was a time when I also was trying to clone certain parts of a human but it wouldn't work out, even with my ability it was quite impossible." Vincent explained.

"I think that your friend is missing one key bit of information here. Remember Eno is an original. Vampires may live a long life but they don't live forever, even their cells die, but as for Originals, they can live on."

"Perhaps this is what Jim had thought back then as well. Using an original's cells. Something that wouldn't die would allow a person to create a perfect clone."

While Vincent explained this, Quinn also spoke out loud for Logan to hear as well, and due to the way Quinn was saying these words, Logan knew it wasn't coming from him but from something or someone else. Perhaps his system.

The problem was, they didn't have the real Eno in their possession at the moment to test out that theory.

However, Quinn was thinking about something else. It made sense that the Dalki were a failed experiment, but at the same time somewhat successful, but then how were the vampires able to create a blood substitute then?

This was something even Vincent didn't know the answer to, due to it being after his time.

At that moment, Eno started to wake up, or more so he started to speak.

"Well, did you find everything you wished to find?"

Immediately, Quinn went up to Eno and looked at him. Quite frankly he had enough, he had kept his cool for too long, and didn't want to keep messing around with another trouble.

"Eno enough playing games." Quinn said. "I know you might have been a king in the past. You're some great original vampire that created the tenth family but right now I'm telling you two things. I'm the current leader of the tenth family and I'm the leader of the Cursed faction and everyone on this ship."

"To me you are none of those, and you have been messing with us for far too long."

"Are you saying this to me because you now know I'm the clone?" Eno replied.
"Don't you want to go and speak to the real Eno?"

"Quite frankly, I don't give a crap." Quinn said. "I know you know everything that the original Eno knows, and I just want you to answer some of my questions. You are on my ship and if you want to stay here you need to start following my orders."

"We have been doing well without you so far, and the Cursed faction can continue, you have been more trouble than good, I'll find my own way to bring back Vorden and Raten. You can't keep using that as blackmail."

The room was silent, with only four of them present and with Eno saying nothing. Quinn got up and gave out a sigh.

"Leo, do whatever you want with him." Quinn said. The next second, Leo drew his blade.

"Okay!" Eno shouted, giving out a big sigh after like it was tiring. "Okay, so that's what you want right, just for me to answer your questions. Then fine, let's talk about everything. Whatever you want to ask I'll happily answer. I think I have tried to break your bonds for long enough. I never thought humans, vampires, and human turned vampires who barely knew each other would honestly care for each other that much.

"But Quinn let me tell you this to start with. I decided not to kill Erin because you're right, she is part of your group and you have been doing well so far, but do you even know why Dhampirs are so dangerous?" Eno said.

"From what I know, it's just because the vampires are afraid. Afraid that there is a race that is stronger when fighting them, and can stay out in the sun." Quinn replied. "The vampires believe they are the strongest race and would never want something stronger than them to live."

At least, this was partly from Quinn's own views from what he had learnt.

Grand laughter started to come from Eno's chair.

"Is that what you believe, who told you all of this? Although this is somewhat true, that's not the reason at all. You remember when you asked me about protecting vampires and humans? Well, you're right. I do want to protect them both, and I believe that's possible. However, if a Dhampir exists, that will never be possible. Let me tell you the real reason why the vampires are so afraid of the Dhampirs." Eno said.

Chapter 1039: The final deal

Quinn knew that it was important to keep what Erin was a secret, due to it being one of the 'Kill on sight subclasses.' Similar to the blood fairy. However, Quinn thought it made sense since their blood was deadly, and even he and his group were able to benefit from the use of the fairy blood.

As for Erin being a Dhampir, there hadn't been any stand out signs why they were treated in a similar way.

"Say whatever you want, but no matter what, I'm not getting rid of Erin." Quinn said. "She has done nothing wrong."

"I understand that, but you should at least know the time bomb that you are holding onto." Eno replied. "You being a human turned vampire, you will probably understand this more from your perspective. The urge a vampire gets when they smell human blood for the first time. The first time a vampire gets a taste for the blood.

"It's something so powerful that one loses their mind, not knowing what they have done."

Quinn remembered this well, because in the process, he had taken the blood of one of his now closest friends, Layla.

"Now as you said, the Dhampir are a superior race, they don't need blood, and they can live in the sunlight without having to use rings like us, but they don't come without their own faults either.

"I'm sure you've noticed your subclasses evolving in certain ways, and it's the same for a Dhampir. Only, they grow through killing vampires not their blood, but from killing. The lust they feel is the same as a vampire's for blood, but there is a big difference. Vampires don't need to kill humans to satisfy their lust and hunger. So tell me, how would you be able to satisfy her needs?

"If she's already killed a few, then slowly over time that lust will grow stronger, just like a vampire lust for human blood grows over time as they starve for blood."

Now it made sense, why the vampires were afraid of them. According to Eno, their lust was only satisfied by killing vampires. It was like a bloodsucker but one who hunted vampires instead.

"But Erin's never shown any signs of anything like that!" Quinn argued back. "And, if there are vampires that can control their lust for blood, then I'm sure that Erin can do the same."

"You make a good point." Eno replied. "Perhaps there is a way for 'One' to control their lust, but eventually there will be those that can't, and from the looks of it, your vampire knight has already noticed a few things."

Turning to Leo, Quinn was wondering what he was on about. Leo looked as calm as he did before, but that's when Quinn noticed it wasn't his facial expression that changed. It was his heart beat.

Knowing the cat was out of the bag, Leo spoke.

"Erin is learning Quinn." Leo said. "She is learning to control it, and I have promised her if anything happens that is against her own wishes, that I will be the one to stop her. I will make sure she doesn't hurt any of her friends."

Hearing this was not what Quinn was expecting. Even more so, he didn't expect Leo to hide something like this from him. Was it when Erin had done battle in the vampire world? Now that she had killed a vampire, was that lust growing by the day? It was now another problem that he had to deal with, and this time, he didn't have to worry about the humans of the group.

"She will learn to control it Quinn, just as you said, trust her." Leo reassured him.

"I wouldn't see this as a bad thing, if it was me, why not make her stronger? Make her evolve and control her powers just like you did Quinn, and soon you will have someone fit to be by your side equal in strength, or maybe even surpassing the strength of any vampire ever seen."

'Train her?' Quinn thought. How would that even be possible? If she had to kill vampires to evolve? It wasn't like Quinn, who could level up through killing beasts. Thinking about this was annoying him more and he just wanted to move on from the subject.

"Enough!" Quinn shouted. "Now it's time for us to do the questioning. Tell me, why did the Dalki attack Planet Caladi, and why didn't you let me call for help?"

"You haven't guessed that by now?" Eno replied. "I have a network and I have been feeding the information to the Dalki for a while now. There's a reason why they weren't so quick to attack earth after the first war."

"They assumed that the beast was secretly on plant Caladi thanks to me, at the same time I knew that you would be there Quinn. Remember, I created the system with Vincent and the Green family, I knew what it was meant to do. Vincent probably had no idea that I knew who he was at the time, but I knew everything and I chose to help him."

"Through the system, By completing quests it would gradually give you Vincent's vampire strength from the book and increase your own as you learnt yourself what being a vampire meant. I wanted to put you in a dire situation so you could grow and improve but you impressed me Quinn.

"I underestimated your strength. Either you are a talented boy because of the Eno bloodline that runs through your veins, or the system has somehow become more powerful than I ever predicted."

This was something that Vincent had guessed as well. The system was growing. There were some things that had been set up by the three creators but when Vincent gave his powers to the book along with the system, they were unaware that his soul would be bound to the system. Vincent had a theory that perhaps his own ability was being used by the system which was how it was surpassing everyone's expectations. Rewarding Quinn, like it had its own ability of equivalent exchanges.

Quinn didn't like the answer Eno had given, but it was one he had expected at least. He had already told him how he didn't care for the individual lives of humans.

"Jim, is he the one that created the Dalki, is he still alive and helping them?" Quinn asked.

"I'm suppressed you learnt of that name. It looks like you have been doing your own research together. Yes, in fact I assume that Jim was also the one behind the Green family's death. I don't quite understand his emotions behind helping the Dalki, but I have been in search of him since. At the moment, he is untouchable." Eno replied.

"What do you mean?" Quinn asked.

"Haven't I been saying this the whole time, the Dalki are a dangerous threat, why do you think I keep repeating this fact. Because the simple truth is, if the Dalki right now were to attack the human race you would lose the fight.

"You must know what Dalki blood does to vampires, so it isn't the same for the vampires but even they are blind to their growing strength and their desperate measures. However, if Arthur has joined their side for whatever reason, perhaps it is my own doing, then it means the vampires will definitely lose."

Of course, Arthur was a force equal to a king, and even Quinn knew that Borden was strong against the leaders, even without Arthur he thought the vampires would have a hard time.

"About Sil, you said that you could make two bodies for him, what were you planning to do and how were you planning to do it?" Quinn asked.

"I created the clones using part of my power. There's indeed a way to create human clones at the moment, but there is a catch that I was only going to reveal until later. If I was to create a normal human clone, at most with my abilities subsidising the cloning process, they could live for two years."

When Eno said this, Logan was expecting Quinn to be more angry, didn't this mean they actually couldn't bring Raten and Vorden back. At least not permanently. Yet for some reason Quinn was calm.

'It looks like we are going to have to go with my third plan anyway.' Quinn thought.

"Are there any more questions, what about you Logan? I can talk about the days I knew some of your relatives, although I didn't know your parents well so I guess it would be useless, and as for why Jim killed your parents you would have to ask him that question yourself." Said Eno.

"I do have a question." Logan said. "In the vampire world, we know of Jim's lab but we also found another lab. One where there was a test, a trial almost. One where after completing each quest there would be a special red pill given to each of the participants. The teleporter that you made found on earth sent us to that Lab. I know it's yours and not Jim's. What was that used for?"

Logan had been curious about them ever since, in truth he had found a way to recreate the red pills, but there was a reason he didn't want to distribute them to all those in the Cursed. Something just felt strange about them.

"Ah yes, the blood pills. You see I was testing a certain effect with them, a way to make humans stronger by mixing in parts of vampire cells. The pills worked of course but there was a large problem with them.

"If a vampire was to take the pill, it would have no such effect, but if a human was to take one, it would permanently increase a certain attribute. What I found out later was these pills borrowed from the future. For each pill taken, it would drastically shorten the lifespan of a person. My goal is to make it so humans could survive.

"If a pill like that got out, there would be a war between each other as they overdosed attempting to kill each other."

Finally there was quiet in the room. Quinn had gotten the answers he was looking for, but there were still a couple things that he hadn't learnt about. Eno didn't really know why Arthur was against the vampires, and the strength of the Dalki. There was also what Eno meant when he was referring to his people that he had working for him everywhere, were they more clones? But these were things they could find out with time, as long as the relationship between them grew.

'Are the humans and vampires underestimating the Dlaki, or is Eno overestimating them, and can Arthur be convinced not to kill the vampires. If these things are true, then I still need to get stronger, and quickly. I still need Eno.' Quinn thought.

"I'm going to call in that favour you owe me. For answering everything, you can stay on the ship, but no more trouble Eno. I mean it. You really want to help the humans, and so do I. In theory, we have the same goal. You think I'm not strong enough to go against the Dalki. Then make me strong enough. Teach me how to use my blood skills.

"And we will have the best chance against the Dalki race. Do we have a deal?" Quinn asked.

Chapter 1040: Evolving the blood

Things were getting busier than ever around the Cursed faction. Usually there would be some members that were left to do nothing but look at reports all day, but today many were busy moving back and forth using the teleporters frequently.

However the busiest of them all was without a doubt, Sam. The reason for this was due to the influx of things he needed to deal with immediately after Oscar had declared war.

As soon as this happened, the Cursed faction were given two field armies to deal with consisting of around a hundred thousand troops each. He had to get in contact with all the lieutenants, majors, and colonels so that he could pass down what information they needed to know.

They had now left Earth and were being spread out based on Sam's command to the planets that the Cursed faction owned. The Graylash family had been given the same amount of troops, while the remaining six field armies were kept under Oscar's control.

Organising the troops was harder than Sam first thought. One of the reasons was due to suddenly gaining another commander. The army had never been split up in such a way and when Sam suddenly chuck in an additional position, soon he realised that factions and military were run quite differently.

Fortunately there were people there to help him who were more experienced and he was thankful for this. After several hours of dealing with that, Sam also had to deal with something else. On top of all the work he had so far, he had also been given three corps groups that each consisted of around fifteen thousand soldiers. What's more is that the soldiers in these corps weren't just any soldiers, they were students that had been taken out of school early.

Within that group there were those that had decided to join the Cursed faction. Not knowing their skills too well, it was a tough thing for him to do and there were even some he wanted to bring on board the Cursed ship, and he was also looking for certain individuals.

Finally on top of all this, there were even the many factions and the Cursed group themselves, but at least Helen was mainly looking after this side of operations.

Standing by the command centre, Sam was finally getting some rest in his chair. Although he didn't actually have to physically do much and just sent orders to everyone else, no one really knew how tiring it was to oversee so many people.

"I'm sorry for putting so much on your plate, Sam." Quinn said.

"It looks like you have another job for me?" Sam said with a weary smile.

"Not another job, I'm just checking up on you. I think Paul would be a good person in a time like this to help things along, but I know you're a fast learner." Quinn said. "I know it might not be the right time, but I was just checking up on that other request of mine."

Sam tapped away on the computer in front of him and brought up a holographic report.

"There's been nothing yet, but I'll get someone to come and inform you if we find something. You don't have to come and keep meeting me like this, Quinn. I know you're busy doing your own things. You leave this stuff to me and when the fighting starts, I'll leave that part to you."

This was actually the real reason Quinn had come to meet Sam, to make sure he was okay before what he was about to do. He felt selfish at times like this, and Sam never complained about a single thing, no matter how much work he had to do.

"I'll be doing just that, so you might not see me for a while, but I'll always be able to keep in touch with you." Quinn said before heading out of the room. He walked to a large reinforced door and stopped in front of it.

'There's been a few upgrades to this since the last time I used it, Sam did say there were some complaints from those on the ship.' Quinn thought, entering the code to the door and then entering the room, but when he did he wasn't the only one standing in there.

"I hope you're ready, my teaching methods might not be the most ethical, but I will always guarantee results." Eno said with a smile.

Quinn didn't say anything but stepped into the training room and stood opposite him. After Eno had accepted the deal, his clone was sent away but Quinn also made him comply with one more condition - that none of Eno's clones were allowed to be on the ship either.

Complying, all he asked for was a ship in return, and in total two of them had gone off somewhere, while Brock remained.

"Now, I know you wanted me to teach you more about blood skills, and of course I will happily do that. I see my job as making you the best you can be, the strongest you can be to defeat the Dalki." Eno explained. "However, we will be using the system to our advantage to make you progress faster than ever, tell me, what level are your blood abilities at?" Eno asked.

"Level?" Quinn asked, and pulled up his stats screen. It was strange talking to someone other than Vincent about the system, but it just reminded Quinn there was one more person who knew a lot about the system and probably more than Vincent.

"Why is this important?" Quinn asked.

"Just tell me what your highest level blood skill is and I can explain after." Eno replied.

Opening up his system and selecting the blood skills tab, Quinn could see his six skills present.

[Blood swipe Level 4]

[Blood spray Level 3]

[Blood Crescent kick Level 2]

[Blood wall Level 1]

[Blood bank Level 2]

[Blood bullet Level 1]

Seeing these, Quinn was thinking about when the skills levelled up. Not every skill seemed to be treated as equally, but through repeated use they would eventually level up or even be levelled up through a rare quest reward.

However, something like the blood bank that was used in every fight took longer to level up and then there were skills he hardly used like the blood wall, because he found his shadow was more effective and only used the wall as a replacement at times.

"I guess that would be my blood swipe skill at level 4." Quinn answered.

For the first time, Eno had been given an answer that disappointed him.

"Only level 4?" Eno replied. "And you still managed to kill that many Dalki, that's your highest skill? Well, I guess it only means you have huge potential to grow. Have you ever wondered why the other leaders seem to have more skills than you? Of course, they spent hundreds of years learning certain blood skills but we don't have that much time. Now that the system knows you're a vampire lord it should have at least given you the same skills."

"Well the answer is quite simple, the system max level for each skill is level five, however skills can evolve and turn into something else. For example, the blood cannon skill the leaders know is just another version of the blood bullet and so on."

"As for Qi and the shadow fighting techniques, you have learnt a lot in a short amount of time. Because of all these things you have tried to learn, you were unable to specialise in the blood skills like the system originally intended."

"So we need to learn these skills quickly, we need to get your skills to level five as soon as possible. Whenever we train together, I want you to only use the blood skills. Think back to all the fights you had in the vampire world, I want you to fight like a vampire." Eno said, as his eyes started to glow red, and the red hardened blood started to cover his arms, spiralling above his clothes he wore.

The pattern almost looked like he had moving flames running up his arms. Eno came charging in at the speed of the other vampire leaders and threw out a fist. Seeing this, almost on instinct Quinn wanted to activate the shadow, but remembered what Eno had just said.

[Blood wall] Quinn activated his skill, putting in ten points of his HP, but as the fist hit the wall it smashed through it in seconds. Quinn was ready to dodge the fist for he too had speed at the same level of the leaders and thought he would at least be able to avoid this. Blood started spilling out from his hardened arms and latched onto Quinn's shoulder like a sticky glue substance, he attempted to pull away but by then a fist was planted in his face and his body was thrown into the ground.

"This will be the second part of your lesson, learning how to control the blood. Remember, if you can't beat me by only using your blood skills, then you have no hope of saving the humans or the vampires."

Feeling the punch still ringing in his head and thinking about how Eno had only fought him for a few seconds, a few thoughts went through Quinn's mind.

'Richard Eno seems stronger than any of the other vampire leaders I have faced before, and he's saying even he can't stop the Dalki?'

Chapter 1041: The Blade's power

Running through the large Cursed ship after just leaving the medical bay, everyone's head was turning at a panicked individual. It was Wevil. He had sweat running down his face not because he was tired, but due to him being concerned. He went through people one by one dodging them as if they were attacking him like his favourite game of block block.

While doing so, he was holding something particular in his arms, tight like a baby, it was several blood packs.

'They told me to head to Quinn's training room as quickly as possible with this. Did something happen? Who needs blood, or is it something else?!" Wevil thought.

All the Cursed leaders by now knew the combination to Quinn's personal training room. From time to time they would even use it to practice, things they didn't want other members to see, but Wevil knew who was in it at the moment, so he made sure to run as fast as he could.

Eventually, when he reached the room, he proceeded to enter the combination, dropping one of the blood packs on the floor. The doors started to open as he went to bend down to pick up the blood packs. When he lifted his head, he almost immediately dropped the blood packs again.

"Quinn!" Wevil shouted, rushing forward.

The room was a complete mess. It looked like a slaughterhouse. Where hundreds of dead bodies would have been torn apart with their blood squirted all around the room. However, what Wevil was concerned about was the person, who looked near passed out on the floor, with the most blood surrounding him.

"Oh, you got here incredibly fast. good job." Eno said. "It means we can get back to training as soon as possible. With this guy's fast legs there's no need to panic."

Kneeling down, Wevil could see the wounds on Quinn's body, and couldn't imagine how much blood must have been used, but Quinn wasn't the only one that was hurt as well. Even though Eno appeared to be fine standing, he too had wounds on his body that hadn't exactly healed yet, with blood all around him as well.

After feeding Quinn the blood, his wounds started to heal, and his eyes were looking more alive.

"Pass me one of these blood bags, Boy." Eno demanded.

"Why should I, what did you do to our leader!" Wevil shouted back.

"Just give him one." Quinn said. Now standing up, taking a blood bag from Wevil and throwing it to where Eno was.

"Don't worry, most of this was done by me not him, I'm just trying to learn my limits. Wevil, see if Logan can create a special icebox like the ones the vampires use. Then you won't have to keep running back and forth." Quinn said.

Hearing this, Wevil was a little more relieved but still couldn't imagine what type of training the two of them were doing to just warrant this huge amount of blood, but if Quinn said he was fine, and Eno wasn't attacking him while he was in the state he was in. He guessed that it was safe for now.

Once leaving the room, Wevil wondered if he should report this to Sam, thinking he would know best about what to do, but Sam was a little busy these days.

'Quinn, you don't have to keep pushing yourself so far! Is it because you think we can't help you enough?' Wevil thought.

While Quinn's and Eno's wounds were healing from their fight, Quinn had a few questions on his mind.

"You want to ask me something don't you?" Eno said. "I wondered why you didn't ask me more things back then, but it seems you know that perhaps it will just be a distraction for yourself, but if it is really playing on your mind then that too can be a distraction, so ask away if you really want."

Quinn was thinking about many questions he wanted to ask Eno, but he thought he would do so when the time came to it. For now he had asked everything that was needed to be asked for the time being while they were still in the middle of the war with the Dalki.

"I know your goal, or so you say. You want vampires and humans to both live, correct? I've met some people like you, Arthur was one of them who cared for humans a lot, you could even say for me it was the same, but there is a difference between me and Arthur and you. The two of us were humans, had human lives before we were turned, but what about you?

"What are the original vampires, were you always vampires, and why do you want to protect the humans so much, what's your reason?" Quinn asked.

Eno didn't reply immediately, and when looking at Quinn it didn't feel like he was looking at him at all rather through him.

"If I told you about the vampire's origin, it wouldn't change much Quinn. In fact, it wouldn't change anything. The important thing is how people deal with vampires now, how they view themselves.

"I bet even you saw it as a curse when you first got it, but have your views changed? As for the second question, is it wrong to care for humans? Must there be a reason for wanting to protect someone or something when you see them getting hurt?" Eno replied.

This answer wasn't the truth, and Quinn knew it. There were times when Eno spoke about humans, and whenever he did there was so much passion in his words and actions. He was going far and beyond to protect the humans. Quinn almost believed if Eno was to choose out of the humans or the vampires, he would choose humanity.

'It's a shame we did not hear an answer.' Vincent said. 'Even I would have liked to know how the first vampires came to be. I have had a few theories myself. Especially since we also know that Arthur had been turned as well, and it wasn't the regular way either making him have the same body as an original. We must be careful not to push him away though, his secrets seem....painful.' Vincent said, reminding him about his own past as well.

While the others were training, Logan was busy working on duplicating the demon tier finding device. He was also hoping he could create something that would be able to gauge the beast crystals of other tiers as well.

The problem he was facing was the group didn't have any Demi-god tier crystals. Without a certain number of Demi-god tier crystals it would be impossible for one to create a device to find them based on their energy. The only reason a demon tier device was able to be created was due to how much larger of an energy force they produced compared to other beasts.

So for now, he would just be creating more devices so their group could search for demon tiers a lot easier. At least they knew where there would be demon tiers, there would also be high level beasts on those planets as well.

All of this was being done, because of Sil, but more so so that they could farm for better equipment for the rest of the faction as well. However, the beast expeditions have been roped in a bit, due to the war.

"Tell me, why did you choose to make that arm of yours?" A voice said.

Logan continued to work on the item, but wasn't ignoring the person.

"I needed a replacement for my arm anyway, and I'm not good enough." Logan said.

"Not good enough? I think you're mistaken. You are far stronger than you know. I wanted to ask, I remember at one point and time you trained with the Blade twins on the island. You fought, and learnt a lot there, you were a talented individual and you even unlocked your soul weapon."

"You say you're weak, but since then have you even fought using your full strength? Or are you scared of something?" Brock asked.

For a brief second Logan stopped working on his items as Brock got up to leave the room.

"When you're done with that, if you really think you're still weak, then me and you should train sometime. Remember how long I stayed on the Blade island for? If you want I can make you as strong as them.

"I'll make sure Logan, that you never think you are weak again."

Chapter 1042: Cleaning job

It had been a while since anyone had seen Quinn. The leaders of the Cursed faction knew what Quinn was doing, but they at least expected to see him around the ship from time to time. Still, they hadn't seen him at all, and it had been several days now.

Some were getting worried but there was one person that assured them that everything was okay, which was Wevil. Like asked, Wevil had informed Logan of Quinn's request and it didn't take him long to create something that could do the job.

There was just one slight problem. Heading to outside the training room, Wevil couldn't even remember when he had last seen the door open.

'Have they really been in there training this whole time, are they sleeping in there as well?' Wevil thought, as he pressed the round button on the special machine that looked like a giant box and the door opened. The cold air would form a mist as it opened and when looking inside it was just as Wevil thought.

"It's going to need filling again." Wevil said, as the blood packs inside were down to the last few. "At this rate, I might have to ask Sam to see if more people need to donate blood."

The rate that blood packs were being used was unimaginable, and only Wevil knew the true number, as he was the person who would constantly have to go back and forth.

Inside the room itself the room was even redder than before. Marks of dry blood all over. It looked like a war had taken place in the room constantly with no one to clean it up, and both of them could only smell one thing, blood.

This time, both Quinn and Eno seemed to be huffing and panting, neither of them badly injured.

"The skill has finally levelled up." Quinn spoke, taking a breath in between.

"Good, because I was getting tired myself." Eno replied.

'I can't believe it, this boy has been able to progress so quickly. Is he talented, or is the system beyond my expectations?' Eno wondered.

"We can now stop focusing on trying to level up the blood abilities now you have learnt a few new skills." Eno explained. "However, what is important in the next step, is learning how to use your blood control with said skills. As you know the king of the vampires will receive the absolute blood control book. Once a vampire learns of this, they can do whatever they wish with blood as long as their imagination allows it."

This was true from what Quinn had seen and what had been explained to him. Cindy had used a whip made out of blood, he had never seen any of the leaders do this before. From the way it was explained, each user of the blood book created their own techniques using absolute blood control, so the next king could learn them.

However, not every leader liked to use the same techniques as the last, and Cindy had just favoured the whip at the time.

"For now though, it is best we get some rest. Even if you don't feel tired, pushing a vampire's body this much will cause one to age quicker. This is why even when a king has the absolute blood control, they are reluctant to use it unless necessary. I am not worried for myself, but I am for you Quinn." Eno said, for the first time showing some concern, but it was hard to tell if it was genuine or not.

Quinn decided to take a break, he didn't know how long the two of them had been in the room for, and although Sam didn't contact him on any new information, it didn't mean nothing had happened, just nothing urgent enough for him to warrant being called.

Now that the two of them were to take a short break, Quinn was able to look at the room they were in.

'I can't make someone else clean up this mess, that's just not right, and it's mostly my blood.' Quinn thought.

Leaving the room, Quinn had gone to a cleaning supply closet, the first thing he wanted to do was get some cleaning done, and with his speed he should be able to get it all sorted out pretty quickly. He could have asked a water user to clear it quickly but he couldn't subject them to that, and then they would be asking questions later on.

'They're going to start thinking I'm a mass serial killer if they see that room.'

With a red bucket in his hand, and a few sponges, Quinn thought maybe even if he was quick he would need something more than that. As he turned around in the hall that led to all the training rooms, he managed to spot Logan walking behind him.

"Logan what happened to you, is someone bullying on the ship, who would do such a thing!" Quinn said, as he started to rage in anger. Logan was covered from head to toe in bruises and cuts.

"Quinn don't worry, I did this to myself. It was through my own choices, no one is bullying me." Logan said as he continued to walk.

Who could even bully Logan in the Cursed faction?

When saying those words, Logan's heart didn't flutter so it must have been true. Unlike the others, Logan wasn't a vampire so when he trained to fight, the marks, cuts and bruises would show, unless he went to a healer.

He was just unlucky to catch Quinn at a certain point and time.

'If he doesn't want me to know about it, maybe I should respect his wishes.' Quinn thought. "Just..be careful." Quinn shouted.

After cleaning up his bloody mess, Quinn finally decided to meet Sam who looked a lot calmer than the last time he had seen him. This was because he was finally getting the swing of things, and was understanding who the key and reliable people were that he needed to talk to. People he could trust to pass on his messages and see his vision, giving him a lot more free time to now focus on other things.

"You look to be in a really good mood." Quinn said, as he exited from the transportation bridge.

"Quinn, you're finally out but you smell a bit like chemicals." Sam mentioned with his now sensitive nose. "Anyway, you came at the perfect time. Thanks to Logan creating more of the Demon tier hunting devices, we should be able to cover more ground and have your request come in."

"The problem is though, there have been a lot of reports coming in from Oscar and the Graylash family, even a few from Helen, of Dalki ships in the nearby area. The Dalki seem to also be hovering around all the orange portal planets the human's own at the moment, so it's going to be risky even if we do find one." Sam explained.

Quinn wanted to find the demon tier beast before even attempting to go to the Blade island. Not just because Eno needed it for moving and helping Sil, but because if they were going to go to the Blade island, Quinn wanted to be prepared.

After all, Hilston was a man with a full set of demon tier armour, and had one of the strongest abilities in the world. He would at least need a single item at the demon tier level to compete with that.

While discussing things between each other, and Quinn getting briefed on the news of other things, like certain students coming on board directly to the Cursed ship. The door opened from the bridge again, and the person who had entered was Sil.

What was surprising was the fact that Sil had entered on his own, when usually he would be the one to follow Borden around the place.

"Quinn," Sil called out. "When are we going to go to the blade island? When are we going to get back Raten and Vorden?!" It sounded like he was almost complaining.

"Soon," Quinn answered, as he was in the middle of talking to Sam and wanted to finish what they were talking about.

"Soon, do you even want them to come back?! You've been stuck in that room for so long and I've been waiting for you, and now all you're doing is talking. When you found out Vorden was on the blade island before, you dived in with just the three of you. Why can't you just take the whole Cursed faction to Blade island this time if you're so scared!" Sil shouted in anger.

These words had caught Quinn's attention.

"Do you think I don't care! I'm scared! Are you crazy Sil?!" Quinn shouted. It was the first time he had done so like that, and was also the first time he had called 'Sil' Crazy.

Chapter 1043: No longer getting through

It didn't take long for Quinn to regret the words that had left his mouth. As soon as he said them, he realised the mistake he had made. He knew what Sil's mindset was like, how he had grown up. Anyone would be affected by what he had gone through. Now that he was so close to getting his long lost friends back, those feelings were just amplified.

The thing was, Quinn was trying harder than he could imagine. He often put on a brave face but what he was doing wasn't easy. His training was one of the toughest things he had to bear and what he was going through wasn't fun either. The other thing that upset him, was what Sil had said. Did he really think they were doing nothing, he wasn't the only one working hard for Vorden and Raten, everyone was, and Quinn knew that.

Sil was acting like Quinn didn't care or anyone in the cursed faction. It felt like all of their work wasn't appreciated. Making it so Quinn had just lashed out. He was tired, exhausted and still hadn't rested, causing the words to just slip from his mouth. Looking at Sil, after hearing those words, he immediately placed his head down and was looking at the floor.

Sam was a little nervous, as he was unsure whether or not Sil was angry or upset. It could go either way since Sil was someone who respected Quinn's words and listened to him more so than others. Because of this, Sam gave a quick tug to Quinn, to try and quell the situation before it became a big deal.

"Quinn, say something?" Sam whispered.

"Sil, I'm sorry I didn't mean that. I know you have just been so worried. I think I'm just the one going a bit crazy here. Let's talk about it, and I can go through the plan, and what we plan to do, okay?" Quinn asked.

At that moment, Sil lifted up his hand, and a ball of water was floating about.

"Quinn, stop him! We don't know what abilities he has or how many strong abilities he has stored. If he fights in the command centre, the whole ship could go down!" Sam yelled now, afraid.

Quickly trying to sort out the situation, he could see Sil already getting ready to do something.

"Quinn, I never thought I would hear those words from you," Sil said, lifting his head, with a face full of tears, but soon his eyebrows frowned inwards. "If I'm really crazy, then I should start acting like it then shouldn't I!" Sil shouted, about to use the water ability.

Quickly though, Quinn raised his hand.

"You need a time out. Think before you act, Sil!" Quinn shouted, closing his hand, and a shadow was seen quickly engulfing Sil, and when it disappeared, Sil did with him.

Sam was nervous, and he was wondering if the situation was over.

"Did you use the shadow lock skill on him?" Sam asked.

"Yeah, hopefully he just needs to calm down. We have to remember on the Blade island, Sil didn't have much chance to interact with anyone past a certain age. It's like he's a child sometimes, and sometimes I don't think he knows the dangerous power he holds." As soon as Quinn finished this sentence, he could see his MC cells going down by the second.

'Is he attacking the space in the shadow lock?'

It seemed like Quinn's little time out hadn't worked, for currently inside the shadow space, Sil was attacking everything around him, hoping to break out of it.

"Damn Sil! Don't worry Sam, I'll be back." Quinn said, as he cast another shadow lock on himself taking him inside the black space.

As expected, he could see Sil using a number of abilities, green strange energy crashing about, at the same time water waves bashing into the shadow around. Each time lowering Quinn's MC.

"Sil what are you doing!" Quinn shouted.

"I'm crazy right! Just like my family, I can't help myself but fight and destroy everything I see. After all, that's how I was brought up. To kill everyone around me! To make sure I was always the one that survived!"

It was clear once again something had snapped in Sil, and now this was the second time. Words were becoming harder to get through to him.

Getting closer, a large wave of water came crashing towards Quinn, but it was easily avoided. Soon though, green beams of energy shot out towards Quinn, however the same thing again, as Quinn was able to avoid them.

"Look at you Sil, do you really think you can go to the Blade island in the state you are in now? Remember, the Blades have the same ability as you, even stronger ability users locked up. We can't just fight them with power against power! It won't work!" Quinn shouted.

However, Sil just decided to shoot a bigger energy beam, and at this point Quinn was frustrated. He avoided the attacks with a flash step and when his foot hit the black shadow ground, he leapt off it, dashing forward reaching where Sil was in an instant.

Although Sil had strong abilities, there was a huge difference between him and the others in the Blade family. Sil's body wasn't up to par. Thanks to the red pills and the training of the Blade island, Sil's body was perhaps at the same level as a vampire, perhaps slightly higher.

With good beast gear on supporting him, he could get up to the point where he could match a vampire knight in certain aspects, then with his abilities he was a dangerous force, but Sil had no decent beast gear on.

And if one was to compare a vampire's speed with Quinn's, it was the difference between night and Day. Quinn quickly was in front of Sil, and he could see him throwing a fist made of metal. A hardening ability. Grabbing it, Quinn had no problem lifting Sil up in the air, and slamming his body into the ground. It wasn't a light throw either.

"Stop this now Sil, you can't keep acting like a child!" He shouted. "I know how you feel, you're frustrated right? Because we're so close, but you're just sitting around doing nothing."

While saying these words, Quinn thought about the time when he saw other weak ability users being hurt, yet Quinn could do nothing to help them.

"If you're frustrated, then take it out on me. Don't let it bottle up inside. Come and see me, and me and you can fight it out anytime, Sil!" Quinn shouted to his face.

Sil shouted in anger, placing both palms on Quinn's chest and shot the beam of energy in rage. It lifted Quinn's body slightly off the ground and into the air. Soon, a red blood aura started to surround his body, and covered him like a cocoon. The blood started to move and push the green energy back and when it landed back down the blood had disappeared and Quinn was beside Sil again. Making a fist he punched Sil in the gut.

It was a hard blow, and Sil felt like he couldn't breathe. He fell to his knees trying to breathe in but it was impossible.

As for Quinn, the green blast had damaged his body as he hadn't put any of his armour on. It was a good thing as well, otherwise he was sure that he would have to give another job to Alex. The attack was a strong one, as could be seen by the wounds on his chest.

Quickly though, they started to heal, and the pain shown on Quinn's face was minimal. Once Sil could breathe again, he laid on the floor out on his back.

"Do you feel better now?" Quinn said.

Covering his face with his arm. Sil was trying to hold back the tears.

"Yeah, but I...I...I can't just keep saying sorry Quinn. Why am I like this?!" He asked.

"It's not just you." Quinn replied. "Everyone feels this way, we just have our own ways of dealing with the problem. Come on, let's go back. I'm sure everyone is worried about us."

Walking over, Quinn offered his hand lifting Sil up, and when the tears finally stopped, the two of them exited from the shadow space, to enter the ship again.

In the command centre, when Sam saw the shadow, he ducked for cover for a few seconds, under the table. He and many others knew Sil's strength and quite frankly, depending on what abilities Sil held, he thought it might be a tough fight for Quinn, especially after coming back from all that training.

When he saw Quinn look completely fine, apart from a burn mark in the chest of his clothes, and Sil with red eyes, it seemed like everything was fine.

"I'm going to go talk with Borden for a little bit." Sil said, as he was about to leave.

Looking at him, Quinn just didn't know what to say or do anymore. He was out of ideas. If Sil exploded one more time, maybe he couldn't get through to him.

"Wait!" Sam shouted, as he cleared his throat and stood up straight again.

"Actually, while you two were in the shadow lock place there was a bit of good news that came through." Sam explained. "We have finally located another demon tier beast."

Chapter 1044: Complications

After hearing the news that Sam had delivered, Sil had decided to stay instead. After all, a Demon tier beast was one of the requirements from Eno to use his abilities, at the same time, if the group were planning to hunt a demon tier beast then they would also most likely need his help.

Before the meeting was to take place, all the leaders on the Cursed ship had been called in early to the meeting room and Sam would go on to explain the details. On top of this, Brock and Eno had joined one of the meetings for the first time as well.

"The reason you have all been called here, is because another Demon tier beast has been discovered." Sam explained. "However, there are a few complications that I need to explain first - this won't be like the last demon hunt that everyone went on.

"The reason being, is because the Cursed faction and the Graylash faction will be the only two groups participating in this hunt. To make matters more difficult, Owen, the Graylash leader, won't be there to help either. Therefore authority and control over how to conduct the hunt has been handed over to us."

Hearing this, there were mixed reactions around the table. Some were happy to hear that a demon tier beast had been found, but many of the leaders still had bad memories of the beast hunt from before.

"Whoah!" Nate said. "Isn't that a good thing? Doesn't that mean we can basically do what we want to get the crystals?"

"A good thing?" Linda repeated. "Last time Owen and Oscar were both there with the Demon tier weapon. Even with all those resources and people we were hardly able to defeat the creature. It means we have to defeat the beast with less than we did last time."

"Correct." Sam replied in a very serious tone. "As we all know, we're in this circumstance in the first place due to the current Dalki war. Oscar is of course still sorting out the military and tracking the Dalki's movements, which is a time demanding task. In addition to this, the Dalki have been moving awfully close to the Graylash beast planets. Therefore Owen has stated that he will not be taking part and I can't argue with him there.

"Which brings me to my next point, the reason why we will be working with the Graylash family. Thanks to Logan and the fact that now the Earthborn, Graylash, and Cursed faction are in alliance, a Demon tier location device was awarded to each of the factions. Of course, receiving this device comes with the condition of us informing one another as soon as we find a demon tier, which is a standard practice anyway.

"The demon tier beast has been located on one of the planets owned by the Graylash family. Now if we do decide to proceed with the hunt, we will be working together closely with one of their head generals as well as the faction leader of the shelter.

"Bear in mind though, that the Dalki at the moment seem to be keen on invading the Graylash planets. Anything can happen at any moment and we might have to pull out and cut our losses when we see fit."

Despite all of Sam's dire warnings and the downsides of proceeding with the hunt, Quinn still wanted to go ahead anyway. They were running out of time, mainly for Sil, and for Quinn to get some good equipment before there was a full scale war.

"I still think we should proceed." Quinn replied. "However, I don't want to take a large group with us like last time. I think a core group of our strongest members will be able to deal with the demon tier and less lives will be lost that way."

"The problem is if it's a large demon tier beast or it has an ability to call other tiers to its help like the last one, won't that cause a problem?" Linda brought up an important point.

"Unfortunately, we don't have any details on the demon tier beast, but remember that they can come in all shapes and sizes with unique abilities. Of course you would need to bear that in mind, but for this one, I actually agree with Quinn. At the moment we are spread thin and mass transportation of an army through the small teleporters takes too long."

"If the Dalki were to attack one of the Cursed faction planets and aimed for the teleporters, it would be hard getting support there in time. I already know you plan to go Quinn, so the question is who do you plan to take with you?" He asked.

Looking around the room, the strongest of the Cursed members were already currently sitting at the table with him. This made it easy for Quinn to pick the people he wanted. However, unfortunately, there were two people that were currently not present which he hoped to pick.

One of these people was Leo and the other was Erin. The two of them were attached at the hip and wherever Leo went, Erin did as well. At the moment, the two of them were on Earth trying to locate where the real Pure base was, and from time to time would travel to the other bases that Layla had told them.

Leo claimed that if Quinn really needed him, he could use the summoning skill if need be. All of this information was passed on from Sam as it all happened while Quinn was busy training with Eno.

Once realising that Eno would no longer be a threat, it seemed like Leo was happy to leave the place and come back as he wished, and honestly Quinn didn't want to restrict him, he had his own things going on.

"Of course, all of you are free to decline the invitation if you don't want to come. I never want to force you guys." Quinn said. "Since we don't have much information on the Demon tier beast, I would like to take a mixture of those that bring different skills to the table.

"Linda, you have great strength that is nearly unmatched. I also wish to bring Fex, as his strings have always been able to help with disabling and slowing an enemy's movements. Wevil, with your great speed I'm sure we can always rely on you.

"Sil will be coming along as well, we both have already agreed to that." Quinn said, giving him a wink.

He thought that perhaps if it was something to do with getting the other two back, then Sil would be more inclined to work for it without any complaints. It also may help Sill feel like he was helping out in some way.

Some of those who weren't selected seemed disappointed that they weren't coming along, while others breathed a sigh of fresh air.

"Quinn, can I come?" Peter asked.

Looking at Peter, Quinn knew he was strong, but there were those that needed to remain on the ship to protect it just in case. At the same time, he already had Linda so he thought there was no reason to bring Peter.

There were now plenty of strong people left on the ship, and with Nate and the others Quinn could always come back when he wished.

"I don't see why not, of course you can come." Quinn replied.

At that moment, a shy hand had been raised from the group. When they all turned to look at who was volunteering, they were all quite stunned.

"Layla, you want to come as well?" Quinn said, surprised himself.

Honestly, he didn't know why this time Layla didn't go with Erin and Leo, perhaps they had a falling out or something else had happened. Ever since the incident with Helen, Layla hadn't spoken much to Quinn at all.

"I have to be there, I didn't get to help you at school Quinn, and Leo and Erin said that they would inform me if they found the Pure base before doing anything. It's why I asked to stay behind, because I want to help you and I want to bring back Vorden again." She said, with her fist clenched and a determined look on her face.

Usually, Quinn would have outright said no. Layla was strong, but against a demon tier beast, he wasn't sure she could handle it. Still, with confidence growing in his own powers and not bringing so many members along, Quinn thought that perhaps he could at least still protect her and it would be good exposure for her.

He also didn't know how to say no to the determination he could see in her eyes. Even if he could say no, it didn't look like she would take that as an answer.

"You can come along, but if the demon tier beast proves to be difficult Layla, you have to understand if I ask you to stay back." Quinn said.

Hearing this, for a second Layla's eye twitched. The others, noticing this, wondered if something was wrong. Letting go of her clenched hand she replied.

"Thank you."

"Okay, so it looks like we have the Cursed faction demon tier hunt team!" Announced Sam. "Going along with Quinn we have Linda, Wevil, Fex, Peter, Sil and Layla. If everyone is okay with that, I will start going through the rest of the Cursed faction agenda."

Just as Sam was about to move on to his next point in the meeting, another hand was raised.

"Of course, I think I will need to go along with them. Don't you think so?" Eno stated.

Chapter 1045: The special set

After deciding what to do, it didn't take long for Sam to get in contact with those from the Graylash family. They needed to send some orders across, to organise and prepare a few things. Although, when he mentioned how many people they were planning to send, and who would be taking charge, they didn't exactly seem pleased with them.

At the end of the day, they had no choice. Even Owen had told them to leave everything up to the Cursed faction. In the end, Quinn had allowed Eno to go with them, but Quinn didn't really say yes.

He still felt like Eno was more like a guest on the Cursed faction ship, rather than a part of it. If he wanted, he would leave whenever he wished. So if Eno was planning to follow them to this planet, what was stopping him?

Telling him he couldn't go, Quinn was sure Eno would do anyway, and it would only sour their relationship.

'Maybe I can learn a bit more about Eno on this trip as well.' Quinn thought.

On top of that, Sam had added one more person to the group, but they would be meeting them in the faction base along with the Graylashes. This person, was sergeant Hayley Snelleart, Paul's daughter. The reasoning, was because she was a healer.

With some people having witnessed a few things and rumours already surfacing about the Cursed faction using strange powers, Sam didn't want more to spread. It was always normal to have a healer on the team.

At the same time, they could improve relationships with the new army groups they had received.

A ship was being prepared, but before heading off, Quinn wanted to visit a certain person.

Entering the forging room where the sound of clanging never seemed to stop, he could see quite the tall, small framed but muscular person known as Alex.

"Hey Quinn." Alex said as the wings on his back started to flutter a little bit. "It's been a while since I've seen you here."

After Alex had saved the forgers from the attack with Pure, the others knew about his wings. Quinn didn't attempt to remove their memories or anything like that. In fact, he didn't want to take it away from Alex as many of them felt indebted to him and were more loyal, and even worked harder compared to before.

Luckily, nearly none of them knew what Alex's ability was before he had been turned.

'Wait, I don't even know what Alex's ability was?' Quinn thought.

However, it didn't matter now and while in the forgery he was able to let his red blood wings out freely. Hardly anyone ever came down here now. Requests were instead sent to their platoon leader, who would then file a report until it eventually got to Sam. Who would then talk to Alex, and decide where things needed to be distributed first.

"I'm sure you have heard what I'm about to go do." Quinn said, knowing news like that would have travelled fast. Even on his way to the forgery, everyone was wishing Quinn good luck. The more he heard those words the more he felt like something was just going to go wrong.

"Anyway, I was wondering what to do with a Demon tier crystal. I know certain crystals are more suited towards certain items. So I don't have a choice in what it can be turned into, the best thing would be gauntlets or a weapon type to increase our strength, but is one Demon crystal enough?"

"I'm glad you asked." Alex smiled. "Actually a demon tier crystal is a little different to all the other tiers. It has so much energy that only one is required to turn into a piece of equipment. Of course, you could probably use some Demi-god crystal or legendary crystals to enhance certain bits, but honestly you would have to get the demon tier crystal first before finding out what could be added."

"Speaking of, I know you haven't upgraded your equipment in a while and you might be annoyed at me but I made you a few things." Alex said, as he started to pull things out from underneath his workbench and placed them on the table.

It was an armour set that looked to go pretty well together, as if each one was created from the crystals of the same beast. It was mainly silver in colour with blue spiral patterns twirling through each piece. On certain parts, grey fur could be seen.

"Last time, I had no experience when making your emperor tier equipment and I know it was a disappointment, but this time we had more experience with the legendary tier crystals given to us by Helen and the others." Alex explained.

"Didn't I tell you guys to use all the Legendary tier crystals on yourself first? And then focus on the main hunting teams like the Daisy group?" Quinn replied a bit annoyed.

"Quinn, you're about to go fight another Demon tier beast, and this time alone!" Alex said. "Do you really think I could let you do that, as your personal forger? If you died due to a lack of protective armour, when I could have done something about it. Do you think I could ever sell my equipment? They might even blame me for your death!"

"I'm glad that's your main worry." Quinn commented.

"Besides, the legendary tier crystals were actually donated by Helen herself, and she said that she wouldn't hand them over unless it was something made for you. I don't know what you did to get a girl to give over these crystals. I know some who would kill their husbands to get them."

"I acutely heard that Daisy had these legendary crystals from a long time ago, but never made anything out of them. I don't know how they managed to get so many from the same type of beast, but it only means better things for you."

Quinn looked at the set, and even without using his inspect skill he could tell they were of the legendary tier. Equipment made with higher grade crystals just had a different shine to them when they were mixed in with the other materials.

'Did she really just hand these over, instead of using them for herself?' Quinn thought.

'I guess she's pretty serious about trying to win you over. Maybe this is a pre-wedding gift? Or an anniversary gift you two don't know about.' Vincent said.
'When did you two first meet again?'

Quinn knew Vincent was joking, but he still couldn't believe what was in front of him. The equipment had already been made and was here, so of course he would use it. He would just have to give them something in return when he next saw them.

"There is only one disappointment." Alex said, rubbing the back of his head.
"There are no weapons. I couldn't even make any gauntlets. All the crystals were used up. I did however, have a spare set of emperor tier gauntlets made, but once again they don't seem to have an active ability."

Saying this, Alex almost sounded embarrassed. First, Quinn took a glance at the Emporer tier gauntlets. Even though they would improve his stats overall, it wasn't worth it at the moment. And there was a reason for that.

In his dimensional space, Quinn still had the advanced tier gauntlets that had been made by Alex from the crystals gifted by Leo. Although the stats were nowhere near comparable, the active skill was one of the best Quinn had ever come across.

Since his Qi had improved drastically, when supplementing his Qi into the gauntlets the active skill also gave a more devastating shock compared to before, and for now, he would rather have them on him.

"I'll take them as a spare for now." Quinn said, placing them in his dimensional space, and heading back to the table.

[Inspect]

Using the inspect skill, the three items information were shown. The chest piece, the legs, and the shoulder guards. None of the pieces of equipment had an active skill on their own. However, they did have an active skill when placed together.

A special set active skill.

Looking at the improved stats and active skill, Quinn couldn't help but smile.

"I might have to get her a really good present after this."

Chapter 1046: Working together

The group were travelling in a medium sized ship towards their destination. The planet was owned by the Graylash family so they didn't have a teleporter on board. Of course, they could have traveled to a closer planet owned by the Graylash family and teleported from there, but at the moment most of the factions were traveling using space ships.

This was apparent just on their journey, nearly every planet they went by had large forces of ships protecting them, ready to act on a moment's notice. This was actually advice given by Oscar. After not being able to use teleporters on planet Caladi, they feared that the Dalki now had some sort of teleportation jamming device.

With the information Sam knew, knowing that the vampires had the same type of technology, and one of the great vampire minds was working with the Dalki, there was a good chance this was true. Sam took this more as a fact rather than a guess, and told everyone to start using ships more rather than the teleporters.

"It looks like we're nearly here." Linda said.

Looking out the window, they could see a large space ship nearly as big as the Bertha the Cursed faction used, if not bigger. It was a strange design making it look more like a floating island. Not fast moving but looked impenetrable at the same time, a place suited more for defensive measures than anything.

It was quite the distance away, so it was hard to get a scale of the actual size of the thing, but even though it wasn't near the planet they were going to, they could see it off in the distance.

"What's that thing?" Peter asked.

"That's the Graylash family's main ship. It looks a bit odd right. It looks like a city with temples built on top of it. I actually heard that it was an island that was part of earth, and it used to be placed there. I guess Sam was right that there worried that an attack might happen." Linda replied.

"The Graylash family, that Owen is certainly an interesting character." Eno commented from the back of the ship. Currently, he wasn't looking like his usual self. His face was by far younger, a young middle aged man, he had changed his hair to a dark blue and his moustache was no longer there either. The only thing that was similar was his ponytail hairstyle.

"Out of curiosity, was the Graylash family never an option. I know Owen is strong, couldn't he and his people get stronger with your help though?" Quinn asked.

"Ah yes, the Graylash family is an interesting one. As you may know with each of the families I have aided them for a long time, to the point where they are today.

Even that damn Trudream you seem to hate so much, but as for the Graylash family, I didn't play a part in it at all.

"They have since the beginning naturally evolved on their own. I still don't think they will be enough, but it is one of the families where my influence would have not helped at all."

Taking those words in, Owen did always seem like a strange character but at the same time never a threat to Quinn. Although there was one thing troubling him when they fought against Hilston together.

'Why didn't he use his soul weapon back then, even though we were in such a serious situation?'

Finally, the ship was preparing to enter the planet's atmosphere. From the outside it looked to be green in colour. The water seemed to reflect this, shining in the same way. As they got closer, giant strange plants that were all sorts of strange colours started to appear in their view.

Purple, red, yellow, while the ground was covered in tall brown grass that looked as if it was almost dying. There were ships stationed outside the planet as well, but an access code had been granted and the others knew that the cursed faction were arriving.

Finally, after descending and flying for a short while longer, they came across the shelter. The outside of the shelter was similar to ones they had seen before. With a large reinforced wall on the outside.

Only, on the wall there were far more faction members and mechs than usual, and direct members of the Graylash family could be seen standing on part of the walls. With this shelter, it seemed like they were unable to avoid some of the plantation or there were reasons as to why they couldn't cut them down, so it was built partly into the shelter.

Quinn thought it looked quite nice, as some of the shelters were plain looking, but here there was a large pink tree in the centre with purple leaves fluttering about in this one. The size and equipment of the shelter classified it as a Rank A shelter.

It was placed on an orange portal planet. Only strong factions and Travellers would be able to venture out to hunt beasts. Although the Shelter wasn't the largest one they had come across, there seemed to be a good population living here, over ten thousand or so people.

Off to the side, there was a large field that was used for ships to land, and there were already quite a few there, as well as a group of people ready to greet them.

Walking off from the ship, they could see a group of people. Three of them in white robes belonged to the Graylash family, and as for the other group of five, they were wearing a mixed match of beast gear, and looked to be travellers.

"Welcome Quinn, I believe we met before while you were working at the school." One of the men in white robes said walking forward. "It's also nice to see you again." The man smiled.

When Sil looked up, it took him a few seconds but he really did know this person. This was Robin Graylash. One of the head generals that had been invited to do a little demonstration in one of the elemental classes.

From Quinn's duties he had met the other head generals from time to time, but didn't talk with them much. The two of them shook hands and smiled at each other.

"I see the Graylash family didn't just send anybody in either. It will be great to have your support." Quinn said.

While those from the Graylash family were respectful to Quinn and seemed to be happy to see him, the other five Travelers that had been brought along with him weren't exactly welcoming him with open arms. Although they knew their place and soon came over giving a bow down.

"These people are from the Orbus faction that was stationed here." Robin explained. "They work for the Graylash family and will be the ones looking after us while we are in the shelter."

All of the men had bowed down to Quinn to greet the world leader, apart from one. A young man who had his arms crossed and bags under his eyes as if he had been having many sleepless nights.

"Please allow me to say what's on my mind, sir." The man said, looking at Quinn.

He still wasn't used to this, but now as one of the world leaders, he realised that others couldn't just say what they wanted to him, unless they wished to start a war.

"I hope you won't go back on your word and I am free to say what I want. I am Ko, leader of the Orbus faction. However, I don't like the fact that the Cursed faction seem to be having so much free time that even a world leader is able to come down here.

"I feel like this is just putting pressure on the Graylash family to hand over the beast crystal to you once it has been obtained. At the same time, you are a person younger than myself, and you are meant to take command?"

"At your age, how many battles have you fought in? Do you even know how to lead or do you just rely on others around you."

As the man continued, Quinn could see that a temper was rising in Robin, it almost looked like he was going to zapp the man to stop him, but Quinn nodded in his direction when the two of them made eye contact. It was okay, this man just didn't understand and people shouldn't be punished because they had different views or thoughts.

"On top of that, I have heard about your unhandled methods, summoning beasts on the other Shelters. If things don't go your way, will you be doing it he-" Ko's speech had stopped while he was in the middle of talking.

While Quinn had made sure Robin was not to get involved, he had forgotten about another person, who currently had his hand wrapped around Ko's mouth holding his jaw in place so he couldn't say another word.

"Don't you think it just got a bit quiet around here?" Peter said, smiling at the other men behind him.

Chapter 1047: Tired eyes

Everyone watched as they saw Peter lift up Ko's body in the air from his mouth. The grip around his jaw was just hard enough to not allow him to move it, or say anything else. While at the same he wasn't using his full strength. Otherwise, his jaw would have been crushed by now.

The other four men that had come with him were also members of the Orbus faction, and seeing one of their trusted allies being hurt by what they only saw as a stranger, they immediately started to pull out their beast weapons and activated their abilities.

"Put your weapons down. It's an order!" Robin shouted, having enough.

At the same time, Quinn quickly had gone over to Peter and had his hand on his shoulder.

"I think it might be best if you let him go as well."

It wasn't a telling off, as Quinn knew why Peter had done what he did and the others weren't going to stop Peter either.

Peter looked at the man for a second, before releasing him, allowing him to fall on the floor, but as soon as he was let free. Ko attempted to grab something from his side, but before he could, Quinn held onto his hand.

"Are you sure you want to do that?" Quinn said. "Your life was just spared and think about what would happen if you were to act out again."

When the tension and pressure from Ko went away, Quinn let go as well moving back to the others along with Peter.

"Ko, that was completely out of order. If you were to act like this with Owen here, I would have hit you myself." Robin said.

Hearing this, Ko immediately bowed down.

"I apologise to the Cursed faction leader. What I said was out of order." Ko said, but the apology didn't exactly seem urgent or sincere. It was more like he was forced to do it.

Peter was tempted to go in again, but this time, Linda grabbed him as she kept an eye on him.

Stretching his Jaw, Ko felt a bit of pain and that wasn't the only area either, it was the same with his forearm as well.

'I'm an A class Traveller and have been protecting this place for years and this is how we get treated! The Graylash family are treating an outside faction better than their own.' Ko thought. 'And that guy, I didn't even see him move and he grabbed my Jaw, I thought the Cursed faction only had a few strong ones?'

Trying to forget about what happened, Ko was asked by Robin to lead the way, and give the group a tour around the Shelter. At the same time, they would ask details about the Demon tier beast or any information they had on it.

As soon as they entered the Shelter though, the others with their great hearing couldn't help but listen in on what the others were saying about them.

"That's him, the Cursed faction leader!? He's also one of the world leaders."

"Don't you think he looks a bit young? How can someone like that have the power to control one third of the human forces?"

"He is young, didn't you know, even if he looks young his actual age is a lot younger, he would have only just graduated from the military school, a genius in the rising."

"A genius huh, so much so that they have decided to send him here rather than deal with the Dalki?"

"Stop being stupid, are you really a Traveller? You should know how difficult a Demon tier beast is, would you rather fight a Dalki or a Demon tier? The weapon created will also help support us for the rest of the war."

What Quinn was pleased with, was that at least some people seemed to know the importance and dangers of the task. However, if they knew what they had planned to do with the Demon tier crystal, then maybe more would be upset about it.

'Even with an adult face they are all calling you baby face.' Vincent commented. 'You know with your Qi control, and control of your body maybe you could make yourself look older, or you could always use the earth mask from Peter to change your appearance.'

'It's okay, I think it's important that people know it's really me here.' Quinn replied. 'Could you imagine what they would have done if they thought I was someone else, there would have been a fight back there.'

"This place is cool," Fex said. "It reminds me of the familiar world with all the colourful plants."

"It certainly is different." Wevil replied. "Have you noticed the buildings though, and the outside walls."

"Yes, and even the people, although they were interested in us at first they seem to be concerned about something else. A little on edge." Linda said. "Is it the demon tier beast?"

"I also recognised that some of them have bags under their eyes, like the faction leader, Ko. Are they all having trouble sleeping?" Layla whispered.

Quinn had noticed it as well, although from the outside the place was well guarded and there were plenty of strong Travelers and faction members of Orbus. The people were wearing their beast gear even inside the Shelter. This wasn't too unusual if it was a few but nearly every single person, even those that looked like civilians. Some of the buildings appeared damaged, as if they had just suffered an attack not too long ago.

After walking through the large Shelter and being shown the main places, they finally went towards the centre where the large tree with pink leaves could be seen. It was taller than the shelter walls and was as thick as a truck.

From the tree, a pathway where the long grass was cut led up to the faction hall.

Heading inside the Faction building, the reaction was pretty much the same from all those outside, but they quickly headed to a room where they sat around a round table and could get straight to business. Quickly moving towards Quinn, Layla decided to sit next to him, even though she hadn't said much on this trip, and Eno decided to sit on the other side.

They had asked if Hayley had arrived yet, since she was meant to meet the group, but it appeared she still hadn't done so.

"So there are a few things that will need to be discussed today," Robin stated. "First, we will let you know everything we know about this planet and about the Demon tier beast. After that, we need to discuss how we decide fairly who will get what rewards. After all, three groups in particular will be part of this hunt, and everyone deserves their fair share. The Orbus faction, the Graylash family, and the Cursed faction. Yes, the Orbus faction are part of the Graylash group so we will need to take that into consideration as well."

"Now, thanks to the device the Cursed faction has given us we were able to discover the energy of a Demon tier beast present on this planet. Unfortunately, somehow the Demon tier beast appears to appear in certain spots and then disappear."

"These spots follow no pattern, so it will be quite hard trying to find it. At the same time, according to Orbus, this Shelter has been facing its own problems, and I'll leave it with Ko to discuss the rest."

Ko stood up and looked at the others before replying.

"First, before we do anything, there is a serious problem plaguing this Shelter. I'm sure some of you have noticed the destroyed buildings and such. That's because this Shelter seems to be targeted.

"The beasts have been coming here often in waves, and all of the Travellers have had to defend it. Now, this has happened since the existence of the Shelter. It became popular with Travellers since they could hunt without having to move far away, but recently higher and higher tiers have been coming along with larger forces. Recently we even had an attack from a legendary tier." Ko Explained.

"How frequent are these attacks?" Linda asked.

"The time frame has been getting shorter and shorter, but at the moment, it seems to be every week or so. We have a theory that it is possibly the Demon tier beasts doing. Perhaps it's moving into other beasts territory and sending them here. Another important factor that we are unsure is related or not, is that every time we are attacked, people from the Shelter appear to go missing." Ko replied.

"Missing?" Wevil said. "You don't mean killed, but you just have no trace of where they have gone?"

"Maybe they were eaten," Peter said, saying it like it was no big deal.

"Maybe you ate them, am I right!" Fex joked, raising his hand expecting someone to high five him, but then when he was the only one laughing, he realised that for one, no one else from the other groups would know what he meant by this, and perhaps his joke was a bit too far.

"You guys need to take this matter more seriously," Ko said, shaking his head. "Because of this, we can only send a small team out to look for the Demon tier beasts, and with more beasts and more dangerous beasts coming, we might need more help from you guys here."

"Can I ask, when is the rest of the Cursed faction coming?"

The others looked at each other, and even Robin was pulling an awkward face.

"Actually, this is everyone that will be taking part in the hunt from the Cursed faction," Quinn replied.

"What, you only brought seven of you! How are you meant to take on a Demon tier beast with just the seven of you?!"

"I assure you that the people I have brought aren't ordinary people," Quinn said.

"We can come up with a way to track the Demon tier beast," Eno spoke. "We can do all the hard work, and you guys can stay here and look after the Shelter. We came here to hunt for the Demon tier beast, not to protect the Shetler. Who knows, maybe the Demon tier beast will make its way here." Eno smiled.

After he finished speaking, a vibration was felt in the rooms, and a loud explosion was heard outside. Soon the sound of multiple explosions could be heard.

Storming into the room was one of the faction members covered in sweat.

"Sir Ko, we need your help urgently. Outside we are being attacked again! The beasts are raiding us right now! And sir, they have a Demi-god tier beast with them!"

Chapter 1048: The best place to be

The meeting was halted at that moment, as the Orbus members quickly ran out without thinking much about it. While Robin had remained calm, talking to his men to report on the full situation just so they knew exactly what they were going up against.

"Sir, it seems like our members are having trouble dealing with the Demi-god tier beast." One of the Graylash said, coming back in after seeing what the situation was like.

While the Cursed members were left in the room on their own, being the last ones to act.

"Quinn, are we going to help them?" Layla asked.

"Of course we are. Find whatever beasts you can deal with and try to save as many lives as possible. There are a lot of fighters in this Shelter, so I'm sure they can handle themselves. We will mainly look after the families." Quinn ordered.
"However, the most important order of them all is to not to die. If you die, then many lives will be lost. Remember that"

"Strong words," Eno said.

The others nodded, and those with the shadow power used their shadow equip to put on their high level beast equipment.

Once outside, they could see flying beasts in the air hovering around the Shelter. They would swoop in from time to time, planning their attack circling around. There were so many that a large shadow was cast over the Shelter. Some beasts with powerful legs were able to leap up in the air and attempted to enter the Shelter that way, while others had found ways to bypass the walls.

It wasn't long since the attack had been announced, and yet already many beasts had entered the place. On the walls of the Shelter, there were around ten Graylash members stationed on all four walls. They were using their lightning abilities well to stop the beasts from outside, and also those from above while ignoring those inside.

When they said the Shelter had frequent attacks from beasts, they imagined that maybe a group of ten or twenty of them, but this was in the hundreds. At the same time, the level of beasts varied from the intermediate level, going all the way up to king, and there were even a few stronger ones mixed in.

The group were hesitant about where to go or what to do, Then suddenly leaping up in the air a giant frog like beast with small arms, and a long neck came towards them, before it could reach them, a single line of red aura had hit the beast and sliced it in half.

The others looked at Quinn, but the attack hadn't come from him. It was from Eno.

"Are you really just going to stand around? Can't you hear the cries of the people? You are all lucky that it is just beasts attacking, for if it was the Dalki, everything would have been destroyed in seconds."

Eno was right, and everyone else knew it. Soon the others went to help the people as best they could, and were aiming for the higher tier beast as the Travelers were able to handle the others.

"Wait, Sil you come with me," Quinn said. "I'm sure they're going to need your help."

Looking over, Quinn could see where Ko, the Orbus faction leader and Robin, the Graylash Head genreal, had gone.

It was towards the North wall, that was where the most energy was being felt. Which most likely meant it was where the Demi-god tier beast was as well. On top of that, there was no one in the Cursed faction at the moment Sil could copy abilities from. If he wanted to help, he needed powers and strong ones at that.

The Cursed faction members had decided to split up into two groups. Wevil and Linda had gone off together to reinforce one of the walls where it looked like most of the beasts were coming in from. When they reached the wall they could see why they were facing trouble.

Most of the guards there were having trouble with two king tier beasts, which allowed for the rest of the beasts to scale the walls. The gate had partly been destroyed and beasts were pouring in from there as well.

"We have to kill the king tier beast quickly and block the entrance!" An Orbus leader shouted. He was in pain, fighting against a large minotaur. The beast was larger than a Dalki, and muscular beyond belief. A king tier beast that was filled with rage and had massive amounts of brute strength.

The problem was getting close to the thing, without dying from one swipe of its large hands. The two king tier minotaurs were the ones responsible for destroying the gate in the first place. From a distance they had knelt down charging the muscles in their legs, before blasting off banging into the wall not caring about their bodies.

However, the faction members were able to survive against the minotaurs thanks to their slow movements. Unlike their initial attack it looked like the other movements were quite slow but their hides were tough.

Seeing all the beasts go past them, they couldn't help but feel pain as they saw the amount of beasts pouring in through the gates.

"I'm sorry!" The commander at the gate shouted, as he was ready to risk his life to take down the beasts, but suddenly. He saw a group of beasts fly through the air getting knocked back meters away.

"What happened?" When turning around, he could see a large woman in beautiful crimson red beast gear holding a club in her hand. Linda had transformed and was using her great strength to not allow any more beasts through the gates. With every swing she would be able to kill a group of them, and even the force caused the beasts to hesitate moving in any further.

"Who is that? I don't remember anyone from the Orbus faction having that ability or that strength. I will have to thank them later, for now I need to fight what is in front of me!" The man said turning around, but then could see a slight small haired green man touching his body.

"I just need a little boost." Wevil said, as the man felt the energy leaving his body through the touch of the person, another one he didn't regaonise.

Wevil, absorbing a little bit of blood through touch, knew he would need a boost. It was only later he found that unlike vampires that just used blood for feeding. Wevil could also use it to power his transformed state.

Running forward he avoided the beast's swings with his great speed, and jumped onto the minotaurs arm running up it. Pulling out his daggers, the head and his body started to transform into the tiger beetle form. When he leapt up in the air, his body had finished its transformation. Midway up the air, they were wondering what would happen, but one of Wevil's legs kicked at a speed impossible for the human eye to see, and a bang was heard.

Somehow, the force of the air itself was hit, speeding Wevil up and holding his two daggers he had gone right through the minotaur's head through to the other side, killing it.

'Good thing that beast was distracted.' Wevil thought.

Inside the Shelter itself, Layla, Peter and Fex, were together. Peter was able to deal with most beasts using his fists. Ripping them with his bare hands. There weren't many strong beasts inside the Shelter and he thought it was quicker to deal with them with his hands rather than use his weapons. It looked like it was working. As for Fex, he was by his side pulling the beasts in the Sky down, and doing more of a rescue job when he could. Some of the people were trapped under buildings, and needed help.

At the same time, using her arrows, Layla would focus on the flying beast heading there way. With Peter's strength and speed, there was no need for her to transform into her other forms.

'I can still help, I can still save people lives!' Layla thought as she fired off an arrow, and using her ability she changed its direction so it could go through a gorilla looking beast's eyes, stopping them before they were to slam down on a traveller which had fallen.

Back at the north gate, Eno, Sil, and Quinn had arrived. Grabbing Sil, Quinn quickly jumped up the wall and now they could see everything. Ko, and Robin were still on the wall planning what to do as they watched the Demi-god tiers movements. They hadn't gone into battle just yet.

The second Quinn saw the beast, he could tell it was at the Demi-god tier level, having met one once before. It had two giant wings that were covered in a soft white fur, and both of them looked to be glowing in a strange light. It looked like a giant white furry moth.

With a single flap of its giant wing, there were those that were unable to get close, and what was worse, it seemed to leave behind little fluff balls, that when touched by the Travellers, would cause them to become drowsy, some even falling asleep.

"I think we have watched the beast long enough!" Ko shouted. "With the three of us here, we should be able to beat it!"

However, Eno looked towards Quinn.

"Quinn, are you sure this is the right place to be? Sometimes the loudest place is not the one a person should focus on."

n was wondering what Eno was talking about, there was a Demi-god beast in front of them. If not this place then where would he need to be, in the Shelter with the people? Helping the others.

Because of this, Quinn closed his eyes and tried to listen out, to see if there was anything else. Then, from the forest just outside the east gate of the Shelter. He could hear it, feel the loud vibrations coming from that direction.

"Sil, Eno, help them and deal with the Demi-god tier beast here. I am needed somewhere else!" Quinn said, and using the shadow travel he had disappeared.

"Hey, what are you doing!" Ko shouted as he was ready to just jump in. He was confident in his strength but had never fought against a Demi-god tier before. He thought at least with the Cursed faction leader who had supposedly killed many Dalki, and the Graylash head general who he already knew their strength, they could deal with it quickly, but now he had just run off.

"That damn coward!" Co shouted.

Meanwhile, Quinn had already exited out of the Shelter and had equipped on his new Legendary tier gear, covering his whole body in silver with spiralling blue armour. The fur could be seen in certain places, and he looked a bit out of place in the colourful forest, but it didn't matter.

"Who would have thought that there would be two Demi-god tier beasts attacking this place."

Chapter 1049: Nitro accelerate

With Quinn having left the north gate, it left Ko, Robin and Sil to deal with the Demi-god tier beast that had the appearance of a giant white furry Moth. The three of them needed to act fast, as they could see a number of their people who were fighting the beast collapsing onto the ground.

They weren't dead, as they could still be seen breathing, but they still wouldn't wake up despite what was going on around them. One had even been hit while asleep. It was an attack that was partially deflected off one of the Moth's large wings. Yet, still they didn't wake up.

"We can not allow that thing to get into the Shelter. If it does, it will cause everyone else to fall asleep, then the rest of the other beasts will cause even more mayhem!" Robin claimed.

"What are we meant to do? Whoever gets within ten meters seems to be hit by the beast's fur that's shedding from its body. It looks impossible to avoid and hard to see. All our ranged attacks seem useless as well." Ko explained.

The other Graylash members continued to fire lighting at the giant Moth, but it was seemingly doing nothing. As if it just tickled the beast. This was meant to be one of the strongest abilities out there.

Looking at the beast movements, Robin had noticed something. It hadn't taken flight even with the two giant wings. An aerial beast sometimes was more difficult, so why was it on the ground?

It looked like it was constantly moving, every time someone got close to a certain part of its body, protecting a certain place. At one point, one of the travellers had gotten close to its under part as it ran under its head, fighting the loss of energy. When this happened, it leapt back for the first time swinging its powerful wings forward. As soon as it was in the air, it spun so one could only see its back.

"It's the underbelly. I'm sure that is its weak point. With my soul weapon. I can create quite the powerful attack to damage it, but we will need someone to get close to it, and force it to show its belly" Robin explained.

Now the men that were continuing to fight the Moth were down to five. Pulling out his regular sword Ko had enough, and was about to jump off the wall, until he felt Sil grab his arm.

"What are you doing kid, get off me!" Ko shrugged it away. "If you're just going to stand here and be useless, be useless somewhere else!"

Ko then lept of the wall, and stood in front of the gate, waiting for the right time to go in.

"Sil, is your name correct?" Robin said, turning to him. "Your power, if I fail, we might need to rely on you to finish the job. Owen told me a lot about you." Saying this, he held out his hand allowing Sil to touch him, and soon after he had leapt off the building as well.

Spirals of blue lightning started to surround Robin's arms, and legs as he activated his soul weapon, but this was only one part of it, he needed to activate the second part of it to truly use the move he wanted and he was relying on another for this part of the plan.

As for Ko he was watching the Moth carefully. The Moth seemed to have just flapped its wings releasing its fur out to those nearby, This time the white fur spread further than those before. Its attack had never had such a range before this one.

"Damn it, it looks like it was holding back on what it could do, but this is the only chance I'll have!" Ko shouted as he lifted his sword back in the air above his head, tilting his back.

The other men were quickly falling asleep after being hit by the fur, so he had no choice but to use this opening. Activating his ability, his weapon grew in size. Becoming almost as big as the Moth itself.

It was strange how one could still wield a beast weapon with its sheer size but the weight of the weapon had remained the same for Ko the ability user, only the size had changed. Swinging it down with all his might, hitting the Moth with a weapon this large would do something, and the Moth seemed to think this as well as it leapt backwards in the air.

The attack from Ko was fast, but the Demi-god tier beast was faster avoiding the blow. However, this was the plan in the first place. Now it was showing its white belly. It looked as if it was ready to turn around like before. Still, before it could, a large human sized blue lightning went straight past Ko's head and straight to the Moth, hitting it in the centre part of its belly just under its head.

An explosion of blue occurred with lightning strikes firing off into the air. More of the Moth's fur had been chucked everywhere. It fell to the floor rolling on the ground.

While Robin's arms and legs were glowing in blue colour and slowly fading.

He was huffing and panting as his soul weapon had taken a lot out of him, but what was worse, for him and Ko both of them had been hit by the explosion of fur, and they could feel their bodies getting tired by the second.

It was a strange force like a spell draining the energy from both of them, making them incredibly tired.

"What is this, I thought it might have been a sleeping effect, but that's not it at all!" Robin realised.

The Moth had gotten back up, and black blood was continuing to drip from its underbelly, but soon it was starting to slow down, and finally, the blood had stopped.

"It's what I thought, this Moth is draining the energy from everyone to heal itself and make itself stronger. This fur, there has to be a way to get rid of it!" Robin started to think. Making a quick decision he placed both of his hands on himself.

Usually, users of the lightning power coated themselves with lightning to avoid getting hurt. After all, their bodies were not made of lightning itself. This time he had done no such thing and shocked himself repeatedly, making the pierces of fur from the Moth fall off his body.

His drained energy hadn't returned, but it had finally stopped leaving him. Seeing Ko's eyes, starting to become drowsy, he quickly fired and shocked him as well. He screamed in pain, but the pieces of fur that covered his body had fallen.

"What do we do!" Ko shouted, leaning on his sword stuck in the ground. He hadn't used a lot of energy, but a lot of it had been drained, and he was relying on Robin for an answer. "The Moth looks like it's fine to me," Ko said.

The truth was, using a soul weapon took a lot of energy, and it was the same for Robin. It was meant to be a trump card in a fight, but he had wanted to get rid of it quickly. In the past, Robin had always fought with others to help him along the way but now he saw no way of getting out of this one, until several lightning strikes seemed to hit the Moth, and unlike the others, with each one, it was creating a wound on the creature no matter where it hit.

Walking past Ko, Sil was seen with his hands out.

'He has lightning powers? But he isn't part of the Graylash family! Didn't the Cursed bring him along?' Ko thought.

"Where have you been?" Robin asked, smiling back at Sil.

"I had to get a few more abilities to make your powers stronger. It's not the same as the world leaders, but it should be enough!" Sil shouted, firing off a constant stream of lighting. Now the whole of the Moth's body was lighting up blue, and the blood was oozing from the beast's body.

Robin had never seen such a powerful lightning attack being constantly used like it was being used now. Someone would have run out of MC points by now, but not this boy.

The lightning continued to leave his arms, and Ko couldn't believe what he was seeing and eventually when the lightning had stopped. The beast was no longer moving in a pool of its own black blood.

It usually would have been a cause for celebration, and Robin was happy, but not Ko. He looked at his fallen comrades.

'If he could have done that from the beginning, then why? Why didn't he come in earlier instead of waiting for everyone to get hurt!' Ko thought angrily.

And there was one more person he was annoyed at as well, Quinn who had seemingly disappeared and ran away, just where the hell was he?

At that moment, in the forest, Quinn with his special armour, was standing there waiting to see the beast, as trees were being broken down one by one, and the sound of the beast's roars was getting closer.

"I have the new shadow skills I have learnt, the new blood skills, and even a new armour set. I would have liked to have used you to train even further and test these skills out, but I can't waste any time on you." Quinn said.

Chapter 1050: The Blue Fang Armour

The legendary tier equipment that had been created by Alex and was a gift from Helen, all the pieces had been put on. All armour pieces were created using the same beast crystals from a legendary tier beast, called the Blue Arctic Wolf. Found on a plane covered in snow.

Usually, beast crystals could only be used to create one piece of equipment that, that type of crystal was suited to, but the Arctic Wolfs crystals were unique. It could be turned into any part including different weapons. Unfortunately, what this meant was that the stats that came with it weren't so specialised, or so this is what people assumed.

The legendary equipment created with the Arctic Wolf crystals wasn't on par with other legendary tier items but was highly sought after due to its adaptability. Legendary tier beasts were, after all, hard to come by, so finding one that could be turned into anything was seen as a big advantage to have.

However, when creating the crystal, Alex was able to uncover something else. The reason why the Arctic wolf crystals could be turned into anything, and he didn't seem to be the first one either. He wondered why the Daisy faction had gathered so many of the same beast legendary tier crystals, without using them to turn into anything else.

Hoping to find something, Alex created two different sets of armour with the Arctic Wolf crystals and when he created his second one, he understood. The Arctic wolf equipment was meant to be used as a set. An armour set that would have a special active ability for one to use.

With the armour equipped, Quinn could feel the effects of each item as the power of the beast equipment entered his body, improving his overall stats. Even though the legendary tier items were said not to be on par with others, it was still a huge improvement from what he was wearing.

[Defence: 40]

[Blue Arctic Wolf Shoulder pieces: +10 to all stats]

[Defence: 20]

[Blue Arctic Wolf leg pieces: + 30 stamina]

[Defence: 30]

[Blue Arctic Wolf boots + 30 agility]

[Defence 20]

Although the defence that each of the items gave was less than the emperor tier he had received from Alex before, that didn't matter for how great the equipment had improved his stats.

[Strength: 70 (100)]

[Stamina: 69 (129)]

It was the first time Quinn's stats had reached such numbers.

'This is what can happen with a full set of legendary tier equipment? And I also have the mask as well.' Quinn thought, as he couldn't imagine how much stronger he would be with Demi-god tier or Demon tier equipment.

As the beast was getting closer, Quinn was preparing for the tough fight ahead. When he was with Chris, with the two of them. He was confident that they could both beat one, but even Chris seemed a bit weary of the Demi-god tier beast.

However, he saw the chaos back there, and he needed to deal with this beast fast. He would have no time for training sessions.

Equipping the red demon-like mask, Quinn was ready.

When the beast was finally in view, Quinn could see coming through the forest was another Moth like creature. It too was covered in fur, only this time it was purple in colour. The trees were the only thing slowing it down as it hit them away, but that's when Quinn noticed something strange.

He could see that when the creature would hit the plants with its fur, and it would rub off onto the plants, it would slowly start to weather away.

'That fur, I have to try to keep it off me.' Quinn said.

When the beast got closer, something seemed to come off from it, small particles of fur, even without intentionally spreading it. It was walking and constantly shedding its skin, creating the air around it to turn purple. Small fibres that were nearly invisible had already entered the air.

[Warning - the Demi-god tier beast is emitting a deadly poison]

"As if I didn't have a good enough reason already to try and defeat this thing quickly," Quinn thought.

Now he was sure what the right thing to do was. To activate the set armour ability.

[Activating: The Blue fang Armour set]

[Skill activated: Nitro accelerate]

All the energy that Quinn had felt from the boost in wearing the equipment was suddenly going into a different area. He could feel the energy moving around, as the set of silver armour started to light up, in a shining blue.

Looking at his stats, there was a drastic change that proved that the active skill had worked.

When activating the armour set skill, all the bonus stats that Quinn would usually receive from wearing the equipment, was all directed into one thing, making Quinn faster. His agility was now above two hundred, nearly doubling his already fast self, of course there were a few downsides to this as well.

For one, the active ability would only last a total of two minutes, the second was after the skill was activated, it would be on a one hour cooldown. During this cool-down period, all the stats the equipment usually gave was nullified. It was like he was just wearing pieces of scrap metal during the cool-down period.

This didn't matter so much for Quinn though, because with his shadow equip skill, during the cool-down period while mid fight he could change his armour.

Something that wasn't an option for him. The disadvantage of using such a powerful skill has been negated like that.

Quinn's health was already deteriorating, but he wanted to kill the beast before even the time had run out. He charged forward, moving his legs, and everything around him started to look like a blur. Through focusing, he was finally able to see things, but it took a lot of mind power. The beast couldn't even keep track of where Quinn was, nor could he himself, as he had accidentally run straight past the beast, colliding into a tree, but breaking it in the process.

"Crap!" Quinn thought as he brushed a few branches of himself, and looked at the back of the beast. "I can't just use my body's full speed just yet, but I can still control it, so I'll just have to get used to it slowly."

Charging at the beast a little slower this time, Quinn had punched one of the beast's legs, using a blood spray filled fist. It had torn off part of the beast skin but hadn't created a wound. As expected one would think a Demi-god tier beast couldn't be taken down with one blow, but while he was like this. That didn't matter.

He punched at one of the many Moths' legs multiple times using his full strength, and the faster his hits were, the stronger they would be as well. When the Moth eventually turned around, Quinn had already ran underneath it going for the next one.

The Moth screamed in pain and anger. Its purple fur was being thrown about everywhere, even attaching itself to Quinn. His health was still deteriorating and he could see the timer on his quest going down.

'It's poison must be strong. I can see why it's a Demi-god tier beast. I bet if it was fighting against anyone else, it would have poisoned and killed them in seconds. But vampires seem to have a better resistance, and with my Blood bank I can continue on for a lot longer, regaining my energy!'

Quinn Slid underneath the Moth's belly, and jumped before hammering both elbows into one of the Moth's eyes. Three of the beast legs had already been destroyed, including one of its eyes now. The beast truly felt like it could do nothing.

Its poison wasn't working, and Quinn was strong enough to continue to use his speed and skills to his advantage. Getting behind to its next leg, Quinn then proceeded to produce his well learnt thigh kick.

The first kick didn't work as it slammed the beast, but it had a clear effect as its body wobbled. Not giving it time to recover, producing five in succession, the last kick had snapped the leg and sent it flying through the forest.

'This is great. I don't even have to use my blood abilities or shadow powers. This armour has just given me another way to fight!' Quinn thought excitedly.

However, his time was running out with the active skill, and his other set of equipment wasn't exactly the best at the moment. If he didn't finish off the beast in two minutes, then it would have been better for him to not use the skill at all.

Knowing this, Quinn could see the beast was mostly crippled. He leapt onto the beast's head and stood strong. It swung its large body in an attempt to swing what was on its head off. Quinn raised his hand, and blood started to gather around it, flowing down from his fingertips down to his elbow. Soon it started to spiral like a type of drill, covering a single arm.

It was one of the blood moves he had learnt from Eno himself. Mixing this in with his already known Hammer strike. Quinn was able to create a new move. He started the motions slamming into the beast head. Using Qi that force alone was enough to jolt the beast, then pulling his arm and snapping it forward, the Blood hammer drill had been executed.

Slamming the drill into the beast head, a loud bang was heard and the blood drill was able to pierce through it easily. Creating a large hole in its head and even going through to the ground. A few seconds later and the beast had instantly stopped moving, and had fallen to the floor.

At that moment, the famous ding was heard in his head, and the blue armour on his body started to dim once again.

Chapter 1051: A diffrent skill?

After defeating the Demi-god tier beast, the sound of battle inside the Shelter was still ongoing. Those from the Graylash family stationed on the wall turned around and started to direct their lightning strikes towards the beasts inside the Shelter. While two of them jumped down to aid their Head General.

"Is everything okay sir?" They said as they helped lift him off the ground by his arms. Even with the beast dead, he was still feeling the fur's effect on him. Some time would be needed before his MC cells would make complete recovery as well, but gritting his teeth, and through sheer will, once he was helped to his feet not wasting time, Robin ran through the gates with the others.

Sil had decided to do the same, heading back in. Although his concern wasn't for the people inside the Shelter, he wondered what was so urgent that made Quinn leave so suddenly like that.

That left all the men who had fallen asleep or perished along with Ko outside the gates.

'How could they just leave my people like this? What if more beasts start to come from the north forest? All the people will die.' Ko thought, but his eyes weren't looking at his men. Instead, they were locked onto the Demi-god tier beast that had perished.

Walking over to the beast, Ko took out his sword and started carving away.

'Who could be so foolish to leave such a thing behind.' Ko thought.

Inside the Shelter, most of the high tier beasts had been defeated, and even Linda and Wevil had returned inside to give back up along with the other faction members. Now only hundreds of weak beasts remained, but they still continued to attack.

"This is strange," Linda said, now in her smaller form. Her larger self consumed too much power. If she needed to recharge it, there was only one option, which she wasn't exactly pleased about doing.

"Are you talking about the beasts?" Wevil replied, as he too had gone out of his transformed stage and continued to slash at the creatures coming towards him. They were mainly bug like creatures from the looks of it, but were roughly the size of a basketball.

"Yeah, usually different types of beasts don't coordinate an attack like this. It's as if something is making them stay here."

As they continued to fight, eventually the beasts started to change their course of action. It was like a switch inside them. Now nearly all the beasts were attempting to escape from the place. While their backs were turned, the angry Travellers made sure to make them pay and attempted to kill as many of them as possible.

Eventually, when all of the beasts including the ones above had left the area, the sound of fighting and crying started to calm down and the fighting had stopped.

"The beasts have retreated!" A large man shouted, raising his battle axe.

Soon after, everyone in the faction cheered and shouted as a sign of relief. The Cursed members had all gathered to see if each of them were okay, and other than being exhausted and a few scratches here and there they seemed to be fine.

"When they said that the beasts attacked this shelter frequently, I never expected something like that." Layla said, putting her weapon away.

"I don't think that was a normal attack." Linda replied, looking at the condition of the Shelter buildings. They were crumbled and destroyed. It was clear that the last attack wasn't on the same level. This much destruction would take a while to repair without many earth users.

Entering the place, Robin could see that he didn't need to do much. He had used the last of his strength to zap a few creatures but soon found them retreating. At the same time, Ko had entered and a few of the Travellers that were standing by the gate, he ordered them to bring the others inside.

He looked at all the destruction around and the blood that had been split, and then his eyes went towards the Cursed faction in the centre.

'Did they fight? Or did they run away like their leader?' Ko thought, not seeing Quinn anywhere. 'They hardly have any scratches on them.'

Ko didn't realise that he had hardly been hurt either, since his only part in the fight was being a distraction, but he had a lot of black blood on his armour making it look like he had fought many beasts.

Walking over, Ko was ready to give the group an earful. He was going to complain about them not helping while also asking where their so-called leader was, but eventually Travelers and civilians started to surround them.

"Thank you, thank you so much for helping us. You lifted that rubble off of us."

"Thank you for helping at the gate as well. If it wasn't for you guys more of the beasts would have got in."

"You were amazing, I never knew the Cursed faction had such strong members. Having you guys it felt like we had a hundred extra people helping us."

Ko could hear it all, for some reason. Not just the civilians but even members of his own faction were praising them for what they had done.

'So they come in, and protect us from one attack and they get treated like gods?' Ko thought. 'What about me, me who has been protecting this place all on my own since the beginning. When the Graylash and the Cursed weren't here.' His fists were shaking. 'Where the hell is my praise you ungrateful brats. I was the one who made the Orbus faction and even stationed our base here, protecting all of the Travellers and people!'

He wanted to say all this, shout it out to everyone, but decided to keep it bottled in. It would have been impossible for him to come in and say that while they were all being praised. It would have just been a bad long on his part.

'At least, I got some reward out of this damned attack.' Ko said, touching the side of his pouch.

In the forest, Quinn had just defeated the Demi-god tier beast, and his health was still being affected by the purple fur, that was until he had received the quest rewards from finishing off the beast in the requested time limit.

[Instant level up received]

[You are now level 63]

Since Quinn was at such a high level now, killing beast hardly put a dent in levelling up his exp, so he had to rely on the system granting him special quests like this one, or a force that was so strong that he could level up from.

With the stat point, he had placed it into his stamina stat, finally getting it up to seventy with the rest of his stats.

He was happy that he had received an instant level up, because even though he had defeated the Demi-god tier beast quickly, he wasn't sure if he could have done it within the five minute time frame without the new armour set.

'Did the system know what equipment I have? Arghh I'm treating this thing too much like a human. Still, the system does seem to be quite clever, at times.' Quinn thought.

However, the reason why Quinn's health stopped going down after the fight, was because of the next reward, for the first time ever, he had received a passive skill.

[Passive skill unlocked - Immunity to poison]

[This skill is unable to be levelled up. The user will be immune to all types and kinds of different poison]

Now he understood why after completing the quest even though the purple fur was still floating about in the area, he was now no longer being affected.

'A passive skill. I've never heard of a vampire even having such things.' Vincent said, sounding genuinely shocked rather than his usual sarcastic self. 'I wonder how far the system can go?'

Quinn was wondering the same thing, he even wondered what it meant to be immune to all poisons, would this also include the fairy blood that was poisonous to vampires, or was that counted as a different substance?

Nonetheless, it certainly was a handy thing to have. There were poison ability users out there, and many strong foes unstoppable in fights had fallen to poison.

'The real question is what to do with this.' Quinn said as he held the Demi-god tier crystal in his hand. Right now, he had half of the answer to solving part of Sil's problem. However, there were two Demi-god tier beasts that had attacked, and he was wondering how willing the others would really be letting him keep such a thing, or even having both.

'This area is pretty far out from the Shelter, and it looks like the fur is slowly starting to fade away. I just need to move the body deeper for the beasts to come and get rid of it for me. What they don't know won't hurt them, and maybe this will give us more of a chance to get the other Demi-god tier crystal.'

'Which means the demon crystal can be used to be turned into a weapon. I can feel it, the fighting has stopped inside the Shelter, so I still have time. Looks like things are going our way after all.' Quinn thought.

At the same time, the Graylash members had gone to check up on the other demi-god tier beast. They could see that several cuts had already been made on the beast, and when they searched, they couldn't find the crystal at all.

"Where is the Crystal? Did another beast take it?" A Graylash member said.

"No, can't you see? It looks like the beast has already been carved. Which means it's already been taken by somebody." Another replied.

Chapter 1052: Missing people

Upon returning to the Shelter, Quinn could smell the blood in the air. It had upset him a little but he knew it was inevitable for no one to get hurt. He had learnt that from the past. What he was thankful for was the smell wasn't too thick, meaning that the damage had been kept to the minimum.

Entering the Shelter, he could see there were guards from the Orbus faction placed on the outside who let him past with ease. Every abled person was already being put to work. A part of the Shelter and the open area near the pink tree was being used as a healing centre. Those that had been injured were gathered and were getting treatment along with food supplies. Temporary beds had been laid out for them all as well.

However, one thing was clear, that they were understaffed. There were plenty of people to help them, but healing injuries wise, the faction didn't have many healers in their group. They were highly sought after anyway and it looks like no one had predicted this amount of damage. The Graylash family didn't bring support other than fighting power.

'Remember Quinn, don't think of the ones you couldn't have saved, but the ones that you did save, thanks to you killing that other Demi-god tier beast.' Vincent tried to encourage him.

He knew this, but he was a bit disappointed in himself because there was another person he needed to thank, and that was Eno. Eno was the one that made him aware that perhaps there was something else out there. If the purple furred Moth had reached the gates like the white one, the situation would have been far worse.

"The Cursed faction leader has returned!" One of the leaders of the Orbus faction that had greeted Quinn shouted.

Hearing this, the other Cursed leaders turned and rushed to where he was standing. Nearly everyone had gathered under the large open area by the pink tree to help with the injured. Quinn couldn't do much but he was planning to do something.

"Quinn, maybe it's best if you try to stay calm for this one." Fex said, reaching him first rushing over, and soon Peter was by his side, "Maybe keep Peter in check as well."

"Quinn, permission to pound that damn Ko into the ground!" Peter shouted.

Quinn was truly baffled and had no clue what was going on. Soon the Graylash family were also upon them while the Orbus leaders seemed to be talking amongst themselves away from the rest of them.

Robin, with two other Graylash members, arrived around the same time as the rest, and was hoping he could give a clearer picture of what was going on.

"I'm sorry Quinn." Was the first words that came out of Robin's mouth as he shook his head. "First, I assume you went off due to your own troubles?"

"Yes," Quinn replied. "I sensed that there were many beasts coming from the east gate, and went ahead to stop them before they reached the area. You may check the forest if you wish."

"No need. I believe you," Robin replied, letting out a big sigh.

Quinn had decided not to tell the others about the Demi-god tier crystal. That way there would be no arguments over such a thing. Of course, Quinn would have probably argued that he was the one who had defeated it but just to avoid headaches, he thought there was no reason to. Perhaps others might still think badly of the Cursed if he did such a thing. A world leader who pushes his weight around.

There was also the fact that Quinn knew there was another Demi-god tier crystal to be obtained. If they already had one in their possession, their case would be weaker when trying to claim why they deserved the second one.

"Thanks to the Cursed faction, we were able to fend off the attacks with minimal casualties and a few serious injuries here and there." said Robin. "The most impressive of them all, was Sil. It was because of him that we were even able to defeat the Demi-god tier beast in the first place."

"The discussion had started off with what to do with the Crystals. However, those in the Graylash and even members of the Orbus faction had already decided that because of all of you and what you had done for the Shelter, the Cursed faction should keep the Demi-god tier crystal. The problem is..."

"The problem is that bastard Ko stole the Demi-god tier crystal!" Peter shouted. He wasn't shy about it either, making sure everyone heard him.

Hearing this again, Robin let out a big sigh, as he had done everything he could to stop the Cursed and the Orbus faction having a big fight just seconds ago.

"I'm afraid it is true that the Demi-god tier crystal seems to have disappeared, but we don't know who took it," Robin said.

'Don't know who took it? So the only other guy who still had energy to fight and was the last one seen next to the beast isn't the main suspect? Quinn, you got to believe me!' Peter shouted.

At that moment, Quinn could see the faces of the others around and could even hear their whispers. Even though the Cursed faction had helped them, they still thought well of their leader, Ko. These accusations were making them think that the Cursed were just pinning the blame on Ko.

"I think it's true, Quinn." Fex whispered. "When he was being accused, I heard his heartbeat rapidly changing. You know how we can usually tell when humans are lying. I didn't use my influence skill but I'm confident that if he didn't take the crystal, he has something to do with it being missing."

Hearing this Quinn was wondering what to do. Of course, he could use his influence skill and hope it would work against Ko, but the others would see it as him bullying the weaker faction, or maybe even claiming they planted it.

For now, it was not the right time to get into a big fight. While thinking about this, the leaders of the Orbus faction including Ko had come over.

"I'm sorry." Ko said, bowing down. "I really don't have a clue what happened to the crystal. We have asked everyone but no one knows anything about it. We have been dealing with a bigger concern."

Tensing his fist, Peter wanted to do something, but Linda once again, moved him off away and off to help the others. Quinn couldn't help but smile, Peter had a gift, an intuition that couldn't be matched.

"It's okay, tell me about this other matter." Quinn said, showing that he didn't really care about the crystal.

In truth, Ko wanted to know where the hell did Quinn go during the battle and was hoping to turn the Graylash against him somehow, but Robin seemed to be more on the Cursed side than he had initially thought.

"It's about the people in this shelter. Once again after the attack, ten people have seemingly gone missing. We have counted those that had died, but again ten more people seemed to have gone missing." Ko explained.

Quinn didn't really think much of the people gone missing, but he was more thinking of the reason why. Was it really the beasts doing? He had never heard of beasts using humans before.

"I'll try to put my best people on the job." Quinn said. "Fex is a great tracker, someone with a nose as good as a dog."

Fex at first was happy about the tracker compliment, but pulled a face when he was called a dog, but he knew what Quinn was saying.

"Maybe we should organise ourselves in case there is another attack. You said they have been becoming more frequent, so we need to decide what to do and use this time to recover." Quinn ordered.

A meeting would be called once they organised and gathered the rest of the people. For now, Quinn wanted to make sure that everyone forgets about the Demi-god tier beast crystal. If Ko really was the one that had stolen the crystal, there were other ways of getting it without having to cause a fight in front of everyone.

"If he stole the crystal, then we will just have to steal it back. Thank you for making it easier for us.' Quinn thought.

A short while after, another large ship was seen docking in the ship area, and exiting from the ship was Hayley, but she wasn't alone and had a group of ten others were with her. The reason why she was later than expected was due to her waiting and gathering a group of certain people. The ten people with her, were all healers like herself.

Each one got straight to work and the patched up first aid jobs were getting healed. Queues were formed for those with the worst injuries, and everyone was getting healed one by one.

"Thank you." Ko said, standing by Hayley's side talking to the people as they got treated. "I'm glad the Earthborn group have some sense and have sent healers along, unlike the Cursed faction. Their leader wasn't even here during the fight."

Hayley finished healing the person in front of her, and looked at Quinn. He was talking to the people with a smile, but it wasn't a happy smile. As he saw someone with injuries, it almost looked painful.

"The Earthborn group isn't the one you should be thanking." She replied. "Sam, the vice leader of the Cursed faction, sent me here along with all the other healers. The Earthborn group had nothing to do with it. So if you want to thank anyone, you should thank them."

Hearing everyone talk so highly of the Cursed faction was just annoying Ko even more. The fact that the Cursed group were also the ones to accuse him of stealing the crystal. Did no one have any respect for him?

"Sir, urgent news!" One of the Orbus faction members said running. "Some of the missing people, from months ago. They have finally returned, but something is strange about them."

"They returned." Ko replied, visibly surprised and rather than pleased, he looked almost frightened as his eyes had widened. "Inform Head General Robin immediately about this and see what we can do."

"Wait." Hayley said standing up. "Take me with you."

Chapter 1053: The red mark spreads

In total three people who had gone missing months ago, had returned to the Shelter. Apparently, they had been found as they wandered through the forest and stumbled upon the gate. Those at the shelter recognized them as one of their own straight away.

When the people had gone missing, Ko had ordered the guards to remember their faces, so if they were spotted at any second, they would be recognised. Out of the three people, there was one young female, an older male, and a Traveler. They had been brought into the faction and had been placed in Ko's office for his return.

Entering the room with Hayley following him, Ko saw the three of them and looked almost disappointed.

"We have tried speaking to them sir, but none of them remember anything about what happened. They don't know where they went or anything about the others that went missing as well." One of the men said.

"If they can't remember anything, then these people are useless!" Ko shouted.
"How are we meant to find the other missing people? Those idiot muscle heads, they don't even care about this Shelter or anyone inside, instead they're just obsessed with finding the Demon tier beast."

Hayley, watching this bi-polar act coming from Ko, thought it was quite strange. Did he care for the people or did he not? When he first came in, rather than pleased, he seemed upset. Shouldn't he be happy that at least these people came back, or was there something else on his mind?

"Before, you said there was something strange about them." Hayley interrupted. "Is it just the missing memories, or is there still something else?"

The men looked towards Ko, who gave the nod to tell her all the details.

"Although the memories are a concerning thing. Each of their responses varies from different levels. The young girl can communicate with us fine. The older gentleman seems to understand what we are saying but when ever he tries to speak he struggles, while the last one..."

Hayley could already see what they were about to say. His eyes looked dead lost, while his pupils were enlarged. He was staring at the wall in front of them while dribbles of saliva were falling from his mouth.

"And there is something else as well." The man said, as he lifted up each of their shirts. Going around to the back of them, Hayley could see what the man was referring to. It was a strange red marking on their back starting from the very bottom.

It branched out like a tree route spreading branches across the back.

'Is something taking over their body?' She thought. The young girl who was still able to speak, the marking was the smallest having only traveled part way up her back, while the others had progressed more, with the Travellers nearly reaching the top of his head.

Seeing this, the girl started to burst into tears.

"Am I going to end up like him?" She started to cry.

"You have help now. We are going to try our best, okay." Hayley replied, not wanting to make any promises. This was something she had never seen before in all of her time working as a doctor and when she had learnt the healing abilities.

It didn't look like an ability or an injury. She pressed her hand against the young girl's back, and started to touch the area. When she touched one of the red-like branches, it moved slightly.

"Ahh!" The girl screamed and was already covered in sweat from the first touch. Even now without touching the marking, it appeared as if the girl was in pain. The older man was in a worse state, constantly wincing as he stood, however the Traveller looked as if he felt nothing.

Placing her hands above, Hayley started to activate her ability. Trying to heal the wound. A soothing feeling came over the girl and she slowly lowered her hands attempting to heal it again.

"Tell me what you feel?" Hayley asked.

"The pain is going away." She replied.

Although the pain was going away, the marking still appeared to be there. Stopping her ability, the mark still remained and the pain had returned. This didn't look like it was something she could remove with her ability.

"I think it will be best to keep an eye on them. See how much time we have and how quickly the marking starts to spread. In the meantime, I will ask one of my people to come and give them healing from time to time. It won't do much, but at least it will stop them from feeling too much pain." Hayley said.

Soon after, Robin had entered the room, and took a look at the three people who had returned.

"Ko, I think me and you should have a talk about what the next move is to be." Robin said, and the two of them had left the room to have their own private conversation.

Now in a room a little further away from where the patients were, the two of them could talk.

"Did you manage to find out anything from the three of them?" Robin asked.

"No, it seems like all of their memories of when they were taken away were gone. They can't even remember their family members that are in the shelter, and only one of them knows how to speak." Ko replied.

Robin gave out a big sigh again.

"I'm afraid we might have to stop focusing on those missing from the Shelter. At the moment we have other troubles that are a bigger priority. I believe you have people outside of the faction searching for the lost ones now, correct? It would be best if you ask them to return and prepare to defend the place."

"With all of the Orbus faction and having just successfully defended an attack they shouldn't come back any time soon. My plan is to suggest to Quinn that the Graylash family and the Cursed faction hunt the Demon tier beast as quickly as possible."

Biting his lip, Ko couldn't believe what Robin was suggesting.

"Weren't you the one that put my faction in charge of this place!" Ko replied.
"When the Graylash family are done hunting this Demon tier beast, are you going to help us search for the missing people, are you going to protect this place?"

"Are you really being so foolish right now!?" Robin replied. "We are in the middle of a war. That Demon crystal would help us turn the tide even if it's just a little bit. If the Dalki aren't dealt with, then you won't even have a faction to protect." Robin shouted, slamming the door as he left the room.

Ko was left there in his own thoughts. He knelt down and screamed in anger, grabbing his hair wanting to pull it out.

'That marking, I know I've seen it somewhere before, but where?' Ko thought.

The rest of the Shelter looked to be in better spirits, and the rebuilding of the Shelter was now taking place. Although it was being rebuilt in a different way based on Robin's orders. It was now being changed into more of a defensive base. Building certain walls and towers for points of attack. While a large building for non-fighters would be placed so they could stay there for the time being.

Just as everyone was getting ready to move from the giant pink tree, there was commotion as people started to talk to one another.

"They returned, the missing people! Some of them have returned!" A gentleman shouted, pointing to the direction of one of the gates.

"Is it true? But no one has returned after months, and now they are returning!" The people spoke.

Some of them were happy that their family members were safe, but they could see that not all of them were quite there. In total twelve of the missing people had returned. The faction members guarded them and escorted them to the Shelter.

Ko knew that this would cause a panic and was why he had kept it a secret about the first three people returning. Now that some had returned, the others who had lost their family members would be asking about where they were as well, and right now they didn't have answers.

Also the strange marking was worrying him.

"Strange, isn't it?" Eno said, as he and Quinn were standing there looking at the people trying to take a look at who had returned while they were walking towards the shelter.

"Do you mean their eyes?" Quinn said, noting something was off about them from a distance.

"Not just that? Some of these people had gone missing for months." Eno replied. "They had to have come from the forest, and while outside how did they survive. Sure there are some Travellers among them, but not all of them are travellers. What about the deadly beasts we just fought, how are these people still alive?"

When the people were brought in, Hayley had taken a look at each of them once again and it was the same thing. Every single one of them had the strange marking on their back. All at different stages, and their state was the same as the other three.

Returning to the girl, she could see that the girl was in more pain than before.

"It hurts.." The girl said quietly, squinting looking up at Hayley.

Looking at her back once again, she could see that the marking had grown.

At a loss of what to do, she didn't know why, but she had decided to call in a certain person.

"Me? But you know I'm no doctor, right?" Quinn replied, as he walked through the faction halls.

"I know, but I know you have secrets. Maybe you've seen this marking before." Hayley said, knowing it would be a long shot.

Still, Quinn was curious about the people as well and he felt like Hayley was always nice to him during his time in school so he could at least take a look at it.

Entering the room, Quinn looked at the three that were there. Seeing them up close he could tell something was seriously wrong. Then looking at the middle aged man, Hayley lifted up his shirt to show the strange red marking that had several branches going off it on his back in all different directions.

"So, have you seen it before?" She asked.

"No, I haven't." Quinn said, but decided to use his inspect skill to see if there was any other information.

[A powerful mark that continues to grow]

Chapter 1054: The mark activates

After using the inspect skill, a lot of the information seemed to be still hidden. Still, Quinn had learnt a lot by looking at the marking.

"Do all the people that returned have the same marking?" Quinn asked.

"Yes," Hayley replied. She could tell that maybe he didn't know what it was initially, but something had struck him now. His whole demeanour had changed, and he had to have an idea of what it was.

Now knowing that the marking belonged to a Demon tier beast, Quinn was a lot more interested in these missing people and where they had exactly gone. The question was, why had they returned, and what exactly did the marking do?

'If I find out where the missing people are going, then it will probably lead us to the Demon tier beast as well. This might be a bit too dangerous to just leave up to Fex to do.' Quinn thought.

"If I had to guess, it looks like you know a little bit about this marking now?" Hayley asked.

Quinn stayed silent for a while, this alone had already answered her question, but he still didn't know whether to say anything or not. This information he had was powerful for more reasons than one. If they learnt the marking was from a demon tier beast, perhaps they would execute all of those with the marking or do something else.

It was important that this information wasn't shared with others.

"I don't actually know what this marking is, but there is someone I brought with me who might. I was just wondering if they would help me or not." Quinn lied.

"Someone who can help?" Hayley, though surprised. Other than healers, was there really someone who could get rid of this thing. Whoever it was, she wanted them to act quickly. It was breaking her heart seeing this young girl in constant pain, and it was getting harder for her to speak by the second. The older gentlemen as well, his marking had spread to the point where his pupils were becoming larger, and he was about to turn into the same state as the Traveller next to him.

Walking out of the room, Quinn went to fetch the said person.

"What do you think Vincent, do you have any idea?" Quinn asked, wanting to bounce off someone else for ideas.

'My research was more focused on vampires, so I never learnt much about the beasts, especially the Demon tier ones. Although I have to admit, everything so far has been strange from what I do know. People going missing and now returning.'

The beasts attacking this Shelter and the forces are getting stronger by the second. If I was to guess, it would all have to be related.' Vincent replied, and Quinn couldn't agree more.

When returning to Hayley, he had brought along with him a man who had a long ponytail. She looked at the gentleman for a few seconds but didn't have a clue who he was.

The gentleman looked at all three with the markings and placed his hands on them before turning to Quinn.

"My question to you would be, do you wish to save one, or do you want to save them all?" Eno asked.

"Save them all, of course!" Hayley shouted, even though the question wasn't directed at her. If this man had a healing ability or knew how to heal one of them, why couldn't he heal all of them? She thought it was a stupid question to ask.

"If you want to save them all as well, then there is only one way. The marking is linked to the thing that caused all of this." And that was all Eno had said.

Quinn thought he understood since he was starting to understand how Eno worked a bit more now. Using his abilities, he most likely could get rid of the marking, but he would only be able to get rid of one or two due to the cost of his powers.

It was probably something that Quinn and the others were unable to pay for him to use his ability, which was why he had asked the question. As for the second part, in order to not reveal that it was a Demon tier beast's doing, Eno was saying that the Demon tier beast needed to be killed to get rid of all the markings.

Walking out of the room, the two of them knew what needed to be done. Quinn was getting ready to head over to Fex to see if he had found anything yet.

"Quinn, wait!" Hayley called out. "So, can you help them?"

"If you keep them alive long enough, then yes, I can help them," Quinn replied as he closed the door.

As time went on, Quinn had talked to Fex about what he had found, but he had come up with nothing. More people seemingly were appearing in the Shelter with the marking, and now there were a total of fifty that had returned.

All of them had been taken into the faction building, inside one of the large training halls to be looked at. The people inside the Shelter seemed quite pleased about the people returning, having hope that maybe their loved ones would have returned.

While others were on edge, wondering just why the Orbus and Graylash faction weren't allowing them to see their loved ones.

The main problem was, no one new in the Shelter was missing. According to Ko, it happened each time a beast attack occurred. So, Fex and Quinn would have to try and keep an eye on everyone during the next attack, which would be a challenging task for anyone.

"Quinn, I have been looking for you," Robin said as he approached the two of them. "I have a suggestion I would like to make for the Demon tier beast. I know that the Shelter is busy with the missing people, but I believe the Demon tier is the main priority."

Quinn would have probably agreed with him. In the end, he could have left, or asked Sam to send more of the Cursed faction members to protect the Shelter if need be while they went to search for the Demon tier beast. Still, now knowing that the marking on the people and the Demon tier were linked, he wanted to find out what was happening to them first.

'But how do I tell Robin without actually telling him.' Quinn thought.

Back in the private room, Hayley was still observing the three people carefully. She watched the markings as they grew, and now the older gentlemen and the Traveller were in the same state.

Their minds seemingly gone, not responding to any questions or words. The only one that was still partly there was the young girl.

"You can still understand me right, you're fighting against this thing?" Hayley asked, looking her in the eye.

The girl was still covered in sweat, and she couldn't even open her mouth. She was in so much pain. Now the marking had reached her shoulder blades and was still crawling.

"You're a brave girl. I can tell you're fighting against it." Hayley said. Based on the others by now, she knew the young girl should have changed state, but she hadn't.

She couldn't imagine the pain she was going through fighting against it when she could have just given in. Giving in was always the easy option. The only thing she could do now, was have constant communication with her, to try to keep her there.

Pulling out her watch, a digital keyboard was being projected in the air.

"I know it's hard for you to talk, so all you need to do is nod. Tell me, what's your name?" Hayley asked. She moved her finger through each of the letters, and when the young girl nodded, she would say the letter out loud and go through them again.

Eventually, she found out her name.

"So your name is Wendy, correct? It's a good name." She said with a smile

Wendy had her eyes squinted so she could hardly see, but she wanted to have a good look at the person who was with her. The talking and communication briefly made her forget about the pain. When she squinted them open, baring through the pain. That's when she spotted something. Wendy then pushed Hayley to the side, causing her to fall on the floor.

"What the hell happened?" Hayley thought as she looked at what was going on. Right now, Wendy was holding onto the Traveler's arms up in the air, and it looked like the two of them were struggling in a battle of strength.

'Wait, did she just stop the Traveller from attacking me?' Hayley thought, and soon she could see that the other older man with the marking was on the move as well. He leapt in the air towards Wendy as if they were a wild animal, but Hayley quickly got in between the two of them.

"I'm not just some pushover doctor!" Hayley said as she avoided the two hands, and grabbed them, twisting them behind the man's head before kicking him in the back and on the ground.

She turned around and could see Wendy was still struggling. Quickly, Hayley acted again by kicking the Traveler in the stomach, but it seemingly did nothing. So she kicked him at the back of the knee, causing him to jolt, and Wendy then could hit him again, pounding his head till he was knocked out.

The two of them were huffing and panting.

"Wendy, you saved me...thank you," Hayley said, but could see that Wendy was still struggling to fight off whatever was trying to take her over. That's when Hayley had a thought, Whatever had happened to these two? Was it currently happening to all the others that had returned as well?

At that moment, the two that had been knocked onto the ground started to rise again.

Chapter 1055: The infected

Inside the Shelter itself, Fex, Linda and Wevil had decided to head inside. At the moment, Fex was continuing his investigation into what had happened to those that had gone missing. Linda and Wevil had agreed to come along to see if they could help. While, Peter and Layla had remained outside, still helping out all around the Shelter.

The Shelter was pretty large, but they could always communicate with each other through the masks if anything happened. Besides, according to the information they had learnt from Ko, an attack from the beasts wouldn't happen for a while now.

There were only a few people out of those that returned that could still speak. Still, so far, not a single one could remember anything. Until he had managed to come across one person whose mark had hardly developed at all. A young male with a scruffy beard and messy hair.

"I do remember a few things." He said. "I remember we were being led somewhere. I think we were in a group being taken away."

"Do you remember what they looked like?" Fex asked, now using his influence skill. Human minds sometimes recorded things even unconsciously, so Fex thought it was worth a shot.

"No." The man replied and soon went out of the trance. "I do remember hearing a voice, something telling us to come here." The man said.

Fex decided to take note of this. It was interesting to know that he had heard a voice.

'Maybe the beasts are hearing the same thing. I already checked the bodies of the dead beast but can't see anything on them. Maybe if we were to capture one of them alive? Considering they're beasts, the markings could also be in some other place.'

In the middle of his thoughts, a loud scream was heard through the whole room.

Turning around, it took a few seconds until he could see and smell a splatter of blood coming from one of the faction members. He was on the floor, and one of those with a mark had leapt onto the Traveller and dug their teeth into their arm.

What was impressive was the power of the person's jaws. The faction member was wearing beast armour, and still, someone was able to chew through to get to the skin.

"What is going on over there?" Wevil asked as he saw more Travelers coming to aid the person being attacked. They attempted to pull the person off but were flung away, getting hit by a single arm.

"Hey, that's some super strength crap right there," Fex said nervously. "They don't happen to be like us, do they?" Fex asked.

"I don't think so. Otherwise, you would have smelt it." Linda said.

The three of them rushed over and could see the Travellers continuing to struggle to deal with the attacker. They could see that they were being cautious, as they didn't want to harm the person.

Suddenly, the crazed human had been wrapped around in red string, and with a yank, they were pulled up, and their arms were wrapped up like a cocoon. The person continued to struggle and bend their body. Wiggling it towards the others.

"That bastard!" The Traveler said, as his arm was covered in blood when he stood up. "They bit me."

Seeing the string react and bend that way, Fex had an idea of the person's strength. He was right. It was beyond what a regular human could do with no beast gear on. Maybe if they were someone who practised Qi or were like the Blades, it would make sense, but the person didn't look like the fighting type in the first place.

"I think we might need you to tie up a few more people," Wevil said.

When Fex looked up, he could see that those that had the markings, nearly three-quarters of the ones being treated in the room, were standing up. Their eyes were starting to glow in a slightly white-yellow colour.

"What the hell is happening? What's wrong with them all!" The Travelers said as they pulled out their weapons.

At that moment, Fex heard a slight snapping sound that only his ears could pick up, and that's when he noticed that that the person he thought had been dealt with had used their extraordinary strength to break free from his blood strings.

Soon, all those standing with the marking with glowing eyes looked towards the Travellers. The others with markings were even frightened at what the others had become, but it seemed like they weren't interested in them at all.

The sound of fighting down a hallway not too far from them was heard and bursting through the doors, Ko had come rushing in with a few others.

"Something is happening to those that are marked!" Ko shouted. He had been busy escorting more that had returned to the Shelter, and some of them had started to attack his own in the middle of thier return.

Seeing that it was a similar situation here, he had to make a quick decision.

"Remember, they are still people. Make sure that you don't kill them, but don't die either."

"What an easy thing for him to say?" Wevil said as he avoided a powerful punch that hit the ground and destroyed part of the hard flooring beneath him. He then grabbed his daggers and cut the back of their feet to slow down their movement.

Seeing the floor, he could tell a hit from something like that would even hurt him.

Somewhere inside the Shelter, Hayley and Wendy had escaped from the room. It looked like no matter how many times they knocked the other two down, they would get back up. The only other option was to kill them, but the words of Quinn rang through her head.

'Keep them alive, and I can help.'

Running through the hallway, she decided to head for the training room where the others were gathered, hopefully looking for someone, but when she took a turn around the corner, that's when she could see the chaos had already started.

Even in the hallway itself, the Orbus faction members were fighting against the marked, and it was the same in the training hall. She stood there stunned, when the sound of the wall next to her started to break as two men came flying through the wall.

Once again, she found herself on the ground, with a marked and a faction member on top of her. Soon though, they were lifted up and flung back into the training hall. The person who had thrown them was Wendy.

It was clear that the faction members could not deal with this mess, especially since Ko had given the order that they weren't allowed to kill them. They were practically fighting against superhumans.

Although the Travellers and faction members were stronger, they were running out of stamina quickly.

Seeing the other Cursed members, she could see they were faring a bit better. Linda would outmatch them in strength. Even Wevil had equal strength, doing his best to make them immobile while giving them wounds that could eventually be healed.

The most helpful one of them all was actually Fex. Not all of the marked could break out of his string, so he decided to tie up the ones that he could, leaving them there on the ground.

Seeing this, Hayley thought maybe going to the others would be better in the centre. Taking a few steps into the training hall, another marked stood in her way but was quickly punched and knocked to the side again. Wendy was continuing to protect her, and it looked like she, too had received a power boost.

"Doc, what's going on!" Ko shouted as he went to reach her side, and quickly saw Wendy there as well. "Is she-"

"She's fine," Hayley replied. "I'm not sure. The ones who are acting out have marks that have travelled all the way up their neck. It must be some type of infection or parasite that has taken them over. I've never seen anything like this. Unless we can remove it, then they might continue to act like this."

Ko could see his people were exhausted, huffing and panting. Some of them even had wounds. For some reason, the marked were more like beasts as they bit and scratched them. He clenched his hand as he was finally ready to give the order, the order to kill.

"Arghhh!" Wendy started to scream, she tilted her head backwards, and the marking could now be seen visible on the back of her neck as well.

"I told you she was one of them!" Ko argued.

"No, she fought it so well. She couldn't have turned as well!" Hayley shouted.

When Wendy placed her head back down, her eyes started to glow as well. She had fought the mark for so long, even until the last second, to protect her new friend, but it had finally taken over her.

Something inside Hayley thought that maybe Wendy wouldn't attack her, she stepped close, reaching out her hand, and Wendy leapt up in the air, baring her teeth towards Hayley.

"No!" She shouted.

From behind, black shadows appeared, and the next second, her whole body was consumed by the shadows, and she was gone.

"Shadows?" Hayley said.

Entering the room, Quinn had arrived with his hand held out.

Chapter 1056: Over a 1000

It didn't take long for Quinn to hear the cries of the others but at the same time, he could tell that these weren't moans and groans from beasts, but from humans. As Quinn went through the hall, he struggled to figure out what to do as he saw those that had been Marked, attacking everyone else around them.

'This has to be related to the strange Marking from the Demon tier beast. Is it able to control the people or can it only give them simple commands?'

From what he was seeing, it seemed like they only had one goal: attack all those who were unmarked. Seeing them like this, Quinn didn't want to kill them. When he had entered the training hall and saw that Hayley was about to be attacked, he instinctively placed Wendy inside his shadow lock.

Turning around, Ko could see Quinn with his hand held out.

"What did you do to her!" Ko shouted. "You ate her with your damned powers. I told everyone not to hurt them. Where is she? Where is she!"

There it was again, Hayley thought. The bi polar act of Ko, who seemed to care and not care about these people at the same time. But Hayley had an idea of what Quinn was doing,

'Wait, maybe this can work. It doesn't appear like the girl that was marked is attacking in the shadow space.' Quinn thought. 'If I'm correct in thinking that all the Marked ones are only attacking the unmarked people, then I can put them all in my shadow space.'

Working quickly, Quinn used his shadow lock on the next Marked that was attacking the faction members behind him. He waited for a while and his MC cells had remained the same, but it still wouldn't show if they were attacking each other.

Seeing that the other Cursed members were doing just fine, and everyone could last a little while longer, he used the shadow lock on himself, and for a second he had disappeared from the room entering the black space.

Here he could see Wendy and a male Marked standing in a certain spot doing nothing. As soon as he entered, they both turned to look at him, and immediately started to charge towards him.

Getting out of there quickly, Quinn was now back in the training room.

'The two of them, it didn't look like they were fighting each other and they didn't seem to have any fresh wounds. This could work. My Mc cells go down depending how much is held in the Shadow lock.'

'Keeping them there will mean some of my MC points will be limited, but at least it will give me time to figure out just what is behind all of this mess!' Quinn shouted in his mind, as he quickly started using shadow locks on each of the Marked.

Shadows were popping up in the training hall everywhere and in seconds the Marked people were disappearing into them. For each person that was locked in the shadow lock, it would take around 20 points of MC. With the group that Ko had brought along with him there were seventy or so Marked people in the room, but not all of them had gone mad just yet.

Doing his best, Quinn continued to put them all in the shadow lock until finally it seemed like the whole area had started to calm down. Those that were marked but hadn't gone crazy had huddled up in the centre, hiding away from all the fighting. Their bodies were shaking.

While the others who were injured and had just fought, were looking towards the centre where the other Marked had gathered, as if they were a bunch of beasts.

'I need to keep an eye on them to see if any more have changed, but I won't be able to put them all into the shadow space.' Quinn thought.

Out of the seventy people who were marked, forty two of them had gone mad and were currently in Quinn's space. This meant that 840 of his MC cells were locked away, limiting the amount of shadow he could use. Quinn could tell that putting them in the shadow lock wasn't a permanent solution.

"You!" Ko shouted, stomping his feet while he walked forward. Ko himself seemed fine, but his men and the rest of the people in the training hall were not, having large wounds. This suggested that Ko had some skill, which was expected of a faction leader. "What did you do to all those people, tell me now." He demanded.

At this moment, it seemed like he didn't care who it was, but soon he found his footsteps stopped, and a few people around him.

"Do you really think you can just approach our leader like that?" Fex said, as he had tied his red string around Ko's arms and legs, pulling him with great force. Linda and Wevil were also in front of Quinn, almost protecting him, even though Quinn wasn't the one needing protection.

Ko grunted and was expecting his faction members to do something, but they did nothing and there were more than one reason. Just like the attack with the beasts, those from the Cursed had helped out the most when subduing those that were Marked. On top of that, they were injured, tired, and exhausted. They couldn't believe that the Cursed hardly broke a sweat. It was as if they had unlimited stamina, able to fight on forever.

"Ko, what are you doing, Quinn just saved all those people!" Hayley said, having an inkling to what he had done.

"The Marked people are fine, I have put them all in my shadow space. I saw that they aren't attacking each other. So I thought if I put them in the same area away from everyone else, they would be fine." Quinn replied.

"How am I meant to believe that? Am I just meant to take your word?" Ko said.

Tired of having to explain himself to Ko, Quinn lifted his hand up and pointed it towards him.

"What are you trying to do? Are you going to silence me because I'm the only one calling you out? Go ahead, show them who you really are!" Ko shouted, as if he had gone mad.

"No," Quinn replied. "I'm going to show you." Making a fist, a shadow appeared behind Ko, and soon his body had disappeared. One second he was in the training hall, and the next he was in a dark space, but he wasn't alone.

He could see all the Marked that were in the room were just standing there, lifeless, until they noticed him. They turned their heads and all their eyes started to glow as they charged towards him.

"No!" Ko screamed, but then, he could see himself in the training room again.

"Do you believe me now?" Quinn said.

Everyone had to get quickly organised. Robin remained outside, helping out business in the shelter and was protecting them from any more oncoming attacks, while Quinn and Ko were working inside together in the Shelter. Layla, Peter, Sil and Eno had come inside and learnt of what happened.

All those with markings were placed in a makeshift Cell, created by one of the faction ability users, who could produce wood. But everyone knew that, if they went mad, that the wood wouldn't be enough to hold them back.

Of course, Hayley started to focus on those that were injured and that's when she discovered something devastating. An emergency meeting was called by her and it was taking place in the training room. This was where the other Marked were being held and they made sure to stay close.

Ko and Quinn glanced at each other for a second, or it was more right to say, Ko glanced at Quinn until Peter stepped in between the two of them and stared back at Ko until he finally gave in.

'These people from the Cursed faction are crazy.' Ko thought.

"Hayley, I assume you have some important news." Quinn asked.

She looked almost frightened and nervous about what she was about to say,

"Yes, some of those that had been attacked by the Marked, who received deep wounds. It appears that they too now also are showing signs of the marking as well. Although it has hardly developed."

"Are you saying that it spreads, like an infection?" Layla asked.

"I believe so. For now, I have made a list of all those that have shown the marking." Hayley replied, bringing up the list.

Over thirty of the faction members' names were written on the list. Including the ones that were kept in the makeshift wood cell, at any time, they had around sixty more people that could turn mad.

"Hey, this can't be good, right?" Fex said. "Shouldn't we put them with the other Marked, inside that wooden prison you made."

"Do you really think that will hold them?" Linda said. "Their strength is nearly as strong as mine. If they get out and hurt more, then we will just have more to deal with on our hands. Sil has bored the power for now, but even he can't just keep making the cell forever."

"Then can't you just get Quinn to do what he did with his shadow to do the same to the rest, until we find a solution to this problem." Ko said.

"I can't. My Shadow can only hold so much and I'm already at my limit, there are just too many marked people." Quinn replied.

However, Fex at that moment realised something.

"Hey wait, Ko. I've been looking into the people who have gone missing and from what I've found out, this has been going on since the Shelter was first established on this planet. How many people have exactly one missing?"

Sure enough, at that exact moment, another leader of the Orbus faction came bursting in.

"Sir, we have a report from the Graylash team. More people are returning and they are bearing the mark."

"Tell us then, how many people have gone missing?" Eno asked.

Thinking about the answer, Ko gulped.

"Over a 1000."

Chapter 1057: Working with a Demon

As expected, more people started to return to the shelter that were missing, and despite Ko's orders to keep what happened into the faction base a secret. Word had gotten out to those in the Shelter as well. Rumors of a strange infection that took over peoples minds, making them attack anyone they could see.

Although the people were frightened by this, what it did do was stop them from asking questions about what happened to those returned. When they saw a group come back, now they had an idea why they were taken to the faction base.

However, the number of people that had returned was now over three hundred, and every single one of them had the mark on their body.

"Ko, what are we going to do?" One of the Orbus faction members asked while in the main office. "We are holding onto a ticking time bomb. More and more will eventually come. I know that we still outnumber them even if they all were to come, but the fact that they can infect others as well."

"Don't you think I know that?" Ko said, looking at the list of names of the people that returned, he looked through each of their names diligently, but it didn't seem like he had found what he was looking for.

"Thank the stars we still have the Cursed faction," the man blurted out, but quickly regretted saying those words, as he saw Ko's eyes twitching.

Still, Ko couldn't get too angry at the man, even he had to admit so far they had been a great help in more ways than one. When one of the Marked had gone mad, Quinn would place them in his shadow lock.

At the same time, Fex would tie up some of them with the red string. It seemed like not all the Marked had the same strength compared to each other. Some could break from the string while others couldn't.

Testing this, Quinn let out some of them from his shadow lock space, and allowed for Fex to tie the ones that were weaker up, giving him more room for his MC points, and to lock those that were potentially more dangerous.

Although, due to the sheer number of people being turned Quinn still was very low on MC points. Eventually, what they had predicted had come true as well, as one of the Faction members who had gotten bit, had been infected and turned into a mad Marked.

The idea was to capture him, so Hayley could study him, but it was impossible as the faction member was the strongest Marked they had come across by far. He had been wrapped in string that broke immediately, but Fex quickly overpowered him, hitting him a few times, before flipping him onto the ground.

Now he was one of those who were in Quinn's shadow space. Then finally another problem occurred. Quinn no longer had any more MC points to use the shadow lock skill, at least he wouldn't put anymore in as he wanted to keep some MC cells so he could still use the ability. Thankfully most of the ones that had progressed the furthest had already been put in his shadow lock so they had some time, but he had informed the others of this as well.

Inside the training hall, Hayley had just got out of the makeshift wooden prison cell created for the Marked.

"Did you find out anything at all?" Quinn asked.

"Yes, but it's not good news. There seems to be no relation on when someone disappeared and how far their marking has progressed since it depends on the individual. However, the main thing I have found, is for some reason those that have the marking passed on, the mark is spreading far quicker."

"In fact, it doesn't make sense, but I can only assume that since they have come here, the markings on their bodies have been progressing at a rapid pace." Hayley explained.

It was a tough situation they were all in, and there was one option they did have but no one had suggested it so far. To kill all those that were infected. This would solve a number of problems, they didn't have to worry about an attack from the Marked, they also didn't have to worry about others being marked and it would give them more time to find the demon tier beast.

As for Quinn, due to everyone he was holding in his shadow lock, it meant he could no longer use his shadow abilities. Even if he was to face the demon tier beast, could he do it without his shadow abilities? The whole thing seemed a little impossible.

'We don't have time, I have to find the demon tier beast today.' Quinn thought.

Looking around, all the faction members and even those from the Cursed were quite concerned. Quinn had already given them the orders that if it got too much, they were all to leave this planet.

They would have to give up on the people and give up on the idea of the Demon tier beast. He would protect them all from the Marked, as they got on the ship and flew out of there. Then using his powers he would travel to one of the shadow users on the Cursed ship.

The only person that seemed to be calm about the whole situation was Eno.

'That guy, does he know where the Demon tier beast is? Even if he did, I don't think he would tell me? What am I missing?' Quinn thought.

Finding no answers, Quinn had no choice and he felt like he needed to go on a search. Robin had already decided that they would protect the place, and Ko wasn't going to leave the shelter, which meant the Cursed were the only ones with free movement, but bringing along the others he couldn't see how it would help too much.

The night sky was upon them, and as Quinn informed the others of what he was going to do, he decided to take investigating the missing people into his own hands. Fex was left behind with all the Marked, since his ability came in handy the most for restraining the others.

They had found a bit of a pattern with those who were stronger and weaker. It seemed to correlate with how strong the person was before the marking. Which was why Travelers and Faction members were the most dangerous.

With this, they could buy more time.

In the shelter, Quinn could see a lot had changed. They had built several walls between the gates of the Shelter, going towards the faction building where the giant pink tree was. In total there were now five walls surrounding them, and on these walls were the Graylash faction members.

At the same time, behind the faction building, a larger place was built that would keep the rest of the people who weren't fighters and were unmarked inside.

Standing on top of the faction building, Quinn was looking out far and wide. People were still trickling into the shelter. He thought maybe he could try to follow them back. If he could locate where they were coming from, with his eyesight and hearing maybe he could track even more people further.

As he was looking out and waiting for someone to return to the faction, he heard some people exit from the building.

"Do you think this is a good idea, boss?" One of the men said.

"Do we have a choice? If I don't do this, then this Shelter is doomed. I have protected it for this long and will continue to protect it." A voice said.

Hearing the voices, Quinn recognized it was two males, and he knew the other voice quite well. Hopping over to the back of the building, he could see that it was Ko, with one of the other Orbus leaders, and also two others were with them,

"They don't look like faction members? They don't even have any beast gear on. What is he planning to do?"

The other two that were with them, had brown robes over their heads, and were being held by the arm by Ko and the other Orbus leader. It looked almost like the two of them were captives. While walking, they looked around carefully, and Quinn continued to follow them from above.

It being their shelter, they knew all the secret paths, entrances and exits, until eventually they had exited from the shelter, and started to head into the woods.

'Now what the hell is the Orbus faction doing?' Quinn thought, as he continued to follow them, deep into the woods.

Chapter 1058: The Demon's trick

'So there really is something going on.' Quinn thought as he continued to follow Ko and the others deeper into the forest. Before leaving, Quinn had released a few more from his shadow lock that could be tied up and left them to Fex. This gave him at least a hundred MC cells to play with and use his Shadow.

He needed something just in case of emergencies. It reminded him of the time when his MC cells were incredibly low, and the Shadow needed to be conserved more. At the moment, he was travelling up the tree's placing the Shadow around his footsteps, making them silent. While also using the Shadow cloak to make himself appear invisible.

'For people to constantly go missing in the first place, I thought those in the shelter would be involved. Who else could pull off such a thing, other than the faction leader.' Quinn looked at them in disgust.

'If I keep following them, then maybe they will lead me to the demon tier beast.'

'But are you planning to fight the Demon tier beast alone?' Vincent replied. 'Even with so few MC points. I think this might be impossible even for you.'

'I have an idea, but I should at least be able to escape if it's not the case. I remember learning about Demon tier beasts. How the higher tier beast seemed to have something similar to the abilities. Why would something as powerful as a Demon tier beast need to use humans to attack us? Either one, it's an intelligent beast, such as a humanoid one slowly weakening us bit by bit or two. It's the only way it can attack us.' Quinn explained.

Eventually, Ko and his group had stopped in a strange place. The tall grass they would usually walk on was flattened, and the peculiar trees looked to have been bent out of place. It was strange to see such an open area in the middle of the forest.

"Is this it? Where is everyone? I can't see them!" Ko shouted, looking around.

"This is all we can remember. I'm sorry." The men in the hooded robes answered.

Ko pulled the person's hood down out of anger and went right up to their face.

"You need to think harder! You have to. Where are the rest of the missing people!" Ko shouted.

Of course, Quinn could hear this all and was now slightly confused, but in a brief second, he saw it. The marking that wasn't visible on them before, suddenly shot up their neck. It branched out upwards into the back of their hairline.

At that moment, the man's eyes started to glow, and it looked like the one next to him was turning as well.

"You're dead!" The Marked man said as they started to laugh hysterically.

'They can speak!' It was the first time Quinn had seen one of those that was Marked showing any sign of communication. He still hadn't decided whether to jump in or not, but it was clear his initial thoughts were wrong.

Coming out from different parts of the woods into the open space were several beasts. The same type that had attacked the shelter. They had green skins and were long and tall like a giant stick insect. While having several sharp razor limbs, three on each side.

Most of them were at the advanced tier level. Still, there were also a couple of King tier's who had a black exoskeleton instead of green. Quinn knew all of this information due to his inspect skill.

"Enjoy!" The Marked Man said as he was ready to escape with his partner and allow for Ko and his teammate to be killed by the beasts. They pulled out their weapons, and Ko went ahead to try to stop Marked.

'He has to know something. That's the first Marked that has been able to speak!' Ko thought, but as he rushed forward, not caring about his teammate. One of the black-skinned beasts went along, blocking his path. He hit the beast with his weapon, and a clang was heard as if he was striking against metal.

The other six limbs came towards him, and Ko quickly jumped back.

'No, they're going to get away!' He thought but soon saw shadows appear in front of the two of them, and they were quickly consumed.

Then the beast standing in front of him was sliced apart, and all that was seen was an afterimage of a red aura. The top half of the beast fell to the ground, and Quinn could be seen standing behind them.

For the first time, Ko was happy to see Quinn here.

"Damn it, now I only have sixty Mc cells to use, but it looks like we might find some answers," Quinn said, as he quickly went forward, defeating the beasts with one hit each. A strike with his hands, and legs covered in the strange aura, would blow or cut the beasts' body apart.

The other two didn't even have to do anything. They just watched Quinn display skills they didn't even know he had.

Punching them with a strange red aura, not getting hit once, and moving incredibly fast.

'I've never seen anyone deal with beasts so easily. I thought the rumours about his strength were...exaggerated. Is there any human in this world stronger than him?' Ko thought.

All of the beasts were dealt with and Quinn, covered in black blood, walked towards them.

"You two, you need to explain yourself now. What are you doing out here, and why did you bring the Marked out with you?" Quinn's eyes were glowing red, not wanting to waste any time, and his influence skill was activated.

"We came out here looking for the rest of the missing people," Ko answered. "I thought they might lead me to my family." When the question was answered, Ko finally came to and wondered why he had just responded to his question.

'It looks like I was wrong. Ko was just using the Marked that seemed sane to try and find the rest of the missing people. He was just a man on a hunt for his family members.'

"Please, Quinn, I know I have mistreated you, but that Marked you captured. It seemed like he could speak. We have to ask him where the others are. Please, my wife, and my daughter. They have been missing for the last six months now!" Ko pleaded.

Quinn was going to attempt to talk to the strange Marked man anyway, so he didn't really see it as him granting this person a favour in the first place.

Bringing out the Marked that spoke, Quinn quickly grabbed him, pulled his hands, kicked the back of his legs, and stepped on them. With his strength and the armour set, he was sure there would be nearly no one that could overpower him at the moment, and it looked like he was right.

The Marked man's eyes were glowing, and he was constantly chomping towards Ko and the other men in front of him.

"Speak, where are the others? What did you do to them!" Ko shouted.

However, the Marked was now acting like all the others. Dribbling from his mouth and constantly biting away, trying to kill what was in front of him. Quinn had already attempted to use the influence skill on the Marked before, but it had no effect, and he knew it would be useless now.

'Do you think that the Demon tier was possibly the one that was communicating through the person? Perhaps the demon tier has more control over the Marked than we thought.' Vincent said.

At that moment, something had come to Ko's mind as he looked at the dead beast behind them.

"The Marked, I finally remembered where I have seen the marking before!" Ko said as he rushed over and pulled his blade over to the dead beast on the ground. He started to carve away inside its body, and finally showed part of the shell, there it was. Inside the body of the beast, the same strange marking could be seen. However, it was slowly starting to fade away after the beast was killed.

"I remember, when I was carving that moth beast, looking for the crystal, I saw the marking just above. They're controlling the beasts as well." Ko also realised that he had outed himself as the person who had stolen the crystal, but Quinn would leave that matter for another time.

'The beasts that are attacking carry the marking as well?' Quinn started to think. 'I thought that the beast was being attracted by something, but not also working with the Demon tier beast. Then is it possible that the demon tier beast were taking the people after every attack and then taking them somewhere to be infected?

'Why are they desperately trying to kill all the humans in the shelter? Beasts attack humans, but I've never heard of them going after humans before.'

Quinn desperately felt like he was missing something, and Ko and the other faction leader couldn't figure it out either,

"The demon tier beast. It can see everything we are doing. It knows we are out of the shelter right now. It was even trying to get rid of you. What Hayley said, about the marking growing quicker in the base!" Quinn said.

"Demon tier beast!" Ko repeated. "Are you saying this is all the Demon tier's beast doing?"

The sound of the system message was shown, but coming up now, Quinn didn't think it would be good news.

[Defeat the demon tier beast before the whole shelter is infected]

Chapter 1059: Killing the Marked

The night sky was out in the Shelter. Still, the unique glow from the plants inside the Shelter and outside gave everything a mystic feel and glow. There were all sorts of arrays of colours that would radiate from them and reflect.

The giant tree in the Shelter was shining the brightest. It was so luminous that no beast crystals had to be used as lightning in the Shelter. Everything had a slight pink hue as one would look around. Usually, if people were visiting the Shelter for the first time, they would admire such beauty, but everyone in the Shelter didn't have time for that.

The normal civilians were held up in a large emergency centre. At the same time, many faction members and Graylash members would be guarding on top of the wall. They assumed that with the number of missing people returning, they might have gotten some visitors even at night.

However, there seemed to be a little bit of a dry spell. Almost a couple of hours had passed with no new people coming to the Shelter.

Inside the faction base, all of the Cursed members were waiting in the training room, with around a hundred other people. Split between regular Travellers and Faction members. There was more than usual that would be inside of the room, but that was because they were afraid that an attack could happen at any moment.

"You look a bit worried and a bit tired," Layla said as she went over to Hayley's side, who looked disheartened. She was taking a break and having a cup of coffee to give her energy. It was the only thing keeping her going at this rate.

"I'm not like you guys," Hayley replied. "I don't know how none of you are tired. Even the faction members are rubbing their eyes, but all of you seem fine, even after fighting all those...Marked as you call them."

Layla gave an awkward smile and didn't really know what to say. Of course, none of them needed to sleep as much as humans because they weren't humans. They could go a few days without any sleep and function just fine, but they still needed their rest now and then.

"You know you can rest if you want. It doesn't look like any more Marked are coming in. I will look over you if anything is happening and wake you up if you are needed." Layla said.

"Thanks for the offer," Hayley replied with a smile. "Don't you think it's strange? That you're the one comforting me. I still remember when we were at the school and Quinn had come running in looking for you, and now your position is probably more respected than mine."

"So much has changed in so little time that it feels so unreal. I never thought the day would come where Layla Munrow would offer to protect me."

It certainly was odd, but Hayley had no idea what all of them had been through.

"So tell me, have you two made any progression?" Hayley asked.

Layla's face started to turn a bright red.

"What do you mean?"

"Come on, do you really think I wouldn't know? I'm a lot older than you. It's a shame to hear that you two haven't progressed further. Maybe that's what happens when you have too much going on, but to me, it looked like he liked you as well. At least back then.

"We have to be brave in these times, Layla. With the war going on, who knows if this is the last time we will see anybody. Do you really want to leave this world holding onto words you wished you had said?" When Hayley spoke of this, she was also talking about herself.

There was someone else she also wanted to speak to, afraid that she might never see them again.

"Your right," Layla said, clenching the bow in her hand. "I've been too afraid, waiting for the right moment, but it seems like there may well never be a right moment."

Entering the training room at that moment were twenty Graylash members. The others thought that they perhaps had more people to bring in and join the makeshift cell, but they had no one along with them.

"Don't mind us. We are just taking a break for now and having a look at the Marked." One of the Graylash members said at the front.

Hearing this, most of the people chose to ignore them. Peter, Eno and Sil were near each other. While Wevil and Linda were close to each other as usual. The only one that was apart from them was Fex, who stood outside of the makeshift cell.

Three faction members were standing in front of the cell door. Whenever one of the people inside would be turned. Someone inside would call Fex to tie them up. They would then be moved to another part of the cell where there was a wall between them with all the other tied up members.

The Graylash members started to walk up towards the cell entrance, and the guards assumed they would be going inside. As they walked closer to Fex, he began to sniff their air as he smelt something.

"Peter, Sil, it looks like we might have a job to do soon," Eno said, sniffing the air as well.

Eno hardly said anything to them, so they were sure to pay attention when he did speak.

Fex, thinking that something was about to happen, decided to move away and head over to where the girls were. As he walked past and through the Graylash members, they met eyes before he continued walking.

"Hey, do you know how long Quinn is going to be?" Fex asked.

"He didn't give me any time. I doubt he would be back until the sun rises. Why, what's going on?" Layla whispered, knowing something had startled him.

"It was hard for me to smell it at first because it looks like they've tried to cover it up, but those Graylash members that just came in right now, smell of blood," Fex said.

"Blood?" Hayley overheard. "Wait, aren't you going to stop them. Does that mean the Graylash members are going inside to kill them? Is that why no new people have come by? We have to stop them!"

"That's why I was asking when Quinn would be coming back. If the Graylash members are acting this way, it means it has to be an order from Robin. The only person that he will probably listen to is Quinn. Perhaps he believes the threat of the Marked has become too big and decided to take matters into his own hands. Let's just see what they do for now, and if they try anything, we'll try to stop them with words. If that doesn't work...we might have a tough fight on our hands going up against the Graylash family." Fex explained.

The guards willingly opened the door, so the Graylash could inspect the Marked.

"Be careful in there. There are quite a few that are about to be- "The guard's speech was stopped midway as he felt his head being grabbed.

"We know." The Graylash man said.

The guard's body shook as lightning was running through his whole body, and the other two guards were dealt with as significant lightning strikes had struck through them two as well.

"What's going on? The Graylash members just killed the guards!" Layla said, confused.

"The blood, it wasn't from the Marked, but it must have been from other faction members outside!" Fex shouted so everyone could hear, but they were all soon on alert. The door to the cell was opened wide, and the Graylash members stood to the side.

Coming out from the small door, and breaking through it, the hundreds of captured Marked seemed to have all already gone mad and were already attacking the faction members close by.

"What is happening?" Peter asked. "Are the Graylash working with the Marked? But why? Is Robin behind this as well?"

Eno, stood there and looked at the Graylash members, a mad Marked came up to him, but he quickly placed his hand on its head and pushed them down to the ground as hard as he could, until the person's legs had snapped and bent outwards. The Marked was still moving but was only able to crawl with its hands.

"It looks like Quinn has been going after the wrong person," Eno said, shaking his head.

Chapter 1060: Give us the boy

The faction hall had turned into a complete mess in mere seconds. When the Marked came rushing out of the room, some expected only a few to have gone mad. After all, they were really being checked on, and they even had a list of which markings had developed more.

Now they realised that the whole thing was useless. Every single person they had captured looked like they had already been taken over by whatever the marking was. What was worse, is how the faction members needed to deal with them.

They were unable to kill them, and at the same time, they were being cautious about getting bitten or hit, as they knew the infection would spread to them as well.

"We need to get out of here!" Layla said.

"I don't think that's an option," Fex replied. "Looking at how many Graylash members are in on this, I'm afraid it might be the whole lot of them. Do you remember what they were doing outside?"

The Graylash faction was in charge of defending the newly built shelter walls. They had just reinforced it by surrounding themselves with five layers. Most likely, they were trapped and had already dealt with everyone outside.

Fex was shooting out strings using all of his fingertips, trying to tie up as many of the Marked as possible. At one point, one of the Marked had come close to a faction member, but their body was pulled back just at the right moment.

Layla saw how hard Fex was trying and wouldn't just stand there either. The Marked seemed to be unintelligent and uncaring about everything. So she would fire off her arrows, hitting them in the legs with ease.

While Hayley just stood there shocked by the whole mess. She could help. She was quite a good fighter, but without getting bitten it seemed impossible. This fear was running through her, and not just her but the rest of the faction members as well.

Looking at the situation, Eno could see that the Graylash members were attacking the faction members with their lightning strikes but weren't aiming to kill them like they did with the guards. Instead, it looked like they were aiming for certain spots causing minor injuries or just to distract them.

It looked to be working, as one of the faction members raised a shield to block a lightning strike, but then was jumped by one of the Marked, and it bit through his shoulder guard.

"Are they trying to increase their numbers?" Eno thought. "And it looks like the Marked aren't going after those from the Graylash. Do they have something that even I don't know about?" Eno thought.

The man who had been hit, only seconds later, his eyes started to glow, and he too had become one of the Marked as well. Unlike before, the markings were seemingly turning people mad in seconds rather than hours or days.

"I was wrong. It looks like everything I was doing was wrong. Was it tricking us?!" Hayley said, seeing the situation unfold, as slowly more and more of the Marked were being created, it would only be a matter of time before everyone became a Marked.

"This is not your fault. None of this is!" Layla shot out a black spiritual chain hitting one of the Marked and wrapping around him.

'This form isn't strong enough, but luckily there is a lot of negative energy in this room. It will be useless to evolve into my third form, so my second form will be best.' Layla thought, as her body started to change.

She grew slightly taller, the horns hidden behind her hair started to come through, and the fangs on her face were becoming enlarged. She had become far more fighting than anything in the room.

In her second form, she could use the emotions around her to power her, and the more negative emotions there were, the faster and more powerful her strikes would be. The next second, Hayley saw one of the Marked get chucked across the room into the others.

Looking up, Hayley couldn't help but stare at what was in front of her. It looked like Layla, but at the same time, it didn't.

"Layla, what are you?" She asked.

She wasn't the only one that decided to get into action. Peter was being himself, hitting and chucking the Marked all over the place, slamming them as they came at him. This had gotten a lot of attention from all the Marked around, and he was probably one of the only ones that didn't have to be afraid of being bitten.

He already had received several scratches and bite marks, but they would heal up, and he wouldn't feel any different. It was clear he was immune to it, just like he was resistant to other things as well.

This was also true for Linda, who had grown in size and had decided to grab as many of the faction members as possible and place them behind her, the number was already dwindling to the last ten, and she could see they could really do nothing.

Wevil seemed to be in his element, attacking while not getting hit. He was treating it as a game, only transforming his legs. At the same time, the Marked were still human, so he could get blood whenever he wished.

Sil, no longer had the lightning powers. It had been too long since he used them, but he still had the wood power that was made to create the Cell. He could grow wood from underneath to wrap around the Marked, but those that were faction members and wearing beast gear were able to break free from the wood. Still, Sil had plenty of MC cells to continuously wrap around their legs over and over.

Eventually, all the cursed members fought the Marked while heading towards the centre of the hall, but it seemed endless. Hitting them down, they would just get back up. Even with the leg injuries, they would walk on the broken parts as if they felt no pain.

Now in the centre of the training hall stood all the Cursed, six surviving members of the faction, and finally Hayley.

"Stop!" The Graylash member said, who spoke when they first entered. He was wearing a bright white robe as usual, and it looked as if all the Marked listened to him as they stood still.

"Look at this, isn't all the fighting pointless? Why don't you just give in and come over to this side? We won't kill you, we promise." The Graylash member said.

"You're Crazy! Why are you doing this!" Hayley shouted.

"Why, you humans were the ones that invaded this place first. Isn't it right for me to get rid of you?" The Graylash member spoke, and soon his eyes started to glow like all the others as well. Pulling down the top of his robe, his muscles showed, but what they could see now was the marking having developed all over the person's body.

It went up along their chest, down their arms and on their back.

"They were already Marked, possibly from the beginning," Eno said. "Now it's starting to make sense. The one talking to us is not the Graylash family, but the Demon tier beast."

"Demon tier beast, what do you mean, where is the demon tier beast? Is it here?!" Wevil was confused.

"No, the Demon tier is somewhere else, but it's using them to fight us," Eno replied once again. "However, it looks like it doesn't want to kill us either. Perhaps it realises that our strength is far greater than all these around us. If it was to mark us like it did the rest."

The twenty Graylash members lifted their hands up, pointing them towards the group of people. While all the Marked moved to the side, clearing a path.

"Are we just going to stand here and let them attack us?" Linda asked, ready to transform once again. Right now, it looked like the members of the Cursed faction were the only ones that could fight.

"Let me ask you?" The Graylash member said. "If I ordered all of these Marked here to jump at you at once, while we used the Graylash's ability to attack you, do you think you would survive?

"You probably haven't noticed since we don't want to injure you, but the marking allows us to increase the human's power by sharing my own with them. You still haven't had a taste of what we can do." The Graylash member said, licking his lips.

Frustrated, Fex summoned his soul weapon, the black needle and threw it into one of the Marked nearby, pulling him over to their side with his strings.

"You ain't so special!" Fex shouted. "You're not the only one that can control people."

The Graylash started to chuckle.

"You are certainly an amusing one. I would love to see what's inside your brain."

While Fex was taunting the person, the others were looking for a way out of the place. They were all strong, but their main issue was they were unable to kill the people in the room. The only other option was to escape, but they were surrounded. They were also sure that the Demon tier wasn't bluffing about the Graylash's power.

"You look like you want to leave this place." The Graylash member said. "Why don't we come up with a deal? Give us the boy, and we'll let you go."

The Graylash member was pointing towards Sil.

'Sil, why would they want Sil?' Layla thought, but it hit her. If the Demon tier was able to control Sil. The strongest ability user there was. With the extra power it could give him, it would make the Demon tier beast unstoppable.

"You have been holding back while using your powers, haven't you?" Eno said, looking at Sil. "Why don't you get rid of them?"

"Because, if I was to use my powers, they might die by accident, and Quinn wouldn't want me to kill them," Sil answered.

The Graylash member, seeing that Sil and Eno looked unfrightened, was getting frustrated. Of course, even if they gave the boy, they were never going to let them go. It wanted to watch the humans as they had hope and then take it away from them, but the hope had never left any of their eyes.

Still, at least it was enjoying the despair the people felt, but why? Why did the blonde-haired boy and the old man next to him look unfazed?

"My patience has run out." The Graylash member said as his hands started to light up blue, and lightning struck out, not just from him, but from all twenty of the Graylash members straight down the middle.

The power looked far stronger than anything they had seen before, and the others weren't exactly sure they were going to survive this one. Linda raised her shadow but couldn't spread it beyond anyone else.

The others were ready with an attack of their own, but a single man stood in front of them all, and the only thing they could see beyond the bright light of the attack, was his ponytail hair.

He placed his hands on the floor, and a flash of white light shone so bright nobody could see anything. When they peeked through as the white light seemed to fade, they were wondering why didn't they feel any pain, what had just happened.

"I was planning to stay out of this whole thing, but when you almost hurt me like that, then I will have to take part," Eno said. His eyes were glowing bright red.

"Unlike the others behind me, I have no problems with killing humans."

Chapter 1061: Uncovering the Demon tier beast

At times, Quinn would be delighted to see a quest pop up. It was a chance for him to evolve, and grow stronger, which was exactly what he needed. The most common way for him to get a quest from the system was when he was facing a strong opponent.

However, this one, and lately the quest he had been receiving of late, were involving others, and he didn't like it at all. His body was screaming, telling him he needed to return back as soon as possible and the system message wasn't the only reason he knew he needed to.

It was also due to the connection he could feel. He could tell that the others were locked in some sort of combat.

'I have confidence in their strength, but who or what are they fighting? The Marked?' Quinn thought.

'It looks like the Demon tier is able to take over the human hosts whenever it wishes based on what we have seen. Perhaps, the Demon tier beast has turned all those captured already.' Vincent added.

"We need to go back now, the base is in trouble." Quinn said.

"But you said this is a Demon tier beast's doing, correct? Shouldn't we focus on that, maybe we can find the others as well?" Ko replied.

Ruffling of leaves and trees being pushed over were heard from the forest. Quickly using his inspect skill, Quinn could see many different beasts hidden, coming towards them at all sorts of different levels.

"Are those beasts, how many more are coming over to us." One of the Orbus leaders said.

There were a lot, and even with Quinn taking them all out with a single hit, it would delay their goal of getting back to the base.

'Wait a second, all of the beasts, they're coming from the Shelter. Is that what they are trying to do, slow our return back? If the Demon tier really knows I killed that Moth on my own, then it would make sense. Does it have an idea of my power?'

"I can't waste anymore time convincing you guys, you just have to believe me that the base is being attacked. You can either come with me, or stay to fight those beasts." Quinn said, as he activated his shadow travel and hopped into it.

As the ruffling of the trees got louder, knowing that the beasts were nearly upon them, it didn't take them long to hop into the shadow and come with him.

Traveling through the shadow they could avoid everything. It was fast and while in his shadow space, they could head directly to the shelter.

"Is this the same place as last time? I don't see anyone else." Ko said, thinking about the place where Quinn had trapped all the other Marked.

"No, this is different, you can see where we are above." Quinn replied.

As they looked up, they could see the trees and ground. It was like they were traveling in an underground vehicle with a glass roof above them.

If Quinn wanted to get there urgently, he could have used his shadow link to transfer himself to Linda, but he had a feeling that as time went on, the problem would increase. He could see on his quest bar that the number of those infected were rising.

The only thing he could do was find and defeat the Demon tier beast as soon as possible. Still not being able to get it out of his head, he decided to use his mask to call the others, and specifically called Linda.

"Linda, you answered, I guess that means you guys are okay for now, what's happening over there?" Quinn asked.

"Quinn, you need to come back as soon as possible, I believe the whole shelter is in trouble. The Marked have taken over the Graylash family members and they are stronger than ever. You need to be careful." Linda replied.

The other two could hear everything, and they couldn't believe that the Graylash family had been Marked. She continued to explain what had exactly happened, how much they knew of the events so far, but also said they were unaware of the situation on the outside.

'So the Graylash members might have been infected from the beginning?' Quinn thought. 'And they have no clue where Robin is or if he has been infected as well. The inspect skill only worked when I looked at the marking directly, so the clothes might have covered it up.'

"What about you guys, are you okay, can you hold out for a bit longer or do you need me there?" Quinn asked.

There was silence for a bit on the other end, as Linda was a little nervous, but she finally replied.

"Yeah, don't worry about us. We are going to be just fine, I don't think this Demon tier beast knows exactly who he is messing with, you do what you need to do." She replied, and hung up there.

Thinking about the call, he wondered what she could have meant by that. Was she talking about Sil? With Sil there, as long as he had strong abilities, he would protect them all, even from the Demon tier beast itself.

Eventually, Quinn had reached the shelter. They could now see it from a distance. He exited from the shadow, and quickly pulled the other two up with him, scaling a tall tree.

The others were about to complain about what Quinn was doing to them, when they could see it now from up high. Walking through the forest from all directions of the Shelter, were humans. Or, to be more precise, it was the Marked, but it wasn't a small number of the Marked.

It was the rest of the missing people. They were all plodding along, moving slowly towards the Shelter. When they arrived with the gates open, they could enter with ease.

"What is going on, why are they all heading towards the Shelter?" The Orbus leader asked.

"I guess you were right, something really is going on at the Shelter. Everything we heard seems true. Even the Graylashes on the wall seem to be doing nothing." Ko said. "There are thousands of them, and nearly everyone inside the shelter has already been infected that will be tens of thousands of people."

"Why now?" Quinn mumbled, looking at everything.

"What do you mean?" Ko asked.

"The Demon tier beast, you said people have been going missing since the start of the shelter. You've suffered from attacks time and time again. We have figured out that it's due to them already being Marked by the Demon tier. It was almost as if the Demon tier was waiting to build up an army large enough to get rid of you."

"There were other Shelters on this planet before, right? Did they suffer any of the same attacks?" Quinn asked.

"No, not that I know of." Ko said, figuring out what Quinn was getting at.

"So why does the Demon tier want to so badly get rid of you all? Why is it still sending everyone to this place now? Did you take something from it, did you anger it without realizing it from the very first day since you got here? No, that makes no sense, and considering the type of demon tier beast it is, my bet is that the demon tier has been in the shelter the whole time."

"It's the only way to explain how the Graylash family were Marked as well."

"A Demon tier in the shelter, are you crazy!" Ko shouted. "We would have found it by now if that was true, and what about all the signals that we receive from your device are you saying they were faulty?" Ko argued.

"Signals, didn't you see what they did to the Marked, and didn't you hear what my people said earlier. That they can control a Marked to the point where it can communicate, even empowering them. Perhaps it was giving fake signals powering beasts they had captured or the missing people, and if you want to know why? To take us further and further away from the goal."

Quinn had an idea what the demon tier beast was, but he wasn't quite sure yet, and he was sure there was one way to find out.

"You two, you are on your own from here. Make your way inside or stay here until it's safe, that's down to you, but I can't protect you guys." Quinn said as he got in his shadow travel, and headed towards the largest thing he could see in the centre.

Due to shadow travel, he could go under the walls that had been built and all the Marked seemingly ignored him until he had finally reached the largest thing in the centre: the giant pink tree.

Getting out from his shadow, Quinn was ready to take this thing down, at the same time falling from the top of the tree, something could be seen and as it hit the ground, lightning flew up in the air all around it.

"Very impressive, but I have to ask, how did you know?" The person standing in front of Quinn said, who was none other than Robin. He too had the top half of his robe taken off, and the red branch markings could be seen everywhere.

Quinn smiled.

"Honestly, I didn't but there were a few guesses I had made, there was something I noticed when I was shown a beast with the pattern before. It's not every day that a human gets turned upside down, but with the beast's skin, I saw it.

"The red marking, the branches that stem out on everyone, it looks exactly like this tree, but of course that could have just been a guess. Then, with my keen eyes and senses, I looked for the strongest power in this area, which led me to you, Robin...or should I call you a Demon instead.

"It would make sense for the Demon tier to put most of its power into the strongest human it could find. I heard that you failed to get my friend Sil, so why not stick to Robin, but that still doesn't answer your question.

"From the way you have been acting so far, you seem to be very cautious. I judged from the way your powers work that perhaps you weren't able to attack yourself.

It's a very strong power you have. Now, if one couldn't defend itself, where would it place its strongest piece.

"Putting all these things together, it was just making my guess seem more true, and in the end. If I took down a giant tree and it wasn't the Demon tier beast, then that's no harm done, is it?" Quinn explained.

In his mind, Quinn could hear the sounds of clapping.

'Brilliant deduction Quinn.' Vincent said. 'I've never seen you use your small brain of yours so much. Damn, someone should have recorded that and played it back to the rest of the Faction. Unfortunately, figuring out where the Demon tier beast was, is the easy part.'

'Now the hard part begins. Without your shadow powers, this will be a tough battle.'

"You are right, I have been cautious." Robin replied. "And maybe that made finding me easier, but it doesn't matter."

Falling from the tree, even more Graylash members were seen and in total, including Robin, there were now ten of them.

"You think I didn't know they were up there as well?" Quinn replied as he prepared himself.

"I have a good guess of your power Quinn from how you defeated my pawn of a Moth but if that is all of your power, then this will be a walk in the park." Said Robin.

Chapter 1062: Level up Blood

A distance away from the Shelter, inside the forest, a couple of men could be seen up high in one of the tree's that emitted a green hue. These were Ko and Ely. They were both from the Orbus faction and had started it together. Ko became the head of the faction, while Ely became a vice leader.

Right now, it was heartbreaking what they were seeing. As they watched the Shelter, the two of them built up being overtaken, but they weren't being overtaken by beasts or anything like that. It was the Marked. More missing people continued to flock in, and the small sparks of fighting around the Shelter were dying down bit by bit.

"What are we going to do?" Ely looked at Ko. "I've followed you for this long and will continue to do so,"

Ko didn't answer and continued to watch the Shelter. He still couldn't believe that somehow the Graylash had been Marked. When did it start? They had been at the faction for a while now, coming and going, and even more of them had come before the Cursed faction due to the war.

'What started all of this?' Ko started to think.

They couldn't see what was going on in the Shelter. It was too far, but what they could see was the giant pink tree, and suddenly. Several lightning strikes started to fall from the top of it, then a few seconds later, they shot up from the ground one by one.

"Quinn, he said he was going to deal with the demon tier beast. Are they fighting near the tree? Why were they in the tree?" Ko said out loud to himself.

It was at that moment he remembered something when Robin had first arrived. He seemed to be fascinated by the large tree. He would continually look at it, even attempted to study it, but then that fascination one day just disappeared.

"The tree, that Damned tree has been the Demon tier beast this whole time, the thing that we built our Shelter on! Just because...we thought it would look nice." Ko shouted in anger, but Ely quickly placed his hand over his mouth, warning him that there were still Marked and others in the area.

'It's my fault. Why didn't I notice sooner? Wasn't it my decision to make a Shelter and the faction base here as well? And now everyone is getting hurt.' Ko thought.

"I'm going to destroy that damned tree!" Ko said. "I hate to admit it, but Quinn is strong. Stronger than anyone else here, but it also means that the demon tier will do everything it can to stop him from killing it. We need to use this chance to destroy the tree ourselves! We know all the routes to the Shelter. If we're careful, we can get through without being spotted." Ko said, looking at his friend.

His friend looked nervous. Ely had already seen his life flash before his eyes when they were surrounded by the beasts. Still, now they were charging into danger.

"I already said, didn't I, that I would follow you," Ely replied.

The two of them quickly descended from the tree and were careful about their steps. It looked like the area they were in had the least amount of Marked. It made Ko wonder if Quinn had put them there on purpose or if it was a coincidence. He also didn't understand how someone was able to tell all those beasts were coming towards them from so far away.

Nonetheless, he was happy about the situation he was in currently. The Shelter gates weren't the only entrance. There was also a particular underground tunnel that he had created. Originally it was meant to be used as a tool for escaping, not breaking in, but it could be used both ways.

They headed far out from the west wall as Ko searched through the forest for the escape route. Finally, they spotted the special entrance in what looked like a giant stone.

"Wait!" Ely said, pulling Ko back before he charged into the underground tunnel.

Their secret tunnel didn't seem so secret as Ely spotted that Marked was already entering.

"If that demon beast really is a giant tree and is controlling the others, it will know about all of the entrances and secret places we built. It might even know this Shelter better than us." Ely explained.

"Damn it, then we're just going to have to sto-" Just as Ko was about to make a reckless decision, his grip on his sword loosened, and his body stood upright, looking at the two about to enter the tunnel.

He was staring at two women who both had long brown hair. One looked like a teenager, while the other was an older woman covered in mud marks and ripped clothing.

"Cammie! Carole!" Ko shouted and soon went running after them.

'What is that idiot doing!' Ely thought.

As if the two of them could hear their names being called, they turned to see off in the distance someone with their hand reached outward. The girls opened up their mouths' and dribble started to fall, and soon their eyes started to glow brighter.

The next second, both of the girls were charging their way, running towards the both of them.

"I knew, I knew they were alive!" Ko said.

"If you don't snap out of it soon, then you'll be the only one that's dead!" Ely shouted as he kicked his friend in the back to cause him to stumble before pulling out a crossbow and firing two beast arrows towards them.

"No!" Ko shouted. He pulled Ely's leg causing his shot to go off balance slightly.

"You can't hurt them. They're my family!" Ko said.

However, Ely knew that at the moment, they were not the family he remembered, and if they were to progress forward, something needed to be done.

"I'm sorry," Ely said.

Just under where the pink tree was, Quinn could see what he was up against. Strong members of the Graylash family were chosen to fight against the demon tier beast, and on top of that, a head general of the Graylash.

'Careful Quinn, I'm sure you can feel it with your Qi, but all of these have been infused with the Demon tier's beast power. Just like the Marked, they will be several times stronger than they were before.'

Quinn didn't resort to activating his beast gear just yet, he had the legendary set on, but for now, he wanted to use the stats they were currently. After all, activating his active skill could only be used once every hour. After that, there would be a significant drawback, and the armour would be useless.

He needed to gauge their power, but he couldn't use the shadow either.

"Looks like I'm going to have to fight like a vampire!" Quinn said as he ran forward and went for the Graylash members towards the sides.

"You're a fast one, but I already knew you were fast, and I know you can get faster from when you killed the moth," Robin said.

The next second, lightning strikes came out all over, aiming towards Quinn. At first, he thought he would have been able to avoid all the strikes with his current stats, but the lightning strikes were coming out far faster than he had predicted.

"These guys are juiced up!"

Thinking fast, Quinn could only do one thing, based on the number of lightning strikes coming his way. Throwing blood swipes at them would only block a few of the attacks, while he would get hit by the rest.

His fingers started to glow red, and the blood was seen rushing to his hands. On his skin, his veins started to shine slightly red, running up his forearm.

[Skill activated]

[Half of your HP will now be consumed]

[50/100HP]

[Blood barrage]

Throwing his hands out, with the stored energy, and using his own blood, a barrage of smaller blood swipes came splitting out. Soon they could be seen multiplying as they went through the air, each one of them hitting the lightning strikes dead on.

The attack was a lot weaker than that of a regular blood swipe, but it covered a far wider range, and Quin had another advantage. He also could power them with Qi making them stronger.

Hitting the lightning strike dead-on, the first line of blood barrage only stopped the attack, but as more came, they pushed forward and would overpower them, pushing it back and continue going forward.

Robin seeing his men about to get hurt, decided instead to step forward.

"What that move this guy has....Lightning Storm!" Robin shouted as he punched both his hands into the ground. Lightning shot up like roots in front of his people. It was like a wall of lightning strikes, and the red aura would fade as they continued to be hit.

"It looks like you don't just have fast legs and have been hiding a few things," Robin said.

The skill Blood Barrage was learned after Quinn had managed to upgrade his Blood swipe to level 5. Just like Eno had explained, Quinn's skills could level up to 5, and once they did, they could evolve into new skills like blood barrage, and at the moment, blood barrage was too weak only being at the level one stage, and using it took a lot of HP.

'That lighting is strong.' Quinn thought. 'And I can see he is even wearing beast armour underneath those robes. Suppose the Demon tier really is making their body superhuman. In that case, this is going to be like fighting a vampire leader with the power of lighting, one of the strongest powers the human race holds.'

'The good news is, blood barrage wasn't the only thing I learnt!'

Chapter 1063: Two strong forces

Slowly opening his eyes, Ko could feel a constant, dull pain on the top of his head. When they were finally fully opened, he could see the dark sky.

"What happened?" He slowly asked, lifting his body up and looking around. As the pain went away, Ko also started to remember what had happened just seconds before.

'I was on the ground, and looking at Ely. Wait, my family. What happened to my family!' Ko thought.

He could find no traces of his wife and daughter. His head twisted and turned and eventually he could see his friend Ely huffing and panting.

"You!" Ko shouted as he ran towards his friend.

"Wait, Ko, what the hell are you doing!" Ely said as he turned with the crossbow still in his hand. It was loaded, but he didn't want to shoot his friend, especially if he hadn't been marked.

"Your family, they're fine!" He said as he quickly pointed a distance away.

Ko looked at where he was pointing at, and ran over to see that the Marked were crawling towards the two of them. His wife's legs and arms had been badly hit with arrows and it was the same for his daughter.

One would have been in immense pain from the wounds alone. Falling to his knees, Ko wished he could have been in their position instead.

"I would have never killed your family, Ko, but I knew that you couldn't hurt them either. The only thing I could do was slow down their moments. The Marked, even if we take out their legs, they can crawl incredibly fast with their arms. I'm sorry. I didn't want you to see what I was going to do." Ely said.

Ko was left crying and even with their hands and legs badly injured, they were crawling on the ground with their glowing eyes. That's when he noticed that their wounds, although their muscles had been injured, it looked like Ely had attempted to patch them up at the same time.

"Ely, did you?"

"I know these beings seem to have a stronger will to live, but when we kill the Demon tier beast, who knows if their wounds will kill them or not. I needed to be sure. We have a job to do, you were the one who said it, kill the Demon tier beast and everyone will be free from this mess." Ely explained.

Picking himself up, he looked at his daughter and wife's face one more time. The Marked in the area didn't seem to get hurt by the beasts or anything else, and he wanted to stay by their side. He wanted to make sure they would be okay.

However, if Ko didn't act, then they wouldn't be okay. The people he was looking at right now were not his wife and daughter, and it took a lot of self-convincing for him to move his feet and head down the tunnel into the Shelter, on the way to the pink tree.

Inside the faction hall, currently, there were over three hundred or so marked, ready to jump on the large group that was in the middle, but they stood still, and so did the Graylash members that were there, as well as a single man who had just stopped their attack.

"If you kind people would be able to deal with the Marked, then I will take care of the troublesome ones." Eno said, and before they could say anything, they could no longer see him in front of them.

The next second, a Graylash member had been kicked in the head and sent flying across the room. They turned and fired lighting towards Eno, but spirals of blood from his hands would spin, blocking the attack, making it seem like it did nothing.

"You will need to try a lot harder than that!" Eno said. "I know plenty of people who could take you on with ease."

lightning strikes appeared consistently. Without a second thought, Eno pulled a Graylash member directly in front of him. His body took all of the attacks instead. When being struck by the lightning the body was shocked for a couple of seconds but the person seemed to still be conscious and moving, still trying to break free.

Seeing this, Eno kicked the man's legs before chucking him over to the other side, and soon noticed that the first one he had hit was walking again.

"Hmm, so your power really has made them resilient." Eno said.

While Eno was fighting the Graylash family, he had the attention of all of the members and sure enough, the Marked had all charged forward. At first, the faction members were scared, but it looked like they had no reason to be at all. With their backs facing each other and with them in the middle, they were being protected by what could be described as a wall of muscle.

The hardest part for the faction members when fighting against the Marked, was their overwhelming strength, speed and the fact that they never seemed to tire, but looking at those in the Cursed, they seemed like monsters themselves.

Peter, and Linda both had the strength of several of the Marked, and could continually use their strength to throw, break their enemies bones and make it so not a single person could get past. The others were far faster than any of the Marked as well, with Layla, Fex and Wevil having superior bodies, it looked like they didn't need to do anything at all.

It was so calm that the others could see what Eno was doing while fighting. The Marked just seemed like an annoyance for them. That's when Linda saw it.

'It's annoying how you keep getting up.' Eno said. 'So I will just have to see if this works.' His body moved away from one of the Graylashe's again, and this time, Eno was directly in front of the leader. His hand was already covered in the blood aura, spinning like a drill.

The next second, the Graylash member was lifted into the air as his hand went through his stomach, and then chucked over to the side. The Graylash member was now no longer moving.

"You killed your own!" A Graylash member said.

"My own? Do you think me and them are the same?"

It was clear that the Demon tier beast that was controlling the people was taken aback by this. One of the main reasons the Marked could spread around so easily, was because the humans were afraid of killing their own.

Even the faction members, and Hayley were stunned by this. However, they didn't blame Eno for what he had done. At this moment, it truly felt like it was either the Marked lives, or theirs.

Moving onto the next one, Eno was ready to shove his blood drill through another. Until the man's eyes were no longer glowing, and the markings on his body started to fade.

"Wait, no, the demon beast is no longer controlling him!" Hayley shouted, paying attention to what was going on.

The man's eyes were now sane and as he saw the attack coming towards him, he saw no sign of it slowing down.

At the last second, a strong lightning bolt came, shooting out, hitting the blood drill away, flinging Eno's hand in the air.

"Now you choose to come in?" Eno said.

"Quinn wouldn't want us to do this. We can beat them without having to kill them!" Sil shouted.

"Why make the task more difficult? And how helpful can these people really be if they have allowed themselves to be taken over by a demon tier beast?" Eno asked.

Sil now had both of his hands wrapped in lightning. Eno chose to ignore him and moved to the next person, but taking a step forward, he was hit again, this time hitting his body.

The strike was so strong, a hole had been made through his bicep, but it soon started to heal directly on the spot.

"Very well!" Eno said moving forward.

Moving his hands, each time Sil would produce a lightning strike towards Eno. The two of them were now suddenly fighting against each other.

The clashes between them were so strong that the Graylash members were unable to act, every time they tried to, they would be hit by a stray attack, flinging them off to the side. Two great powers in the room were colliding, and the enemy could do nothing to stop them.

"What! Now the problem isn't the Marked or the Graylash, but we have to worry about these two trying to kill each other!" Linda said.

"I think the bigger worry is if they kill us in the process of their fight!" Said Fex.

Chapter 1064: What would they do?

The power of the Demon tier beast was running through every single person that had a mark. Quinn could feel the energy being spread out to each of them. Still, he also could tell that most of the power was being concentrated on Robin and the other Graylash members by his side.

'I'm starting to understand why Demon tiers can be seen as so frightening. If it was patient, it could have taken over everyone slowly, and if it wasn't for the system, we would have never found out about the marking. Everyone could have been marked, and then it could have attempted to take them all over at once.'

'And just how many beasts are under the control of the Demon tier?'

It was undoubtedly a frightening thought, and it made Quinn reluctant to go out hunting and to search for these Demon tier beasts. Thinking of Hilston having a full set of Demon tier armour meant he must have at least defeated four of these things.

'Just how much of a monster are you? Would he have been able to deal with this easily? Am I still that far off from the so called, Strongest human?'

Thinking about this, it was only encouraging Quinn even more. He couldn't just win this fight by the skin of his teeth. He needed to evolve and become stronger so Demon tiers would no longer be a problem for him.

With his HP at fifty percent, Quinn aimed to get rid of the troublesome ones first. The lightning strikes were fast, but he had an attack that could do something similar, but the move took up too much blood.

A flash step was used at the right moment to avoid a strike, and the second Quinn landed, he held out his fingertip like a gun firing a blood bullet.

[Level 3 blood bullet activated]

As the bullet went through the Graylash member's hand, he felt great pain, and there was hardly any residence at all, but Quinn wasn't done yet. After using the blood bullet, his finger would be out of action.

Unfortunately, Quinn couldn't level up the blood bullet to level five and unlock the blood cannon, but there were a few changes to the skill.

After levelling it up, the blood bullet, rather than taking 1/5 of his total health, it would now take up 1/5th of his current health when in use. Which meant the lower his health was, the less it would take up.

Firing off the bullet in succession, Quinn aimed for accessible spots to hit all ten Graylash members, using every single one of his fingers.

As a bullet went towards Robin though, his body seemed to be encased with lightning striking the bullet, not allowing it to get through.

His health was now incredibly low. He used the blood bank to its fullest, healing him and his fingers up once again.

[Level three blood bank activated]

[100 millilitres of blood consumed]

Through testing with Eno, Quinn had learnt a lot about the blood blank. Even though he didn't need to consume 100 millilitres of blood for his health to completely regenerate, this amount was what gave the quickest results when healing.

His fingers were back to what they once were, but now the blood bullet could no longer be used for another twenty-four hours regardless if his fingers were healed. The good thing about the new levelled up blood bank was now Quinn could store 300 millilitres of blood. Essentially giving him three lives in the middle of a fight, and it was more opportunity to use his stronger skills that took up more blood.

The Graylash men that had been hit weren't out of the fight, but they were hurt, and Quinn wasn't done yet. They continued to fire lightning towards Quinn, and he could now see Robin charging towards him as well.

'Isn't he afraid of getting hit by the lightning?' Quinn thought.

However, even if the strikes from the others would hit him, they would do nothing, being reflected from the lightning off his own body. His power would just strike the other strikes, and he would continue to charge forward. Faster than any human he could see. Quinn couldn't avoid all the attacks, so some would hit him from time to time, but there was one person he needed to avoid, and that was Robin.

He was moving too fast for Quinn to even have time to use his flash step; he knew a collision was incoming. Moving his blood, it started to harden. Blood hardening was another skill Quinn had learned from Eno, but he could only get it up to the second level.

Moving his second stage of Qi to reinforce it, he took the blow head. It looked like a rocket had collided straight into Quinn's stomach as the two of them were dragged through the air.

[-40HP]

'Even with the armour on, the hardening, and Qi, it still does this much damage!'

Robin's body was all encased in lightning, but Quinn was able to slip away from him as the blood started to move, creating a barrier between the two of them. With the Qi helping out, he could detach himself from Robin's attack, and fell to the ground.

"My target was never you in the first place," Quinn said, breathing heavily with his chest full of pain from the attack. He held out both hands and looked at the nine others.

[Blood expand activated]

Suddenly, all of the nine Graylash members had parts of their bodies explode, blood ripping out from their skin. Some had been hit in the leg. Others had blood gushing from their arms. They weren't dead, but they certainly were now heavily injured that they couldn't fight like they did before.

Blood expand, wasn't a skill that vampires used, but something Quinn had learnt to do after figuring out his blood control. After firing off the blood bullets, Quinn had to use an immense amount of control to control the shots so they would remain inside the Graylash members. It had entered a part of their body but never left it.

The blood bullet was a condensed form of Quinn's aura, and through blood control, Quinn was able to make the blood bullet inside their body expand and go wild. Destroying a part of a person from the inside out.

[100 millilitres consumed]

[100 millilitres remaining]

"Now that these annoying guys are out of the way, I can finally deal with you!" Quinn shouted, looking at a furious Robin.

[Activate Nitrate accelerate]

This was the opportunity Quinn was waiting for. He knew the annoying members of the Graylash would soon be able to attack in some way. He needed to finish this battle now. Activating his armour sets active skill. He now needed to finish the fight in two minutes.

Pressing off his foot, he dashed left, right, and then straight towards Robin.

Sending out a strike from each of his fingertips, Robin still had an answer. His first attack had missed, but the following nine somehow managed to hit Quinn.

It zapped his body, sending him spinning in circles through the air. The next second, Robin was above him and slammed two fists filled with lightning hitting Quinn into the ground.

Using the last bit of his blood bank, he quickly used his new speed to get away but was now constantly running in circles around Robin. It just looked like a blur was running around the place.

'What happened? How did he attack me when I'm moving so fast? Was it because I stopped moving? Then I'll just keep moving so he can't hit me.'

"You're a fool, I have to admit you are fast, and maybe the move would have worked on me if I hadn't seen it before, but do you really think that you can outrun the power of lightning? The attacks may be weaker, but I can hit you anytime I want!" Robin said, now throwing out more little sparks of lightning in all directions.

He didn't know where Quinn was but just needed to hit him once for him to slow him down as his body reacted to the hit.

'If only I had my shadow!' Quinn gritted his teeth. 'I can't win without using it, I can only do one thing then. I have to do it!' Quinn thought.

A wall of red blood aura was raised in front of him, blocking off the first wave of lightning attack. It was smashed in seconds. Quinn knew that Robin could just make the same attack again, but that wasn't what he was aiming for.

[Shadow lock, release]

All around, shadow portals opened up, and the hundreds of Marked that he had in there, were all released from the shadow space. In an instant, they all turned to attack Quinn, but with his speed, he could avoid them all without them ever seeing him.

The small lighting strikes would hit them, hurting them, but wouldn't kill them, and now Quinn had Robin in his sight.

Bending his knees slightly, Robin got into a strange position. He looked like a sprinter and lighting started to run up his arms and legs. The Demon tier beast was activating Robin's soul weapon.

"You have to attack me at some point, and even if you touch my body, you will be zapped before anything can happen!" Robin shouted. The lighting continued to grow and was now wholly surrounding his body.

It truly did look like if anyone touched him, the fight would be over. Then Quinn suddenly appeared in front of him, standing there.

Without hesitation, Robin charged forward using all of his power to hit Quinn's Body. The two of them collided, but something was strange. There was no weight when Robin slammed into Quinn. The lightning from his body struck Quinn many times, and his body soon turned into nothing but shadows.

When Robin's acceleration started to slow down, he was at a speed where he could no longer stop himself, he could see another Quinn directly in front of him a distance away. His hand was shaped like a drill covered in the red aura.

He stomped his foot on the ground, and timed the punch perfectly. The only thing Robin could do, was to lift his body slightly to avoid the attack. With the last of his powers, he struck the floor, lifting him slightly off the ground, but it wasn't enough. There was too little time.

The hammer blood drill slammed into Robin's stomach, his arms, legs and head swung forward from the sudden stop. His body was thrown halfway up stopping at Quinn's shoulder and even caused his feet to slide across the floor. The veins on Quinn's neck showed as he fought against the velocity and weight until they eventually stopped, and Robin's body was no longer moving.

When comparing himself to Hilston, and Arthur, he knew this was what they would do, and was most likely the only option.

"I'm sorry...I couldn't keep you alive..." Quinn said.

Chapter 1065: The ultimate choice

The sounds of people huffing and panting were echoing as Ko and Ely continued to run as fast as they could through the tunnels. The place was similar to a maze with many variations where one could turn at, that would lead them to different areas of this tunnel.

Luckily, Ko had remembered the way back to the most important place, which was the one directly in front of the faction base.

"It looks like there aren't any Marked around here. Do you think they already got to where they needed to be?" Ely wondered.

That's when Ko suddenly stopped moving, making Ely bump into him. Just as he wanted to complain that he stopped, he too saw the silhouettes of two people turn around and start heading towards them.

"You just had to say something! Of course there would be Marked down here!" Ko shouted at him, as he pulled out his weapon. He was quite skilled with the sword, but he wasn't sure it would be enough to fight off the Marked. His ability was also rather useless in the small cramped space.

Unfortunately, retreating wasn't an option either. The Marked were fast and strong and now that they had seen them, they wouldn't stop chasing them. He would have to at least injure them to the same degree as his family members if he wanted to escape.

Ko punched the first Marked in the face and sent him stumbling back a few steps. He was ready to stab its companion, but before he got a chance to attack the second Marked who had opened his mouth wide, ready to dig into Ko's shoulder, Ely barged into it, making it fall to the ground.

However, it wasn't the only one sent flying. Having used too much force, Ely tripped over. The next second, the first Marked that had already recovered from the earlier hit, lept up but instead of trying to get revenge against Ko, it bit Ely into the side of his arm.

"Arghhh!" Ely screamed in pain. "Screw you, you bastard. Ko, just run, I'll hold these two back and any other! You have to get to that damned tree!"

Ko wanted to save his friend, but he knew that after being bitten, Ely would soon turn into a Marked as well. Gritting his teeth, Ko left the trio behind. The Marked who had just bitten into Ely wanted to give chase, but he felt something grab its leg and yank it back.

When he turned around he saw Ely with one of his eyes glowing.

"Now have a taste of your own power huh!" Ely screamed at it.

The process of turning was usually rather instantaneous, yet the one before it had somehow managed to delay it, giving him time to fight it.

Ko continued to run, until eventually reaching a hidden escape route. Wasting no time he pushed the trap door up and slid it off to the side before pulling himself up. Exiting from the doors, he could feel waves of energy hit him.

Something was going on and sparks of lightning were everywhere. Ko wanted to ignore it, so he turned to look around and thankfully no one seemed to be next to the pink tree, at least the back of it.

Running forward, Ko could now hear that the sounds of fighting were turning more intense, curious he couldn't help himself but to take a peak around the corner.

Head General Robin had blue lighting covering his whole body from head to toe, seemingly powering up for a massive attack, yet Ko was unable to see who exactly he was currently fighting. Once he was done, a big clash occurred, revealing Quinn who had been invisible before that. Now he stood in front of Robin open for an attack.

"Don't tell me he's been fighting against Robin this whole time?!" Ko mumbled in surprise to himself.

'Damn it, I cursed that guy, and his whole faction and now it looks like he's even risking his life for this place... what the hell kind of leader does that make me?' Ko thought as he stopped spectating and gazed at the giant tree.

He didn't really know where the crystal would be located, as he had never had the chance to fight against a Demon tier beast like this, so he grabbed his sword and swung it as hard as he could sideways like an axe.

During his swing, his weapon sword grew in size until it overshadowed the trunk itself... Yet after it landed there was no damage. Grumbling, Ko went over to inspect the tree, only to discover that his attack had barely left a scratch, yet on the blade itself a black substance could be seen, which looked exactly like beast blood.

Unsure what to do, Ko started to experiment with the way he attacked it. At first he attempted to take it down from the bottom, making it topple over, but that turned out to be ineffective.

Then he started to cut off the bark of the tree as he made his weapon larger. He managed to remove some pieces of bark and they left behind a pink glow underneath, proving that it was no ordinary tree at all.

After removing most of the bark from one side, he now could just see a large pink glowing substance but no crystal.

'It must be an outer layer or something, I just need to destroy this thing.'

Holding up his sword one more time, Ko swung it with all his strength again. As the two collided a loud clang resounded, and once again a small amount of black blood was seen seeping from the pink crystal. However, as if reacting to the aggressor, the tree let out a large energy, blasting Ko away and sending him flying across to the other end.

The leader dropped his weapon and was kneeling down on the floor. He could tell instantly that he had been marked and that something was trying to take control of him.

"No, I'm not letting you have your way, not when I'm this close!" He screamed in defiance, thinking of everyone in the shelter that had been hurt by this thing.

"I think you might need a little help, that sword just ain't going to cut it!" Suddenly, he heard a voice from behind, and what greeted him was the sight of the entire Cursed faction, Hayley and the faction members that had survived had come out from the faction base and made it to the large tree. However, they still had plenty of Marked chasing after them.

Peter and Linda were at the back, they had closed the door, and now were holding it steady against the onslaught of enemies, but it didn't stop them from breaking part of the door. As for Sil and Eno, the two of them looked injured as they stood on opposite ends from each other. Clearly avoiding each other's gaze.

Hayley knelt down by Ko's sides and looked at the marking on his back, noticing that it was progressing faster than what she had seen but the marking was growing and then subsiding at the same time as he thought against it, indicating that Ko must have had a strong will to resist the turning.

Fex, Sil, Eno, Wevil and Layla walked forward ready to destroy the tree.

"Wait!" Ko shouted. "If you touch that thing you'll be Marked as well!"

"Don't worry, we're not exactly 'ordinary' people?" Fex chuckled.

But when they turned back around they could see someone else standing in front of the tree, where the exposed pink crystal area was, and it was none other than Quinn.

'How did he manage to survive against Robin?' Ko wondered.

After defeating Robin, Quinn placed the forty or so Marked back in his Shadow lock to not cause any more problems. With its goons dealt with, he was ready to take down the tree as well. With the bark exposed and using his inspect skill he could tell that this was indeed the Demon tier beast.

Both of Quinn's legs started to be covered with a red aura, he then quickly ran back to where the others were.

"I still have about thirty seconds left of the active skill," Quinn informed them. "I'll take it down in one go."

Running at top speed, his vampire powers allowed Quinn to jump up and spin his body as he swung from his hips, to throw out his right leg as hard as he could to activate his active skill. This move had been taught to him by the martial arts master.

The spinning tornado kick!

The blood aura around his legs were now spinning like a drill once again, and at such a speed it slammed into the crystal. The entirety of the shelter and the ground it was on jolted forward a few centimetres due to the power behind the attack.

The roots that had been deeply dug in shifted forward and everyone lost their balance for a few seconds. When they looked at the tree, the pink crystal started to crack slowly, until eventually, it shattered. Black blood began oozing from it and the pink power started to fade.

The bright coloured leaves started to fade, adn all the colourful trees on the planet started to fade with it as well.

[Congratulations]

[The quest has been completed]

As Quinn landed and saw the system notification screen, he thought he could finally rest, ready to check out the rewards.

"Argh!" A scream could be heard from behind him, and all of them could see that Ko was rolling about on the floor. He continued to scream in pain at the top of his lungs.

"I don't know what's happening, I can't heal him!"

Peter and Linda noticed that the door was no longer being pushed back, and when they opened it up they could see that all the Marked were similarly rolling about on the floor in pain.

'What happened? Didn't we defeat the Demon tier beast? Shouldn't the ones marked return to normal?' Quinn wondered... before he realised that this very information had come from none other than Eno.

Looking up, he tried to see where Eno was, but he was nowhere to be seen.

"Now you have a difficult choice, Quinn," a voice said from behind. Turning he could see Eno, with a pink crystal that was almost see through in his hand. For a second Quinn was having a sense of Deja-vu, when Arthur had stolen the Demon tier crystal.

"With the power of the Demon tier crystal, I can use my ability to get rid of the markings on everyone here, thus saving their lives. However, you saw the power of this Demon tier crystal. Using it, you could create a weapon or a piece of armour that will undoubtedly bring us one step closer to defeating the Dalki race."

"I have given you many warnings Quinn, and after today's events I can confirm it even more. At the current rate, the human race is doomed to lose the war against the Dalki."

"It's up to you. Do you wish to save the ones afflicted, forsaking the rest of humanity, or shall we lament their sacrifice for the greater good?"

"You must now choose?"

Chapter 1066: Live on to the end

Quinn wasn't sure why, but for some reason Eno seemed to disdain making a decision on his own, rather opting to let others decide for him. It seemed like he was either afraid of having to take responsibility for the consequences of such an action... or perhaps he simply didn't care about the outcome either way.

'What's up with having to decide? Didn't he say that killing the Demon tier beast would get rid of the Markings?' Quinn wondered.

'Indeed, he did,' Vincent confirmed it. 'I'm afraid that technically speaking he isn't wrong about that. The Markings do seem to disappear from their bodies, but they also seem to be taking their life force away as they do.'

'It's hard to say whether he knew this would be the outcome, but if he told you about this possibility I'm certain you would have attempted to try and find another way to help those that have been Marked without killing the Demon tier.' Vincent added.

'I was an idiot to just trust him that defeating the Demon tier beast would be the end of it!' Quinn replied, pissed, 'Now it's too late to look for another way!'

'Quinn, now is not the time for regrets. As far as we know, this might have very well been the only solution. Just look at the current state of the Shelter! It has been taken over to this degree, despite you having acted as soon as you did! Barely any survivors are left standing. Do you really think we had the time to look for another way?'

The screams of people throughout the Shelter continued and Quinn had to agree that Vincent was right. He had to make a choice about whether or not to help them. Regardless of what could have happened, what Eno should have told him, he had to solve the situation their actions had led them to.

Originally, they had intended to use that Demon tier beast crystal on Sil. This was the exchange that was needed to use his power, but Quinn had other ideas about this in the first place, this was only his back up plan.

He never wanted to rely on Eno using his powers, but when he came across two Demi-god tier beasts as well, he now had enough to use Eno if he wanted to, which meant the Demon's crystal could now be used to create a weapon.

Until, Eno had just dropped this bombshell on him.

"Quinn, you can continue to hesitate but that will also have been your decision then," Eno stated, holding up the crystal.

Rolling around on the floor, Ko was barely conscious enough to register the conversation around him. Naturally, he wanted Quinn to use the Demon crystal to heal him, but more so he wanted his family members to survive this ordeal.

Alas, he was also aware just how precious a Demon tier crystal was. Factions would have wars to obtain such a thing. At the moment, the human race only had two Demon tier weapons, one belonging to Pure and the other to Oscar.

A third one would be of great help against the Dalki.

'After everything we have done to treat the Cursed like crap, they don't owe us anything,' Ko sighed, as he fought through the pain. He pulled out the Demi-god tier crystal from the side of his pouch and passed it on to Hayley.

The veins on his neck were showing, and it was hard for him to even speak. He was going through intense pain.

"Give it...to them." Ko requested through gritted teeth.

Turning, Quinn could see this... and it helped him make a choice.

"I can't do it! I can't be the selfish person you seem to want me to be Eno!" Quinn stated. "We can always find more Demon tier crystals, but we can't bring back the dead."

"Are you sure about this, Quinn? You know how long it has taken to find a crystal like this, and even though there are more, there isn't a lot of time until the Dalki will arrive," Eno questioned Quinn's determination.

At the moment, although Quinn looked to be strong standing there, his leg was throbbing with pain from the attack. His health was low from using the blood technique, and all he wanted to do was rest, but hearing this a new energy was rising in him.

"If the Dalki attack, and we don't have a Demon tier weapon, then I'll just find another way to defeat them! I've come this far without having to rely on them!" Quinn shouted.

At that moment, the crystal was seen as it was chucked in the air, and landed straight in Quinn's hands. He was confused, as the crystal still had its glow and power.

"Wait, Eno, I said save them, I told you to use the crystal!" Quinn said.

"Quinn!" Hayley shouted with tears running down her face. "He's getting better!"

Although they had gone through a lot of pain, the Marking had disappeared and Ko's breathing had slowed down, returning to normal. He was still weak, but his health had visibly improved.

'Did he use his ability without having to use the crystal?' Quinn wondered.

'No that's not it, we can't activate our ability like this,' Vincent clarified.

"I see you're confused." Eno said. "That crystal is rightfully yours to keep. Do what you wish with it, I told you before didn't I, defeating the Demon tier beast would get rid of the Marking. Everyone should be okay now."

"I just wanted to know, Quinn, what your answer would be when you would be faced with such a situation. We can always ask people these types of questions, but only when they are faced with the real situation is it possible to discover someone's real character."

"This time, you didn't really have to decide, but in the future there is no guarantee you will have such a luxury. It might be better for you to get used to this!"

Eno then started to walk away from Quinn, who unsurprisingly wanted to smash his face in for putting him through something like that, but Vincent, as his voice of reason, told him that Eno had a point of doing all this.

Although Quinn wasn't particularly listening to Eno, he chose to refrain from hitting him, if only due to how weak his body was currently feeling. It would be impossible for him to defeat even a regular vampire at the moment, much less one like Eno.

Before Eno was out of sight, he suddenly stopped for a few seconds and turned around.

"Your earlier decision... it reminds me of Arthur ."

'I'm like Arthur, what does he mean by that?' Quinn thought.

After a while, everyone who had been Marked and turned woke up again. Those that had been afflicted were aware of what they had done. Although they had not been in control of their body, they still felt responsible, which caused quite the awkward situation for many of them but the main issue was the Shelter that had suffered severely from all their scuffles.

Ko, Linda and Hayley were in charge of organising things to restore it to its former glory.

The first order was to heal all those that had been injured, including Ko and his family members. He wanted to have the sweet reunion and talk with his family he had desperately longing for, but it was time he did his job as Faction leader and head of the Shelter.

The Graylash family had been given their own room in the Shelter. Due to what had happened they didn't want to make a report back to Owen just yet, and waited for Quinn's order before proceeding to take any type of action. For the time being they just retrieved General Robin's body, which they respectfully put into a coffin.

When Quinn entered the room, everyone was surprised to see him.

"Is it okay to get some time, with just me and him?" Quinn requested politely.

The Graylash members of course obliged and quickly headed out of the room. Quinn went up to the coffin and lifted it up. The large wound on Robin's stomach had expertly been patched up. Nevertheless, the colour of his skin looked pale, yet they had managed to work around it, giving his lifeless body some grandeur for its final rest .

"I'm sorry..." Quinn apologised. "I couldn't even save you by turning you. I just wanted to tell you that from the time I met you, I considered you to be a good person and that I never wanted to do this to you. I'm sure you wanted to protect those in the Graylash family. From what I heard, some of those Marked claimed they would have been happier with death than to continue hurting innocent people."

"I wonder if you were the same and you wanted me to stop you like this? Or if you would have wanted to live, but I guess that will be something I'll never know now. I will make sure that you shall be able to live on within me. I have a job to do now, and I shall honor all the lives that have been lost and make sure their sacrifice wasn't in vain," Quinn vowed as he closed the casket and started to walk away.

Once he was out of the room, he took a deep breath and the others quickly went back in.

"Can I even be happy about this?" Quinn wondered, as he selected a certain icon from his system.

[Quest rewards received]

Chapter 1067: Best rewards yet

Quinn could still vividly remember the euphoria he had felt the first time he had received a reward from the system. Now it seemed as if that was another lifetime ago and the difficulty of the tasks he was receiving nowadays was also worlds apart from what it had been in the past.

The system worked in strange ways, and in the first place he couldn't really complain about getting rewarded for things he intended to in the first place.

In his possession, Quinn now had the pink Demon tier crystal, as well as the two moth crystals that were at the Demi-god tier level, yet there was no smile on his face nor any other sign of appreciation or happiness.

'These rewards... they will help me to grow stronger,' Quinn thought to himself.

The first reward was, as usual, an instant level up. Coincidentally, Quinn had also received enough Exp from killing the Demon tier beast to manage to level up twice.

[Quinn Talen: Level 66]

Three level ups translated into three more stat points for him to use. Quinn no longer thought it necessary to increase his Agility since his new set of armour provided him with enough speed.

Besides, after that value had crossed the 100 mark, he noticed that the difference was getting less and less noticeable. Although 200 was 2x 100 his speed didn't actually double, nevertheless it made him incredibly fast and he doubted there was a vampire faster than him when using the active skill.

[Stamina 73]

As such, he ultimately decided to put all three points into Stamina. Although his current stats already allowed Quinn to fight for what felt like a week straight, after increasing his Stamina through the legendary gear, he noticed that it also seemed able to affect his vessel inside him.

The vessel he was referring to was what held his Qi. After learning how to properly control Qi, he had never increased Stamina by a lot, so he only recently stumbled upon this knowledge.

However, in hindsight, given that using Qi had always tired him out, he should have come to that realisation earlier.

Quinns blood control remained his highest stat by far, and thanks to the quest and defeating the Demon tier beast mostly using his blood skills the system appeared to have chosen to reward it.

[Your blood control has increased +20]

'I did have to use one of my Shadow skills at the end, Shadow clone. Perhaps it was a good thing that the Demon tier never saw my shadow skills in the first place.'

The skill Quinn used against Robin, Shadow clone, allowed him to create another version of himself out of shadows. Currently his double was unable to persist for long, nor could it really attack anyone.

Still, it was just at level one at the moment, so Quinn hoped that by using it often, it would eventually improve and become more useful.

The last few rewards were things Quinn had not really expected. It wasn't some title, or a passive skill like he had received with the moth, but something else entirely.

[High-tier Instant Upgrade Crystal]

Quinn had never even heard of such an item before, but then again he was no forger. Perhaps on some planet somewhere, certain beasts carried those type of crystals within them.

[The high tier crystal can be used to upgrade the tier of any weapon or by one rank. The highest tier of equipment this crystal can be used on is legendary tier gear]

Based on the description, if Quinn handed this crystal over to Alex together with a piece of his legendary tier armour, the smith should be able to turn it into a Demi-god tier level of equipment. Alternatively it should allow him to turn an Emperor tier piece into a legendary piece, but that option seemed like a waste in comparison.

'Hold on a second? Didn't Alex tell me that he had problems creating gauntlets from certain crystals? What if I had more of these upgrade crystals? Couldn't I just keep using them on the advanced tier gauntlets I have with the lightning active ability? Then I could just get them up to the legendary or demi-god tier level.'

Still, for some reason, that felt like a bit of a waste as well. This was the first time he had received such a crystal and who knows when the system would decide to bless him with another.

As for the last reward Quinn received he didn't know what to do with it at all, as there was really no explanation for what it did.

[Demon tier seedling]

[A seed from a Demon tier beast. This item can be planted. It is uncertain what it will grow into.]

It seemed quite strange that even the system seemed unsure what exactly it would become. Still it was certain that it should be something amazing, one way or the other.

Nevertheless, Quinn was a bit frightened that if he planted the seed then perhaps another Demon tier tree might pop up... but was that such a bad thing?

'I could just clear one of the Cursed planets, and when it grows up, attack it again to farm for a Demon tier crystal. If that's what it actually does.' Quinn thought.

Looking at the rewards Quinn couldn't help but think back to his fight with the Demon tier beast. It was hard to say how difficult it was because he didn't really fight with the Demon tier itself. The most troublesome part seemed to be its ability to power those it turned and perhaps it could have turned an infinite amount of people.

It was still hard to tell whether Quinn would have had a chance against a Demon tier beast on his own or not. When fighting Robin, although it had the Demon tiers power in him it wasn't the same.

In a way the Demon tier crab was more difficult to fight, were as the Demon tier tree seemed to be far more dangerous.

Still, Quinn could use this for future reference, that Demon tiers were strange as they had all sorts of abilities.

The Shelter was in the middle of being rebuilt, and Quinn had decided that the Cursed faction would stay here for a while. He had even called up Sam to make a couple of requests of him. First was to send over a group of people form the Cursed Faction that could help with the rebuilding of things.

He also asked if there was any progress on a little favour he had asked, and judging from the grin on his face, the answer he received was exactly what he wanted to hear.

'Looks like we'll be able to use all three Crystals as items then,' Quinn thought, as his secret plan to help Sil was progressing.

Apart from that, he asked Sam to update the Graylash family on what happened, Quinn wasn't going to shy away from the truth, and told him to explain why he had to kill Robin with his own hands.

With the Cursed report and the other Graylash members who were present he was sure that Owen would understand, he seemed to be quite the reasonable person, as for the last request....

Standing outside, Quinn could see that a ship was coming towards the planet. Sam had sent over a team immediately to help out with things. As it landed in the ship area, Quinn, Peter and Sil were there to greet them.

"Come on, come on!" An impatient voice as the ship's door slowly slid open. When it finally opened, a person was seen flying straight towards Quinn, and stopped just seconds away from his face blowing his hair slightly.

"Let me see it, please let me see it! Show me the crystals, that's why you told me to come here, right?!" Alex pleaded excitedly, with his wings flapping widely, reminiscent of a dog's tail.

Chapter 1068: Important question

Alex's hands couldn't stop shaking as he carefully held all three crystals in his hand. He had even taken out a pair of special white gloves that looked like they had never been worn before to handle them. When Quinn finally placed them in his hands via his shadow, the crystals continued rattling against each other.

"Careful, I have to be extra careful with my precious, can't let them touch the dirty ground!" Alex mumbled, as if possessed.

"Just put them in your shadow for now, they won't get dirty," Quinn advised, giving Alex a meaningful look. Although they looked fragile, it was impossible for them to shatter, even if he were to throw them against the ground. Besides, wasn't he going to pound them with a hammer soon enough?

Nevertheless, seeing the excitement in Alex' eyes put a smile on Quinn's face, strengthening his conviction that he was the best person to handle them.

"Look at these wings, they're so red, and they're flapping about so fast." People who were watching whispered.

Noticing that they had attracted a crowd, Quinn decided that they should head inside the Shelter and perhaps continue their talk inside the faction base. While walking, he shared some insight about the Demon tier, and Demi-god tier beasts' abilities, powers and such.

Forgers would usually do this kind of research into the crystal, as it made it easier for them to make the most out of their crafts.

"I've decided that we are going to stay here for a while," Quinn shared his plans. "The Cursed faction, along with Sam, will take care of things. Once we have everything we need, we can head on to Blade Island. I invited you here so we could get a head start. If you find the forgery here good enough, I was hoping you could start on the weapons right here."

The best decision was to make Sil wait, whether that was an option or not was the real question. But the last time Quinn had called upon Sam he had received some good news, which meant they could perhaps progress to the Blade Island sooner than he had anticipated.

The only problem would arise if the Blades were still on the island. According to Sam, Brock had already been sent out to scout the area, so they should soon find out. If the Blades were still on there, they would only proceed after Quinn had procured better equipment for his family members, if not then they would go out immediately.

It was as simple as that, yet either way, Quinn would prefer to have the new beast gear ready, so they could react to any unforeseen circumstances.

"I can't give you an exact time, but it will definitely take longer than anything else I made," Alex said nervously, feeling the pressure his task involved, before he added, "I don't want to do a bad job like I have done with the Emperor tier crystal and I've already asked Logan to try and locate the person who has made the Demon tier weapon for Oscar. Having someone who is more experienced with higher tier crystals by my side should help in bringing the most of those crystals."

"Alex, you're the main forger for the equipment for our Cursed faction, and more importantly, you are the only one I can fully trust. I don't mind you getting tips from someone or even a helping hand, but I won't accept something created by anyone else!" Quinn stated.

"Of course!" Alex replied, and Quinn could tell how happy he was due to his wings falling about. Sometimes his facial expression and his wings didn't match, but Quinn knew which one to believe.

"Once we have figured out what will be best for the crystals it will also take some time to actually make the items," Alex reminded Quinn. "Speaking off, how was the set I made for you last time?"

"Your set is one of the major reasons I trust you so much, it's the best equipment I have used till date. I guess I will need to thank Helen in person for that one," Quinn answered with a smile.

The two of them had eventually reached the faction base, and the forgery turned out to be more than adequate. Although a lot of the Shelter had been destroyed the damage to the faction building was mostly concentrated on the hallway and training hall.

Due to it being a Tier A Shelter it had equipment just as good as on the Cursed ship, so Alex could get to work as soon as his assistant would arrive.

"Before I go in, I need your expertise on something. Have you ever heard of an 'upgrading crystal'? Something that can be used to increase a weapon's tier?" Quinn asked, curious to see how rare the thing he got actually was.

"An upgrading crystal?" Alex put his hand on his chin as he pondered over the question. "Can't say that I have. I know it's possible to upgrade a weapon's tier by using higher tier crystals, but at that point it would be better to just forge something out of those crystals. One would usually only resort to that for a lack of higher tier crystals and a very urgent need for such a weapon upgrade."

"But who knows, we haven't been exploring beast planets for that long, so maybe there is something like that out there. I can only tell you as a forger, if such a thing exists, it would be priceless."

Quinn nodded, as that was exactly what he had feared, before his thoughts revolved around finding a way to make the system reward him with more of those upgrade crystals, not just for himself, but also for the rest of the team. It would certainly give them more of an advantage when hunting.

'What exactly should I use the upgrade crystal on? I'm hoping that the Demon tier or the Demi-god tier will be enough to forge me a new set of gauntlets to use, if so then the crystal would be wasted on them.'

'Then I wouldn't need to waste it on the advance tier gauntlets. I could use it on the armour set, but it remains to be seen what upgrading the set will do to the active skill. Will it be strengthened? Perhaps replaced with something else? ... or in the worst case, it might be completely removed...'

Quinn shook his head, as if that would somehow negate the last possibility. Still, he chose to trust in the system's reward being an overall good thing.

The last thing that he considered for an upgrade was his Emperor tier mask. The red coloured mask that would fill up an adrenaline bar, and allow him to boast a singular stat.

For now Quinn decided to keep the upgrading crystal with him. With the risk involved, he preferred to think about it some more and once he had made his choice, he would see if Alex could use it in some way.

Leaving the foraging area, when exiting out of the door, he unexpectedly bumped into Sil who had been waiting outside. Sil was looking downward and it appeared as if he was gathering his courage to say something as he was twirling his fingers.

"You look like you want to ask something. Let me guess, is it about Vorden and Raten?" Quinn asked.

"Now that we have the crystals... do you think we can really get them back?" Sil asked politely this time. He didn't seem angry but of course Quinn could see that this question was gnawing at him, and if it were up to him, they would have set out long ago.

"Let me ask you something Sil, I heard you and Eno had a fight, do you trust him 100%?" Quinn asked the other instead.

"Definitely not!" Sil replied instantly. "I hate that guy."

"Well, that makes two of us," Quinn admitted with a smile. "That's why I don't want to rely on him. For now, I have some good news. We have someone who is willing to learn the same ability as your friend, so we hopefully will be able to deal with things without having to overly rely on Eno. We're close, Sil, just a little longer I promise."

It seemed that was enough to cheer him up, and the fact that Quinn was still thinking about Vorden and Raten made him happy, just for how long he didn't know.

While walking away, there was still one problem that they had yet to solve.

'We still need to find bodies for Raten and Vorden. Logan hasn't been able to find any yet, and who knows what drawbacks there could be if we use the one's Eno has provided. The short life span is just the only one he admitted to, but knowing him there could be a plethora of other things he just didn't mention. I can only count on you, Logan!'

Finally leaving the Shelter, Quinn stretched his arms, things were going good and it was rare for him to have some time to rest like this. In fact, he had grown so used to doing things, that his hands and legs were itching a little for something to do.

"Should I play more of Power fighters, I did promise the martial arts God I would get to rank one. Or maybe I should focus on levelling up all my skills to level five, but without fighting anything it would be quite difficult.' Quinn pondered over his next course of action.

At that moment, a certain person approached Quinn. He could tell who it was straight away by their scent. Without turning around, he was aware that it was none other than Layla. Her hair blew slightly in the wind, and her face was a little red.

"Quinn...it's been a while I was wondering if we could talk," Layla spoke in a somewhat embarrassed tone.

"Oh.." Quinn replied, not really knowing what else to say. "Is it something important, or did something happen?"

"It is important....to me." Layla said.

Chapter 1069: I like you

Moments before Layla came to interact with Quinn, she was busy going around the Shelter checking if there was anything she could do to help.

Initially, she went over to members of the Cursed faction that were in the midst of rebuilding the Shelter. Layla thought she could at least help them via her telekinesis ability.

"Miss Layla, we appreciate your offer but we are fine on our own. What would people think of us if they were to see one of our leaders having to help with this kind of manual labor? They would think that the Cursed faction was either weak or lacked members! Please get some rest, and leave this work to us! One of the men quickly prevented her from helping.

She was about to insist until she saw how great a job they were doing. Ever since the Cursed faction had received military personnel from Oscar, the one thing they didn't lack were earth ability users, especially since the earth books were no longer guarded as a secret by the military.

Nowadays, people from all factions were able to learn the ability up to their limit.

Layla sighed, aware that if she were to try and help she would most likely just get in the way. As such, she continued further into the Shelter on the lookout for any odd jobs she could help with. However, no matter where she went, everything was running at full capacity with maximum efficiency.

'I guess I'm just not really needed around here,' Layla thought dejectedly. 'Was there even any point in me coming here, if there's nothing I can help with? How can I just laze around when there should be so much to do? I mean I saved some people's lives, but Nate or Dennis could have helped fight the beasts as well. I just feel so....Useless.'

"Hey, Layla, you look free. Mind helping me out a little in the medical centre?" Hayley suddenly appeared behind her with the request. She was carrying around large boxes of supplies, yet the very next second they started to float up in the air.

"With pleasure," Layla smiled at her, happy to finally get something to do.

Inside the medical centre, Layla was hitting her stride as she talked with the patients that were awaiting their treatment. Their injuries varied a lot, from simple scratches, to broken bones, yet by far the most common ones were the bitemarks.

Everyone found Layla's presence quite welcoming, and from time to time she would help Hayley out whenever the older woman decided against using her ability. After all, MC points were limited and it would take time to recover them.

As such, Hayley saved it for patients with more severe injuries, whereas the ones that could heal on their own, would be treated the traditional way.

'Should I just transform into my third form? I would just need to hit them with some green fire to help them,' Layla wondered when she watched yet another injured person getting stitched up.

'No, what am I thinking? This isn't the Vampire World, so if they were to suddenly see me transform into a giant snake, they might mistake me for a beast and I could trigger a panic.'

Even though Layla was contributing to the common good, her mood started to dampen. How much was she really helping? Wasn't her role something that could be filled by someone else once again? In comparison, Hayley had a role that only she could fulfill.

'Even Cia was able to see the future. Who knows if she had been alive, she might have been able to warn us about the Demon tier beast. Maybe even told us how to defeat it to save many lives, or at least limit the damage,' Layla thought.

Just then, a new patient came in. It was a young woman who was scared and frightened to the point she was shivering. Since Hayley was still busy, Layla stood up and led the newcomer to a free bed. Once she was settled down Layla offered her some water, before she asked her for the reason she was here.

"I haven't been able to sleep. I keep thinking that I'll be attacked in the middle of the night, or turned. I can't even look at my own family because I'm scared that they might attack me again," the girl explained amidst her sobbing.

Although Hayley could heal the body of those who had been injured, the same could not be said for mental wounds the people suffered from. Seeing this, a strange purple smog appeared.

'This is something I can do, even if it's just a temporary solution,' Layla started to consume the purple fog in the air. Once she was done the girl's mood was elevated. It felt like all her worries and everything that was around her had suddenly gone.

Her eyes brightened up, and soon after a brief chat she was left to sleep in the bed for a while, since it was the first time it seemed she felt safe.

"Oh my, you haven't been here too long, but you already know how to deal with patients without me," Hayley commented from the side.

"W-what do you mean?" Layla asked nervously, turning away trying to avoid eye contact. She was unsure how much the other woman had seen.

"Come on Layla, did you forget I saw you grow horns the other day? Don't worry I'm not scared I'm just....worried." Hayley whispered next to her ear.

Layla looked up, unsure why Hayley would be worried about her.

Since this wasn't the best place to discuss things, Hayley went to the entrance and turned the sign from "The Doctor is in" to "The Doctor is on break", before she gestured for Layla to follow her into the back. Pulling out a seat, Hayley patted it a couple of times, for Layla to sit next to her

"I can't imagine what you have all been through but it's clear something is going on. Back when you and Quinn had been at the school you only had basic abilities. But look at you guys today, shadow, telekinesis and from what I saw you are able to do even more incredible things."

"Working in my field, especially as part of the military, I've learned that oftentimes when humans take a shortcut, there are large drawbacks involved. I just can't help but think, Quinn, everyone is taking on far more risks by not telling anyone what is going on, while putting the whole burden on themselves."

When Layla listened to Hayley, she could tell from the older woman's tone that she was genuinely concerned. A lot of people forgot that the very same 'Cursed faction leaders' were agewise nothing more than young adults who would have just left school.

Given their positions they were treated like adults, whereas Hayley still saw them as slightly older children that needed help and guidance wherever possible.

In honesty though, Hayley was also very concerned for her father who she hadn't seen very much ever since joining the Cursed faction.

"We can handle it," Layla replied like some sort of preprogrammed answer.

Hayley leaned forward and started to rub her finger up Layla's cheek.

"Like hell you can!" She insisted as she wiped the tear falling down from one of her eyes, and then moved her hair out the side to see the two little bumps.

"Wow, so these things are real, does it hurt when I push them in? Oh, maybe a third one will come out in the middle?" Hayley joked around.

The visual image made both of them laugh and Layla confided in the other, telling her a bit more about herself and what she could do. Nevertheless, she abstained from revealing anything about vampires in general or who exactly it was that had turned her, despite the other one probing her.

While talking, Layla did notice however, that she would often try to ask about her father.

"Let me ask Quinn to set up a meeting for the two of you," Layla suggested. "I know Quinn is super busy at times but he is sensitive to these types of things."

"Thank you," Hayley gave her a bigger smile than the ones before..

Someone knocked on the door, before coming. "Sorry for the intrusion, but I've been told that despite the sign Hayley is here"

Seeing the girl who had entered. Hayley stood up and almost had tears in her eyes herself.

"Wendy, you're all good!"

Although the two of them hadn't really spoken much, Wendy had protected her and there was a link between these two people. As they ran up to hug each other.

'I guess it's my cue to get out of here,' Layla decided and was about to leave.

"Wait, Layla, I nearly forgot what I wanted to tell you!" Hayley called out to stop her for a moment. "Earlier you said that Quinn always seems to be busy and that there never seems to be a right time to talk to him, right? Well, he seems pretty free at the moment, so you should go and talk to him. Who knows when you get another opportunity like this?"

As if to prove Hayley's point, shortly after she went out, Layla saw none other than Quinn.

'I don't want to have any more regrets,' Layla, perhaps still influenced by the pep talk she had just received, decided to approach Quinn.

"Quinn...it's been a while I was wondering if we could talk," Layla spoke in a somewhat embarrassed tone.

"Oh.." Quinn replied, not really knowing what else to say. "Is it something important, or did something happen?"

"It is important....to me." Layla said.

However, she suddenly noticed that the stuff she wanted to talk with him about was rather private, so she asked him to accompany her out of the Shelter. Since he was done with his business and Layla wouldn't just come to him without a reason, he agreed.

The duo headed through the forest. There was an awkward silence between the two of them throughout the whole walk. Eventually the duo arrived at a lake that was green in colour, making for an idyllic scene.

On the other end, they could even see a beast drinking from the lake itself. It was too far to be any concern for them though.

"Quinn, is there anyone you like?" Layla asked, finally breaking the silence.

"Anyone I like?" Quinn was shocked by the sudden question. He had been wondering what she might want to talk about, but his thoughts had mostly been about something Pure related.

However, after thinking about it, he was quickly reminded of how Vincent would constantly tell him to have some fun with certain girls.

"Like, what do you think about Erin? She's a beauty that everyone liked at school?" Layla continued, since Quinn didn't say anything.

"Erin? Well me and her don't really talk much. Besides, she's quite scary when someone upsets her," Quinn replied, before he added. "And between the two of us, it's not particularly hard to upset her accidentally."

He thought that might break the ice a bit, but Layla didn't really react. Instead she continued questioning him:

"Then what about that Bonny girl? I mean you kissed her on live TV. Isn't an adventurous girl like her your type? Someone who is always doing exciting things and stuff on her own?"

"Please, how many times have I tried to explain that that whole thing was all a giant misunderstanding? I was just trying to do something with my vampire powers and it backfired spectacularly. Also, I don't think I would like someone like her as my girlfriend."

"I mean, I would never be able to see her, unless I accompanied her on one of her adventures and with the type of responsibilities I have now, I can't really afford to do that. Sometimes I wished all of this was over, and I could return to being a normal guy. If I wasn't the Cursed faction leader, I would just finish my military training, look for the right woman to settle down, have a family, a house, two kids, maybe a dog," Quinn shared his thoughts.

At his point he didn't really know whether was saying but the image of when he lived his life as Vincent, with his family had appeared in his head.

"Then what about Helen? She made it clear that she liked you. A strong beauty that probably is matched with your talents and could give you the kind of life once all of this is over?" Layla asked.

"Helen... I think she is a good person... but I can't help but be cautious towards her. How can I date someone if I don't even trust them?"

Layla was a bit surprised after hearing the answer. The others Quinn had disregarded quite quickly, but with Helen he had hesitated. Did that mean that he did have some feelings for her, but chose not to act because he couldn't trust her?

Perhaps he didn't trust her due to how much time they had spent together. But didn't that mean, that if he were to trust her, then there was nothing stopping him from pursuing her?

Once again, Layla was thinking of pulling back, but clenching her fist she told herself that she couldn't give up this time. She walked in front of Quinn, standing at the very edge of the lake and turned around, placing her hair behind her ear.

"Since you've been so honest with me, I only have one more question for you, Quinn. What about me? Quinn, I... like you....I like you a lot, but what do you feel towards me?"

Chapter 1070: The answer

'D-did Layla just confess to me?' Was Quinn's first thought after hearing those words.

'Ah, to be young and innocent again. Quite the man you are, to force the girl to make the first step, then again, otherwise I bet you would have never realised that she liked you, even though it's been pretty obvious from the beginning if you asked me. Heck, I haven't even been with you the whole time, yet it was obvious.'

Vincent teased Quinn.

Quinn still had trouble wrapping his head around it. Sure, there had been times some girls had shown interest in him in a certain manner, but those had been far more sexual than anything and could mostly be attributed to his Charm. As such, he had never regarded himself as the type to well... be popular with girls.

In his entire life he had only been confessed to by Helen before today, but even then, he was still unaware whether Helen genuinely liked him or was merely after the position he had ended up in.

"What do I think of you?" Quinn repeated her question as if to find some deeper meaning behind it. Unlike the others, it was far harder to answer the question, not just because the one in question was right before him, but more so because he himself was unsure what the answer to that was.

Thinking about it, Layla had helped him from the beginning, even long before she had been turned. She had always been there and was one of the few people that actually knew nearly everything about him, what he was going through and was of similar age.

When he thought up to this point, he wasn't exactly against the idea, but didn't the fact that he had to ponder over all these facts bear testimony that he himself wasn't entirely sure about it?

Alas, her intense gaze made it clear that she would like an answer now and not some other time, however there was one thing he felt he had to address first....

"Layla, a-are you sure you want to be with me? You know I'm the one responsible for your mother's death, right? Back then you used your ability to save her, but then she used her Qi to save your life. The thing is, my attack would have undoubtedly killed her... she would have died by my hands if she hadn't saved you. Do you really want to be with someone who is responsible for the death of someone so close to you?" Quinn asked.

He didn't choose to ask this question to suddenly change the topic, but he felt that such a thing wasn't exactly something they could both overlook. Perhaps part of him also wanted to show her that she deserved better, that there was someone better for her.

"I know you aren't like that, Quinn. You are one of the most righteous persons I know. I have grown up with my mother, so I know that she herself acted for what she perceived would be for the 'greater good'. She was a woman who cared more about her ideals than her own feelings, even if it was towards her own flesh and blood."

"I was raised by her, so for the longest time, I believed in those ideals. That my personal feelings would have to take a step back if it was for the sake of others... but I don't want to live like that any longer! I'm aware that you were partly responsible for her death, but in the end my mother chose to save my life and I decided that I wish to find happiness in it, for her sake as well as my own."

Suddenly Layla came closer and grabbed Quinn's hands.

"I just didn't want to hide my feelings for you anymore. I want to be with you and I don't just want to be by your side. I want to grow old together with you, and enjoy our lives once this whole thing is over." Layla declared confidently.

Looking into her eyes, Quinn's heart started to beat faster, and his hands started to heat up, but it was only for a few seconds, as a strange energy came over him, and by the looks of it, it came over her as well. The two of them almost pulled away as they both felt a pain in their heads.

'Vincent, what's going on, what's happening to us?' Quinn asked in a panic.

The headache went away as quickly as it had appeared, but the rosy feelings, and his heart beat had returned to normal, and he wasn't being swayed by his emotions as much as he had been before. Even Layla, when looking at Quinn, her feelings seemed a little dulled.

A big sigh could be heard from Vincent in his head.

'I'm sorry Quinn, I had hoped that since you used to be a normal human, it wouldn't affect you. This was actually one of the reasons why I had tried pushing you towards trying to find happiness with others so much. It's to do with the family bond.' Vincent explained. 'Part of your bloodline, the Cursed family bloodline, now runs inside her veins... which means it will be impossible for you two to truly be together.'

"If it had been anyone else in the Cursed family it would have been a different story, but as for Layla... The one who turned Layla was none other than you after all. I'm afraid there is no solution, otherwise I would have told you as soon as I saw her feeling like that for you.

Quinn didn't know why, but he wasn't relieved, in fact he felt greatly saddened by it. It would have been one thing for him to reject her, but for a vampire thing being the cause for this... 'Did I actually have feelings for Layla as well then?' Quinn wondered. 'Are you sure, there is no way?!"

'... I mean, theoretically there is. Either you or her would have to return to being truly human. However, you better than anyone else should know what an extremely difficult thing that is to do. I do not know of another way.' Vincent answered, in a sombre tone feeling bad for the one having given him this news.

Layla, once she had cleared her mind in the few seconds he had conversed with Vincent, felt the same way about Quinn as she had always done. She let out a deep sigh, but when she looked up, she still had a smile on her face.

"I can see that this whole situation seems to be a bit much for you. You are taking a long time to think about this, but perhaps that is a good thing. At least you haven't instantly rejected me, unlike the others. I don't know who or what is in your mind Quinn, maybe you're just too busy at the moment, but I will fight against my rivals, just as you are fighting against the Dalki."

"This means war!" Layla said, pointing to Quinn and giggling a little at the end.

'She seems so happy.' Quinn thought as a warm feeling was felt all over his body, he too couldn't help but smile back at her.

"Yeah, I'm sorry, I guess I can be a real klutz in that field. I am truly happy that you confessed to me, it really is just that before today, I have never thought about that possibility. ... So how about a date?" Quinn suggested with a shy smile. "Don't you think it would only be fair that the two of us get to know each other properly, outside of this vampire stuff, outside of all this school mess, before I decide whether we would make a good match for the rest of our life, especially given how long it could be?"

Layla put out her hand again, and raised her little pinky, Quinn understood she was going for a pinky promise. He didn't hesitate, yet as his pinky touched hers to confirm the promise, the headache the two of had suffered earlier returned, forcing them to let go.

"Quinn, what is that?" Layla asked, stupefied, as she held her head.

"Don't worry." Quinn replied, not wanting to break her heart. "It's vampire stuff. I'll sort it out. I've sorted everything else out so far haven't I?"

Walking back, Quinn was determined to get an answer more so now about turning vampires back to humans, and there was one person who knew the possible answer, even if he was the last person Quinn wished to talk to.

Richard Eno was the original who had turned Arthur into a vampire, so perhaps he also knew a way to be turned back. Still, based on Eno's personality it was clear he wouldn't just comply, especially for something that might drastically lower their fighting power.

After moving the Demon tier beast and bringing back Vorden and Raten, it might prove to be a better time to ask the old-timer.

Returning to the Shelter, all the faction members and the few Graylash members that had still been there seemed to be quite on high alert. Even the kitchen staff looked a little worried. Entering the faction base, Quinn was told that the Cursed and the others were currently in a meeting.

"Sir Quinn, if the two of you could head that way, I believe this matter is something of utmost importance." One of the Faction members in the base spoke and led them to the meeting room.

"Quinn, you're here just in time." The hologram figure of Sam greeted him, from the centre of the table. He was green in colour which looked quite menacing in its own right, quite the contrast to Sam's own figure.

"Unfortunately, I do not bear great news, but it falls under my duty to inform you all of the current situation. As you know, the Dalki have been quite active in the area, and at the moment, Owen, along with the Graylash family, are engaged in combat against them."

"I'm calling you right now to tell you that Owen seems to be in trouble and I'm not sure how long they can hang in there!"

Chapter 1071: An intruder

With war having been declared, all of the planets that the human race lived on were on high alert, especially those in the Graylash area. The Dalki had been making very strange movements from what they had been able to monitor.

Bit by bit, they would be testing the waters, as small scuffles between certain spaceships, as well as on orange portal planets had occurred. There was a reason why the human race wasn't so quick to give up the beast planets and were still hunting for beasts daily.

For one, they acted as the fuel for the powerful Mechs that would be used by those who weren't strong ability users, giving them a fighting chance against the Dalki. The second reason, which was true for both sides, was they would be used to power their spaceship's weapons.

The large ships created by both sides were strong and resilient enough that only a Demon tier weapon would be able to harm. As such, the most common way for a fight to occur in space was to send out fleets of smaller ships, in order to eventually invade the larger ship from the inside.

Alternatively, smaller fleet ships would act as a mothership and land on the planet, forcing the other side to protect it. The weapons on board were to destroy these smaller ships.

In the current situation, Bonny and Void had decided to go and film the fights up close. After all, they were war reporters and the best ones at that. Humanity needed to know what was happening and they couldn't be scared.

At the moment the two of them were on board one of the larger Graylash ships, led by one of the top Graylash members named Hermes. It was a ship with a force of a hundred thousand on board. Thirty thousand of them consisted of those from the Graylash family and their follower factions, while the others were from one of the military groups given by Oscar for Owen to command.

The reason they were on this ship rather than the one Owen was on, was due to the latter acting as an important figure in this war. He himself wouldn't get involved in fighting unless he had to. Yes he was a powerful person, but that was also why he couldn't be the first one to charge in when there was trouble.

As such, Bonny had made the decision to go on board another Graylash ship that was more likely to experience combat first.

In one of the training rooms, the Graylash were currently on their next course of actions, figuring out the best way to protect certain planets in case the Dalki would attack them. They also went through drill's and more. There were even teams that would be sent out from the ship, to the faction basis on the beast planets just in case they were needed to help with a hunt.

"As you can see behind me, everyone in the Graylash group is working diligently to protect our front line. So far there have been a total of four skirmishes between us and the Dalki. For now we have claimed victory, as we have successfully been able to defend all of the planets. We will continue to bring you news as it develops." Bonny reported, ending the recording there.

Void gave a nice little thumbs up, noting that they were off the air.

Bonny gave a sigh, as she went to sit down in the corner of the room with Void, there was a little bar refreshment area that would serve snacks and drinks for the team every time they were done with training, or had a tough meeting.

Since the meeting was still going on in the main area, Void and Bonny were sitting on their own.

"Do you think what we're doing is right?" Bonny suddenly asked her colleague.

"You mean about the report we just made?" Void wondered as he was checking the footage back from his camera. He also had a strange set of glasses that were green. They would be linked to a few drones around the Graylash ship. So he wouldn't miss if anything big was going on.

"Yeah, although I said we successfully defended against their attacks and it's good to make sure that the people don't panic, the truth is, there still hasn't been a level of attack similar to the one on Planet Caladi!" Bonny clarified.

"Yes, it was a good thing Quinn was there at the time. Otherwise that would have been a loss, but I don't think what you're doing is wrong to answer your question. We have been in this business long enough to know that. Currently, there is nothing to panic about. Speaking of, did you hear the Cursed have managed to hunt down a Demon tier beast? It seems like we might have picked the wrong thing to film."

Void replied.

Hearing this, Bonny did regret that they chose not to follow the Cursed, but at the time she had no clue what they had been up to. Besides, it just felt a little awkward between the two of them, ever since the last time she had tried to interview them, almost as if she was afraid they would have proven to be a nuisance if they had followed them.

"Don't worry, my instinct is telling me something big is going to happen here."

Just then, as she said those words, the ship's alarms had sounded. The whole ship broadcast a special announcement for everyone to hear it.

"Attention everyone. A large main ship has been seen heading to Planet Genentech. They have sent fleets to the beast planet and it looks to be a force of around two hundred strong."

'Two hundred, that's four times the amount of Dalki that have been sent to Planet Caladi. Why are they moving this many Dalki for one beast planet? Is it a distraction, to send an even larger force to defend the planet while they attack somewhere else?' Bonny couldn't help but think, but that wasn't her job, she was sure that the Graylash had already gone through every scenario they could think of.

"The main Graylash ship is the closest to the planet, and due to the size of the force, our family head Owen Graylash himself has decided to engage in combat, sending out a strong force. He wants us to stay on standby and act as we see fit if there is no response from his end."

This was it! Bonny could tell that this would be the first great clash of the second war with the Dalki race. Although Quinn had participated in the first 'battle' that started the war, it was hard to call that a battle. However, with how strong a force of two hundred Dalki represented and depending on how many spikes there were, there could be many lives lost in the battle.

"Come on Void, let's take the ship, and make our way down to that planet." Bony ordered in a rush.

Void quickly packed his things, and was already calling his drones to return to him, but then he had seen something devastating on one of the drones in his glasses. Down one of the hallways, a person covered in blood could be seen.

Trying to find them, Void looked through all the drones possible and could see what looked to be a human walking in blood, in the ship's docking area. He then walked up to the leaver, and looked at the drone directly. His face and clothes covered in blood, something was chilling when Void looked at this person who didn't look human. The one thing that was noticeable about them more than anything, was the red piercing eyes.

'He knows I'm filming him.' Void thought as he stood still in fear.

"What's wrong? We have to go!" Bonny hurried him.

"No." Void replied. "We need help, we need to hide!"

The man with the red eyes who was being filmed pulled the leavers and soon the bay started to open, allowing several small fleets of dark black ships to land inside.

"The Dalki, they have boarded this ship!" Void shouted.

Chapter 1072: A how many spike?

Arriving on planet Getentoch, was Owen Graylash, and with him, he had a strong force of fifty thousand. If one was to see this, who had never seen a Dalki before, they would have said it was overkill, sending that many people for only a force against 200 Dalki?

For those that had faced the Dalki before, they would have thought it wasn't enough. Very few people could take on even a one spiked Dalki, which was why even with ability users, the introduction of Mech's and beast weapons was a game-changer.

Before, a single one spiked Dalki could have taken on thousands of people, and even more before the introduction of abilities and beast gear.

However, the force brought wasn't just ordinary people. They were All Travelers, and there wasn't a single one under the Rank of B, but there was a reason why Owen had to come himself, why he felt like he had no choice.

Planet Getentoch was a red coloured planet with a vast wasteland with deep trenches here and there. It was also a strange planet that would suffer from lack of rainfall for half a year or so and then be plagued with rain for the next half a year.

Currently, the Graylash group had sent all the civilians off the planet, and we're making upgrades to the Shelter. A few of the earth users were building several walls, so they could form a tight defence.

Owen was standing on top of a large tower at the very back of the Shelter, with his usual fan covering his face and his long straight hair.

"If we were here during the rainfall, it would make the task quite easy. However, it seems like luck isn't on our side today." Owen said. "Still, when have I ever relied on things such as luck." Owen turned to one of his men by his side and smiled.
"Right?"

"Of course, sir!" The man replied. "We will win this fight, even if the sun scorches our bodies like lava!"

Although they had prepared for situations like this, they were having more trouble than they had expected for many reasons. It turned out that it was true that the Dalki were able to create some sort of teleporter jamming device. The teleporters on the planet itself didn't work. They had to escort the citizens off from the planet over to the Graylash main ship nearby.

However, worried that these might be attacked, quite a large force was sent with them, diminishing the forces that would also be on the planet itself. While they were unsure if the Dalki were affected by this teleportation device.

Lastly, the real reason why Owen was here was because of the rumours, rumours that the Dalki forces this time, we're being led by a four spiked Dalki. Owen had to come no matter how small the number of forces being sent from the Dalki side.

'Back then, the four spiked Dalki that appeared was what made even my grandfather come out of hiding.' Owen started to remember. 'It was a great struggle, but the current world leaders at the time had managed to defeat it. His advice to me was if I ever saw a four spiked Dalki and I was to face one on my own, then I was to run.'

Closing his fan, Owen looked off into the distance. Multiple black pods were sent down from one of the large Dalki ships a few hours ago. They were quick and small, making it hard for them to shoot down before they reached the planet.

"I'm sorry, I won't be taking your advice. Let's see if you were the right grandfather." Owen said.

"Sir, I have just received a report. The Dalki, some of them seem to have boarded on the second ship!" The man reported quite urgently.

At the same time, in the distance, movement could finally be seen.

"It looks like they have chosen now of all times to attack. It can't be a coincidence. I assume the forces sent to attack the fleet aren't weak either. Is there anyone close by that can help?" Owen asked.

Usually, he would have gone back as quick as anything to help his own people. Yet, something in Owen's mind was telling him he needed to remain here. Otherwise, it would be a loss for the human race.

"I have already sent out the message to the nearby planets in the area as a warning for the other planets to be careful. Although I did not send a request for help. The nearby forces are weaker than what is currently on the ship, so it wouldn't make sense. The only one that could help in such a situation would be Head General Robin, but I have received news that he passed away. I would give you details, but we are running out of time." The man explained.

"Passed away, Robin was a good man, and strong. It looks like the Cursed faction had quite the trouble defeating the Demon tier beast. Give the Cursed faction all the information about the current attack and details of the second fleet. I will let them decide what they need to do." Owen Said.

"And that is the current situation the Graylash family are facing," Sam said as he finished his report.

Those in the room were frightened. In the report Sam gave, they even talked about the four spiked Dalki in the attack. It made everyone feel goosebumps on their body for fear of what might happen to Owen.

Owen was strong, all of the leaders were strong, but the only reason the human race stood a chance last time was more due to their sheer numbers. Of course, their numbers now dwindled in comparison compared to the last time. However, they had focused on building up strength but have they managed to close that gap to the point where Owen could defeat a four spiked Dalki? That they didn't know.

"Would you like my opinion on the matter, or do you have something you wish to do?" Sam said.

"We should send people to help Owen fight against the four spiked Dalki," Ko announced. "That's the only reasonable thing to do. The second fleet of the Graylash will have to take care of themselves. I can't imagine the attack on them will be as bad as the one that Owen is facing. If we win this, then it is a big step forward."

"But don't you think the current fight with Owen is just a delay?" Linda replied.

"I have to agree," Sam said. "It is possible that they leaked the information on the four spiked Dalki to us. That way, they knew we would send a strong force to help them, such as Owen. While Owen is caught up, they are able to send forces to destroy the other forces, slowly taking our numbers down, while Owen continues to be caught up."

Quinn had been silent as he was thinking of what to do, and he had finally come up with his answer.

"We should trust Owen. He's strong, and I think he knows what he is doing. Just now, you told us he had given all the information there was about the Graylash second fleet and ship. I don't think he is an idiot. He trusts his own strength, and we need to trust he can deal with the four spiked Dalki on his own."

Although Quinn said this, he was slightly worried, a four spiked Dalki was something he had never faced, and their strength grew exponentially with each spike. Even Borden was impressive as a temporary three spike, so who knows what a four spike could do.

"As for me, I will head to the second fleet, alone." Said Quinn.

"Alone, are you crazy!" Ely stood up from his seat. "It might not be a four spiked Dalki, but there will be more on board. You can't take them on alone!"

"I think it might be the best thing to do." Sam agreed. "You see, we don't know how strong the Dalki are that have been sent to attack the second fleet. What we do know is they are in great trouble. However, the Cursed forces are in an entirely different place. Sending everyone here to fight them would be useless."

"Not only that," Quinn added. "I'm the only one that can return with no problems. It seems like the Dalki can block the teleporters, which means that the second fleet are unable to escape. If they are too strong even for me, then I'm the only person that can still get out of there with my ability.

"I will be going alone, and that's an order," Quinn said, which was now the second time he had used his authority as one of the world leaders.

Chapter 1073: The city of Zoo

While Quinn and the others had been busy hunting for the Demon tier beast, other members of his family hadn't exactly been lazing around either.

Despite the war declaration, Erin and Leo had gone out on their own, continuing the search for the Pure base or at least any of their members. They had already learned that the Pure base was supposed to be on earth, information given to them by Eno.

According to the intel, Layla provided. One of the main bases on earth was located in a well known city by the name of Zoo. Similarly to the Truedreams, another Big Four family had founded the city and located most of their members there, only in this case the one responsible had been Mona Bree.

The reason for the quite bizarre name of the city was due to the many beasts that were roaming around freely. While it might seem dangerous at first, all of those beasts had at one point been tamed by members of the Bree family thanks to their ability.

Apart from the beasts there was one other thing that led to the city becoming a famous tourist attraction and that was Mona's fascination with the architecture style of ancient times, in particular the Roman Empire. The city had been constructed with antique looking buildings, giant pillars and large statues of prominent figures of the Bree family. They even had a giant colosseum in the centre.

Even though Mona herself had disappeared, her family members had continued to follow in her footsteps. Many of them had joined the military, with a few branching off here and there, but overall Oscar had left them to their own devices. Nowadays the Zoo city is heavily guarded by strong members of the Bree family.

Walking down the streets Erin felt as if she had travelled back in time, she wouldn't have even been surprised if at any moment someone would appear in a toga. Meanwhile Leo was just appreciating the structure of the architecture he could 'see' with his ability.

"I'm not sure whether I should praise Pure for choosing such a place to have a base, or call them daring," Erin commented after the first shock had settled down.

"The best place to hide a tree will always be in a forest. Who would think to look for them in a city controlled by one of the Big Four?" Leo replied. "If Pure hasn't given up on the idea of creating a manmade beast for them to control, then this would seem like the perfect location. Come to think of it, perhaps the members we found from the Bree family last time would have been taken from this city."

Just then they saw someone walking alongside a two horned walking beast that was a little larger than a human, it must have been at the advanced tier level. It was quite an amazing ability for them to control the beasts.

"Hmph, I could take out every single one of these with a simple swipe of my paw," Ovinnik commented lazily from atop Leo's head.

After seeing so many wild beasts walking around freely, the cat familiar had suddenly decided to come out and explore the Human World a little bit and Leo saw no problem with that at all. The only 'issue' was that every time they encountered a beast that looked somewhat impressive, Ovin seemingly felt the need to remind them that he could beat them with a single swipe if he just chose to act.

Erin just stared at the cat, that for some reason had decided to include her in its thought talk, rather than just speaking to Leo directly. The only thing that worried the dhampir was whether this allowed Ovin to read her thoughts as well, but so far it hadn't shown any signs of it.

'Can that fat cat really be that strong here?' Erin wondered. 'I mean there has to be a difference between his strength in the Familiar World and this world, right?'

At that moment, as if Ovin had read her mind, he stared towards her and raised one of his chubby paws, seemingly ready to attack.

'Did he actually hear me? Whatever, I won't back down from you! If one cat is all it takes to make me cower, how am I meant to face the Dalki?!' Erin thought as she stared back at the cat and moved her hand towards the sword hilt by her side, ready to defend herself at any moment.

Ovin moved and Erin was halfway through drawing her sword, until she saw... that the familiar was merely licking its paw, before letting out a big yawn. From the looks of it, the cat looked far more interested in taking a big nap over getting into any fights.

'Yeah, I must be imagining things, no way that cat can hear me,' Erin breathed out a sigh of relief, shaking her head over her previous behavior. However, the next moment she received a thought message that sounded like a sneer...

Before Erin had any chance to react to what she perceived as a sort of provocation, a man shouted from their side: "Attention, Attention! Last chance to register for this month's Beast Battling Games! Riches and fame await you, as long your beast is the strongest!"

Behind the man there was a table, and quite a queue of people who looked eager to participate in that event.

"Are you interested?" Erin asked, since Leo had stopped to have a look.

"Such an event should be the perfect place to scout for strong users with the beast taming ability, so there is a good chance that someone from Pure would be there," Leo replied and walked towards the shouting man.

"Oh my, what a pleasure to see such beauty. Are you here to register for the Battle of the Beasts? I'm afraid you will have to line up if you wish to," the man was too smitten by Erin's appearance to notice Leo next to her.

"It's our first time here, could you tell us more about this Battle of the Beasts event?" Erin asked in her cold voice, emphasising the 'us' part.

Only then did the man notice Leo's presence, as well as the fact that the only beast the duo had on them appeared to be a fat cat that for some reason was napping on the bald man's head. He would have normally dismissed them, but the level of beast equipment and beast gear told him that both of them were either very powerful or quite influential.

"Oh, so you are newcomers! Each month, Zoo is hosting the Beast Battling Games in the coliseum. This month's attraction is the so-called Battle of the Beasts, a tournament in which tamed beasts compete against each other. This time's winner gets to walk home with the grand prize of a Demi-god tier crystal, courtesy of the Bree family," the man enthusiastically explained.

The price was certainly enough to garner a lot of attention. The question was whether the Bree family was just generous enough to continue certain traditions or whether this time's event was somehow more special.

'Leo seems to be correct once more, with such a price it's practically guaranteed that the strongest ability users would participate to show off the power of their beasts,' Erin thought. 'It would be a wonder if Pure doesn't show up.'

"Do you happen to sell tickets or could you tell us where we could purchase any?" Leo asked the man.

"Apologies, but our Beast Battling Games are quite the attraction for our city. They are sold out well in advance. If you are interested in attending one, then you should try to purchase some tickets in front of the colosseum. If you are lucky they should still have some for the show in half a year," the man explained.

"I'm afraid we don't have much free time," Leo stroked his beard. "Looks like we will have to enter as participants."

"My colleague will be happy to register you, but one of the requirements is that your tamed beast has to be present during the registration process and it has to be at least at the advanced tier level," the man had still been polite, but it was clear that he was getting impatient explaining everything to the duo.

At that moment, Leo lifted Ovin from his head.

"This here is a beast at the Legendary level. I'm sure he will do well in the competition," Leo stated with a smile.

'If this fat cat is a Legendary beast, then I am a member of the Big Four,' the man was sure that the other party was pulling his leg for some reason. 'This is a serious tournament, but I suppose the crowd deserves some laughs. If someone of that caliber wants to sacrifice a cat to enter it, who am I to stop him?'

Leo and Erin went in line to enter the so-called tournament, with Ovin as their contender.

Inside the city of Zoo, below a certain tavern, a certain meeting was being held.

"Now, do you understand what we have to do? Although I don't particularly agree with this, we have no other choice. We have to keep an eye on the Bree family and keep a tab on all those who are able to control high and strong tier beasts," A red haired man explained to his listeners.

"Yes, Sir!" The group replied back

As the group prepared themselves, the red haired man couldn't help but wonder.

'Is this really the right thing to do? Lucy, would you have tried to put a stop to this if you knew what we were going to do?'

Chapter 1074: The Mighty Cruncher

Inside a dark cave-like room, there was a table set up that seemed to have naturally formed from the ground. It was large and round but not smooth and the surfaces were uneven and bumpy. If a human hand was to drag their hand across they were sure to get cuts and marks.. Currently, it acted as a meeting room for the Dalki.

Graham, a Dalki that had a strange obsession to wear human clothing was inside dressed in a smart shirt and some trousers. It would have looked quite odd on most Dalki due to their muscular body sides, yet Graham was quite thin given his race.

He wasn't alone in the room, for there was another Dalki at the other side of the table. The other part only had a single bent horn that was sticking out from the top of his forehead.

"Graham, I know you are the smartest one out of all of us, but don't you think your plan this time puts too much trust into that man's will? How can you be certain that he won't suddenly turn on us?!" One Horn shouted, clenching his fists.

"Because he isn't doing this for our sake. That much was clear from the beginning. His desire just happens to coincide with ours. I can see that much and I'm sure he also knows that we must realise that. In other words, we are just using each other, so as long as he thinks that he can achieve his goal by working with us, he will do his part." Graham explained confidently.

Although One Horn and Graham tended to often disagree with the other's method, the two strongest Dalki nevertheless respected each other as well. More time than not One Horn would actually let Graham have his way.

"Fine!" One Horn stated, still annoyed he slumped back into his seat as if he no longer cared about the matter.

"It seems too late for regrets anyway, but I still don't understand what you're thinking by sending out Green Horn to face that lighting user?" One Horn asked, as he touched the top of his horn. He could still feel a phantom pain when thinking about the time he fought against someone with that ability.

"The man that you fought against is no longer there, and if they were to see you again, then there would be an even larger panic. Besides, if they saw you with more spikes on your back then they would know the truth about us. The fact that we are still evolving and getting stronger." Graham explained.

In the past, One Horn was the main person who had led the Dalki during their first war. At least to the humans it appeared this way. Graham had always been there but he had never shown himself.

The treaty that had been signed and more, the public figure of it all had been One Horn, but back then he hadn't been seen, since everything was signed, and there was a reason for that, the number of spikes on his back had changed.

"Those lightning users mean trouble, I should know. Green Horn might not be enough to handle him," One horn stated. "If it was me I would have sent Dred instead. He is a true master of war. I wouldn't even have to worry if it had been him. Where is he anyway?" One Horn asked.

The sharp teeth on Graham revealed themselves, a Dalki version of a grin, although it was hard to recognise as such for any member of another race.

"Don't worry about Green, I haven't sent him there to win the battle. If he does, it would just be a bonus, but if he doesn't it won't matter. Not every battle has to be won to win the war. As for Dred, I have told him he can do as he likes. I thought it would make things interesting. If an unpredictable Dalki is doing things that even I can't predict, I doubt the humans will have a clue as well."

Even One Horn, the most aggressive Dalki, was shocked to hear what Graham had just said, but soon his shock turned into laughter.

"Ha, ha, this is great! Soon the humans and the vampires will be gone!"

"It's okay Leo, you don't have to worry about me. I doubt that there is anyone here that will be a match for me thanks to your teaching," Erin said to Leo, after she had been denied entry to the colosseum with the excuse that only participants and their tamed beasts could enter.

"That might not be the best mindset to have," Leo cautioned her. "If we believe we are the strongest then we will no longer strive to improve ourselves. Remember to be humble. If anything goes wrong, you are to contact me through the mask immediately!"

"I don't think Pure will act until after the tournament, but just in case don't stray too far from the colosseum, and try not to do anything on your own. How is your lust? Are you able to deal with it?" Leo asked.

Erin looked at her left arm. Underneath her clothing there were chains wrapped around it, with the purpose of suppressing her desires. Something that Leo had given her, she wondered why he had such a thing, and how it even had such abilities, but it seemed like it wasn't the right thing to ask at the time.

"It's okay, it hasn't caused any problems so far and it's better now that we're no longer on the Cursed ship. It tends to react more when there are other vampires around," Erin answered her teacher.

Leo nodded, before heading into the colosseum through the participants entrance. Halfway through his journey one of the guards finally noticed Leo's white eyes.

"Sir, do you need help?" The guard rushed towards him.

"I appreciate the kind gesture, but I am completely fine. Do you really think someone entering the competition would need that much help," Leo snickered as he sent the guard on his way.

At that moment, he heard loud footsteps behind him, telling him that it was a man of significant weight. "Don't be such a stubborn old man, we can't have anything happen to you before the start of the event." The voice said.

"Sir, you are a sponsor of our event, there is no need for you to go to so much trouble." The guard quickly intervened. He had been warned by his superiors that the other party was prone to act as he pleased.

"Don't worry, I was heading to see all the participants anyway." The man chose to ignore the guard, and signalled for him to go back to fulfill some other duty, while the man walked side by side with Leo.

"Is that your version of helping out a blind man like me, simply walking by my side?" Leo questioned, somewhat surprised given the lack of action of the heavy man. He had expected him to either help him, or act unreasonably in some way, yet the other just did nothing but walk with him.

"You don't look overly frail to me in the first place. Besides, didn't you claim to be fine on your own?" The man laughed and apart from some glances of his self-assigned 'guard' the two continued to walk in silence until they reached a waiting room for the participants.

"Good luck, although given your partner, you might not even need it," The large man bid him goodbye, walking off to look at the other participants.

'At least he seems to have a discerning eye,' Ovin purred in satisfaction. "How come you have been hiding your Qi presence ever since you got in here?'

'We are close to finding Pure's leader, and with how big this event is, I have the feeling they won't just be sending some footsoldier, but someone higher up who would be able to feel it. The goal is to find them before they know we are looking for them, so it's best to hide it for now.'

While Leo and Ovin had their little conversation, the other participants were checking the blind man out, as well as his 'Beast'. An advanced tier level beast was not an actual requirement to participate in the Battle of the Beasts and more a recommendation to prevent the loss of life. After all, nobody should be crazy enough to bring a lower tier beast to the Beast Battling Games, least of all when it was time for the Battle of the Beasts... and yet somehow this man appeared to have brought along a basic tier beast.

"The guy seems to be blind, do you think someone has tricked him by selling him that beast claiming it was something special?" One of the participants whispered to his neighbour.

"Maybe he needs the money? Could be that he has someone betting on the other contestant that he's going to lose." The neighbour answered back in a hushed tone.

"Isn't that dangerous though? Some constants end up losing their lives to the Battle of the Beasts." Another mentioned, worried about Leo.

'Pray to your ancestors, you won't have to face me!' Ovin was furious as he remembered all those who were underestimating him like that, but outwardly he continued to stay on Leo's head, pretending to be nothing more but a lazy cat.

"Greetings everyone, to the Beast Battling Games! This month we have everyone's favorite... The Battle of the Beasts! Many of you already know the rules, but for our newcomers, let me enlighten you!"

"The beast tamers will enter the arena with their tamed beast once their name has been called. Once there, a fight will begin between the beasts. However, although it is called the Battle of the Beasts, the tamers are able to participate in it as well."

"A fight lasts until one of the tamers surrenders, a tamed beast dies... or a participant dies. While the last case is rare, nobody can predict the outcome of joining a fight between beasts."

"Now before I announce the first participants, first a word from our sponsor! (Raid Bshadow legends! Editor's note)"

The hype up from the host was streamed to a TV in the waiting room, and Leo recognised the sound of the footsteps as the one from the man who had walked alongside him.

"Ladies and Gentleman, a big applause for Chris Red! He has come here today as the representative of his wealthy merchant family and we have him to thank for putting up the Demi-god tier crystal."

Chris started to wave to everyone out there, as the contestants looked at him strangely trying to guess who he was.

"Don't be surprised if you don't recognise the name, as it's not my real name since we would like to keep our real business private," Chris explained, leading to murmuring in the spectating ranks. "Today's price is a kind gesture from us who had been helped out by the Bree family many times in the past without bringing attention to ourselves. As you all know with Mona missing it hasn't felt quite the same, but we appreciate her family members who have kept up the traditions and wanted to encourage them."

"To all of you participating today, I'm looking forward to a good show. Try your hardest out there and as long as you impress me, I promise there will be even more rewards for you all!"

Hearing this, the waiting room was quickly filled with cheers. Nobody would say no to extra rewards, especially for something they had intended to do in the first place. They no longer cared who that man was, or what his real name was, as long as he fulfilled his promise.

"Now, please give a big round of applause for the first participants today! Beast tamer Leo and his mighty beast Ovinnik against beast tamer Max and his beast 'The Mighty Cruncher'! " The host announced.

'Does this mean it's time for me to wake up?' Ovin yawned, as he jumped off Leo's head and stretched out his body.

Chapter 1075: A Crossover?

After leaving Leo to head into the coliseum, Erin had left feeling a little disheartened in a way. She had wished to also perhaps participate in the event. She was sure it would have been an experience she could learn from.

She also felt like kicking herself after saying what she had done in front of her teacher and mentor, Leo.

'He's right, where did I even get that confidence from? It's okay to be confident in oneself, but I have to know there are plenty of people out there stronger than me, and not just my enemies, either.'

The one who came to mind was Quinn, whenever she had an image of catching up to someone, it wasn't her teacher, Leo, but Quinn instead. She had seen him improve beyond belief. Although she knew Leo's strength, it was hard to relate because, in her eyes, Leo had always been strong.

As for Quinn, she had seen him grow in leaps and bounds, and at one point she could defeat him with a single hand.

While walking around, she spotted a digital scrolling advert on top of what looked to be an entertainment establishment. It was hard for her to figure out, but she could hear people laughing inside, and the words written on the very top were tavern.

It was strange seeing a mix of new and old in a city like that, but the digital advert was what had caught her eye as it informed her that she could watch the battle of the beasts inside. Entering the place, the smell of alcohol had hit her nose, and it was more sensitive than usual.

As alcohol was one of the few things that vampires still could taste, not that she had this problem anyway, but some things seemed to still affect her differently. The place was pretty busy and pretty dark inside. All the tables and chairs were facing towards the back where a large Digital screen was showing the battle of the beasts and that's when she saw Leo enter the arena with Ovin and his opponent.

His opponent looked like a decent Traveler with good gear at the advanced level, and the beast was one that walked on all fours with a body similar to that of a crocodile, however, its head looked like a giant plant with giant razor-sharp teeth.

Even as it was being brought out, the beast kept hammering its jaws shut, smashing its teeth and with each one, a loud clang was heard. It made Erin wonder if they were adding sound effects to the video to make the beast look more menacing or if that was really the case.

As for Leo, he stood there with his beast gear on, hiding some of the more higher-tier parts under a black robe that would swirl around, in particular, his chest piece.

Still, those with a keen eye would be able to notice that the level of his other equipment was at the emperor-tier level at the moment.

However, what caught everyone's attention, of course, was the black cat that seemed to waddle as it took steps forward in front of him.

"Is that a beast! I've never seen one that looks like that!" The viewers started to communicate.

"Didn't they say that only advanced beasts and up that were tamed could enter? Does that mean its an advanced beast cat."

"The only thing advanced about that cat is it's belly. I haven't seen one as fat as that."

"Perhaps, Sir Connel put them in as a joke, he does like doing things like that.."

"That would seem far too cruel, he would be eaten in minutes by that Cruncher. I'm afraid seeing a cat get crunched up might not be as pleasant as a strong battle."

Honestly, Erin had similar thoughts. According to Leo, he said that his familiar was a strong one and not to worry. She knew not to judge by appearances, but when one looked like that, how else was she meant to act?

While in the middle of her thoughts she felt someone approaching her from behind, and she swiftly moved away. Looking back, she could see a hand mid-air moving from below.

"Oh, what a quick lady, I wonder how you were able to move so fast." A man chuckled, who stunk of booze.

The temper in Erin was rising, but with the amount of people in the tavern, she didn't want to cause a scene and cause more trouble. However, if she hadn't moved, that hand clearly would have been on her bottom.

"Come on don't be mad, with a bottom like that, it was practically made for squeezing!" The three men chuckled to each other.

Walking up to them, Erin was now underneath the man.

"Very well, you can touch me, but are you prepared for the dangers that you will face?" Erin said, still not looking the man directly in the eye.

Still, he seemed to ignore her words as he went forward again and attempted to latch onto her. But before he could, with the palm of her hand, she had struck his chin. He could feel his brain rattling against his skull, and a dizziness coming over him.

As he was about to fall, she grabbed him by his shirt as he hung there in place, then, turning him around, she kicked his back side so hard, his friends thought they heard his pelvis crack.

The man was then chucked over to the other two of his friends. Everything happened so fast, they were at a loss at what to do.

"Don't worry, your friend won't need to use his hips. Any spawn he creates doesn't deserve to be raised by scum like him." She said, and the fierce look she gave the two of his friends frightened them so much that they made a quick exit out of the tavern running.

Luckily, because of how quickly she had dealt with things, and how noiseless the whole thing was compared to the noise in the room, it didn't seem like anyone noticed, for they were too busy still joking about the cat.

However, one person at the bar area was heard clapping.

"Bravo!" A female said, who had light blue hair and didn't seem to be dressed in any beast gear, which was odd. However, she did have a staff in her hand that stood out to Erin. It had what looked like a crystal at the top, but it would be useless as a weapon to just use a normal staff with a crystal attached.

"You dealt with those annoying men beautifully, I thought that perhaps I would have had to come and help you, but you had it all settled. You are a strong one." The girl said.

Erin didn't know how to act. Most of the time it was males that approached her, as for females, they would stay away due to her attitude, or dislike of her looks, however, other than Layla, this was the first time someone seemed to be talking to her.

"Come here, sit, I assume you are here to watch the event?" The girl said. "It's always more fun to watch something together don't you think?"

Looking around, Erin could see that there weren't any other seats available, and she didn't want more incidents like the one before to happen. These slime men would usually approach singular girls. Although Erin could deal with them, it was just a problematic thing to deal with. In the end, she decided to sit with the kind stranger, although she felt awkward at how she was staring at her with a smile.

"You are not much of a speaker are you?" The girl said, looking at the screen as it looked like the fight was about to start. "Who do you think will win? The cat duo certainly seems interesting, don't they?"

It was clear that if Erin didn't say something, this girl would be asking her questions all day, so, giving out a sigh, she decided to reply.

"The man with the cat will definitely win, the rules state that either the man has to surrender or his beast needs to be defeated. However, even if his beast is unable to fight, then that man will finish the beast and the opponent before they get close."

Erin replied, confident in her teacher.

"You have a good eye, I'm surprised you would go for the man with the cat, not many would in this situation. They would think you're crazy, but I don't. However, you are wrong about one thing. That man won't have to do a single thing in this fight, the cat will take care of everything himself. I know, for I have already seen it happen."

Erin was wondering what this girl was talking about, and was now a little worried she was sitting next to a person who wasn't all there.

"Just like I know me and you would meet." The girl said as she turned to look at Erin.

Now Erin was on edge, but at the same time, not as a soothing energy was coming from this person. 'Who is she?'

"Would you like me to tell you about your future, Erin?"

Getting up from her seat, Erin was ready to get out of the place. She was afraid this was some type of trap. There were only a few people who knew her name. Those from Pure who she had worked with, the vampires, and those from the Cursed ship, but Erin didn't recognize this girl at all.

"Who are you?" Erin asked.

"Me, I'm just someone who is able to see things that others can't, but if you were asking for my name, then it would be Bliss." She said standing up now as well.
"Erin, heed my warning, while two sides that didn't know of each other will come together to defeat an enemy the other one created, the whole world will learn of the other side.

"At that moment, the trust and bond between those two will be broken, and a new chaos will destroy the other. You will become that Chaos." Bliss said.

Chapter 1076: The fat cat

Erin felt a headache coming up. Not only had that strange girl called Bliss come up to her without being asked, now she was speaking in riddles. It was hard for her to judge whether the girl was just someone crazy, or perhaps someone affiliated with Pure. But if it was the latter, then why would she have willingly appeared in front of her?

"Don't you think it's pretty rude to tell someone you have just met something like that?" Erin questioned her with a nervous smile. "How about you start explaining yourself, for example who exactly you are, before I really might be causing some chaos here."

Looking around the room, the dhampir checked if there was anyone else in the room with her. There was no scent of a vampire or such, else her body would have reacted strongly by now, and her own ability couldn't sense any Qi apart from her own... unless someone here had an even greater Qi control than herself, which would mean she was in great danger.

Raising her hand, Bliss pointed towards the screen at the back, it looked like the fight was about to commence.

"I'm not here to hurt you, Erin, so why don't we just enjoy the match and see if my little prediction turns out to be correct." Bliss suggested. The dhampir was still sceptical, but if the other party had wanted to hurt her, would she have shown herself so willingly and openly?

For now, she decided to remain vigilant, but also check out the spectacle.

Both Leo and his opponent had stepped into opposite sides of the ring. Leo placed his hand on the hilt of the sword and was ready to draw it.

'I will take out the beast and not harm the man by his side to make quick work of this.' Leo informed his familiar on what to do.

'There is no need.' Ovin replied. 'I didn't choose to follow you so I could just laze around all day. I could have done that in the Familiar World as well. Besides, if you were to act now, won't that reveal who you are to the others?'

Leo trusted Ovin quite a bit, the connection the two of them had formed allowed them to understand each other, yet the blind man couldn't help but think that his partner was contradicting himself. Since he had come here, all it had done was laze around.

"Let the fight begin!" The host announced and rang a bell.

As soon as the match officially began, their opponents, beast tamer Max, as well as the 'Mighty Cruncher' showed off their teamwork. Max jumped onto the crocodile-like beast's back, as the creature charged towards their opponents at a frightening speed. Its jaw was opening and closing just as fast as its legs were moving.

The cat just stood there, and soon its eyes started to glow in a fierce yellow. The next moment yellow mist started to surround it.

'You lowly creature, how dare you bare your fangs at me?!" Ovin shouted, yet to the outside world it sounded like Ovin had let out a loud bark. That's right, the fat cat hadn't let out a cute meow but a fierce bark like a dog.

Those watching the transmission found it hilarious, but those inside the colosseum regretted coming here. The bark was deep and menacing, and struck fear into all those present, most of all Max on top of his beast as he was the closest one. The beast tamer felt his whole body shake and his instincts told him that the fat cat was far more dangerous than any other beast he had ever encountered.

He pulled out a beast spear from his back, too afraid to get close to the cat. His plan was to stab it while riding on top of his beast, but the next moments, he leapt through the air as his tamed beast had stopped moving, frozen in fear.

'Did I lose control, because I was too scared?' Max wondered. However, as soon as he tried to reconnect the link he had with the Mighty Cruncher using his ability, nothing seemed to work. He didn't even notice when the cat had lazily hopped on top of the other's beast to whack it with its paw.

'Now sleep!' Ovin shouted into the poor creature's mind. It looked like a cute action, but the force behind the action was enough to slam the reptile head into the area and leave an imprint. Nobody was surprised that all of the Mighty Cruncher's teeth had shattered in the process.

'This is your punishment for not knowing your place!' Ovin harrumphed and looked over to the beast tamer. Fear overcame Max and he quickly knelt down.

"I give up, please let me get out of here!" He begged shamelessly, afraid what might happen to him if the cat could deal such damage to his beast with a simple cat paw.

It was dead silent and everyone just watched the fat black cat leisurely walk back to its owner. As if everything before that had been a mere illusion, and yawned once more and laid down on its stomach.

'This body is tired. Pick me up, please.' Ovin requested as he rolled around on his back. Leo didn't hesitate to comply. The familiar had done a great job, so he put him back on his favourite spot, his own bald head.

"What just happened, did we just see a cat defeat an advanced tier beast in a single hit!"

"Yeah, I thought it might have been a joke candidate or something, but that's not the case at all. Do we know what tier it is? It has to be Emperor tier at the very least, right?"

"We should never judge a beast by its size."

The spectators in the crowd were the first to recover and they instantly started to talk about what they had just witnessed. The host was the next, who hurriedly declared Leo the winner, as everyone was already cheering for him.

"That little cat was even more impressive than I thought. I knew it would be strong but it surpassed my expectations." Chris said, as he was watching from a special area with other members of Pure.

"Do you still not have any information on the bald guy and that cat? Focus on it, and tell me as soon as you find out." Chris ordered, and started smiling.

'That man, it looked like he was going to face the beast on his own at first, I wonder if he's strong as well.' Chris thought.

Back at the tavern, most were ecstatic that the cat had won. Apart from those who had bet on the Mighty Cruncher to earn a pretty penny, everyone else found it quite hilarious and frightening at the same time. Many were even wondering if they had one beer too many.

"I think you might believe a little more about what I have to say now." Bliss said, smiling at Erin.

Usually, even after something like that, Erin would have walked away, but for some reason the advent glow of energy was coming from this person. It reminded her of her long lost mother. It felt so warm, that she just felt like she could trust this person's words.

The two sat down, as neither one was too interested in seeing the other matched. They both turned looking towards the bar.

"Alright, I can listen to you, but you better start to make more sense than your chaos stuff. Only a few people should know about that cat, so did you just guess that it was powerful? More importantly, how did you know about me?" Erin asked.

"Straight to the point." Bliss replied as she sipped on the drink she had ordered. "As you know, people have abilities, and I guess you could say that my ability allows me to see great catastrophes that will happen in the future."

"My visions show me bits and pieces, and it eventually led me to staying on this planet and finding you. I've foreseen the two of us meeting in this bar and speaking, just as we are now"

It seemed pretty hard to believe that someone could have such an ability that would allow them to see that far into the future. If the military knew about this, they would have snatched this person, and used her to prevent many catastrophes.

The only reason why she was inclined to believe this girl a bit, was because Cia, who was a banshee also shared a similar ability.

"Let's say I do believe you having this ability, what did you mean earlier when you told me I would become 'chaos'? Are you saying that I'm going to be the one that ends up killing everyone? How can that be?" She wondered.

For a brief second, she saw Bliss looking towards her left arm that had the chains underneath her clothes, and naturally Erin tried to pull it away.

"It's a conclusion I came to after gathering all the small pieces." Bliss admitted. "I'll be honest with you, I have long since attempted to interfere in the things I was shown, but I'm afraid that interfering has done no good so far. It seems like the visions even include my future involvement. I have also tried not to get involved, but then my visions seem to still come true anyway!" Bliss sighed as if she was annoyed by this whole thing and she really did look troubled.

Thinking about what Bliss had said before, Erin wondered if Bliss could be a subtype of vampire like Cia. It was hard to say based on what visions exactly she saw.

"If that's the case, then why have you come here? If the outcome will be the same either way?" Erin had to ask, wanting to get a clearer picture of what she meant by those words.

At that moment, Bliss stood up and grabbed her staff as if she was ready to leave but then looked at Erin one more time.

"The content of this vision is too great to not do anything as the consequences are too far reaching. I'm taking a bit of a gamble by not telling you everything I was supposed to say according to that vision. I can't say for sure that it will work, but you should know enough to try and prevent it from happening."

"Only once in the past have my visions been circumvented." Bliss revealed as she walked past Erin. "Trust the Talen family, they have something special going on with them. They were the only ones who had ever proven me wrong."

'Trust the Talen family?' Erin thought. 'Talen, as in Quinn Talen?'

Erin wasn't content with knowing just this much. Seeing Bliss go away, she wanted to stop her, but as she tried to stand up, she felt that her feet were stuck in place. She opened to shout at this person but the words from her mouth wouldn't leave either.

'Is this her doing? What sort of ability can do something like this!' Erin was panicking.

From a distance, she could hear Bliss mumble a few words with her advanced hearing as she left out the door.

"If he was here, then none of this would have been a problem. Is this really what you wanted to happen? Is this why you placed everything in that giant tablet?"

Chapter 1077: I've found you

On their way back into the waiting area, Leo couldn't stop being praised as soon as the other contestants saw him. All of them were staring at him in awe.

"How lucky must he have been to get such a cat?"

"I wonder what his beast's level it's at? Maybe we'll get to see it fight even more beasts."

"I want to rub its belly." A man said with pink rosed cheeks, and there were a few more that agreed.

"Just to be clear, we are talking about the cat, right?"

It was unusual to see such small, powerful beasts, and especially with a person none of them knew. Those who had the beast taming ability would usually be part of the Bree family somehow, which was why they were so surprised to see someone else with strong ability.

Although no one questioned it for a few reasons, there were always those who might have learned the ability and left the faction, especially after Mona left. There was also the chance that it was taught to outsiders. Now with Mona gone, there wasn't such a tight leash on the ability itself.

The other thing they thought, it was possible that this man was a nobody in the faction before and had just come across the cat. Taming a strong beast was a quick way to go up the ranks in the Bree family, so there would often be many who didn't have one to start.

The way the Bree ability worked depended on their MC cells. They would form a type of link over the beast. In a way, rather than taming the beast, it was more similar to controlling its mind to the point where one would become its owner.

However, a person's MC cells were limited. Some would have the strongest beast. Their ability allowed them to, while others would control multiple weaker beasts. Still, if they came across a beast that was stronger than their own and wished to tame it, the only thing they could do was get rid of the current ones they had.

'I'm glad that they are all finally seeing my worth.' Ovin said, laughing inside Leo's head. The black cat sure liked to showboat. Leo could tell there were other ways for the cat to have won that fight, but he just had to show off.

Although Leo didn't think of it as a bad thing, initially, he wanted to stay hidden so he could look for those in Pure without them knowing about him. Still, since that wasn't working, perhaps the best approach was to make them come to him.

Since Leo's fight was the first match, everyone saw what had happened, and the rest of the matches continued. At the same time, contestants and their beasts received healing. Of course, Leo didn't need any healing, and neither did Ovin. Still, Leo was also worried that they might just find out Ovin wasn't a beast if he was seen to.

Eventually, everyone who had survived the first round stage had returned, and coming in last into the room, was a Traveller with shining bright blue beast armour that looked like a knight in the olden times. As they took off their helmet, their long blonde hair could be seen.

Soon the man went over to another. This one looked more like a gladiator appropriate for the setting they were in. He had spikes sticking from his shoulder pads, and his chest was bare, while he wore a strange helmet that pointed outward like a beak covering his face.

"It looks like that one might be our biggest threat, Pine." The blonde man whispered, looking at Leo, who was leaning against a wall in the room.

"Yes, I thought I might have been me and you, battling out till our claws went bloody inside. I didn't think someone would interrupt us to get their hands on that Demi god crystal!" Pine replied.

The blonde-haired man's name was Yell, and before Leo had entered, he was one of the favourites to win this event, and this was true for Pine as well, but at times when a strong unknown foe they didn't know about appeared. Two enemies would become friends.

"I have a plan, he has strong beasts, but the Traveller himself might not be strong. I would say try to ignore the cat and go straight for the man." Yell said with a smile.

With Leo's hearing, he knew everything that was going on, but he didn't mind. They could plan all they want. No matter what they had prepared, he would win all of the matches and claim the prize. Not that he wanted it anyway.

'Perhaps I could get some good equipment out of this event. To become the sponsor and give something like that so easily. They must have great power. Perhaps he is involved in all of this as well?' Leo thought, thinking about the large man.

The matches went on, and once again, Leo dominated his battles with his cat, hitting the opponent's beast with one hit every time. They had fought everything up to an emperor tier beast. The same was for Yell and Pine, but something unfortunate had happened, and Pine was eliminated by someone else.

'That useless man, I wanted to see what he would do against the blind man first.' Yell thought.

Now they were into the semi-finals of the tournament, and Leo was to go against Yell this time. The cat stayed on top of Leo's head as they came out, and surprisingly decided to talk.

'I'm afraid that I might not be able to help you with this one.' Ovin said.

Leo looked at the beast and could sense it was at the Emporer tier level. It was a bird type beast that was large and had its two legs grounded on the floor. Its wings were razor-sharp, which were used to slice the opponents it faced.

It was strange to hear Ovin say this, for Leo was sure he should have been able to defeat something like this.

'I'm not weak. I'm just weak at the moment. When connected with our hosts, we familiars aren't meant to stay out this long, but because you had me pretending to be a beast, I stayed out for you. Finish this as quick as possible, and then let me rest.' Ovin said, jumping off his head and pretending to fight once again.

Leo didn't really understand the familiars that well. If they suffered so much connecting to a host, then why did they choose to have one in the first place. Was it the desire that Ovin had talked about?

Still, the fight was to continue, and Leo wanted to return the favour to Ovin.

"I will finish this as quickly as possible," Leo stated.

At the same time, in the special booth Chris was watching from, one of the Pure members had eventually returned and had some information he wanted to deliver.

"Sir, we tried looking into that man that you spoke of. There was no information about him concerning the Bree family." The man reported. "However, when we continued digging, we did find someone that thought they might have recognised him. They believe that he is under the Cursed faction at the moment, the man who is known as one of the Heroes of the war, the blind swordsman."

As Chris heard this information, his heart beat faster than ever. He looked down at the arena floor, and Leo had drawn his sword. The beast was coming straight at him, ignoring the cat, and Ovin had even jumped out of the way.

"Yes, I will win this thing!" Yell shouted.

Lacing his weapon with as much Qi as possible, Leo struck once, cutting off the whole of the beast's wing cleanly as it went past. It immediately fell crashing onto the floor, and before Yell could do anything else, the blade was pointed at his neck.

"I surrender!" Yell shouted.

The crowd cheered once again, and when Yell had finally stopped shaking and looked up at the man who had his sword pointed at him, he noticed he wasn't looking at him.

'Is he looking at someone in the crowd, but I thought this man was blind.'

At that moment, Leo was looking directly at Chris, who was standing up, letting all of his Qi energy out as well.

"Looks like I've finally found you." They both said.

Chapter 1078: The feeling of red

When Bliss had left the tavern, the effects of whatever was stopping Erin from moving her body were still there for a few seconds. She looked down at her arm, and was tempted to take off the chain. Her hand hovered over it for a few seconds but quickly decided against it.

Waiting a short while, she eventually could move just like before, and of course, by now, the girl known as Bliss would have been long gone.

'Who was that crazy girl, should I believe everything she said?' Erin thought. But she knew the name Talen, and that little passage she spoke or riddle, it didn't sound like the best of things.'

Knowing that Bliss was out of reach, Erin looked at the ground where she was, and it was only then that she could see a giant circle that had been drawn underneath and inside that circle there were several patterns. The patterns were other shapes and objects inside the circle.

The floor was quite dusty and the circle itself just looked like it had been drawn, with someone wiping their finger against the dust. Whatever the case was, the circle definitely wasn't there before when Erin came to sit down with the girl, she was sure of it.

'This looks like some creepy magic stuff, maybe she had it set up from the beginning.' Erin said, touching her head, as if it was giving her a headache. 'I'm acting like what she said was true, but what if it is true? No, even if it is true she said that not all of her visions had come true, and decided my own fate. I don't believe in that crap in the first place.' Erin then walked out of the tavern, heading towards the colosseum.

She was wondering if she should have contacted Leo via the mask, but whatever danger there was, it had already come and gone. Instead, she would head to where he was, who knows if someone came to visit her, perhaps someone had come to visit him as well.

After the semifinal match had finished in the battle of the beasts, there was a break before the final event would happen, the last two contestants had even been placed in different rooms as they recovered.

As for Chris and the others, they too were taking a break as they waited for the final event to begin, and were in a break room inside the coliseum. The room had been created for Mona Bree, as the colosseum was one of her most favorite places to visit.

However, at the moment it was occupied by six members of Pure, as well as Chris, who was sitting down on a sofa.

"Sir are we not going to do anything about the Blind swordsman?" One of the men asked. "It's clear that is him after his display of skills. If our research is correct, he shouldn't have the beast taming ability. He should be disqualified from this tournament."

Chris was relaxed and he couldn't stop smiling since returning from the arena, every so often, once in a while he would laugh randomly as he was deep in his thoughts.

"Are you saying that a small cat isn't a beast? Then what would you have me think it was? Even if he doesn't have the beast taming ability the fact that he is able to control a beast means he is doing the same thing. Is he not?"

"And whether he is using his own skills or the beast that is completely up to him and within the rules."

Although the other Pure members didn't say it, they were wondering what Chris was thinking. Did it matter if it was against the rules or not, had he forgotten their real reason for coming here and supporting the event, it wasn't to find a winner, or to see who was the strongest, but to bring those with high level beast taming abilities back with them.

However, none of them would say a thing to Chris, after all, he was rank 1, and there was only one person in the organization who could truly overthrow his order.

"Then answer me this, do you not think that man might run away if he finds out who we are?"

Chris scoffed at this thought-like the man was a fool.

"Do you really think it was a coincidence that the blind swordsman has come all the way here? No trust me he won't run away. I'm sure he has plenty of questions to ask, and I have my own as well." Chris tapped the sheath of his strange-toothed weapons a few times as he said this.

"The two of us shall meet when I hand over the prize to him, he just doesn't know that there will be one more opponent for him to face."

Meanwhile, in Leo's resting room, away from the eyes of others, he had finally paced Ovin back into his own body, giving him time to rest.

'Ah that's much better.' Ovin said.

It was also the first time that Leo had felt a significant amount of his Qi energy being taken from him.

'Are they not able to consume Qi as well while they are out?' Leo thought.

Sitting down, Leo concentrated to try to recover as much energy as he could. From what he had lost giving to Ovin. Now Ovin's power had returned, he was sure that he could deal with the final competitor. However, one should never be contempt and Leo wanted himself to be at full strength as well, ready for anything.

Now that he had learned the third stage of Qi, Leo could extract small bits of Qi from the outside world. Sensing Qi not just from life and beasts, but in the air around them. Earth, unlike the other planets, seemed to have quite the bit of natural Qi flowing around.

Still, it was a difficult thing to do, and the amount that could be extracted was minimal. It felt like a straw had been strangled and Leo was trying to drink water from a pool with that said straw.

'That man from earlier, he purposely showed me his Qi, he knew straight away that I could use Qi in an instant, and he was able to hide it from me before. I can only assume that he is a member of Pure, and a high ranking one at that.'

'He will be able to give me my answers.' Leo thought.

The stage was set, and everyone was ready for the final match that was about to take place. Ovin was out once again and on top of Leo's head, but he was slumped over more than he usually was.

'I know I recovered some energy, but fighting these guys is a bit of pain. I think it might be good if I didn't use my full power.' Ovin said.

However, Leo was ignoring the little black cat, and even his opponent, who stood opposite him. He didn't even register that his opponent had a high-level Emperor tier beast with him, one that had black skin and even had what looked like beast armor on themselves. A humanoid type beast.

'Show me what you can do.' Chris said, staring eerily back at Leo at the same time.

Everyone was at the edge of their seat, waiting to see what would happen next. They were excited to see the black cat pound all of its enemies in one hit, and a few from the crowd since Leo's last display were recognizing who he was, still, they didn't care. They had come here for entertainment purposes.

"Everyone, the final battle will now begin!" The announcer shouted.

At that exact time, something large fell from the sky. As it landed, the whole area shook and cracks in the ground had formed, splitting out, destroying even the seating area in the coliseum. When the dust finally settled, they could finally see the black-skinned humanoid beast.

However, it was just the tip of its head and that could be seen through the dust. With more of the dust moving down, they could now see that the beast's head had been removed from its body and the figure that was holding onto the head itself.

"I am Dred! And I'm here to get rid of you all!" The Dalki smiled.

A Dalki had invaded the collusion, a place on earth, and a single one at that, but this event would send shockwaves through the whole human race, for it was a four-spiked Dalki.

Chapter 1079: Taking off

*Bang

A loud sound was heard throughout the whole giant ship, and even at the very end, vibrations could be felt. However, the Dalki on the ship continued their work as usual. It seemed like it was an everyday occurrence for them.

As for where the bang came from, it was none other than the cave-like meeting room. Where One Horn and Graham were in the middle of conversing again. One Horn's two fists could be seen on the black table, and small cracks had formed in the top of it, but not much damage had been done to the table or the room itself.

"Do you not remember our warning to you One Horn?" Graham said. "If you break this room one more time we will be banning you from meeting with us. I know you struck that way on purpose but you are testing the limits of this ship."

"Do you think I care about something like that!" One Horn shouted, waving his arms about.

Although Graham didn't really react much to One Horn's cries or shouts, it was an everyday occurrence at this point.

"You must have gotten the report. I know you said Dred was free to do what he liked, but I bet even you didn't expect him to go to earth at this crucial point and time, and on his own! If it was you or me, we could have gotten out of there, but Dred will fight until all of his blood has been split!" One Horn shouted. "If we lose him!"

"Are you doubting our commanders?" Graham replied, as he looked into One Horn's eyes across the table. "You're right, I didn't expect this. Did you forget what I said before though, if we didn't expect this, then neither did they. It will be a long time until they will send anyone of significance to help. He will definitely be able to cause quite the carnage. But this will give us a chance to see just what we are up against. Besides, remember although Green horn and Dred are our two weakest commanders, we will not have to worry." Graham said.

This answer didn't really please One Horn, but he knew now there was nothing he could do. Sending out a force to help Dred would be useless in their situation. For now, before the Dalki fully acted they had to wait for one of two things to happen, which was why he was so aggravated.

The Dalki were waiting for something to occur in the vampire world, before they made the moves they wanted to on the humans, putting so much trust in people he didn't even know about was what had worried him.

"Don't overthink too much, that Vampire is strong." Graham said as if he could tell what One Horn was thinking. "Remember how he was able to beat both Dred and Green Horn. He will succeed, if he wants us to keep up our end of the deal."

The giant dust cloud was lifted so high into the sky that nearly everyone from the entire city could see it. The coliseum was placed in the centre of the entire city after all. Even if they had happened to miss it, they sure would have heard the screams coming from the place as people ran outward, warning everyone.

Erin, seeing this immediately made her way to the coliseum thinking something was up with Leo, and quickly grabbed one of the people that were running away.

"Tell me, what's going on inside!" Erin demanded.

It was a woman, who was completely shaken, even while Erin was holding her now she was shaking,

"It's a Dalki, the Dalki have invaded! And it's a four spiked one!" She shouted back.

Now she understood why everyone was running like it was their last days. A four spiked Dalki in a place of little significance like this, no one probably expected this.

Soon Erin's grip had weakened, letting the girl go.

"A four spiked Dalki, invading here?!" A shiver ran down her spine, and seeing the shocked look on peoples faces reminded her of a past, a dreaded past when she had lost all of her family.

'Don't fear it, Erin. You have to turn this fear into a strength. Remember!' She told herself as she took deep breaths.

However, back then, she could do nothing when a Dalki had attacked her planet, and when the Dalki had attacked her and her friends she had failed again. Would she fail this time? These past experiences were severely clouding her judgment on what to do.

"Sister, Sister, you have to run!" A little boy shouted at Erin as she stood there, before her mother picked up the boy and continued running.

She wasn't sure if she would be much help the way she was at the moment, but she couldn't just stand here while other people were getting hurt inside. She grabbed the chains on her left arm for a few seconds, and when she did a memory had occurred to her.

Back on the cursed ship a while ago, Erin and Leo were in a training room together. The one who had called the meeting was Leo himself. He had caught Erin's aura acting widely, and he noticed it was every time she would get close to a vampire. Especially when the two of them would have training sessions together.

"When have you been experiencing these urges?" Leo asked.

"Ever since we returned from the vampire world, but I have never acted on them, and I won't!" She said in a panic.

"Are you sure? You should know we don't know much about vampires. The urge of the blood was something even I couldn't completely control when I was in a dire situation. Sometimes, our will isn't all that is needed. We shouldn't feel bad about using the tools around us to help us."

"Otherwise, I would have never picked up the sword to help me in the first place."

Erin understood what Leo was saying, and more so, she actually felt the urge growing stronger as days went by. Sure she could control it for now, but could she really keep it in forever. Would the urge continue to grow?

"Shouldn't Quinn be able to feel things like this? And I thought we weren't able to attack our own family members in an attempt to do harm. The bond would stop us!" Erin pleaded, hoping to find some answers.

"Erin, I know you are afraid. In an unknown situation like this one, most people would be. Don't you remember Quinn telling you that you are different? Perhaps the normal rules don't apply to you, as you are different to all of us."

At this point, it felt like Erin was going to give up at any moment now. She had been through so much, losing her family, then having to hide from the Trudream family joining Pure and even know she was different compared to everyone else.

Why did it always seem to be her?

Placed in front of her, Leo had laid out a set of chains. With her ability she could sense that they were beast weapons, but something was different about them, they also had a diffrent aura attached other than the beast aura, something similar to Qi.

"This item has a passive suppression skill," Leo explained. "It's only at the advanced tier level so it might not be able to keep you at bay all the time, but I'm sure you have noticed that there is something else in there as well."

"Yes teacher, I can sense a different aura, is this your Qi energy?" She asked.

"It is not." Leo replied, shaking his head. "I have a number of weapons that have been cursed. Some people think I'm crazy when I tell them this story but you should be able to see the truth. When my friends died, they all wanted me to complete a wish for them, to defeat the Dalki at any cost. Their souls went into those weapons, cursing them. Making them more powerful."

"If ordinary people tried to use those weapons, the curse inside will attempt to take them over, however, if you can control your Qi then you are able to repel it, like I do. However I believe that with you, the curse can be used in a different way. Increasing the suppression powers."

Placing the chain around her arm, the passive skill could be felt instantly, and Erin could feel the energy trying to take her over, but she attempted to fight it. Until eventually she had it under control and what Leo had said was true. Her urge had been suppressed. She just wondered for how long.

What she did notice, was while wearing the chain, it made her feel weaker and she was unable to use her full extent of her powers. For now though, she would just see this as a training method to make herself stronger.

Back at the front of the coliseum the area was clear now, as nearly everyone had run away from the area, and Erin was left there with her hand over the chain's.

"If it's a four spiked Dalki, I'm going to have to use everything, otherwise I'll just get in the way!" She said, unravelling the chains.

At the same time, her normal, usual blonde hair, started to turn to black, and her eyes started to glow yellow.

Chapter 1080: The old vs the New

On planet earth, the new school base that had been built was redesigned to serve its purpose as the central hub for the main military. This was always the plan once the students were to leave, so it was easy work converting the rooms as they saw fit.

Here, Oscar was currently in some type of command room. Several computer servers were running, and each worker was monitoring something on their screen. All the information from the different beast planets, the Cursed faction, and the Graylash faction would come back to here.

"I need a report on how Owen is doing out there!" Oscar demanded. It was rare for those to see him the way he was currently, a little agitated and shouty. Usually, Oscar was always calm, but his frustrations were led by the fact that Owen was out there on his own.

"Sir, we can't get in contact with Head leader Owen. From what we can see, he has already engaged in combat personally with the Dalki!" One of the men shouted from their seats.

Holding onto an oversized chair that was in front of him, Oscar gripped onto it so tight that the plastic on the chair was starting to crack.

'Owen, I know you're strong, but before in the past, it took all of us to take down a four spike Dalki. You never experienced what we did back then. Do you really think your life is worth it? You should retreat!' Oscar thought.

Knowing that Owen was facing a four spiked Dalki, Oscar was debating whether or not to go out there himself. They had a low chance of winning the battle otherwise. However, he didn't understand why the Dalki were attacking with such a strong force this early on, and what significance that planet held. It was the only thing that was keeping him back.

He needed to stay on earth in case anything else happened here.

'Owen, I hope the god of luck is on your side.'

On the red surfaced planet, Owen had recently come down in the centre of the Dalki force like a flash of lightning. His white robe lifted, and his eyes were glowing blue. There was not white seen at all.

The Dalki closest to him attempted to grab him, but before they could get close, he was lifted into the air with a constant flow of the lightning. Once he stopped, the Dalki fell to the ground and didn't get back up. The others now had him surrounded. Using his fan, he threw it up in the air and struck it with lighting once again.

For a few seconds, the metal fan stayed floating in the air, and soon it rained thunder like a tent covering Owen's body and hitting all the Dalki around.

'I need to deal with them as fast as I can and get to that four spiked Dalki!' Owen thought as he stepped forward and leapt up with his two feet spinning his body. With lightning shooting off from his feet and covering his body, he was able to make himself become a giant lightning bolt, hitting three of the Dalki along the way. Finally, when he landed, he was standing in front of the Dalki leader.

This one looked different from the others. His skin was greener in colour instead of blackened scales like the other Daki, and running up his back, it was clear as day. Four spikes were sticking out. However, there were no other Dalki around him. Instead, they ignored him and chose to go straight for the people behind him.

"Do I really look that weak!" Owen shouted. He was currently on one knee and was huffing and panting. He had used far more of his MC points than he had wished to get up to this point. The forces consisted of plenty of two spiked Dalki that were resilient. At first, Owen was testing how much power was needed to kill them.

When not killing them in a single strike, he only made them stronger and was surprised by how resilient they were.

"You are already tired, and you haven't even fought against me yet. You are just a single human, but I have to admit you seem to be the only one that has caused me some trouble." Dalki said.

'Although this is the person with lightning abilities, is this the man that hurt One Horn? Which means I should be careful.' Green Horn thought. 'Wait, that can't be right. He said that was an old man. This doesn't look like an old man to me. The Humans are getting weaker after all.'

"You know nothing, do you!" As he pushed himself up, Owen smiled and opened up his fan to cover his face as usual. His breathing now seemed to be under control.

"You know, I was hailed a genius even among the Graylash family members. I was able to progress faster and teach techniques to my people to help them grow." Owen said. "Our lighting abilities seem to be different compared to the other powers out there. For us, it's all about the breath."

Soon something started to glow in front of Owen, as his soul weapon was starting to activate.

Back in the command room, Oscar was still waiting for something to happen, and suddenly, a beeping coming from one of the corners of the room could be heard. It quickly went onto the main screen as an energy source was being felt. It was the strongest signal they had seen had landed on a specific place on earth.

"Sir, an urgent report!" A man said. "It appears that a Dalki has entered the city of Zoo. They have invaded earth!"

"How is that possible? We have been keeping track outside. There have been no ships and no pods!" Oscar shouted.

It was true. Even from all the footage they had, they could see nothing from space. Until one of the cameras caught something. It looked like the Dalki had just fallen out of the sky. There was no pod, nothing, as they fell straight to the ground, but a few seconds before landing, they did see something, wings.

"This reading, it looks like it's another four spiked Dalki! It seems to be the only one as well." They reported.

'What is going on? In the first war, we only faced one four spiked Dalki, and now there are two! And what is their goal of landing in Zoo of all places? There is no one there that can handle a four spiked Dalki. Mona Bree is still missing!'

"We need to move out as quickly as possible and head to Zoo immediately!" Oscar ordered.

Inside the coliseum, the dust had settled entirely, and the head of the emperor tier humanoid beast was chucked to the side by the Dalki. As it hit the wall, it splattered into pieces, only leaving black blood on the wall.

The human who controlled the beast had long run out of the arena, but instead, another one had jumped in. The red-haired man, with his two weapons drawn.

Leo too, had his weapon drawn, and even Ovin was on high alert as its eyes started to glow, forming the trail of yellow mist. Every single one of them was looking towards the Dalki in the centre.

They didn't need to communicate. They didn't need to say anything. They just knew that they would need to work together to take this Dalki down.

'Should I contact Quinn and inform him of what is happening here?' Leo thought. 'If the Dalki is here, perhaps the teleporters aren't working either. However, how would he get here? He can summon me to his side, but what about Erin, and there are no shadow users here either.'

"Who would have thought the two of us would be working together," Chris spoke. "You know, when I first met you, I thought that maybe we could be friends, talk about a few things together, looks like that might have to wait. I can feel your bloodlust and the bloodlust coming from your sword there as well."

"You hate these giant lizard's don't you? Well, a good thing for you. I hate them too!" Chris said, as he activated all the Qi that he had contained in his body, there was no use hiding it now.

Unlike Leo's, which was calm and controlled, Chris's was wild, and his body was reinforced with it everywhere. It was the largest amount of Qi Leo had ever seen.

Cutting his sword through the air, Leo smiled.

'Since when did I start becoming reliant on the boy. I will solve this matter with my own hands, and I shall get revenge for everyone.'

Chapter 1081: All together

The first one to throw an attack out against the Dalki was Chris. He swung both his blades out to the side, unlocking all of the links, extending his weapon. It then laid there flat on the ground like a snake. Lifting them high into the air, he then slammed them down onto the Dalki.

Chris didn't need to move his arms much, for he could control and change the blade's trajectory with his own Qi. He could also use this to extend and shorten his weapons at will. All of his attacks at the moment, he was pushing his Qi to the limit, not holding back.

Three of the weapon's teeth sank into the either side of the Dlaki's shoulder, digging in, oozing the green blood, and both of the Dlaki's feet sank a few inches into the ground.

Seeing this as an opportunity, Leo leapt close towards the Dalki, ready to strike at its head.

'It seems like this red haired man doesn't know that we need to kill it in one shot, otherwise it will just get stronger!' Leo thought.

Ovin, the black cat, also had leapt onto Leo's heads and started powering up and looking for the right opportunity.

"Careful!" Chris shouted. "My weapons are stuck in him, and I think he got hit on purpose."

Chris was trying his best to pull back his weapons so the teeth could rip the area of his shoulders. However, the Dalki was holding onto part of the weapon, and the two of them were in a battle of strength.

'Ha, I never thought someone would actually beat me in a battle of strength like this. Especially a damn lizard.' "It just means I have to use more power!" Chris shouted as he yanked the chains, and viable energy could be seen leaping from his skin, he was covered in a strange yellow energy.

The teeth on the weapons had moved a few inches, but that was all as the Dalki pulled on them again.

"Weak!" The dalki said as it bent its knees, ready to do something.

Ovin seeing this, let out a mighty bark once more, producing visible sound waves that would ripple through the air. This one was much louder and fierce than the one before.

'I bet they've never felt something like this before!' Ovin proudly said. 'Use this chance while he's stunned, to take him out!'

It was true, the Dalki could feel it, and Chris could suddenly pull out his chains as they continued to rip through the Dalki's body but then the Dalki had tilted its head back and when it threw his head forward an almighty roar came out. It was nearly twice the strength of what Ovin had produced. Ovin's yellow mist started to shrink, as if a sign that the Cat was afraid.

'Me, afraid of this. I'm one of the great kings of the familiar world! Damn him!'

Even for Leo, he was frozen slightly in place. His mind was clear, and unafraid, but it was human instinct, when hearing something that menacing, to not proceed any further. The Dalki grabbed the weapons before they had retracted back to Chris, and then lifted them up in the air along with Chris.

Then, swinging him in circles around the coliseum, Chris was thrown into the stands. His body dragged across the seats as they were being destroyed, using his body. Then when the Dalki finally let go, it looked like Chris was no longer moving.

The Dalki turned back to the bald man, but he was no longer there. The next second the Dalki could see something coming towards its neck. It lifted its arm, and a large slash of red aura had pierced its hard-scaled skin.

"You're fast, too fast for a human!" The Dalki said. "It can't be, why would the two of you be working together!" The Dalki was about to hit Leo with its other arm when it felt another strike hit it from the other side, this one slightly yellow in colour.

It wasn't as strong as the first one, but it still managed to damage its scales somewhat. When he turned to look, he could see a female with black hair holding a giant sword. Leo could sense Erin coming, but it was never part of his plan, he continued to attack with his sword in different places.

Hitting parts of his leg's and more, and Erin also charged in from the other side, doing the same. She had improved greatly, faster than she was before, faster than she had been in any type of training, and she was avoiding every one of Dalki's blows.

'She took off the suppression, has it made her even stronger, it's almost like she's a completely different person. Perhaps, she's...evolved.' Leo thought, but he had to focus on the battle in front of him.

A few hits from a Dalki with this much strength, and both of them weren't sure how much they could recover. What Leo was surprised about was how fast the Dalki was moving, even able to keep up with the vampire's speed. Leo was only faster by a little bit, and it would always protect its vital points.

Getting up from the broken seats in the stands, Chris could see what was going on. Suddenly, a new girl had joined and was fighting as well. Even the cat could be seen leaping and giving it a few swipes.

They are all so fast, and what's this yellow and red aura coming off from them? Concentrating, Chris tried to sense something and though he wasn't quite sure what the girl's energy was, he could feel Leo's energy even from here.

'It's just like that boy, Quinn. They're using that same energy to fight. Do they know each other?' Chris thought.

Still looking at the fight, he was noticing, something else as well. The Dalki Dred was smiling, it was usual for the Dalki to smile while fighting, but this one looked more sincere. It might have not been clear during the fight itself, but one could notice it from the outside.

The next second, the Dalki curled up into a ball, and suddenly wings sprouted out from its back. It covered both sides of the attacks from Erin and Leo. Then flapped them with strength, pushing back their swords, and causing them both to go slightly off balance.

At that moment, the Dalki stretched its long limbs, hitting both of them at the same time.

'I thought I had improved, I thought we could beat this thing, but that fist is so fast!' Erin thought as she mustered all her will to pull her large blade in front of the attack. When it hit, the blade immediately broke in half, and she was sent flying into the arena wall.

As for Leo, Ovin could see what was about to happen.

'I can't let you lose this fight! My partner still has a desire he needs to achieve! Leo, I will give up here, let me leave you with one parting gift!'

Ovin leapt in front of the fist, and then turned into bright yellow flames surrounding the Dalki's arm. The heat was so immense that the Dalki's hand was dissolving in seconds and Dred had no choice but to cut it off from the top of his shoulder to stop the flames.

The flames had stopped, and Dred flew up into the air with his wings, hovering above the arena, blood dripping down to the ground from his wounds, while Ovin was nowhere to be seen.

Chris had leapt up from the arena floor and landed near Leo's side. His body was quite bruised, but he mostly looked fine.

"Who would have thought that bastard could fly. I guess they look like dragons so it would make sense for some of them to have wings." Chris said. "Sorry about your beast, it looks like it sacrificed itself in that attack."

Although Ovin was gone, he would return, for familiars never died once attached, but he wouldn't be able to be summoned for a while.

"You're strong, your Qi is the sharpest I've ever seen. It's no wonder you could do all those attacks." Chris said. "But there's a big problem, your weapon is a piece of crap. Who is using a king tier weapon in a fight against a four spiked Dalki. You can only hurt that thing because of your sharp Qi otherwise that thing would be useless."

Leo gripped the hilt of his sword tighter.

"It may seem useless, but this has the will of my fallen comrades inside, the ones that were killed by the Dalki. They will not let me down no matter what, each strike will be stronger as we get closer to killing it."

Breaking their conversations, a large bang was heard from the wall as rocks went flying into the air, and Erin was seen coming out with her fangs baring out, something that hadn't happened before, and now she was looking straight towards Leo, rather than the Dalki itself.

She went from one side of the arena to nearly to the other in an instant, and Leo had no choice but to activate his soul weapon for her speed was unexpected as she thrust her other katana style blade.

With his soul weapon, he could force her strike to miss.

"Dman, what the hell is happening." Chris said as he had leapt off to the side. "I thought she was on our side? Did the Dalki do that."

Right now, Leo and Erin were locked in combat, leaving only Chris on his own, but as he looked at the Dalki up in the air, he couldn't help but feel that with its missing arm and the other two having already done too much, he could at least finish it off for them.

"Do me a favour, just don't kill me after this okay." Chris yelled over, directing it at Leo.

"I have no choice, I'm going to have to use the fourth stage!"

Chapter 1082: A better pair of weapons

The frequency of the swords clashing against each other made it seem as if someone was conducting a military firing drill. The sounds originated from the battle between none other than Leo and Erin.

Erin was being the aggressor in the fight, as she constantly pushed forward, swinging her blade time after time again, but no matter how hard she tried Leo managed to block each strike with a little assistance of his soul weapon. However, he didn't just block them, no he simultaneously guided Erin's aura to focus on certain areas.

'My guess seems to be correct, I have never seen Erin move this fast before. As a vampire knight trained in Qi my speed doesn't lose out against the other vampire leaders, yet somehow she is able to keep up with me, which can only mean one thing. She must have evolved!'

'Was it due to having been suppressed and then taking it off? Her overall appearance has barely changed, except some minor changes here and there. I doubt anyone would notice, unless they had spent as much time as me with her, but the energy inside her is running wild. I need to do something.'

As her mentor, Leo had instantly noticed that her swings today were wilder than usual, focusing on speed and strength rather than technique. However, what he couldn't see with his blind eyes was the color of her actual eyes... or more the lack thereof.

At the moment, her black pupils weren't visible, and she was completely unconscious. Her aura alone this was something Leo couldn't quite tell, he just thought that she had just given in to the urge.

Using his soul weapon, Erin's sword got sucked into a spot just underneath his armpit by his ribs. The thrust had missed its target and he quickly hit it down into the ground, before barging into her with his shoulder knocking her away.

"You fell for that move again!" Leo chided her. "Even if you have evolved and are faster, what's the point if you haven't learnt anything?"

The sword was stuck in the ground, and it looked like Erin had nothing left to use, yet she suddenly held a chain that she swung out and that wrapped around Leo's sword. The blind man quickly felt the Qi energy that he had infused into his weapon was being suppressed by it.

'The suppressing chains? She still has them with her? Good, this means there is a chance now!' Letting go of the weapon, Leo allowed it to drop to the ground, and he quickly slid on the floor hitting both of Erin's legs, toppling her.

While on the floor, Erin snarled and yanked the chain with the sword attempting to grab Leo's weapon in her hand, but her wrist was soon stepped on, and Leo had grabbed the weapon.

"Nothing that I say seems to go through to you, but still I'm sorry about this." Leo spoke.

Erin got up from the floor, and Leo had let go of her wrist, now she had nothing in her hand, neither the blade nor the suppression chains. Then diving in head first, Leo went to strike with his weapon, or so she thought, what he actually did was simulate one of his attacks with the third stage of Qi.

As Erin tried to dodge it, she missed the fact that the chains had also been sent out and were now wrapping around her legs. He then continued to run around Erin in different areas as fast as he could, wrapping parts of her body, and finally grabbing her sword. He had stuck part of the chain deep into the ground along with the sword, through the links, until only the hilt of the sword could be seen, making it so Erin could no longer escape.

Parts of her body had been wrapped by the chain, and it seemed like the suppression skill was working as her screams were lessening.

"I know you just wanted to help." Leo said. "And you did a fine job. If it was just me fighting against the Dalki it would have been a lot of trouble."

Going up to the chains, Leo skimmed his hands on top of them, and pushed Erin so she toppled to the ground, looking like a mummy on the floor.

'Keep her bound my friend.' Leo ordered, as he needed to focus on another enemy. During the fight, Leo was nearly fazed, distracted because he had felt a high source of energy, but he hadn't had the leisure time to split his attention away from the fight against Erin.

Now when he looked over at Chris who was standing opposite the Dalki, his skin had turned almost red in colour, matching his hair. The energy was seen coming off his body at the same time.

'How much Qi does that man have? No, this is slightly different, the energy dispersed around his body is coming from somewhere else.' Leo thought as he looked on.

"You look confused." Chris grinned at Leo's wondering face. "It looks like you haven't been taught this yet, so I guess that means you really are the person he was looking for. You should already know that every human's body forms a soul weapon during their teenage years and that it takes shape with one's ability?"

"However, what do you think happens to those who never got an ability? Does that mean that they can no longer use a soul weapon? Well that part may be mostly correct, but the energy inside the body will still be there and as such, with the right training, it can be used in many ways. I suppose the ability users just all focus on using it in the form of a soul weapon."

The weapons that Chris had in his hands were turning red at this point. The Dalki stayed high in the sky thinking that it was safe, but with a single push of Chris' legs, he crushed the ground beneath him and now the two of them were at equal height as well.

Chris first swung his chains across from one another, and the Dalki easily flapped its wings to avoid the blow, then started to fly straight towards the aggressor. It was flying at an incredible speed, but Chris was unfazed and suddenly, the Dalki felt something on the top of its wings. It was the weapons. Even though they had missed, they had chased after the Dalki from behind, attaching to it.

Moving his hands down, it lifted the Dalki's body up so its body could be seen. Chirs jumped using the ari, and lifted his two legs, kicking the Dalki in the chest. Dred's body didn't move much, but Leo saw two shockwaves come out from his back and green blood started to drip from the invader's mouth.

'It looks like he is producing internal strikes, but is he focusing on that aspect?' Leo pondered on how Chris was using his weapon.

Next, Chris clenched his fists and hammered down on top of the Dalki's head, sending him back down to the ground. A large crater formed where Dred landed and he spit out even more of his green blood.

With the weapons still attached to Dred, Chris was able to retract them, propelling him forward to where Dred was and slamming his two feet towards the Dalki's face to finish him once and for all.

"What would your comrades think about you, knowing you lost against a 'weak' human, especially one without an ability?" Chris taunted the dying creature, only for his smirk to vanish the next second. Instead of feeling the impact of the other's head, his foot had been grabbed by the Dalki's good arm.

"You should have kept your distance, vermin!" Dred replied with a smile on his face, blood dripping down his chest, as he lifted up Chris and flung him into the ground holding him by his one leg.

Dred continued to slam Chris, from side to side into the arena ground, causing more and more cracks in the colosseum and from the looks of it, it might have collapsed at any second. Suddenly, Dred stopped, coughing out even more blood than the Dalki had before.

'Chris is neither faster nor are his strikes any more powerful than before. The Demi-god tier weapon and his Qi trained body already made him as fast as the Dalki and allowed him to compete with a vampire of my speed.' Leo continued to observe the situation from the side.

'It seems like he is currently burning through his soul weapon's energy inside of him, and it has allowed him to reinforce his Qi, to the point where even a single punch acted as an internal Qi strike.'

A simple way to put it, would be that every single one of Chris' normal punches and kicks was like a hammer strike from Quinn. Even if the Dalki didn't have external wounds, his insides were being destroyed by the second.

Wiping the green blood away, the Dalki threw it out onto the floor, and could see that Chris' skin was starting to fade in the colour as well.

"So that's it? Your little show is over!" Dred spoke as he stopped his assault on Chris. "I have to thank you, your attacks have allowed me to grow even stronger. You're the first one to push me to this point! Let that be your last solace! After this, I'm going to kill every single person in this city, before I go back to where I was meant to be!"

Chris smiled, still holding onto the two Demi-god tier blades. His body felt incredibly weak as using the fourth stage of Qi wasn't something even he could handle for a long period of time. He had long since crossed the safe period and now his body was paying the price. If one person was to use it too long, they would have to fuel it with real life energy, and it would be a wonder if they were to see another day.

As a desperate last resort, Chris threw both of the Demi-god tier weapons with all his might. Dred was able to evade, without even having to move. They just skimmed past his shoulders.

"A weak final attempt." Dred shook his head in disappointment.

"This wasn't aimed at you, I just wanted to pass him a better pair of weapons." Chris explained, smiling.

The next second, the Dalki suffered two slashes on his head... it was the last feeling he would ever experience. His head was no longer on his shoulder and rolled out onto the floor, blood started to squirt out from its neck on to Chris and its body followed after falling to the ground as well. Leo now stood in front of the bloodied Chris, holding both of the Demi-god tier weapons.

The four spiked Dalki, was finally defeated, thanks to the help of the number one ranked Pure, a little help from a blonde girl that just wanted to prove her worth, one of the kings of the Familiar World, and finally, the hero of war, the blind swordsman.

"I guess that's it. You're going to finish me off then?" Chris asked, looking at Leo, unable to move. "Teacher told me that me and you would have to fight one day... I just never thought it would be like this."

"Who exactly is your teacher?" Leo questioned, in anticipation.

Chapter 1083: The leader of Pure, Zero

Perhaps at one point Leo would have needed to fight the man for information about Pure, but the two of them had just fought on the same side to defeat an enemy that neither one felt like they could have defeated on their own.

"Do you think just because you are a member of Pure that the two of us are automatically enemies and we are unable to talk things out?" Leo questioned the man lying on the ground. "I won't harm you. As a fellow warrior, it would be shameful to attack someone in your condition, especially since you ended up like that for the sake of humanity."

For a long time Chris had imagined meeting the other party. In the past, whenever someone would discover his affiliation with Pure they would immediately treat him as if he was a villain and proceed to attack him on the spot. And yet, this man, who his teacher had imprinted so strongly into his mind as someone that he was destined to fight against...

Leo had simply judged him by the few moments they had known each other for instead of what group he belonged to.

"You really are completely different from what I have been led to believe. I'm sure you have a lot of questions on your mind. After all that's why you're searching for members of Pure in the first place, so let me at least thank you by answering those." Chris offered, as he attempted to move his pinky finger. He started to regain a slight feeling in it, but he would need a long period of rest until he could think about fighting again.

"I will be happy to take you up on that. I just hope you have the answers I ask. Let's start by who exactly your teacher is?" Leo asked, also having noticed the slight movement of the other. He placed Chir's weapons next to him, on the side away from Chris. After all they weren't rightfully his in the first place, but there was no need to return them until after their talk.

'He is a very cautious man and even now he seems to be on guard from any attack. He must have lived through quite a lot even after the war.' Chris noted.

"Who else could it be than the leader of the Pure?" Chris answered, not shying away from the question at all. "That person didn't just teach me how to use Qi, but all of us that know Qi was from him."

It looked like Leo was on the right track. He had already amassed enough clues to guess who the leader of Pure was, but this was the confirmation he had needed deep down inside.

"And does the leader of Pure also happen to have a name?" Leo asked.

"We only know him as Zero. Whatever his real name might be, he has never shared it with anyone..." For a second Chris paused for he recalled one person who might know their leader's name. Zero hadn't started Pure on his own after all, but that woman had already passed on, so there was no reason to mention her.

"You wish to fight him, don't you? Just talking about him has made your aura perk up in anticipation, but let me burst your bubble. You will be disappointed. For as great a man and mentor Zero may be, personally he is... weak. Ironic, isn't it? Guiding others to a treasure he cannot possess... He knew that you would come chasing after him at one point. That's why he trained me."

"He wanted me to get strong enough so I would fight you in his place. I don't know the story between you and him, but he's the saviour of my life and he turned me into Pure's sword, so I have always considered it a small price to repay him. He had once promised to let me know the full story after he passed, but that hasn't happened yet."

For the first time, it seems as if Leo didn't understand anything at all. He had an idea of why Pure was behind everything, but why would this master go through all this? Why did he train someone for Leo to fight against? Alas, the person in front of him didn't have the answers to that either. It seemed like there was no way to find out apart from asking him directly. The memories he had of his master and Chris's story wasn't adding up.

"Why did he create an organisation like Pure? Was it really just to purge the world of ability users? Even he should realise that doing so would hurt humanity. He should be focusing his anger on the Dalki, those that killed all of our friends, or even me, the reason everyone was exposed to the world in the first place." Leo spoke, as he had been left confused.

"How would I know? Everyone has their own reasons for joining Pure. Most of them had been hurt by ability users in the past, however nobody is forced to align with Zero's goal. We are not like that. We just all have the same wish and are working together towards that wish."

"Of course we aren't stupid, as you can see, even I know we need to work together to get rid of the Dalki, but for the longest time during our 'peace' it looked like as long as humanity continued to rely on abilities... we would have managed to kill ourselves even without any outside interference." Chris argued, mulling towards the end.

Due to how weak Chris was, he was unable to hide his energy as well as he had before. It seemed like Chris was struggling with his beliefs as he once did. His energy was all over the place as he said those last few words.

"If you don't have any other questions, would you mind answering one of mine?" Chris requested. Leo was hesitant at first, but ultimately decided that it would just be fair. As long as it wasn't too deep of a secret he could entertain the other, as such he nodded.

"How come you and that boy share the same strange red energy?" Chris asked.

"Boy?" Leo repeated, surprised at the direction of the question.

"The boy known as Quinn Talen." Chris clarified.

Now it made sense who this man was. He was the same Chris that Quinn had met on the island, and also the one who had taught him the second stage of Qi.

'Who would have thought that everyone would one day meet each other? I suppose that will happen when the strongest powers need to act.'

"That boy and me are close, I am...was his teacher but we both belong to the Cursed faction."

Leo walked away with his answers being answered. After seeing Chris perform the fourth stage of Qi there was one thing Leo was clear about. In a fight with Chris at the moment he would lose out.

He wasn't sure if what was said about his master was true, but before he came to look for Pure once more, he would need to get stronger again.

Seeing Erin, Leo started to unravel the chains, and placed them around her arm, only this time, rather than wrapping it up her forearm, he wrapped the chains to the top of her shoulder.

'It should restrict her movement but the suppression should work better from here.' Leo thought.

Returning to the arena was a large group of members who had beast gear on. It wasn't clear who they were but as soon as they spotted Chris they had come running over to see if he was okay.

"Didn't I tell you guys to run away? Did you disobey an order?" Chris questioned the members of Pure in an authoritative tone, despite his injuries.

"Sir, we apologise for that, but there wasn't much we could do but hide somewhere in the city. The teleporters weren't working, so there was no way for us to leave. Once the fighting and rumbling stopped we believed that you must have successfully defeated the Dalki, so we came to check on you." The man admitted honestly.

Chris looked towards where Leo and Erin would have been, but they had already vanished.

"I didn't defeat the Dalki on my own." Chris mumbled as the members carefully helped him stand up. He started to absorb the energy of the two users next to him. He didn't take too much Qi, just enough so he could walk on his own.

As he walked along, some members stood in front to the side, and towards the back of Chris, and one in particular started to move close to Chris, his eyes glowing red. Pulling his hand back, it started to be covered in a red aura, and the man thrust his fist straight towards Chris' back where his heart would be.

Chris, being his weak self, hadn't even been able to muster up any Qi to protect himself, and only became aware of the attack at the last moment, but the arm had fallen to the floor before it could even reach Chris.

And standing there with a blade in his hand was none other than Leo.

"It seems like you never expected another one to be here. My nose seems to be a bit stronger than yours and I could smell you from a while away. Tell me who sent you." Leo demanded, looking at the vampire that had just attempted to take Chris' life.

Chapter 1084: Assassination failed

It took a few seconds for the smile on the man's face to disappear, as he realised that his hand had not only failed to pierce through Chris, but was also no longer part of his body. Right now, it was lying on the floor. Now all of his anger was aimed towards the one who had interfered in his assassination.

However, the moment they looked at the offending party, there were two things the assassin noticed straight away. Leo's red eyes, as well as his smell. Both confirmed that he and the man were the same.

'No that's not right,' The man thought as he held onto the seared part of his hand. The blood flow was slowing down as he did his best to preserve himself, using what skills he had. 'The smell is slightly different.'

"What the hell is a Knight like you doing in a place like this?!" The vampire man demanded to know as he took a step back. He didn't recognise what family he was from and since he had already defended Chris, it was apparent that they were not on the same side. As long as he was there, it was impossible for him to accomplish his mission, so he was looking for a way to escape.

"What are you idiots doing? Capture that traitor!" Chris shouted towards the other members of Pure who were all too startled at their companion having gone rogue.

Closing his eyes, Chris was trying to focus. He might have been exhausted but as the number one in Pure it should have been impossible for someone to get so close to him without him noticing. The important part now was to apprehend him, so they could find out more about the assassin.

Even in his weak state, it should have been impossible for a normal person to kill him with their bare hands. His body was naturally hardened and trained beyond belief. The man must have had a trick up his sleeve, or at least known Qi. On top of that, he seemed to know Leo as well.

It was then, that Chris could tell, that the internal red energy inside of their bodies, of Leo and this one was the same.

'What the hell is going on? How come those guys with a different power source of Qi are popping up all over the place? If I remember the boy, it was quite infectious and rapid. Does this mean that not everyone who has the same Aura is on the same side? Things are getting pretty interesting.'

However, Leo was already in front of the man before anyone else had moved, his eyes were glowing red, as he stared directly into the man's eyes. Leo intended to find out why the man had tried to assassinate Chris just now.

"You won't get a thing from me!" The vampire said defiantly, he lifted his arm up, and without any hint of hesitation slit his own throat, deep enough so he died instantly on the spot as he fell to the ground creating a pool of blood.

'Did he know I was going to use my influence on him?' Leo thought. 'It is clear that he was harbouring great secrets that he didn't want anyone to find out about, but who was the one that sent the vampire? He didn't seem to recognise me, so he must have been in the Human World for some time now. Was the one who had sent him someone from the thirteen families, perhaps the former King? ... or could it be that there is someone else out there?'

With the only suspect now dead, Leo looked over the other Pure members. None of them seemed to be another vampire, so there was nothing for him to find out. As such he started to leave once again, only this time for real.

"Wait! That person seemed like he knew you! We have some questions you need to answer!" One of the Pure members attempted to stop him.

"Leave him be!" Chris interfered immediately. "He didn't take my life when he had the chance and on top of that, he just saved me when one of my own already tried to kill me! Right now I trust him more than you." With that, Leo was gone.

'It looks like I owe you one, and I need to start being more careful about who is around me.'

"Why would Dillan do something like this? He's been part of Pure for longer than I can remember." One the Pure members wondered out loud as they inspected the body.

'This must have something to do with that strange red Aura! Dillan didn't have that red aura before. Or is it something else? I would have noticed it. Did it happen not long ago, does that mean there is someone who can pass on that aura? Things are certainly getting interesting.' Chris thought with an intrigued smile on his face.

Moments after, the vampire's face started to change from the Dillan they did regaonise, into someone they had no clue about.

"Let's take that body with us, it's clear that's not Dillan." Chirs ordered.

Not long after, multiple ships with military personnel arrived at Zoo. They immediately began questioning the local populace as they tried to figure out what had happened. The information they received was the same from nearly everyone.

Upon entering the arena, they were quite surprised to find a four spiked Dalki's body lying on the floor, with its head chopped clean off.

Of all the people they had interviewed, no one had seen who had been capable of fighting against the Dalki, or who had killed it. As was to be expected everyone had run away, fearing for their own life.

"We have discovered multiple sword marks on the body, a broken beast weapon that has been left behind. Ashes, and scorch marks across the floor, and finally the head of the deceased Dalki itself. From the looks of it, it was one clean strike that has separated it from its body." Jane reported as she stood by Oscar's side in the arena.

"The head was chopped off in one clean strike? How many times have you seen that happen on a Dalki before?" Oscar asked.

"To our knowledge there are only two people who have reportedly defeated Dalki in such a way. One of them is the leader of Pure. We do not know his identity, but when Dalki had attacked certain areas we found them with their heads chopped off in this type of manner."

"We can only assume that it was the Pure leader themselves who have done that. The second was one of the Heroes of War, the Blind Swordsman." When saying those words that's when she had figured something out. In the report, it had stated that someone with the appearance of the Bline Swordsman had participated in the event in the arena.

"Sir, I know what you are thinking, but do you really believe that the Blind Swordsman could have defeated a four spiked Dalki by himself?" Jane asked.

"No, I don't. It is clear by the state of the area, that there were multiple people fighting, and the rest of the Cursed faction seem to be too far away at the moment. Continue the investigation here, and leave one of the generals to look after this place. The people should still be in shock after having been dragged into this mess."

Oscar ordered as he started to head back towards one of the ships.

'For a four spiked Dalki to suddenly appear here... we were lucky that the Blind Swordsman happened to be here at the same time. Otherwise who knows how many people would have died?'

'Would this have been something possible if it had happened in the first war? No, Quinn I don't know what you and your people are doing, but keep doing it. We might need to rely on the Cursed faction a lot more from now on.' Oscar thought.

"Sir, where are you going?!" Jane asked.

"This wasn't the only four spiked Dalki. It's clear now, the reason this man attacked by himself and why they didn't bother sending any other forces with him. It's because we have been underestimating their power. We have been told that Quinn Talen is going to help those on the Graylash ships defend against the invading attack." Oscar answered. "It seems like every world leader is taking responsibility and fighting apart from me. I've decided I need to go help Owen."

'We may have underestimated you, but it looks like you have done the same for us. This time, we will win this war!' Owen thought, clenching his fist.

Chapter 1085: The glowing eyes

The second fleet of the Graylash family was currently being attacked and boarded by several Dalki, and on the main ship alarm bells were ringing throughout.

Despite all of the drills they had gone through in case of such a situation, panic spread around various places of the ship. Usually even with an attack they would have a few moments to brace themselves of what was to come, but they did not enjoy such luxury this time.

[Breach in Section D]

[Section D will now be locked]

[Breach in Section F]

[Section F will now be locked]

Messages of this type were constantly being announced through the intercom, informing everyone that areas were being lost left and right.

Commander Hermes, who was in charge of the second fleet, along with over a thousand of his men had gathered inside one of the largest training rooms.

"Sir, we can't seem to get any communication through whatsoever. The Dalki seem to be in possession of not just teleport jamming devices but also communication ones!"

Hermes was just shaking his head in frustration. They didn't know the exact number of Dalki that had boarded the ship, how many spikes they had, nor anything really about the enemy's equipment.

Information was crucial in any battle, yet they were completely lacking in that department. Should he send too few of his men to deal with the enemy, he would just be sacrificing them in vain. Should he send too many, they would be vulnerable to an attack from sides they would not cover.

At the same time he couldn't do just nothing.

"We need to prioritise defending the most important parts of the ship! These Dalki need oxygen to survive as well, so the life support system should be safe for the time being. However, I wouldn't put it past them to sabotage it, if they feel threatened. Hopefully as we travel through the ship we'll gain a better grasp of the situation."

Hermes then turned to Void and Bonny, who seemed to be in the midst of an argument.

"You two, I don't want your death to be on our hands. Given the circumstances it's too dangerous to leave you behind. Come along with us and try to hide in the back."

The group was prepared to move out and the men had split up into squads with Bonny and Void heading off with Commander Hermes. In theory it should be the safest place for the reporter duo.

"Void turn on your camera. I know we can't livestream right now but we need to capture everything." Bonny whispered as she was continuing on from the argument before.

"Don't you feel any fear, Bonny? Sure we've filmed lots of stuff in the past but that was mostly scuffles between other factions and families. Nothing like this. The Dalki will tear us to shreds, they won't care that we are reporters." Void whispered back, annoyed that his partner seemed to prioritise a scoop over their own safety.

Bonny wanted to slap some sense into Void, after all she needed her cameraman, however she understood his fear. Of course she was frightened as well, but she had already prepared herself for something like this. If they were to perish here, at least they should leave something for the sake of humanity!

"Why do you think we came here in the first place? Did you think there wouldn't be a Dalki attack? This is exactly what we came to film and the people deserve to know! Who knows, our footage may prove very valuable to whoever is coming to save us. At the very least they will find out what's happened, that's the least we can do!"

Although Bonny wasn't talking a lot of sense to Void right now, he took a deep breath.

"When have I ever won an argument against you?" Void sighed in defeat as the little beep from his camera was heard as it was turned on.

His glasses that he used to monitor the drones were turned on as well but none of them was giving him a signal.

Thinking about this, Void was reminded of the person that had let the Dalki on to the ship in the first place. It had been a humanoid figure and the most prominent feature had been the red glowing eyes.

'What if the Dalki aren't the ones behind the jamming devices, but humans? But who in their right mind would choose to assist them? They would have to have been on board already... could it be that there are even more traitors on board?'

Void wanted to get Bonnie's opinion on his theory, but at the moment there were far too many eyes and ears around them. What if he was right and one of those traitors was in their midst?

'He knew that I was watching him through the cameras and he decided to pull it anyway.'

"Alright it's time to head out everybody." Hermes said and at that moment, all of the lights on the ship had shut down.

[Power systems failing]

[Emergency life support has now been activated]

They were now almost in complete darkness, only able to see a small outline of the people around them and blurs as they moved.

"The lights? Why would they go for the lights. I don't recall Dalki's having night vision?" Bonny questioned.

The crew members with the lightning ability activated it slightly, allowing for a soft blue glow in front of them. Their vision was better now and doing something like this didn't take up too many MC points.

This made it even stranger that they would target the lights.

The squad walked through the hallway but due to their large number, not all at the exact same time. If a Dalki would have come they would have been cramped and easy picking for them.

When it was finally time for Hermes and his group to move forward, around twenty of them started to walk through the dark halls.

Void was lifting up his camera and frantically moving it each time they heard a noise. With the sound of fighting throughout the area it meant he was turning quite often.

Walking through, those at the front heard something, a small splash when they moved their foot down. Void knew what it was straight away. The others moved their sparkling fingers to give them a better view and they could tell it was blood.

"Those damn Dalki seem to have already engaged in combat, we have to go help the others!"

One of the groups that had gone ahead in front of them seemed to have been ambushed. What was strange about their bodies were the wounds. Although the crew members were under the impression that it was the Dalki, Void was able to see more thanks to his camera's night vision setting. He zoomed onto their bodies and looked at their wounds. The markings on them were too small to be done by a Dalki and even a couple of them had teeth marks on their neck.

He might have not thought much of it, if he hadn't seen what he had beforehand. Void quickly grabbed Bonny's hand letting the rest carefully go in front.

It seems like the fear that the Dalki could be around the corner made them forget that they were meant to be looked after.

"Bonny I need to tell you something. Before we were attacked, the one who let in the Dalki, they seemed to be human! Also those wounds... I don't think the Dalki are the ones responsible." Void shared his opinion with things.

"You think there's a traitor among us?" Bonny was quick on the uptake.

The two of them then could hear a scream coming up from the front and saw several lighting strikes being fired off.

Pulling his camera up and looking through the lens Void saw what they were going up against. There were two Dalki but they weren't the only ones attacking.

Putting his camera down and squinting to check if he wasn't seeing things, he still ended up seeing two humans attack their group, the only discerning thing being that their eyes were glowing red in this darkness.

□□□□□□

In the canteen of the ship, several members were trapped in the room with a Dalki. Hiding under tables, and in corners of the rooms, they were shaking, praying for the enemy to not see them without the light.

They tried to hold their breath to decrease the chances of being noticed. This wasn't like facing any beast, and for a lot of them it was the first time they had even seen the Dalki.

'Hiding is useless!' One of the Dalki shouted. He, alongside another one-spiked Dalki had remained behind, while the stronger ones had already left to do something else.

Hundreds of innocent humans were in the canteen, hoping for someone to come save them. Wishing that all of this was just a nightmare.

The canteen's double doors were audibly swung open, and glowing red eyes could be seen floating in the darkness.

'Oh is it time to go already? Can't we stay a little longer? This is fun!' The Dalki bellowed in laughter.

The person with glowing red eyes approached one of the Dalki, his hand quickly covered in red aura and spun like a drill. It then slammed into the Dalki's chest and went right through its heart.

'I don't know who you think I am, but I ain't your friend!'

Chapter 1086: Strong red eyes

The Dalki were known for having almost impenetrable bodies. Even shells shot from tanks wouldn't necessarily harm them, yet the young man's hand managed to pierce through it as if it was nothing.

'What is this? Why is my body moving away on its own? This has never happened before.'

The other Dalki in the dark canteen had instinctively distanced itself from Quinn. Dalki were battle hungry beings, carelessly diving into a fight at the first best opportunity not caring for the risk of getting hurt, as that would only further their growth.

However, for this reason Dalki were often unaware that they also had a human side in them. After seeing its companion getting killed with such ease, for the first time it experienced the feeling of fear.

Alas, it was far too late for it to flee. It didn't take long for Quinn to move on to the confused creature and before it could react, its chest had been pierced in the same manner.

"Y-You're not... one of them." The Dalki let out with his last breath as he had the chance to take a closer look at its killer.

The survivors in the canteen were still shaking in the room, unable to believe what they had been barely able to see. Most of them had just heard two loud thuds as heavy objects had hit the floor.

When they peaked over, they could see a prominent dark shadow with red eyes standing there, yet it wasn't large enough to be another Dalki. Eventually, one of the closests survivors who had seen everything came running out.

"They're dead! HE SAVED US!" The young man cried out with tears in his eyes. There was blood on his body, but it was hard to tell whether it was his own or not.

'What is that idiot doing?! Did he already forget that our group got attacked by a group of humans beforehand? What if that's one of the traitors and they just had a falling out? How could you leave your hiding spot?!!' Many of the cautious survivors couldn't help but think.

Nevertheless, the red-eye shadow didn't attack him. In fact, he appeared to help the young man up.

"Hey, I-I know you." The man proclaimed since he wasn't attacked. He even created a spark with his finger, lighting up the place so everyone could see better.

For a second Quinn flinched from the sudden light. As a vampire he had been able to see perfectly well even in the darkness.

"You... you're Quinn Talen! Leader of the Cursed faction! So those weren't just rumors about you being able to take out an army of Dalki on your own!" The man called out in awe.

Instantly, many of the hiding survivors started to murmur amongst themselves and some of the braver ones also came out once the newcomer had been identified as someone they felt they could trust.

Despite the praise, Quinn was not smiling. From the moment he had entered the ship he had been able to smell the stench of blood in the air. Most importantly it hadn't just been the blood of humans and Dalkis.

"There was a report from Owen calling for help so I got here as fast as I could." Quinn explained himself loudly. "I've just arrived, so I would welcome any information you could share with me. Like how many other Dalkis have you seen so far?"

It took a while for Quinn to process the information, as many people started to speak at the same time, and their accounts were also contradicting each other at times. Many had been unaware about the reason for the chaos until later on, with the majority having run away as soon as they had seen how powerful the Dalki truly were.

From what Quinn could gather, none of the ones in the canteen had made out a Dalki with a spike count higher than two, but perhaps even more importantly he had learned the fact that there were humans who had attacked each other. The common trait between them were their red eyes...

'Just like I feared, somehow vampires are involved in this whole mess! Based on what that first Dalki was saying he must have mistook me for one of them.' Quinn thought. 'Are they working with Jim?'

Armed with new information, Quinn suspected that the Commander would head to the life support system based on the drills they had gone through so far, so that's where he would head as well.

After all, the goal was to try to save the people on the ship.

Now he could try and help them evacuate... or he could take care of the root of the problem by killing off the invaders. But first, Quinn quickly disappeared into his Shadow space.

His gauntlets still had some of the green Dalki blood on and he didn't want others to see what he was about to do. Licking a small part of the green blood the system granted him a temporary boost.

Once back, he was ready to head out, yet as he walked forward he noticed that a hundred or so people seemed intent on following him, a couple had even stumbled. Turning around Quinn saw that many of them were too injured to even move properly.

"I know that all of you must be afraid that Dalki on the ship, but I'm going to take care of them. I'm afraid that where I'm going, I won't be able to protect you all. Honestly, coming with me is probably just going to put you into more danger." Quinn explained. "I cleared out the area on the way here. For the time being, this canteen should serve you as a pretty good place to hold up."

"Please, make room for those who are really injured. I'm unable to heal you, but I have a way to alleviate your situation." Quinn stated as he used his Shadow lock on five of the most injured people in the room. They were now safe from harm and wouldn't slow down the others in case of trouble.

"Wait, let us come with you." A man who wore white robes with the insignia of the Graylash family stopped him. He introduced himself as Fow, and he had a brave face. Behind him stood five others, seemingly his bodyguards.

"This is our faction and our ship! It's our responsibility to protect this place." Fow said.

At first Quinn wanted to reject them, but he could see that they weren't doing it for selfish reasons they were good people. He then walked up to them and placed his hand on each one of them.

"You're right, do as you like. I'm not your leader after all." Quinn agreed with a smile and ran off.

'They won't get a chance to fight, but just in case.'

Void and Bonny were at a loss as to what to do since the fighting ahead of them was coming to an end. The fact that they had been able to last for so long was undoubtedly due to Commander Hermes' prowess.

However, there was a clear disadvantage between the two groups. It was hard to tell apart friend from foe for the crew members, yet that didn't seem to apply for the invaders. In fact, it seemed as if they could see perfectly fine.

Void continued to film everything despite his hands shaking, and he was able to watch the red-eyed humans jump and run across the side of the walls at great speed. Without even having to come off them they were able to throw red lines of Aura.

"Is it an ability? But where have I seen or heard of something like this before?"
Void thought.

"I'm afraid this is going to be a failure of a mission!" Hermes shouted. They had managed to kill three Dalki so far thanks to their strong drills, however there were still three more on the other side and on top of that five men with glowing eyes, while their side had dwindled down to five, not counting Bonny and Void.

"Everyone retreat, their forces outweigh us! Head back to the training room! We'll barricade ourselves in there until help arrives." Hermes' ordered.

Even if they managed to outrun the Dalki somehow, Hermes wasn't sure help would arrive in time. They knew that Owen was busy dealing with the Dalki himself. If anything, the leader's situation took priority over theirs.

The group continued to run as they threw lightning behind them. This time rather than strong attacks, they were firing off lighting sparks that would spread out to increase the chances of stunning the others for a short amount of time, buying them some time. From the looks of it, it seemed to be working.

"Void, don't you dare drop or lose that camera! Make sure to record every single moment of this." Bonny reminded her cameraman, yet he suddenly stopped running.

Seeing this the others also slowed down and they could finally see what Void had seen up ahead. More pairs of glowing red eyes. At that moment, a couple of vampires that were clung to the walls by the side of the wall had leapt towards the group.

Before they could lay a finger on the group, two large slashes of red aura hit them larger than the ones before.

'All those guys with the red eyes seem to have that weird red aura ability. And this guy seems to be even stronger than the rest, but did he miss? What's going on?' Void wondered.

Pulling up his camera he looked through the lens to get a better look at who this stronger red eyed human was and once he recognised him, he couldn't help but shout out in glee.

"Quinn!"

Chapter 1087: The Recording

The rattling of Void's hands hitting his camera wouldn't stop. Void had seen who was on who were on the other side. Those that they had been fighting against, the humans with red eyes, and yet, he had just seen Quinn, the leader of the Cursed faction, have the same glowing red eyes.

'I'm sure of it, he used the red aura power as well, but he seems to be on another level compared to the others.'

"It's Quinn. Are you talking about who you think I am? What's he doing here?" Bonny asked.

She was surprised, and for a split second, she had forgotten about the dire situation that they were in.

A few seconds later and the wind was felt going past both Void, and Bonny's faces as thier hair blew back, and Quinn had disappeared entirely from their front, too fast for them to see.

'I have to record this. I have to find out what is going on!' Void thought as he spun around and turned his camera in the direction Quinn had gone.

The first set of vampires Quinn had hit were no longer able to fight, and quickly realising that they now had some form of backup, Hermes turned around to try and hold off the Dalki with his other men, firing out thier lightning abilities.

"I can smell it, it's a lord. What is such a high ranking one doing here of all places!" one of the men standing behind the Dalki said.

Quickly four more men jumped and ran on each side of the walls, heading straight for Quinn.

"If you can no longer fight, then you know what to do!" The man commanded.

At that moment, after hearing those orders, the first vampires that had been struck and were on the floor had raised their hands and slit thier own throats, killing themselves instantly.

'They know I'm a vampire and that I'm a lord. Are they killing themselves so I can't gather any information from them? I was going to use the I influence skill on them, but now this has become troublesome.' Quinn thought, as one vampire went to strike him, but Quinn, even though moving his hand later, then the vampire had grabbed the man's face before reaching him and started to scrape it along the side of the walls.

'I learnt a lesson from Arthur that day, that I don't need to be nice to those that are trying to kill me!' Quinn said as he lifted the vampire's body at the right time as another one struck, allowing him to dig his sharp claws into his own companion.

Quinn then kicked their legs, breaking them. And with his other hand free, he grabbed onto the other ones face.

'I need to help the others as soon as I can. I can't try extracting and asking questions now; otherwise, it will put others lives in danger. I guess there's only one thing I can do.'

From his gauntlets, blobs of shadow came out and covered the entire heads of the two vampires and soon, the shadows had returned to him.

[Skill shadow eater activated]

[10MC points gained]

[10MC points gained]

"Now, you can do what you want with your lives," Quinn said as he left them screaming in pain. With only one outcome.

Something was strange about Quinn, his eyes were more determined than usual, and he had his goal in sight.

Some might have thought that Quinn was exceptionally cruel in this instance. However, this was all due to what he had seen when he had entered the ship.

The crew, the mechanics that worked on the docks had all been slaughtered. Most of them were not even fighters who had families, the people who worked as cooks and more. Every single one of them were killed.

Some were done by the Dalki, but it was clear from the teeth marks left on thier bodies that vampires did others.

The vampires coming from the other side, Quinn leapt from one side of the wall to the other, and while mid-air, he swung both his legs firing off two blood crescent kicks.

They came out faster than any blood swipe they had ever seen, and they fell to the ground immediately.

Quickly, Quinn used the shadow eater skill on the two on the ground once again.

'What is going on?' The vampire at the back thought. 'He was confident due to the two spiked Dalki by his side, and his turner had assured him that this would be an easy job. However, for a vampire lord to come out of nowhere was something he was never expecting.

'Most of the lords are vampire leaders. Did he come from one of the castles, but I don't remember them? And they have the power of the punishers. Who is this person?!" The vampire couldn't help but think.

With the other four vampires gone, Quinn threw out another swipe towards the vampire, who seemed to be their leader in the back. He quickly raised a wall of blood. The wall was shattered, but using blood hardening, he was able to stop the blood swipe.

'I stopped the attack. With the Dalki by my side, we should be able to take him down. I'm a vampire noble not too far from becoming a lord, I think, I can do this!' He thought and started laughing.

"Just because you're a lord, you think you can win this. You're too arrogant." He said as he pointed towards Quinn.

"Why are you so confident? Is it because you blocked my swipe from earlier?" Quinn asked. He then raised his hand and threw out the attack once more, it looked similar to before, and the vampire was ready.

"I'll warn you the first attack. I wasn't using my full power because I wasn't trying to kill you." Quinn said.

The noble was confused I. He had seen a red aura, but suddenly it was no longer there, and soon he could no longer think as his body was split in half.

"I wish you could have been useful and at least given me some MC points," Quinn said.

After Quinn's arrival and dealing with the vampires, the two spiked Dalki were quickly taken care of, and everyone was beyond amazed at how easy Quinn had made it look. The five men that had travelled with him had only just arrived through the halls as they had lost him long ago. Although they were happy to know, the fighting was over.

Everyone alive wished to thank Quinn for what he had done, but instead, he had decided to go around the ship, searching for any more vampires or Dalki. If he found a lone vampire, perhaps he could restrain them before they killed themselves to ask them a few questions.

Unfortunately, although a few more Dalki were found, there were no more vampires.

Even searching the dead vampire's bodies, there was nothing noticeable on them. They were perfectly disguised as faction members and according to others, they had been part of the factions for years which was why no one had suspected a thing.

It didn't take long for power to return to the place and everyone to gather in the canteen. Here Quinn released the injured for them to get a looked at.

While in the canteen, despite him wanting to leave as soon as possible, tears of joy and thankful words spoken by the others were unable to make him go. People constantly approached him, thanking him for saving their lives and eventually, part of the Earthborn group had arrived.

Leading the Group itself was general Innu.

"You seem to be in a rush," Hermes said to Quinn, who was stood off to the side with the more senior members of the Graylash family.

He wasn't particularly in a rush, but his next step was to head to the planet where Owen was on. In the canteen itself, Innu and his people were doing the usual running an investigation.

There were a couple of glances between Quinn and him here and there, but Innu seemed to be more respectable when meeting him this time.

In the corner of the room, Void and Bonny were a little worried about something. After the fight on the ship had ended, they had decided to film the wreckage and carnage of what was on board, and during their tour, they had run into Innu.

"Hey you, is that a recording device. we will have to take all the footage you have on there as evidence." Innu said, pointing at Void.

"Wait." Void said, worried about what exactly was on the footage. At the moment, Quinn didn't have any glowing red eyes, and he didn't really know what it meant. He was unsure if it was a good thing or a bad thing, but it was already too late as one of Innu's people had already taken the camera.

'I hope this doesn't stir into something big.' Void thought.

After Innu had finished barking out orders, he started to walk over to the others and Quinn, who looked like he was ready to leave.

"Quinn, where are you planning to go, you did a good job here, but it looks like you still have something on your mind? Innu asked.

Quinn was about to ignore Innu anyway, despite him asking in a more polite way than he usually would, and was to head out on the ship he had come in.

"If it's about Owen, don't bother. I think I know you by now. the fight...is already over." Innu said, and the next bit of information he told everyone had caused thier jaws to drop to the ground, and Quinn's heart beat faster than ever.

Chapter 1088: Owen's Soul weapon

The four spiked Dalki known as Green Horn and Owen were quite a distance away from the others. The remaining Dalki were seemingly ignoring the battle between the two powerhouses. It was hard to tell whether this was due to the high trust of the Dalki in their commander... or the lack thereof.

Behind him, Owen could hear the sound of fighting from the people he had trained, looked after and had asked to fight by his side. He desperately wanted to turn around and help them against their enemies, but he recognised that the biggest threat that they needed to get rid of was the four spiked Dalki in front of him.

The reason why Owen took a glance behind him was to make sure that he had ample room without having to worry about injuring some of his men with his soul weapon. Concentrating deep within, a glow started to appear in his hands. His long hair that was normally so defiant to remain straight no matter how much he used his powers was now standing and spiralling out of control.

The thing forming in his hands resembled a ball at first glance, making it hard to tell if it was an item based soul weapon or an enhancement type. Either way, it was clear to see that the ball contained several sparks of lightning inside, making it fizz like crazy.

Green Horn attempted to take a step forward, but the very next second, lightning shot out. The Dalki was barely able to move his foot back, before the shot collided with the ground, scorching it black.

'What is that thing? Do I need to break his form of concentration to get rid of it? But if I get too close to it, it will just hurt me like it did before.' Green Horn pondered over his next course of action. He was more cautious than the typical Dalki, but this was mainly due to knowing what had happened to One Horn in the last war.

Looking past Owen, Green Horn started to grin, bearing his sharp teeth he stormed forward. He seemingly charged at Owen, but then abruptly changed direction to go around the other.

"I was right!" The Dalki started to laugh as he saw the desperation on the other's face. "Your attack might be powerful, but it requires you to remain standing on your spot! Your strikes may be dangerous, but I don't need to go after you just now, I can always deal with you later!"

As for where Green Horn was intending to go, it was naturally towards the rest of the battle that was taking place behind them.

'My soul weapon might have some downsides, but there are ways to make up for it!' Owen thought as he threw the ball as hard as he could into the air. When it was around ninety meters up in the sky. He then threw his fan up in the sky piercing the strange lighting ball, and attacked it with his blue lightning.

The ball seemed to be charging up, and when it reached its peak, it exploded into a group of clouds. The clouds were dark and full of power as they spread out striking the ground beneath them constantly.

Green Horn, seeing this was in range of the clouds, and was avoiding some of the strikes that came from above, by the skin of his teeth, until eventually one hit him. It shook his whole body with great power. It was painful but the lightning strike hadn't dealt him a lethal blow.

The main problem was that it had stunned him for a few seconds. Trying to avoid the lightning strikes while in the middle of a fight would be extremely disadvantageous for Green Horn.

'That guy, this is what he was cooking up! Didn't he look back for a few seconds before activating it? With this far ranged skill, why didn't he activate it in the middle of the fight?' Green Horn thought, and he had managed to come up with an answer.

'The lightning strikes must hurt his own people as well, so all I need to do is continue on with my plan!' Greenhorn made up his mind. The distance between the two were quite far and the clouds didn't reach the rest of where the others were fighting,

If the two of them were to run forward it was clear who would get to the others first.

Green Horn turned his head to look back at Owen, but soon his smile disappeared, as the other had disappeared without his knowledge.

A lightning strike, larger than the previous ones, appeared from the clouds, and suddenly right in front of the Green Horn was Owen himself.

"Breathe!" Owen said, as he took a deep breath and then extruded it out at the same time, he then threw out a blue fist filled with lightning hitting the Dalki in the stomach. Blood immediately came out from Green Horn's mouth, and he attempted to hit Owen once again, but lightning striking from above had hit Green Horn paralysing him in place.

Owen took another breath, lifting his leg up high, and throwing a kick to the top of the Dalki's head, leaving a trail of lightning behind.

The Dalki's body was nearly lifted off its feet, but Green Horn had remained on the ground. Still, Owen wasn't done yet, taking more breaths, each time he would continue to hit the Dalki, with his body covered in lightning.

To the chest, a kick to the legs, then kicking the Dalki's chin, he spun up in the air, and as soon as his two feet landed, he threw both of his fists, hitting the Dalki in the stomach. In the middle of their fight, the Dalki as its power was rising, was hoping to ignore the pain and strikes it was receiving to attack back, but he was contently being hit by the lightning from above.

Then when he had gotten a grasp on where Owen was, he would disappear and reappear in a different place.

'Damn it, I'm losing control over my breath! I can do twenty strikes at most with my lightning powers, and he has already endured sixteen. Just how durable is this damn Dalki!' Owen cursed internally, but made sure to keep on a brave face.

Hoping to recover some energy, Owen moved into the clouds with his soul weapon. Allowing him to move as a lightning bolt itself, and then reappear away from the two of them as he tried to recover some of his breath.

However, what happened next had come as a complete surprise. The Dalki started to run in the opposite direction. It was running away from where his companions were battling and out of the clouds. As soon as Green Horn was in the clear, he spat his wings from his back and flew up high in the sky.

'Did he just retreat, in the middle of the fight?'

Not quite sure what was going on, Owen had to make a decision. Since the Dalki had run away it should mean it was quite possible on its last legs. Could he really afford to let it go? On the other hand, how much could he do with his soul weapon nearly exhausted?

Besides, what about his own people that were still fighting the Dalki before him? Falling from the sky, Owen's fan fell into his hand, and soon the clouds started to disappear. There was no sign of Green Horn anywhere and it looked like he had successfully fled.

Immediately, Owen seeing this, using the last bit of his strength, turned around and decided to help out his companions. He was strategic in the way he had helped them, due to already using much of his power during the fight, but there were situations where Owen had no choice but to jump in and fight. He even slipped up, getting hit in the legs and he could feel the bone in his thigh break.

Pushing through, he continued to fight, and his people started to keep an eye on him more. To them he was invincible, but it was the first time they had seen Owen pushed to this point, No longer calm and collected, and breathing heavily as he attacked Dalki after Dalki, but eventually large ships seemed to appear, and from them, Oscar and others came out.

With the help of Oscar, Owen was able to ease up and the battle was over.

The invading force of the Dalki were no more, but it didn't come with ease, as the loss on the Graylash side was quite significant. Owen was surrounded by a group of his people, who had formed a circle around him, letting him use his powers without worrying about more Dalki attacking him, and he was so drained he had fallen to his knees.

At that moment, his people who had been protecting him turned, and looked at Owen. They all rushed to help him up, but one person had gotten there before the rest, faster than the others, and stood in front of Owen.

"Too easy" He said, as his red filled hand of aura went straight for Owen's heart. He could see the attack coming his way, and with what little strength he had he had hit the hand slightly, but it wasn't enough, he was too weak.

The attack had pierced right through Owen, and the last thing he could see was the smile on the person's face, and his red eyes.

Chapter 1089: A sick leader

Owen's men had successfully survived one of the first battles of this new Dalki war. What's more everyone had worked together to protect their leader behind them. Now that the fighting had come to a complete end, each of them had a large smile on their weary faces.

Knowing how exhausted their leader must be after his fight against the four spiked Dalki, the men turned around intending to celebrate with Owen, only to see that one of their own was already standing in front of him.

'How did he reach the head that fast? Did Anderson hold back in the fight?' One of the Graylash members wondered. Still, he wasn't worried. Anderson was one of their own, someone they had known for a number of years already. Belonging to one of the factions under the Graylash family. He had been with them through a lot and all of them would entrust their lives to him... However, his next actions proved that doing so would be a big mistake.

Everything seemed to play out in slow motion in front of their eyes. Their faces went from smiles to disbelief as they watched Anderson's hand pierce through Owen's body. The look on the latter's face spoke volumes as he had not expected this betrayal after they had just beaten back the enemy.

"Noooo!" The people screamed as they rushed forward, but before they could even reach the person, a tunnel of ice shot straight past them and the edge of the walls hit the attacker, freezing him in place.

Oscar quickly ran forward, and when the arm that was lodged through Owen's Boyd started to freeze. He pulled him, breaking the arm off and placed Owen on the floor while he placed his sword on top of him as well.

"Damn it! ALL HEALERS IN THE AREA ARE TO COME OVER ASAP!!" Oscar shouted, as his sword was freezing the wound to prevent the other from losing too much blood. Honestly, he didn't know how much it would help. He was no doctor, but blood was filling up Owen's mouth, whose eyes remained closed. The blow was awfully close to one's heart, perhaps even a part of it had been hit.

Back on the second fleet's ship, Innu had just finished telling everyone the tale of what had happened to Owen.

"Someone betrayed the family head!" One of the Graylash men shouted who was close by, but Hermes quickly moved his hand over his mouth, telling him to keep quiet.

"Did you forget what happened here? How many who we thought we could trust betrayed us today? The one who did that must have belonged to the same traitorous faction! The important thing is to prevent this news. We can't risk morale dropping even lower right now. Is Owen....." Hermes gulped down before he could finish the question. "Is he alive?"

Quinn couldn't believe it. Owen was the ideal world leader. Someone he himself regarded as strong and wise. Alas, it seemed like he had been forced into such a miserable situation. If the one responsible was really the same as the 'humans' on board... then it would mean that the ones responsible were once again, vampires.

"His condition is critical at the moment." Innu answered. "They have healed the wound to the best of their abilities. Unfortunately some of his wounds refuse to heal. Luckily the blow had only taken out part of his heart, and they were able to use artificial parts to help him get through it. Still, he is in a very weak state right now and any complications could be deadly."

'Can't heal the heart? Is this something similar to when vampires suffer Qi attacks? Did vampires have such an effect on humans?' Quinn asked.

'I can think of two things.' Vincent replied. 'Either that vampire has a certain ability that repels the healing effect, or something has entered Owen's body. Perhaps, their true goal was never to kill Owen.'

If their goal wasn't to kill Owen, then Quinn could only think that maybe someone was trying to control him. It made sense, all this time Quinn was thinking that this was a war with the Dalki, and not the vampires, but somehow they had gotten involved, and unfortunately not as humanity's allies.

As long as humans remained unaware about the existence of vampires, they would just think that there was a faction of humans out there, working with the Dalki for some reason. Also if they were going up against vampires, then they could do vampire things, such as turn people.

If someone had successfully managed to turn Owen, then the turner could get them to follow his commands to a certain extent, and with Jim working with them, who knows what else they were planning on doing.

"What happened to the assassin?" Quinn asked.

"For now, he remains frozen. They carved him out carefully and have imprisoned him on one of the Bertha ships. Oscar is planning to interrogate him, but they need to make sure that the person won't be able to kill themselves, so we are being extra careful." Innu replied.

'Is the world going to find out about vampires? Should I tell Oscar? No, not yet, for now I need to get information from that vampire first and I need to do so before anyone else!'

"I'm going to visit Owen!" Quinn said. "Please inform Oscar that I wish to talk to the assassin as well. Also it's vitally important that he doesn't go in there without me. I'll explain later why.."

And with that, Quinn used his shadow to connect and transported himself back to the Cursed ship to inform the others about what he was going to do.

Thanks to Quinn's position as a world leader, it didn't take long for him to hear back. On top of that, they were happy to hear that he had successfully saved the second fleet from the attack. Oscar had agreed to his somewhat strange request and promised not to interrogate the man until his arrival.

With this deal accepted, Quinn decided to head to the Graylash family's main spaceship base. The others were still on the planet where the Demon tier had been, and Quinn asked them to remain there. He told them that he would go to Linda with the shadow ability, once he had dealt with this.

Honestly, the main reason Quinn wanted them to stay there was to keep an eye on Eno. Quinn wished to find out everything he could himself without Eno having any chance to play any of his tricks, and it was safe to say Quinn still didn't trust him a hundred percent either.

If Owen really was in the middle of turning, then Eno might perhaps decide to kill him on the spot. Before leaving, Quinn had made one specific request to Logan as well, and after what he asked for was completed, it was time for him to get to work again.

Quinn didn't arrive at the Graylash base on his own, he brought along one important leader, Sam.

The two of them walked across what felt like a giant place that was built up in the mountains. Their main spaceship was as large as an island, and was actually made from a piece of land from earth.

They walked past temples and were being escorted by Hermes at the same time, until they eventually reached the golden palace where Owen lived.

"Wow, is this whole place made out of real gold, this place is so...fancy." Sam couldn't help but say, but the other two weren't in the best of moods to be amazed by everything around them.

Entering the palace, they were allowed to head to the top floor, where several guards and doctors with medical abilities were watching over Owen. He was lying in a large bed that had pillars on each side, and the room itself was as large as a training room back on the Cursed ship.

At the moment, Owen was sitting upright. He looked thinner than the last time Quinn and the others had seen him. It was obvious that it was hard for Hermes to see his leader like this. He clenched his fist, and hated the fact he hadn't been by his leader's side to have shielded him.

"Hermes, I'm glad to see you alive, it looks like the Cursed faction got my message after all." Owen spoke weakly. He waved his hand telling the doctors and guards to give them some privacy as he called his visitors forward.

Now that they were closer to Owen, they could see the large hole that was in the centre of his chest. A strange device was placed in the centre made of mechanical parts making him look like a certain superhero with a full body iron suit.

"I'll have to apologise that I can't get up to greet all of you properly, but the doctors have instructed me to restrict my movements to a minimum. My heart is still weak and I can't even use my powers at the moment." Owen explained with a thin smile.

Quinn could tell it was a painful smile.

"Quinn, I owe you a lot for saving my second fleet. I don't even want to think what would have happened if you hadn't been in the area. These are not your people, yet from what I heard you personally went to save them. Thank you." Owen looked at Quinn, deep gratitude in his eyes.

"I'm sure you would have done the same if you had been in my position." Quinn replied. "About what happened to you. I have some questions. However they are rather sensitive, so do you mind, if it would be just the two of us."

Owen looked at all the others, and Quinn looked at Sam as well who nodded to leave the room. However Hermes had remained.

"Hermes, I think he means you as well. Don't worry, I'm certain he will not harm me." Owen instructed his subordinate.

When everyone had finally left the room, and Quinn and Owen were finally the only ones in the room, Quinn decided to ask Owen to personally recount what exactly happened. Owen went into detail about the fight, how strong the four spiked Dalki was, and even talked about his own skills, as if he was showing off to Quinn.

He paused for a brief moment, before he spoke about the betrayal at the end.

"And when that person attacked me, all I could remember was the smile on his face, and his glowing red eyes." Owen concluded his recounting.

After listening to everything, Quinn now needed to confirm it.

"Owen, can you please let me have a look at you? It's hard to explain, but I need you to trust me. I have a hypothesis why you aren't healing and if I'm right, I might be able to help you in some way." Quinn requested.

"Go ahead." Owen shrugged his shoulders. "It's not like my life is worth anything anymore."

Quinn pressed his hand against Owen's chest and closed his eyes. He started to sense the energy inside the other's body. The powerful strong yellow Qi energy that humans had. Even Owen seemed to have quite a significant amount of Qi, despite never having studied it, but then around the chest Quinn could see it, the red aura that only belonged to vampires, and it had spread out slightly from his chest.

'So it's true, they were trying to turn him.' Quinn thought worriedly. 'But why hasn't it worked? Did Oscar interrupt him in the middle of it? Does that mean he is safe? Will he turn eventually... or could he be somehow immune to the process perhaps?'

Chapter 1090: A Special Power

'Do you make it a point to forget everything I told you?' Those were the first words from Vincent after he had listened to Quinn trying to figure out what was happening to Owen.

Quinn honestly didn't understand why the world leader was currently in the state that he was in. In the past when his own red aura had entered someone else's such as Leo, it had immediately infected them, so he couldn't figure out why it didn't happen in this case.

'I'm sorry, but can we skip the lecture part and get to the you helping me figure out the answer part?' Quinn hurried Vincent along. 'Time is a bit of the essence... I think.'

'Regular vampires can't just turn someone by biting them, or injecting their blood into their body. Remember when you first bit Layla? She didn't turn because of it, now did she?'

'So just because a regular vampire struck Owen, and part of his blood is inside Owen doesn't mean he will necessarily turn. Still, at least in this case the process has already been initiated. Just as you need to complete the ritual to turn someone, the same thing needs to be done here.'

Quinn understood what Vincent was saying, but that led to just more questions. Why attack Owen just when the battle was concluded? Sure he had been weakened, but there were so many that had him surrounded. It had always been impossible to turn Owen in the short time before someone would have intervened, even if it hadn't been Oscar.'

'Was the vampire prepared to sacrifice himself from the start? Did he pay with his life so someone else could finish what he started?' Quinn wondered.

"So can you do anything to help me, or did you just get my hopes up so you could rub my chest?" Owen questioned, since Quinn had been quiet for an awkwardly long time with his hand placed on his chest.

"Umm, yeah sorry, just give me a few moments." Quinn apologised, as he closed his eyes again.

Thinking back, there was a time when the red aura energy had entered Chris and he had been able to get rid of it before it had taken over his body. When teaching the kids at the school how to use Qi, he was also able to control the red energy, so perhaps, Quinn was also able to remove the energy from Owen at this moment, allowing his body to heal again.

Being careful with the task, Quinn raised his other hand and now both were placed on Owen's bare chest. The robes were moved to the side to make it easier for Quinn to feel and control energy when there was skin to skin contact.

"How fortunate that you made everyone leave the room. If anyone were to see us like that, we would probably make many BL fans quite happy." Owen joked nervously.

'What the hell is BL?' Quinn wondered.

"Umm, I kinda need to concentrate on this." Quinn replied with an awkward look. He might be unaware of what the abbreviation stood for, but judging from the tone it was nothing he would enjoy.

Seeing that Quinn was serious and seemed to have a way to potentially help him, Owen immediately shut up and closed his eyes as well. There was a dull pain that was constantly around his chest. He could feel it, especially when the healer tried to do something about it. No matter what method they had tried, the pain had remained.

... and yet he could suddenly feel the energy moving.

'Quinn, you can actually do something about this?' Owen was flabbergasted. 'Just where did you learn how to do that when even the professionals were unable to help me?'

At first it was just a little painful, as if someone was poking him with a needle, but soon enough it felt as if someone had stuck their bare hand inside his body. Then the pain worsened and if he didn't know any better he would have sworn that Quinn was ripping out his flesh.

Owen gritted his teeth during the procedure, doing his best to fight through the pain. He trusted the Cursed faction leader was not just torturing him for fun and that it would help him, so he did his best to endure.

'The family still needs me!' Owen repeated like a mantra.

"ARGhhh!" Eventually he couldn't take it anymore. It might have been different if he had been in peak condition, but he had barely recuperated.

"Sir, is everything okay in there?!" Hermes shouted from the other side of the door, ready to burst in at any second.

"Don't you dare come in, or I'll shock you myself!" Owen shouted back, feeling that whatever Quinn was doing, was working. He grabbed the pillow behind him and bit on to it, to muffle his cries, worried that it might break the other's concentration.

Owen was huffing and panting, covered in sweat but after what had felt like an eternity to him the pain was subsiding. Looking down, Quinn's hands left Owen's chest and now a red aura could be seen spiralling around floating. Quinn just chucked it to the side, and it splattered on the floor like blood.

Throughout the procedure Quinn had felt like a surgeon performing surgery and he was relieved it was successful.

"I think if you get someone to heal your heart now, that they might be able to do something about it. Once you recover you should also be able to use your powers again." Quinn said.

Owen wasn't completely out of the woods yet, his body was still weak, and he felt like he was part machine, but he could tell that Quinn wasn't lying. Doing his best to move the bed sheets and get out of his bed, he bowed down to Quinn. He slowly placed his knees on the ground and placed his head on the floor.

"I owe you so much Quinn. The first time I met you I knew you were special but I never imagined you would ever save my life in such a manner. You not only saved my people, but you also saved me! If there is anything I can do for you, just ask and I shall see it done at a moment's notice!" Owen promised, still keeping his head on the floor.

"Please get up." Quinn quickly requested. He didn't need to be a doctor to know that Owen should remain in bed for the foreseeable future. He even helped him off the ground and as he carefully pulled him up Quinn inserted some of his Qi energy inside of Owen, to make him feel better and stronger.

"You are just full of all sorts of tricks aren't you." Owen mentioned, noticing the slight change in his condition. "I'm very tempted to ask you about your methods and about the person attacking me, but if you wish to not tell me I'll understand."

Quinn was happy to see Owen back to his cheeky self once more, always pushing the boundaries. Although the two of them had different goals of changing the current world, Owen had never treated him badly.

Alas, sharing the fact that there was a secret race of vampires out there and that they had attacked him, seemingly so that they could convert or at least control him, Quinn didn't really consider this to be the best time to tell the others all of that. Even if it was, he needed to speak with Sam over the best way to reveal this information, so they didn't get chucked in the middle of the mess they were already in.

"About that favour." Quinn deliberately changed the subject to avoid the question. "I happen to be in need of some crystals. Do you think you could supply me with two Demi-god tier crystals? It doesn't matter what type."

He knew how rare Demi-god crystals were, and not even the Graylash family had a Demon tier crystal, so he was unsure whether Owen could complete the request.

"Done." Owen said. "You will have them before you leave my home. But that can't be all, or do you wish to say that my life is only worth two such crystals? No, I still owe you, consider the crystals are a gift for your faction."

This was a surprising outcome that Quinn had never expected, now the Cursed faction was in possession of one Demon tier crystals and four Demi-god tiers. The reason why Quinn had asked this was to improve his own equipment. There was a chance that only two crystals would need to be used on Eno, and now the rest could be turned into equipment.

Once the two of them were done, the others waiting outside were able to enter once again. All of the guards, Hermes and doctors rushed into the room. The subordinate could instantly see the colour had returned to Owen's face.

"What happened?" Hermes asked, noticing the pillow that looked as if a dog had chewed through it.

"Nevermind that, just get those healers in here and let them try healing me once more." Owen ordered.

The best healers that the Graylash faction owned were called and everyone was waiting for their arrival.

"It looks like things have turned out better than you thought." Sam whispered over to Quinn, while they waited for the result of the healing.

"Yeah, but, but things like this might keep happening if we don't decide what to do next." Quinn replied.

A total of four different healers affiliated with the Graylash family in some way entered the room, and they immediately went to Owen's bedside. One of them was quite the old man, who rubbed his hands together, before he was ready to activate his ability.

He reached out his hand, but before he could touch the world leader, someone grabbed them mid air, and started to squeeze them quite tightly,

"What do you think you're doing, young man?" The old man cried out in pain, looking at none other than Quinn.

"You sure have guts showing up here. Do you honestly think I wouldn't notice?" Quinn answered and increased the pressure.

The guards were getting ready to defend the healer, while the others had moved away, but Quinn quickly grabbed the other hand as it started to move.

"Oh no, I won't allow you to kill yourself too. You will have to answer my questions." Quinn said. "The rest of you can continue doing what you are doing. I'm going to speak to this one in private."

A shadow soon opened up, and Quinn and the healer disappeared.

"What the hell just happened?" Hermes asked, confused.

Taking a look at Owen though, his face was one of anger once more, and the veins could be seen running up his body. He had an idea why Quinn had done what he had done.

"It looks like Quinn has taken care of yet another traitor!"

Chapter 1091: A struggle Within

Of course, when Quinn and the mysterious old healer had disappeared, they hadn't actually vanished, instead they had both appeared inside of the Shadow lock. Quinn didn't want any spectators for what he was going to do next, otherwise he was afraid that it would just make things more complicated.

He still held on to the man's arms, preventing him from taking his own life. After some initial confusion about how and where they had landed, the man concentrated on trying to free himself by attempting to kick Quinn off. However, the latter noticed his hostage's intention and made the first move by hitting the other's shin, breaking the bone immediately. The force was strong enough that his leg had banged into the other dealing some excruciating pain.

"It would be for the best if you didn't move." Quinn instructed the man, whose eyes started to glow red. There was no point pretending to be a healer when it was just the two of them, so he was revealing his true colours.

"Let go of me!" The vampire demanded, looking into Quinn's eyes, yet a few seconds later the smile that had appeared on his face was gone, since nothing had happened at all.

"Oh, are you surprised?" Quinn questioned in amusement, before his eyes started to glow red as well. "Was this what you were trying to do? KNEEL!" He used the influence skill, and the vampire who had tried to get to Owen, immediately went down on his knees, despite his injury, while his hands were still being held up.

"You....You're a vampire as well! But how can that be? Your smell is that of a human!" The old man spoke in confusion.

"You're right, this smell is the exact reason why I was able to spot you before you could spot me." Quinn explained.

Before leaving the Cursed ship to head to Owen, this was the favour he had asked Logan about. Back when they had headed to the Vampire World, Logan had been able to create a smell that had managed to make the ones who had not been turned, smell like vampires.

If a fragrance could be made that made one smell like vampires, then surely Logan should be able to create one that could do the opposite as well, Quinn theorised and his friend hadn't disappointed him. It hadn't taken the inventor long to mix up such a request, so before coming over Quinn and Sam had both sprayed themselves to mask themselves as humans.

Since they knew that vampires appeared to be working within many different locations, they thought it best to hide themselves and allow the vampires to come out on their own.

After Vincent told him that another vampire would be able to complete the ritual to turn Owen, Quinn had figured out their plan. With so many traitors showing up, it wasn't that surprising anymore that another would be working in the Graylash family.

However, there was one confusing thing about it all and that was the fact that none of the vampires had been able to recognise who Quinn was so far. Any vampire from the Vampire World would know him as one of the leaders, yet these vampire spies didn't.

Quinn could only assume that this meant they were on Jim's side.

'I guess my presence in the Human World is only as one of the world leaders, and Jim doesn't have as much insider information about the vampires as he thought. Otherwise he should have been able to put one and one together to know that Quinn Talen, leader of the Cursed faction, is also the leader of the Tenth family.'

At least this was Quinn's theory on the matter. Additionally, from what they had found out, those vampires had seemingly worked in their factions for years, so did that mean that they had been vampires all along, or had Jim been going around, turning people this entire time?

Fortunately, Quinn had someone right in front of him who should be able to answer some of those questions. Since he had followed his command, Quinn was sure he could get him to talk via his Influence skill.

"Answer my questions." Quinn demanded as his eyes continued to glow red. "Tell me, who do you work for?"

The man's eyes started to fade, and he began to talk in a monotone voice.

"I was an agent working for the Vampire King, but later I was approached by someone who did something that changed me. Now I work for someone else."

'An agent for the old king? Are these the vampire agents that I was meant to be looking for? So originally they were vampires sent by the king, but then he said someone changed him.'

"What do you mean changed you? Who did such a thing, was it Jim? Was it one of the Enos?" Quinn asked in a firmer voice.

However, the old man didn't reply, and his mouth just continually twitched. This was something that hadn't happened before.

"Answer me!" Quinn nearly shouted, but nothing was working.

'Quinn, I think it's pointless.' Vincent intervened. 'It appears that something has been done to these vampires, something beyond a simple Influence skill. I can only assume that it has to do with our ability. Only the caster will have an idea of what they have done to the vampire.'

'Usually, if someone knows about the question you ask them they will still answer, but he is not speaking at all as if there is a type of block.'

Getting rid of the influence skill, the vampire's eyes came back to life, and he realised that he had been put under a spell.

"I feel bad for you." Quinn spoke. 'I'm assuming that you didn't choose to join Jim out of choice, but instead he came to all the spies and did something to you all."

Although the vampire couldn't speak, or make a type of signal that would indicate that it was true. He did wonder. 'How does such a young vampire know that it was Jim? And who exactly is this person, I don't remember anyone like this back in the Vampire World.'

"Look, I'm willing to help you. As long as you cooperate there might be a way for me to break this spell from you." Quinn tried to convince the other. Although he wasn't referring to himself, but instead he was referring to Richard Eno. He was the one person that should be able to do something about it.

Still, the frightened look on the vampire's face said it all. Even though Quinn was strong, he seemed to possess a deeper fear for whoever changed him.

"You see this space here? You can stay here and you will travel with me. No one will be able to find you, and trust me the person who I am thinking of, will be able to fix you. He's one of the Originals." Quinn revealed, reassuring the man.

For a second, the fear had diminished quite a bit, and Quinn could feel the resistance in his hands going away. Because of this, Quinn decided to let go, and the vampire smiled.

"I really didn't want to do any of what was happening, but I had to! Orders just seemed to come to me-" in the middle of speaking the old man's hands raised to his neck, yet from the look on his face he didn't even seem aware of himself doing it. They moved, slitting his own throat, killing him instantly.

"Damn it!" Quinn shouted, rushing over to the vampire, but he had died too fast for Quinn to do anything about it.

'What was that just now? He seemed to have been convinced, so did Eno just control him? But how? What the hell kind of overpowered ability is that that your family had!' Quinn asked in frustration, mad at himself for not having taken precautions and crushed his hands beforehand.

'I don't know what that was. Perhaps there was a condition, a broken rule, or at worse.... Jim might have been able to see everything and control him at any time, similar to the Demon tier beast you just faced.' Vincent stated his own theories on how it had been possible. It was a long shot, but their family members had used the equivalent exchange ability in different ways, and there was always the chance they had gotten certain abilities from someone else somewhere.

'I guess that's all we can do for now.' Quinn replied, as he looked at the vampire, who had died. Ironically, he had died with a smiling face. For a second Quinn had given him hope, telling him that he could help him, and then he had made the wrong decision, allowing the man to unwillingly end himself.

Returning back to the room, Quinn held the old man's corpse in his hands. It seemed like Quinn had come at an awkward time as everyone was celebrating, and Owen was standing on his two feet.

The healers had managed to finally heal Owen, allowing him to make an almost full recovery. He would still need to have plenty of rest, and more time for healing, but it was a big step in the right direction.

As such, Quinn coming up holding a dead body in his hands was raining down on everyone's parade.

"So he really was a traitor?" Owen questioned in a serious tone.

"I'm not too sure about that now." Quinn only mumbled.

With the lead on Jim gone like that, there was still one more person that he could go talk to, hopefully without messing up again. The assassin that had been caught in the ice, that was currently with Oscar.

However, what Quinn didn't know was that a certain video tape had ended up in the hands of Oscar. One that the Commander was currently watching with mixed emotions.

Chapter 1092: The secret of the red power

The second fleet of the Graylash family had been reorganised and then merged with one of the Earthborn groups. Although Quinn had managed to come in time to save the main ship of the second fleet which had the most people on board, many of the smaller ships in the fleets hadn't been so lucky.

By combining Innu's Earthborn group with the Graylash second fleet, they now were able to establish a precedent that was just as strong as before. Oscar and Owen had agreed that just because of this initial Dalki attack, they couldn't falter and back down.

Perhaps it was their plan in the first place, who knew what the Dalki were thinking, and maybe they would come back to the same spot once again.

As for Innu himself, there was no need for him to personally be around. At the moment there were no signs of another Dalki attack happening anytime soon. Instead, he had returned to one of the Bertha ships that was under his control, which was currently making its way back to earth.

'Even if we help protect the Graylash planets, once this war is over it will only remain in their hands anyway. Why is our group sacrificing their lives for no return? If the Dalki now attacked the Earthborn planets I doubt the Graylash could send us help, especially with the sorry state Owen is in now.' Innu sighed while relaxing in his office.

The thing Innu was worried about was highly unlikely to happen due to the way their planets and the Dalki planets were set up. At the moment, there was only one active space station that would take them back to the human solar system and back to earth, and all of the Earthborn beast planets were close to this station.

The Dalki would have to get through the Graylash family first to even get to the Earthborn or earth. Still, there was the mystery of how a certain Dalki had actually managed to land on earth undetected.

Although Innu liked to complain, he was quite the diligent worker. After all that's how he had gotten to his position, and currently he was looking through all of the footage that had been captured by Void.

The camera that they were looking through didn't contain footage from the destroyed drones. Innu was unable to see what the person who had started everything looked like. Either way, he did learn that the said person who had let in the Dalki, was already dead.

Going through the footage, Innu got to the point where he could see humans walk alongside the Dalki, and the night camera had only managed to catch their eyes seemingly able to reflect more light back than usual, yet not the colour.

'So these are the traitors to humanity that are working with the Dalki? Now what could anyone gain from working together with those beasts? If I remember correctly the reports said that many of those on the ship could remember them having red eyes, and that they moved incredibly fast. That reminds me of someone else.' Innu thought, as his body shivered remembering his first meeting with Quinn.

His eyes had grown red as well, and at the time his body had listened to every command Quinn had given him. He still held a slight grudge due to it, but he had to remind himself that he actually was the one in the wrong at that time, for he had been speaking to a world leader without realising it.

Pressing play on the video, he thought he could forget what happened, but then a few seconds later, the camera was able to record the fighting that was going on, and now Innu's hand was shaking. He started to play it frame by frame and he thought it was impossible.

'Their attacks... they look exactly the same as Quinn's fighting when he fought the Dalki!' Innu was alarmed. Playing the video further along, he eventually reached the point when Quinn had arrived, and also attacked with the same red aura only slightly larger.

With the camera catching everything at a high frame rate, Innu was able to see everything, and now after watching it several times, without a doubt he could tell they were using the same moves.

'Wait, those red eyes, doesn't that mean that these guys have the same power as him? I thought it was strange, everyone knows he has the shadow ability but he also has the strange red power. Of course Oscar never questioned it, but now a group of people that are betraying the human race are using the same power!'

Innu made sure to make copies of everything on this file, and he immediately began to write a detailed report. He was already on his way to see Oscar, but he thought he should send it beforehand so they could discuss this matter further.

A short while later, Oscar called for a meeting between the Earthborn leaders, Samantha, Innu and Sach.

When they finally arrived there were now three large state of the art Bertha ships directly in front of the space station. Oscar was remaining in the area, cautious after what had happened with Owen, but he planned to return back soon once he had completed what needed to be done.

The head generals had decided to head to the Bertha ship that was controlled by Oscar himself, and they had quickly gone to the command centre to have a meeting.

Here, Oscar shared Innu's report after he had verified the video himself. Although this came as a surprise to him and Sach, there was one person in the room that didn't seem surprised at all. That was Samantha.

"Samantha, are you hiding something from the rest of us?" Oscar asked as he could tell something was wrong. "This is an important matter for all of us. A world leader was nearly killed and another world leader appears to have the same abilities as the traitors. Since there are humans working with the Dalki we need to know everything about them!"

Samantha was quiet because she had already figured out that the others had something in common. When the Cursed group had saved her from the last Dalki attack, she had seen their moves and it was indeed identical to the one on the video.

"Before I say anything, I want to stress that I don't think the Cursed faction is deeply involved with those that attacked the Graylash family! Didn't Leo, the Blind Swordsman from the Cursed family defeat the four spiked Dalki? If the Cursed faction was an enemy to humanity, he could have just let it rampage about, and why would Quinn take them all out?" Samantha began.

"Fine, your statement has been noted, but I still think we all need to know what the Cursed faction has been doing!" Oscar pressed her. "In your report, you stated that there was another with the same power as Quinn, who could use the strange red energy, and now those working with the Dalki can do the same."

"I'm not claiming that the Cursed are the root of the problem, but clearly they know something that we do not!"

"Maybe the Cursed faction are behind everything and are just playing us for a fool!" Innu stated. "This would be a great way to get us all to drop our guard, and then what happened to Owen would have happened to all of us."

Although Oscar understood what Innu was thinking he personally didn't believe that to be fact. Quinn was plenty strong, and they had already trusted him with so much, there were so many situations where he could have discreetly killed the others, but more so than anything Oscar wanted to know if they knew something, why not share it with them.

'Have the Cursed faction been playing god? Doing the Taboo on human's creating a new source of power. I heard of rumours of Pure experimenting with humans, it would be a shame if I was to learn the Cursed were doing something similar.'

Taking in a deep breath, Samantha finally let it out.

"When me and the teacher known as Fex had been fighting against the Dalki, he displayed a strong ability, but he also had red aura ability as you all know, but something strange happened. He had been badly injured and it looked like he could no longer use his powers, but then he asked me to get him something, a flask that he had dropped. Unfortunately the contents of the flask had been spilled, but I later noticed that every single one of the Cursed that helped me had the same flask with them."

"With the flask contents having been spilt on the floor, he had told me to do something else. To give him my own blood." Samantha explained. "After giving him my blood, his body started to heal up on the spot, and it appeared he could fight again."

"Blood... What madness is this?" Innu said.

Chapter 1093: Falling blood

Now that Owen's condition had improved, Quinn and Sam were getting ready to leave. Their next destination was the Bertha ship that Oscar was on. It was the final stop before they headed back to Alex to check up if he had made any progress on the beast equipment.

Before they left where the ships had docked on the strange giant island-like ship, Owen was there to see them off and by his side was Hermes and another.

'Looks like now that they know that there might be traitors hidden among the Graylash family members, he is bringing less people with him.' Quinn thought, and he was correct.

Ever since that event, Owen would limit his bodyguards to only those that he completely trusted.

"Quinn, you have done me so many favours in such a short timespan that I don't even know how I can repay you for all of them. I still haven't even had the time to thank you for the situation with Robin." Owen spoke. "He was a good person, but I heard that there were complications... I don't doubt you have tried everything you could to save him, but I guess that just means that even the strongest of us can be taken over. All I can say now is stay safe out there."

Giving a small bow, Hermes walked forwards and in his hand were two green coloured clear crystals, which were handed over to Quinn, who placed them in his system for safe keeping.

"Now that I can walk around again, it seems that there are many meetings I will have to attend to make up for lost times. Still, we won't be too far behind, so I'll see you in a bit" Owen bid him farewell.

In Quinn's eyes, since everyone was going to be at the same place, it made sense for a meeting to take place so he wasn't surprised by this.

When they entered the ship though, they could see someone else inside waiting for them, who was casually sleeping on one of the chairs allowing it to go vertically down.

"Please tell me, you stayed on the ship like you promised." Quinn sighed at seeing the old man.

Opening his eyes, Eno stopped pretending to be asleep and replied: "Of course I did. I merely insisted on coming because I thought that you may have had to depend on me again, but by the looks of the Graylash leader, you managed fine even without my help. Are you sure you don't have the same ability as me?"

However, Quinn wasn't in the mood for jokes. Although he had succeeded in helping Owen, he had failed in extracting information from the vampire spy. Fortunately, there was another one waiting for them, but he would probably need Eno there to find out why they were killing themselves and also to prevent the spy from doing so.

'Eno, why do you make asking favours from you so difficult?' Quinn thought, as Eno's attitude was making him want to ask for help even less.

'It's not his fault, in a way after learning our ability our minds kind of become like that.' Vincent shared some insight. 'Remember our ability is 'equivalent exchange', and we can use it to help us in our daily life. As long as there is an exchange, eventually everything becomes like that. A favour for a favour.'

For once, even though the Eno family ability seemed ridiculously strong he was glad he didn't have it.

Since the use of teleporters was being discouraged for now, and Quinn had arrived via ship in the first place, they were now flying through space as they headed to see Oscar.

"Quinn, I think we need to talk about what happened with Owen." Sam suggested as the ship was left on autopilot. Quinn quickly glanced at Eno. "I think it would be good if he was here as well. That way there won't be any sudden rejection on his part."

The three of them entered the break room, which was connected to a very small kitchen on board the ship that allowed them to prepare some simple food. As vampires they didn't really need to eat normal food, so the fridge was mostly filled with blood packs. Aside from that there were a few raw bits of meat in case they wanted to try something different.

The three of them sat at a rectangular shaped table, with Quinn on one end, Eno on the other and Sam in the middle. Although tensions were always high with these two, there was no better seating arrangement than the current one.

'I couldn't stop these two if they did decide to have a go at each other.' Sam thought as he let out a big sigh.

"The reason I was saying we need to talk is because of what has happened with Owen and the Graylash family. We already knew that they had experienced two attacks due to vampires and that they even caused great problems with the second fleet. However, it was only after meeting him that I found out that their goal wasn't to take Owen's life, but to convert him into a vampire."

"If we don't tell Oscar and the others about vampires soon, it will only make the situation worse in this war. Without that knowledge humans will start to turn on each other, and then when they find out the truth, they will point their finger at us."

"In essence, I'm suggesting to be upfront about the secret we have been hiding from them. As long as we are honest and not hiding anything from them, I think they will be more inclined to understand why we have hidden it for so long as well."

The room went quiet for a while, of course Quinn had thought about this. Maybe if they knew about vampires beforehand then they would have been more on guard and this wouldn't have happened to Owen.

Even more so, now that Jim seemed to have vampires stationed in high places in the different factions.

"I think it was always inevitable that humans would find out about vampires." Eno was the first to speak up. "I think now might indeed be the perfect time for you to tell them. After all of your endeavours Quinn, you currently should be in the best position for them to have to listen to you without too much prejudice.

"With the Demon tier crystal obtained, the people you have gathered, they have no choice. If humans want to survive then they will have to rely on you."

Both of what Sam and Eno said were true, for so long Quinn had been afraid of what if the others found out about his secret, but now it wasn't so much of a problem.

"I was thinking the same, but I'm not sure whether I should mention all the vampires to them." Quinn continued. "The Vampire World has stayed out of the mess with humans for so many years. It has become that way for some reason, so I think it might be better to not tell them that there is a planet full of them."

"In the first place that decision should be up to Bryce, and if he was to find out that the humans knew about them I'm worried about what plans he might have in the future."

"For once I agree." Eno nodded. "But not for the same reasons as you. If humans learn that there has been a secret world of vampires, I fear what might happen after the Dalki war ends. At the moment although both matters have to do with the Dalki, one side would not help out the other. There is no reason for vampires to help out humans, nor humans to help out the vampires so it's best to keep them separated."

"Of course, for people like us that have an interest in both worlds it is different. On top of that, I would suggest we don't mention about the demon tier beast that the Dalki are looking for, either. The less people know about it the better. If information got out, where exactly the Demon tier beast was, then a vampire could easily influence and extract the information from them." Eno said.

With the small talk over, it looked like Quinn and Sam had a plan on what to tell Oscar, and for once, the conversation between Eno and Quinn didn't turn into a full blown argument.

Finally, they could see the large Bertha on site, and when they landed, Quinn showed his credentials via his platinum badge. He was greeted, and the others quickly directed him around the ship.

"This way, sir." A man bowed down, as a group of around twenty started to escort them.

"This seems a bit excessive, even if we are on the ship." Sam said. "Even when Oscar greeted us himself, there weren't this many people there to escort us."

"Did you notice?" Eno whispered, quietly so the three of them could hear but the others couldn't.

"Yeah, their heartbeats are beating like crazy. Something's wrong." Quinn whispered back.

Eventually they were led into a room, and they could see Oscar, Samantha , Innu and Sach all there in front of them. However, it wasn't a meeting room but a training room. When they entered the room, the door had closed behind them.

"What is the meaning of this Oscar?" Quinn asked.

"I'm sorry, Quinn, I didn't want to do things this way, but I agree that there is something we need to test out." Oscar answered, as a bucket full of blood seemingly fell from the ceiling and onto the ground.

"Well, well this is getting interesting. It looks like they already know about us and have prepared a trap." Eno spoke in amusement.

Chapter 1094: Admitting the truth

From the second the three of them had gotten off from their ship and had entered the docking bay of the Bertha, Quinn had been able to tell something was up. From the person who had been assigned to welcome them, to the excessive amount of people that had come to escort them it wasn't hard to tell.

Their eyes had been constantly darting around the room, their heartbeats had been frantic and lastly, as vampires all of them had noticed the blood being stored in the ceiling above.

'Just like Eno said, if they decided to drop a pile of blood in front of us, then that means they know something.' Quinn thought.

At the same time, Sam was looking at the men who were now behind them, and although they hadn't quite pulled out their weapons just yet, their fingers were twitching while watching them for any sudden moves.

"Come on, isn't this what you guys are after?!" Innu shouted, smiling like a mad man.

However, the reactions of Quinn, Sam and Eno were not at all what they had expected. The trio of guests just stood there, looking at each other and their hosts.

"What are you talking about? Do you take us for some hungry beasts?" Sam questioned as he looked towards Innu who he took for the one to come up with this idea. Still, he had to admit he was a little nervous. While Eno and Quinn could handle themselves if a fight was to break out, Sam wasn't confident enough that he could do the same, so he would rather not reveal their secret right now.

'They've found out somehow, so if we come forward with what we know now, it will just sound like an excuse.'

"Well, things certainly seem to be fine for now." Oscar cleared his throat, his face had actually turned a shade redder as he was quite embarrassed that the three had reacted as any normal person would have in such a situation.

After learning from Samantha about Fex, and his desire for blood, they started to focus on witness accounts on the second fleet which had led to some very interesting information. Multiple of the crew survivors had stated that they had seen those with red eyes latching onto humans and biting into their necks. Licking the blood of their hands as they killed their enemies.

At first it had seemed like they had been exaggerating or perhaps their attackers had gone mad, but now the reports were starting to add up. What if this new source of power was powered by blood, which was why the Cursed faction had always carried a flask with them that contained blood inside?

Eventually, after finding biting marks on some of the victims' bodies and talking to many established minds they had come to one fairy tale conclusion. About the mythical beasts known as vampires.

Although it seemed ridiculous, Innu had been the first one convinced that this was the right answer, and had somehow managed to get Oscar to play along with this little test. The books stated that they were beasts that would do anything for blood, that they would crave it and go out of control at the mere sight of it.

Now, Oscar felt nothing but embarrassment, and didn't really know how to progress things forward.

"With all this blood, It looks like you figured out the truth, well should we have that talk you were talking about earlier, or should we just show them our fangs." Eno asked out loud and clear so each one of them could hear.

Sam started to laugh trying to play it off as just some joke from the old coot next to him, but it was clear he was nervous, and Quinn was just there shaking his head, probably regretting not having told Eno to stay back.

Meanwhile, outside of the room, Owen Graylash had just arrived along with Hermes not too long ago. For now, he would only allow Hermes to be by his side, and his more capable men, that he did trust would be in control of the fleets while he was away.

The first thing Owen had asked about upon his arrival was Quinn, but for some reason they quickly changed the topic. Even after he asked again, they just did the same. Eventually, in the middle of their walk, Owen had had enough and grabbed his escort by the arm.

"I'm warning you, you better answer my question." Owen threatened the man. "I have had my fair share of traitors recently, and I wouldn't be surprised to find out that everyone on this ship is one either. One of the only few people I trust at the moment is Quinn Talen, so you better tell me where he is. Don't think just because I recently came out of hospital I don't have the power to electrocute a small fry like you!"

The man looked around nervously, but this just infuriated Owen more. The next moment the captured men felt a tingling sensation go up his arm. He might have been under orders, but with this kind of pressure, he confessed to everything. After going to the training room, where Quinn and the others were meant to be, Owen didn't slow down with his intimidation.

"What is that old man thinking to lock up Quinn in such a room?!" Owen couldn't believe Oscar's action. "Open the door now, before I break it down! This is an order as the head of the Graylash family and one of the world leaders!"

The two guards that were standing behind the large closed door looked at each other, and then heard the sound of Owen's ability activating, and soon the doors opened.

"What's going on now?" Oscar asked, as he could see the doors opening. "I told them to not let anyone inside!"

When they finally opened up, Owen barged into the room, and could feel the tension between the two sides, as well as everyone who was getting ready to fight.

"Well, looks like I came just in time to help you out." Owen said, standing by Quinn and the others.

"Graylash!" Innu shouted. "Don't you know what they are, they just admitted it as well...they're vampires!"

There was silence in the whole room, and even a sweet soft smile had come from Owen's mouth, but when he looked at Quinn. In a defeated kind of way, all Quinn could do was nod.

"This is actually bad timing." Quinn sighed. "I don't know how you guys found out, but after what happened with Owen, I was going to share some things with you during today's meeting."

"However, if this is the way you were planning to treat us after finding out the truth, then maybe it's a good thing that we didn't tell you anything." Quinn spoke and at that moment his eyes started to glow red.

Honestly, Quinn didn't like the way they were treated after everything he and his group had done to help Oscar and the others. Were they honestly thinking of them as some kind of savage beasts who would have gone crazy over the sight or smell of blood? Had they intended to put them down if that had truly been the case? Had everything they had done up until this point been meaningless?

Seeing the red eyes, Owen understood that Quinn was being dead serious. They were the same type as the ones he had seen before he was stabbed, for a second Owen flinched. It was hard to get rid of a trauma like that and so soon. However, he also remembered how much Quinn had done for him and placed his hand on his shoulder.

"I don't care what you may be, to me you're Quinn Talen of the Cursed faction!" Owen stated. "I will stand by your side."

This had managed to quell Quinn's anger a little, but he still was looking towards Oscar and the others.

"We're sorry Quinn." Samantha apologised, as she stepped forward. "We're sure you're not like the ones who attacked us. I had my suspicions, ever since Fex made me save him using my blood. I saw him heal after consuming it and he also used your red powers. We never planned to hurt you, it's just that the Graylash family aren't the only ones that have suffered from attacks, and we're confused and scared about such a thing popping out so suddenly."

It was a plea, and Quinn could tell that she was generally serious.

"Let's try calm the tension down on both sides, huh?" Sam suggested. "Let us share what we know, I think it would be good for us to sit down, and maybe hold the meeting later after everyone had time to digest the new information." Sam smiled.

"I agree." Oscar nodded. "Perhaps our test was just a show of fear for us. My daughter is right though." Oscar placed his hands on top of Smantha's shoulder. "It's fact that you guys always have helped us and nobody will be able to claim otherwise. Everyone clear out, we shall head into the main command centre." Oscar ordered.

With everything cleared up, Quinn was still partially in a sour mood, but he knew that he should look at it from their point of view. Had he reacted any better than he was turning into a vampire back in the academy?

Walking to the command centre, from behind though, Oscar had his own thoughts.

'Quinn, I'm not a fool, whatever you and your group have become, whatever you have done I know we need you to defeat the Dalki, but knowing that there is another race out there, one that feeds off humans, this is a dangerous matter for all of us humans.'

Chapter 1095: Call them V

Without the large number of escorts Quinn and the others were now following after Oscar to the main command centre. The place felt quite familiar to Sam and Quinn. As they looked around they were unable to find any differences to the Bertha ship that they had themselves. After all, the ship had originally belonged to the military, yet Oscar had never asked for it to be returned.

There was one thing that was a little worrying while the group was walking and that was just how dead silent everyone was. It couldn't be helped, before they had just suspected Quinn to be different, but now he had admitted to it himself, and the possibility that the two next to him could be vampires as well, didn't make things any better.

'The man next to Quinn looks very similar to Richard Eno.' Oscar thought. 'He did state that the two of them were related, so could Eno also be one of these... vampires? What can they do? How troublesome will they be, and how accurate is our knowledge of them based on pure fantasy books?'

'So that's what the boy has been hiding this whole time.' Owen thought. 'His growth has been remarkable, however it doesn't seem that he got where he is without his own hard effort. Apparently those that attacked the Graylash family with the red eyes were also these vampires, but they didn't seem to hold a candle to Quinn. A whole new world, interesting.'

'I knew it!' Innu thought. 'They are deadly animals! They must have sold or experimented on their own people. No wonder that kid who barely passes for a young adult has been able to accomplish so much! This must also be how he made me obey him! If all of them have that type of ability to control others, this is a huge threat that we must get rid of as soon as possible!'

'No matter what or who he is, if he can achieve my goal of reaching Rank one in power fighters, spreading the martial arts of Mauy Boran then I know I have selected the right person, but if people were to find out that he wasn't...human what would they think.' Sach thought.

Everyone had their own opinions, and they were thinking heavily about what to do with this newfound knowledge. However, all they could do was speculate for none of them had an inkling of the whole truth.

"Quinn, before we go and visit the captured... vampire, there was something else I wanted to talk to you about." Oscar spoke, breaking the deafening silence. "I never got the chance to thank you for what happened in the city of Zoo."

Quinn had absolutely no idea what Oscar was talking about, however it did hit a spark with Sam. It was just that he had been so busy that he hadn't had an opportunity to mention it to Quinn. It was crazy how many things had happened in such a short amount of time, that the fact a four spiked Dalki attacking earth would just be brushed off.

"I can't believe Leo has grown so powerful, that he is now able to defeat a four spiked Dalki on his own." Oscar explained after noticing Quinn's confusion on the matter.

"A four spiked Dalki!?" Quinn blurted out, unable to hold in his surprise. It was now clear for all that this was the first time he heard about the matter.

"Well we assume that he wasn't alone." Oscar continued. "However, the only person that was reportedly seen in the area at the time was the Blind Swordsman, and last we knew about him, he was under the Cursed faction. I'm amazed at his growth..." And then Oscar started to trail off there as he was starting to realise something.

Quinn, the Cursed faction's power had all grown out of nowhere, and seemingly it was the same for Leo, could it all be related to the matter they were about to discuss.

"He is indeed amazing." Quinn agreed. "You will have to thank Leo himself. He has his own matters to attend to, so him being there wasn't under my command, so it feels wrong to claim his credit."

Quinn was still trying to process what he had just learned. He himself had never fought against a four spiked Dalki, so he was trying to imagine its power. Even though Leo most likely had the power of a Vampire leader, he still didn't think it would be enough to kill one on his own.

'Erin was with him as well... Did something happen to her? And there is also the third stage of Qi he has learned recently. If he really did manage to kill it on his own, it might be worth taking a break and learning the third stage as soon as possible.'

It was unfortunate, but Quinn and Leo's schedules just didn't seem to add up. The two of them would always miss each other, but neither one wanted to interrupt what the other was doing. Besides, it wasn't like what Quinn was doing at the moment wasn't helping him to get stronger in his own way.

He had trained his new Shadow skills, acquired new blood abilities and control with Eno, and had obtained crystals to create top level gear.

Finally, all of them had arrived in the command centre, and when Oscar entered he had told everyone already in there to clear out of the room, as he knew it was a sensitive matter that would affect each person differently. Even amongst his own head generals it turned out that everyone had a different opinion of the matter.

Quinn's group sat together, while Owen and Hermes sat down on another side, and finally all of those in the Earthborn group. Sat at a large round table where they were unable to reach each other.

"Quinn, you said you had a few things to tell us, but as an apology allow us to tell you first what we have found out and feel free to correct us." Oscar offered. "There is a group of people that are currently working with the Dalki. They share a few similar traits, one being their glowing red eyes, the other the power to control the red aura."

"This hasn't been confirmed with all of them, but they seem to react in some way to blood according to eyewitnesses. These people with red eyes are able to learn abilities similar to ours, their eyes can change colour at will so it's hard to spot who is a..ermm shall we call them the 'Vs'?" Oscar suggested as he still found it quite childish to use the word vampires.

"The Vs have infiltrated high level factions, and because we are unable to tell them apart from our own until the moment of attack it has made things very difficult for us. Now from the video footage we have obtained, as well some from testimonies we have received, many members of the Cursed faction appear to be able to use this same red power, and at least in your case, Quinn, we have seen you possess the same red eyes." Oscar said as he finished off his report.

Quinn first turned to Sam, who nodded his way, a gesture that Quinn was to do the talking. He then looked towards Eno, who just seemed calm as ever unfazed by everything going on. It didn't look like he cared what Quinn would say, as long as they could defeat the Dalki somehow.

"You're correct, it's as you guess all of us here are what you guys can call the 'Vs'." Quinn answered, but they already knew this much. "However we are not exactly the same, and we don't belong to the same group. For one, not even everyone in the Cursed faction knows what I am."

"What happened to me... wasn't out of choice, I personally consider it to be more of a curse...saw it as a curse. Firstly I will explain to you what the Vs are, and then I will let you know our story." Quinn proceeded.

"The Vs are like those that you have read in your books, yes they do feed on blood, and they are affected by sunlight, but over the years they have managed to find a way to overcome this weakness of theirs."

"Only when they activate their powers do their eyes start to glow red, which is what you have all seen so far. Some can control this better than others. As for the blood lust, as you saw with your little test we are different."

"We can control ourselves and don't need to feed on blood but they might not be the same. We wanted to tell you all because of how dangerous this has become. V's are faster, stronger, have their own set of powers and can still learn abilities, giving them huge advantages over regular humans, but perhaps the most worrying thing of them all is their vampire abilities."

"They are able to turn other humans into the same thing as them, and each person who falls under their control will follow their commands, even if they wouldn't do so under normal circumstances. Friends that you might have known for decades might stab you in the back. As long as their master orders it, they will obey the command."

Everyone was listening carefully to Quinn's words, yet it still sounded like a fantasy. At the moment it sounded like the vampires were by far a superior race especially if they were able to overcome the supposed weakness their race was known for.

"I have a question." Owen asked. "I assume that the one that attempted to attack me while I was weak in my bed, is a V as well? But you have managed to stop him. If we are unable to tell a V from appearance, how were you able to tell?"

Quinn then raised his hand, and Innu jolted back in his seat for a second, but all Quinn did was tap his nose a few times.

"Their smell. The V's have better senses, smell, sight, vision, reflexes, everything. A human will be unable to tell the difference, but the V's are able to smell who is one of their own and who isn't. Since I suspected that more of them were hiding, I had used a spray to mask myself. When he approached you, I was able to tell that he was one of them, so I apprehended him."

"Thank you for explaining what the V's are to us, Quinn." Oscar said politely, being careful with his words. "However, there are still a lot of questions we have on our mind. You said you were different from the other V's. So I ask, why are these V's working with the Dalki in the first place? And what about all of you? what happened that made you become like this?"

Quinn had thought long and hard what story to tell, there were some details he wanted to avoid. He didn't want them to be aware of the Vampire World, he didn't want to tell them everything about them and the requirements for blood or that he was a leader of a vampire family.

All of this would overcomplicate things. It would be similar to when a civilisation discovered another, and if what they had learnt from history was true, that never ended well for either side.

"All of what has happened to us, and with the V's is this man's fault." Quinn pointed towards the person sitting to his right. "Richard Eno."

Chapter 1096: Eno our saviour?

At a glance it was hard to tell that the old man who was by Quinn's side, was Richard Eno. However, Oscar had long since felt that he looked somewhat familiar. Being told who he was, he couldn't deny a certain resemblance to the image he had seen of a younger version of Ricahrd Eno with different coloured hair.

'Richard Eno, one of the great saviours of humanity... is a vampire? What do they mean by this?' Oscar was baffled at the implication.

"How dare you?!" Innu wasn't so chalant to hold back his reaction. He almost stood up, but was quickly kicked under the table by those sitting next to him. It was an offence for those of a lower ranking to stand up without permission.

Innu coughed before he corrected himself. "Are you really telling us that Richard Eno, the great scientist who made it possible for us to activate the power of the beast weapons, and the inventor of the teleporters that aided us in the first war is that very man sitting next to you?! What's more we are to believe that he is responsible for all those V's we have to deal with now? I'm sorry, but that sounds like a lot of bogus! Heck, that man doesn't even look like Richard!"

Rather than looking at the person who was throwing out accusations, instead Richard was looking directly back at Quinn and it appeared as if the two were in the middle of a staring competition until Richard finally spoke.

"My 'Grandson' is correct." Richard said putting a lot of emphasis on the word indicating their connection to each other. "You see, I am one of the first vampires known in existence, something we call an Original. You want the truth, then I shall tell you the truth."

Richard stood up from his seat, and even Quinn was on guard. To be honest, he didn't exactly know what the right words to say were, but he had somewhat hoped that Eno might have a better way of phrasing things to the humans, in a way that would allow all of them to work together... and not just until the Dalki were dealt with.

'After all, that's his goal right? I mean I did want to annoy him a bit, but now I'm worried about what he's going to say!' Quinn was worried how things would play out. Was it the right call to bring him along? Should he make sure to silence him before it was too late?

"All of this is simply a family feud that you have been caught up in." Eno started to explain. "I have lived for many years, and have tried my best to make sure that humans continue to live as well. During my time, I had many children, and those children had children of their own."

"After living for countless years I eventually chose to seclude myself and went into something you may think of as a form of hibernation. Now during the time I was asleep one of those distant descendants of mine created the Dalki, which he is now using to kill all those on earth."

"When I woke up, and learned of this, I of course wanted to put a stop to this. Judging by the fact that the person who caused all this belongs to my lineage I felt responsible. Lacking the means to deal with the Dalki on my own, I introduced new technologies to the world with the goal of ensuring humanity's survival. And here I am again, doing the same thing, but this time I needed more help."

"I turned my grandson into someone like me, and through no fault of his own, he had no choice but to turn some of his companions as well. I'm sorry to say, but humans have just been caught in the middle of all this mess."

Quinn was utterly surprised by Richard Eno's response. It was actually quite accurate to the situation they were in, and he actually hadn't over complicated things either. On top of that, he made sure to mention that Quinn had been pushed into a situation he didn't wish to be in.

His story also made it sound like there weren't many vampires out there, and that he had turned Quinn just to get some allies on his side.

As for the others, they were struggling to take it all in. The Dalki, a mysterious force that was large, more powerful and had better technology than them, had attacked them from space. What else could they think other than they were aliens trying to invade and attack them.

'The Dalki were created by vampires.... And a descendant of Richard Eno is the cause of all this.' Oscar repeated in his head to make sure all the information he had was right. 'Now it makes sense why there are vampires helping the Dalki, but there's no way to confirm if any of this is true.'

"Why have you been quiet this whole time? Why did they create something like the Dalki? Why are they attacking us?" Samantha bombarded him with questions.

Eno shrugged his shoulders as he sat back down in his seat.

"Even parents are unable to completely control what becomes of their children. We are merely able to guide them on their path. Keep in mind that I am old, very old and I have no idea why my descendant chose to do what he did. Maybe you guys did something to annoy him, or perhaps it's something else?"

"Are you trying to pin the blame on us?" Innu questioned in fury. "Do you know how many humans died because of the Dalki? Family members, soldiers, students, everyone got dragged into this mess through no fault of their own. And right now, the person who caused all of this is in front of us! "

Quinn could sympathize with how Innu was feeling at this moment. He had felt the same way. However one person's actions didn't dictate a whole race of people.

Even Quinn had seen that there were bad vampires and good vampires, just like people.

"What exactly do you want me to do about it, Head General Innu?" Richard asked back. "Am I not already doing more than what should be expected of me? I introduced technology that wasn't ready for your world, and even more. Once again I have come forward fighting, and I have turned to my precious family who had no part to play in this originally just to fight by your side."

"Let me tell you something, you are not in the position to complain about what has happened. We don't have to help you." Eno stated as his eyes started to glow red, and like a turtle, Innu's head naturally started to sink down into his body, as he felt the strong presence coming across the table.

"That's enough." Oscar interrupted. "I understand the situation, and you are correct. I am very grateful that all of you are helping us, Quinn I can't imagine what you must have gone through because of all of this, and Richard we still haven't forgotten all the great feats you have accomplished. As you said you are not the one to blame."

"I wish you could continue to share whatever information you guys know about the Dalki and more, but I assume you have already done as much as you can. From what I have gathered there are two sides to the vampires, one that is under your control Eno, and the ones under control of your descendant."

"However, we have also learnt that their numbers may be able to increase as we go on. Can I ask, I assume that the vampire we have captured is from your descendant. Quinn, you asked me to keep him here, what exactly do you plan to do?"

"First, as this meeting is coming to an end. I think we should keep most of what we said a secret. It won't improve their morale or change the goal in the end. I think the most important part is that everyone knows the traits of the V's. For now we can explain that a human who is working with them has a certain ability.

"As for your question, That's what we want to find out." Quinn replied. "Where is his creator, who sent him, and where the hell he is so we can put a stop to this whole thing once and for all."

Chapter 1097: The missing man

Due to high rising tensions between certain members of the Earthborn group, Oscar sent Innu and Sach off on some menial tasks, checking on their fleets and so on. Once they were done, they were to start coming up with a brief on how to explain the current situation with the V's to their members.

They would then have to make a choice between informing everyone of the trait of the V's or only a select few. Oscar was leaning more towards the first option.

Even if they were to limit it to a select few, there was no telling who was, and who wasn't a V. Unless of course, they had one themselves. As such, telling everyone would allow for the groups to be more alert and aware, however it would increase the chances of the V's finding out, and possibly make them go into hiding. Still, it was the option that should lead to them being able to save more lives.

At the moment, Owen, Hermes, Oscar, Samantha, Eno, Sam and Quinn were heading to a special area in the ship. For once they had entered a room that Quinn didn't recognise.

"I can see you looking around." Oscar mentioned. Their group was walking across a dark corridor with nothing but small LED lights on the ground. "This spaceship is a little different compared to yours for a few reasons. Right now, we're headed towards the interrogation room."

"Don't you mean a prison cell?" Owen questioned. "You don't have to be koi with us. I mean we are going to see a prisoner after all."

Finally they had reached the end of the hallway, and entered through the doors.

"I assure you, this is an interrogation room, but I guess it could double up as a prison." Oscar answered.

The room was rectangular and quite large. There were computer terminals and advanced equipment in the room but what stood out the most was the large glass panel window. It covered the entire length of the room and on the other side they could see the person they had come down here for.

Only they could see inside, not the other way round. The prisoner was no longer stuck in a wall of ice, and instead his limbs had been spread out cuffed around his wrist and ankles. He was clearly awake as well.

Looking at this, reminded Quinn of when he had been trapped as well. It made him feel somewhat bad for the person, especially since he was sure that just like the one he had captured, this one also shouldn't be following orders out of free will. Although for Owen who didn't know this, the look on his face told a different story.

Small little shocks were coming off his body, it was unusual since he mostly kept a calm demeanor. Still, it was undeniable that his life had nearly ended because of this person in front of him. After taking a few more breaths, Owen eventually calmed down.

"I guess this is good practice." Owen mumbled as he continued to breathe. "For our ability, anger is never the best thing. It's harder to control the lightning that way." It was unclear whether it was an explanation for the others or a reminder for himself.

"Alright Quinn, let's go with what you proposed, you and Eno can enter and ask the questions you need." Oscar said. "Just so you know, everything will be recorded and filmed while you're inside, and we will be able to see everything."

Now that there wasn't much left to hide, Quinn didn't mind that, and in the first place, he knew that his Influence skill was unlikely to work. A door to the side, just where the mirror ended, was opened, and Quinn followed behind Eno.

The second they entered, the vampire in the room could smell them.

"I knew something was up, I was wondering why they decided to chain me up, so who sent you here then.. was it the ki-"

"Shut your mouth!" Quinn ordered, as his eyes glowed red and in seconds the vampire felt his body being controlled. His reason for doing such a thing was because he was just about to mention the word 'King'. Quinn had just finished a bunch of questions and he didn't want more to pop up.

"Those red eyes, it looks like they can also be used on other V's then?" Owen noticed. "Even if they weren't created by Quinn? How does that even work?"

Sam was left in the room looking through the glass with the others. Even though he thought it was best they didn't learn too much about vampires, it was clear that the way things progressed they would notice things the group had been hiding from them.

"The power Quinn is using right now is a type of mind control. Most vampires can do this to a certain degree but it varies in power. However, it only works on people with weak minds. The only reason it's working right now, is because Quinn is a strong V." Sam answered, using their term for it.

Hearing this made Owen wonder just how long Quinn had been a vampire for. Even with Quinn looking like a young adult, the vampire they held captive was clearly older, yet Quinn was stronger?

'If it worked on Innu and Sach, doesn't that suggest they have weak minds? ... It's a good thing they aren't here right now, otherwise Innu would be throwing his toys out of the pram.' Smantha thought.

"Tell me who do you work for?" Quinn demanded to know.

Just like last time, the captive's mouth started to twitch but nothing was coming out.

"Where are they?" Quinn asked again but no reply.

"It seems like not even Quinn can get an answer out of this one, even with his unique abilities." Oscar sighed.

Quinn hadn't expected for it to be so easy after last time, but fortunately the next person who had walked over, was Richard Eno. He had his hand tightly gripped onto something that the others couldn't quite see, not even Quinn.

Then placing his hand on his head, he stayed silent for a few seconds.

"I accept the trade." Eno mouthed with his mouth, but no sound had come out. A few seconds later and a bright light started to shine beneath his feet. His hair started to float along with the man he was touching, and whatever had been in his hand, had disappeared.

The man who had been tied up had come to again, and looked around for a few seconds.

"What did you do to me? What have you all done to me?!" The man shouted, and the next second, Eno moved his hand, slicing the man's throat. Blood poured out the ground and he was dead.

"What the hell was that?! That was our only lead!" Oscar shouted through the room.

Eno was already making his way out, and so was Quinn, since quite frankly he wanted answers as well. Before leaving the room, Eno flicked his fingers, throwing the blood onto the floor and walked inside.

'Eno, how could you do something to a vampire like that and be so...heartless? You must know like I do that all these vampires were old spies for the king. Do you care so little about them?' Quinn thought.

"We have already gotten all the information that is needed from him." Eno explained. "What is happening to the vampires is my descendant's doing, but he isn't the one actually doing it. The power that is being used on them to stop them from talking and controlling them, is just a normal ability. No information was able to be extracted from him, so we are back to square one."

"Human's best chance of survival is to continue to wait out their time, defending as they can." Eno added as he left the room, as if he owned the ship himself.

With only Quinn left in the room with the others, they didn't really know what to do or say.

"Your grandfather seems like a hard person to control." Oscar eventually mentioned, noticing that Quinn too had been shocked about what the old man had done inside the interrogation room.

"Indeed, worst of all, I don't even know what's going through his head most of the time." Quinn replied.

"Isn't that a problem?" Samantha interrupted. "If what Eno is saying is true, that these people were benignly controlled by an ability and not by some V? Doesn't that mean that they can control anyone, even regular humans?"

The realisation of this was frightening. The only thing they could take comfort in, was if it was an ability that was capable of such a thing, then it would also mean that there was a condition that would need to be involved as well.

The look on Quinn's face said that he wanted to chase after Eno. Oscar wanted to talk about a few things with Quinn, especially about what he was going to do now that he had successfully beaten the Demon tier beast. Now learning that perhaps he and Eno had different goals, he allowed Quinn to leave and chase after him.

'It looks like they have their own way of stopping this war, we will just have to continue doing our best.'

'Quinn, I'm confused.' Vincent said. 'If what Richard said is true and this really is an ability and not a vampire power... in all my years as a vampire leader, and despite my research, I have never encountered such an ability that a vampire would be able to learn.'

As he and Sam were catching up to Eno, Quinn eventually managed to stop him in one of the halls.

"What you said earlier, there is no ability like that in the Vampire World." Quinn stated, being upfront about what he had just learnt.

At this point, Eno turned around and looked at Quinn.

"I never claimed there was, which means that there is something else going on. Just like there are abilities that only vampires can learn, there are also abilities that only humans can learn. In between there are also abilities that are shared."

"However, did you know that there is one ability that crosses these borders? A person who is able to transfer any ability into themselves, and give it to however they wish. I believe at one point and time you met them, the Truedream family."

Chapter 1098: A pick up

Quinn had been under the impression he knew everything about vampires and humans. However, humanity had lived for thousands of years, and yet they continued to discover new things like abilities and vampires. It hadn't even been long since they were discovered both, so of course things like this would come up.

It was only now that Quinn was starting to realise the true danger that Trudream and his ability represented. If he was able to pass abilities over from vampires and humans, it meant that humans could also learn the shadow powers that Quinn had obtained.

At the same time, the opposite should be true as well. What if a person was to kidnap a Truedream and use them? Perhaps they could even take an ability like Sil's and place that into a vampire.

'That's a really scary thought. One of the strongest abilities in the world inside a vampire. It's almost like creating a super vampire.' Quinn's mind started to wander.

"So is Jack Truedream still alive? Is he really with Jim?" Quinn asked.

"From the way you are acting, it seems like you have caught onto what I was saying, but you are asking the wrong questions right now." Eno shook his head.
"Do you know what actually happened to Jack Truedream?"

"They had gone to Blade Island, in search of the shadow ability that you had shown off. However, Jack had vastly underestimated the true powers that the Blade family held, and it didn't take long for them to overpower him and his men, but during their little battle the Blades revealed something to them. They had used the Demon tier beast. Can you guess what happened next?"

Quinn was a bit slow on the uptake but Sam was a little quicker to understand. Brock had been a spy of the Blade family, he would have known all of the details of what was to happen. So if Eno was saying the Demon tier beast was used, then this would be true. If that was the case, then Jack had also seen the beast being used.

If Jim Eno has really captured Jack, then they may already know where the other half of the Demon tier beast they were looking for was. However, there was also the chance that Jack had no clue what level the beast was atm and that's why they still had yet to do anything.

Finally Quinn had realised this as well.

'But is Jack working with Jim willingly, or has he been captured?' Quinn thought.
'Also their network of information doesn't seem to be as large as Richard's.'

'Especially if they don't really know who I am. So unless Jack tells them, or Eno assumes something is up, they may never find out.'

"We have to move the Demon tier beast now before it's too late. Even if they don't have Jack, we still need to be cautious. I'm afraid bringing back your friend's partners might have to wait a little longer." Eno said.

Quinn needed to think fast. It was true that they might be running out of time, but for the whole Dalki to appear, they would have to enter through the space station, which was being guarded by the Earthborn and the Graylash family.

They still had some time until he needed to be there. At the same time, the Dalki should be more cautious after nearly losing two four spiked Dalki. Before heading to the Blade Island, Quinn, who thought it was vital, picked up something.

"I know there is a chance, that the Dalki and vampires have a way of appearing on Earth, but I need to quickly check something." Quinn said. "Sam, you head off with Eno, and make preparations for everyone. Let me know when you plan to head to Blade Island."

"Tell Sil what needs to be done, and bring whoever you think we'll need. Also, remember to bring along him as well. He is vital for this whole thing to work."

Sam nodded and understood the instructions well, and for the first time, it seemed like Eno was taking things seriously. He didn't joke around and had headed off with Sam.

'If everything works out, then maybe we will just need to put Vorden and Raten in a temporary place for now. If we move the Demon tier beast first, maybe we can even put them back in Sil's mind for a short while, and then move them back to their own bodies.'

'Im sorry Sil, but it's just bad timing. The one thing I am sure about, is Eno wants to defeat the Dalki, so if he thinks it's important to move the Demon tier, then this is something we need to do.'

Before going off to where Quinn needed to be, he had brought out his mask and attempted to get into contact with one of his strongest fighters, Leo.

As he answered, Quinn explained the current situation to his Vampire Knight, and asked him if he could join him any time soon to help out.

"I'm sorry Quinn." Leo apologised, after hearing him out. "I said I would be there if you needed help, however the outcome at the moment was not what I was expecting."

For some reason, Quinn's heart started to thump as he heard these words. It sounded like Leo was troubled, but if he was in trouble, would he be too stubborn to ask Quinn for help?

"I know what you might be thinking, but everything is fine with me. It's Erin I am worried about. I promised you that I wouldn't let her harm anyone, but I'm afraid that if I come back now with her, I might not be able to keep that promise."

Of all things to happen, it seemed like Erin was facing her own problems as well.

'Is this due to her being a Dhampir? Did something happen when she thought the Dalki, or could it be Eno was right and the bloodlust in her has been growing day by day and is about to be too much for her to bear?'

"I will solve this Quinn. Erin is my student, I won't allow her to be harmed and I will not make her do anything that she will come to regret. I have done that myself once. Please Quinn, I ask you, if you want to help Erin, do not summon me unless your life is on the line." Leo answered and the call ended right then and there.

Quinn initially wished to head on over and see if there might be a solution, if somehow he could help Erin, but he also knew that most likely the only person that could help, wouldn't be him. Eno would most likely just kill her, saying she was a threat they had to get rid of.

Just like how he had killed the vampire in the interrogation room.

'All I can do is complete the tasks in front of me as soon as possible.' Quinn thought as he activated his Shadow link. It soon connected to Linda. In a few seconds, he arrived right where she was.

"Quinn!" Linda exclaimed, her face all red.

Quinn looked around to see where he was, and they seemed to be in one of the shelter rooms.

"Sorry Linda, I'm in a bit of a hurry." Quinn apologised, as he quickly went out through the door.

Suddenly, a gasp of air was heard.

"Do you think he saw me?" Wevil asked, whose face was just as red as hers.

"No I think his mind was too busy on something, come on we can't keep messing around." Linda replied.

Back on the planet where the Demon tier tree had originated from, Quinn was heading towards the faction base, looking for a certain individual.

With so much time having passed, Quinn was hoping that Alex would have figured out just what could be done, with the Demi-god tier crystal, and the Demon tier crystal. These were the things that he needed, before heading off to Blade Island.

Chapter 1099: The return of a trio

With Quinn gone, it made for a slightly awkward ride back to the Cursed ship with just Richard and Sam. Only a few people interacted with Richard and even then it was mostly out of pure necessity than an actual choice. As for Sam he had actually never regarded the old man to be that bothersome, but that was probably because Eno didn't regard Sam as someone who would, or for that matter could, disrupt his grand ambition of getting rid of the Dalki.

The reason why Sam was feeling a bit tense now was due to what they had all witnessed in that interrogation room.

Doing his best to avoid the other, Sam would just stare out of the large window of the ship, looking out into the vastness of space while thinking of all the important matters he would have to deal with once they landed. At the same time he was consistently responding to all the emails that had piled up, but he also couldn't help but try to keep one eye on Eno at all times.

'Eno, you say you're on the side of humans, but what about people like us? Humans that have turned into vampires but don't really fit into the vampire society?' Sam wondered.

What's more he was curious what Richard Eno was planning to do once the Dalki had been dealt with. He was someone that had faked his own sleep and was now meddling with the affairs of later generations. Did he see himself as some type of god, someone who was meant to create harmony?

Despite Eno claiming he cared for humans, he was not one to shy away from ending their lives in a heartbeat, claiming it was for the overall picture, and it seemed like he also felt the same way about vampires.

'Is this what happens when one has lived for far too long? After one has seen all those close to oneself die?' Sam started to question. These thoughts in itself were troubling Sam.

If it ever came to the point that he would do something Eno didn't like, would the other even hesitate to get rid of him? What about the Cursed faction? Would he want to get rid of them as well after their fight with the Dalki, since they might not fit in with the rest of humanity?

"Sam." Eno suddenly spoke his name, which jolted the young man. "There was something I hadn't had the chance to tell you, but now that it's just the two of us together, I thought it might be best for me to speak my mind."

'Did I mess up somewhere?!' Having just thought about all these things, Sam's hands were shaking and he didn't want to turn around. Instead he tapped his watch bringing up a report like it was something very important that could not wait. Alas, the Eno either didn't see it or simply didn't care.

"I wanted to thank you. In my evaluation of the Cursed faction, you are one of the major factors of why it has been able to progress so far." Eno explained. "In all honesty, I never thought someone like Quinn would actually be able to grow in time to become one of the major tools to stop the Dalki. I didn't quite understand how he was able to build up such a strong faction around him, but after looking at his surroundings, I came to learn that it was because Quinn didn't do everything on his own."

"He did so with the people around him, and with the help of others, especially you. You are a hard worker and you should be credited for that." Eno said, and with that he headed off into the break room.

'Did he just... compliment me? What was that all about?' Sam tried to comprehend what had just happened. Still, he couldn't help but feel a little proud. It wasn't that Quinn had never thanked him, but for someone else to see and acknowledge his efforts really did remind him of his roots and where he had come from.

As someone who had hit the cap on his MC cells rather early, he had eventually accepted that he would be unable to get any stronger, so for a long time he had feared he would amount to nothing. His younger self would have never imagined that in the future he would be the second in charge of a faction that would be one of the great three powers that made up the group of world leaders.

'My parents are still on earth... once all of this is over it would be nice to bring them on the ship.' Thinking of this, it reminded Sam of something, and he went ahead to check if the request he had sent out earlier had come through.

Finally, Sam and Eno had returned to the Cursed ship, and there were a few things they both needed to do. First Sam immediately called a meeting between the Cursed faction leaders. Apart from updating them on what had happened when they had been out with Quinn, he also intended to inform them on their movement to Blade Island.

They would have to decide on the members that would be going with them. After all, a core group of people always needed to be left behind to look after the Cursed ship, but due to how dangerous Blade Osland or the Demon tier beast could be, they also needed to take a substantial force.

While Sam was in the middle of setting up the meeting, Eno had gone off to find Brock, who had also returned, and the two of them were talking to one another in one of the individual sleeping rooms.

"I am here to bring you my report, Sir." Brock bowed down before the other. "It turns out that the Blades have completely abandoned the island. They have taken everything with them, however I have been able to confirm two things."

"The tablet has remained untouched, so it still has plenty of power within it. You should be able to use it as you wish. However, there is a slight problem. They seem to have left behind the Demon tier dragon."

"I can only assume the dragon had no desire to leave the island, which is a good thing, but it may be harder to control it if that is indeed the case. It's unclear if it is waiting for something on the island or if it's merely its whim. I have some people looking over it for the time being who will report as soon as possible."

"It means we have to move as quickly as possible." Eno replied. "Still, I don't think the dragon will move anytime soon, their ability has a lasting effect. Depending on when the Blades had left the dragon it should still be a bit confused, and it probably considers the island its home."

"But what would happen if we tried to remove a beast from its home?"

Eno knew that perhaps even with Sil using all his abilities, this wouldn't be so easy.

"Another point if I may add." Brock said. "Although I can confirm that the Blades are no longer on the island, I have been unable to track them down anywhere, which is worrisome. If preparations have begun, I assume it's time I bring her over?"

After the meeting between the Cursed leaders was over, many of them were left dumbfounded. Finally, Megan, who had been the only leader who was human, had learned the truth about who they all were. Of course, it came as a shock, she had been sure they were joking about everything at first, so some of them showed her that it was very, very true.

She had reacted as one might expect... by fainting on the spot, so she had been taken to the medical bay. Dennis had volunteered to look over her, and to make sure she understood and knew everything.

Now, Sam had something else to attend to, as he had been informed that he had visitors that had also arrived on the ship. Exiting the command centre, Sam was taking the electrical bridge to move him to the large hall.

'That was quick work by them, I guess they might be excited to finally be here again.' Sam thought.

Stepping off the bridge, Sam continued to walk forward, until he could see three people surrounded by members of the Cursed faction. They stood tall and strong and looked a little nervous.

"It looks like you have finally all made it here." Sam greeted them, putting on a big smile. "Please state your names."

"My name is Swin, Sir!" The boy shouted, giving a salute.

"My name is Venus, Sir!" Another shouted.

'Which means..'

"My name is Shiro, Sir!" The last one replied.

The three boys were students from Quinn's homeroom class. They had decided to join the Cursed faction and had been sent to one of the safer portal planets, but Quinn had requested for the three of them to be brought on board the ship instead.

Naturally he would never force anyone to come, but upon hearing that Quinn had personally asked for them they had been more than happy to accept, especially since this meant they would get the chance to go to the main Cursed faction ship!

"I have to thank you, Shiro. You have a big job ahead of you. I, Quinn and the whole Cursed faction will owe you a lot." Sam bowed down before the other, despite his high rank..

"No problem, Sir! I will do anything if it's in regards to helping out Quinn, the Cursed leaders, the Cursed faction, and definitely to help out Sil!"

Chapter 1100: A crystal problem

Thanks to Quinn's shadow abilities, and the fact that other users with shadow abilities were all over the place, it was as if Quinn had access to his own personal teleport array. Whenever he wished he could move himself to their location without the need to rely on technology.

Whatever jamming equipment the Dalki had was useless against Quinn, allowing the Cursed faction leader to meet up with Alex who was hammering away in the forging room of the Orbus faction base.

'I guess he's always busy hammering away, even when he's away from the main base.' Quinn thought as entered the forging room. Alex seemed too focused on his task to notice his arrival. 'I would love to give him a break at some point, but it seems like none of us can catch one at the moment.'

It was far smaller than Alex' personal forge on the Cursed ship, with only a total of three forging areas, whereas the Cursed ship nearly had four times as many forging stations and extra space for everyone to work in. The first thing that caught Quinn's eye though, was the smile on Alex's face as he forged away.

'He doesn't seem to regard it as work. That is probably his secret, how he can do it for so long without complaining.' Quinn thought.

Soon though, his eyes started to wonder as there was someone else in the room next to him. It was hard to tell the man's age, but judging by the few gray hairs in his beard and curly hair, Quinn could only assume he was quite the old fellow.

However, his body told a completely different story. The man was shirtless with nothing but a pair of tight brown trousers that looked two sizes too small. He was built like a tank with muscles over muscles, and was watching Alex carefully perform.

He had the standard look one would expect when they were to see a forger who worked on creating beast weapons, unlike Alex whose body frame was small but still strong.

Since he was only overseeing the work, the large man noticed Quinn's arrival. However, he didn't say anything, just put a single finger against his lips. A sign that it was important to remain silent.

Quinn carefully nodded and they both proceeded to watch Alex, until he was finally done crafting what needed to be done. It looked like a regular sword but clear attention was spent to crafting the sword to the best of its abilities. It was only an advanced tier weapon so it was surprising that Alex still worked on things like this.

"Quinn!" Alex exclaimed shockingly, as he moved the sword ever so slightly to see the other in the sword's reflection. "When did you come back? Couldn't you have at least given me a heads up before coming out here?"

"Sorry." Quinn replied, scratching the back of his head. "Things have moved along quicker than I thought."

"Oh, I almost forgot, this here is Andrew!" Alex introduced the large man to his side. "He is the forger that Sam and Logan found for me, the one who worked on the last Demon tier weapon for Oscar, and he'll be helping me create your Demon and Demi-god-tier equipment for you."

"It is a pleasure to meet you." Both Quinn and Andrew bowed down at the same time. It made Quinn have a good first impression of the man and it was quite respectable as well.

"As the leader of the Cursed faction I can only congratulate you for having such a talent under you. Alex is one of the best forgers I have seen in decades. Despite his tiny muscles, he is able to hammer for twice as long as I am, yet he is so young. I can't wait until this man grows into a fine large forger like myself!" Andrew started to chuckle, knowing that it probably wasn't possible with how small his body frame was at the moment.

"Yes, I'm glad I had a good eye to catch his equipment back then, and that's why I fully trust him to make the best out of the crystals that I have bought." Quinn nodded, happy to hear the other praising Alex.

From meeting Andrew Quinn could sense that there was a large amount of Qi in his body, and his image reminded him of another muscular red haired man he had met before. Although forger's weren't necessarily Qi users, Leo had explained to him in the past that there were people who knew how to wield this form of energy subconsciously without ever having received any training in it.

Those that used Qi without their own knowledge were more likely to activate active skills in weapons, and it seemed true based on Alex's skills so far.

'Although he is under the Earthborn group, it would be great to have someone like him on our side.' Quinn thought.

"Andrew, thank you so much for taking your time to come here, I was wondering if there is anything that we could help you with. It would be the Cursed faction's pleasure, and hopefully we can build on our relationship in the future." Quinn offered.

It took a while for Andrew to answer as he stroked his large bushy beard, it seemed like he was seriously thinking about something.

"Don't worry too much. It is not everyday that a forger is able to work on a Demon tier weapon. If you hadn't asked for me, I would have probably paid for the opportunity to come work on this myself. However, there is one thing that I would like to mention, but there might be nothing you can do about it."

"Currently, all groups, including your own Cursed faction, are facing a crystal shortage. Due to the Dalki attacks, the groups aren't able to hunt as freely as they did before and many of them are being used to stay on guard and defend. On top of this, what crystals the groups do have, are being used to power the ships, mechs and all sorts." Andrew explained.

"Due to the special nature of the Cursed faction, I was wondering if there was anything your group could do to help us combat that issue."

It was a tough situation, and Quinn had been unaware that even his group was being affected by such a thing. Most of the hunting had been left to Helen and her group, but it would make sense that the collection of crystals would be at an all time low.

"Maybe Alex and I can try to work something out." Quinn replied as an idea popped in his head.

Noticing what Quinn was saying, Alex popped up.

"We will try our best, Andrew! Do you mind fetching Ko, and ask him to come here? I think that all of us will need to talk about a few things."

Andrew of course agreed, and he left saying goodbye to Quinn.

"Alright Quinn, it seems like we have some time to talk now, go ahead."

Quinn smiled, noticing that Alex was getting rather smart these days.

"If it's true that the Cursed faction is also low on crystals to forge more weapons, then there is one option." Quinn suggested. "Ever since the 'little' battle the tenth family had in the Vampire World, we have had a lot of blood crystals. I'm sure you know that they can also be turned into blood weapons. If we use these and give them to the faction members it could help us out greatly."

"Wait what!" Alex was baffled, his eyes nearly popping out of his head. "But blood crystals are illegal? Well I guess he did give them to us, so then the King really can't say anything. Besides that, don't they need blood to activate?" Alex asked.

"What you say is right, but at the moment, I'm not really concerned about what Bryce thinks, we just have to focus on protecting our people and fighting off the Dalki. The green blood from the Dalki, can also power up the blood weapons, so it will be a big advantage in the fight. Of course, the blood crystals will vary as well, but it will be better than nothing." Quinn explained.

After visiting the Vampire World last time, Alex wasn't overly eager to do something to displease them, but he knew how dire the weapon shortage was at the moment. The constant fighting would also make it so their weapons durability would fade, and without beast crystal or weapons, if the war was to be drawn, they would definitely end up on the losing side.

"Alright." Alex answered. "Anyway, I can guess the real reason why you're here. You want to know what the Demi-god tier crystals and the Demon crystal can be turned into, don't you?"

Hearing this, a wide grin on Quinn's face appeared. "Please, indulge me!"

Chapter 1101: The passive effect

Quinn was excited to find out what the crystals he had gathered could be turned into. Especially since he had managed to procure two extra crystals from the Graylash family. Before he had been worried he might have to deliberate over two Demi-god crystals, or one Demon tier depending on what they could be used for but now he could keep both.

With the new armour set, Quinn was hoping that at least one of the Demi-god tier crystals could be turned into a new pair of gauntlets for himself.

"As usual, I guess you could say I have some good news and some bad news for you to choose from. Although this time, I think you could say it's all good news." Alex said, even confusing himself with his own words.

"In the case of the Demi-god tier crystals you left me, they're both suited to be made into gauntlets. If I use both, we won't even need to use the energy from any other lesser grade crystals to power them. These will be the top end of the line of Demi-god tier crystals!" Alex explained with great detail and a smug smile on his face.

"Of course, I can't tell you what their active skill will be, or what the equipment will be like until I actually make them."

Quinn was certain whatever it would be as long as Alex made it, it would end up beneficial. Ever since his last pair of gauntlets had broken he had been using the Advanced tier gauntlets. As such, he was looking forward to using gauntlets made by such high tier crystals.

Quinn then pulled out the other two crystals from his system and handed them over to Alex.

"Please check these crystals as well and see if they could be useful to make something even better." Quinn requested, yet after just a glance, Alex started to shake his head.

"Andrew has taught me a lot, so I can already tell you that these crystals don't have the same quality as the ones I planned on using. I would have to check further to see what they could be made into, but I think it would be better to make the gauntlets out of just the Demi-god tier crystals." Alex shared his professional opinion.

Placing them back into his system, that was a good enough answer for Quinn.

"Now, I'm sure you're wondering about the Demon tier crystal, and unfortunately here is the bad news. I can't give you much information, other than it can be turned into an accessory item. It's up to you, whether you want me to make it into a specific form, or I could just trust in my forger instincts while hammering it down to craft the crystal." Alex offered Quinn a choice.

Quinn didn't know if Alex was being serious about the 'forger instincts', or if he was just saying to leave it up to him if he didn't have anything in particular he was looking for.

'An accessory item? It will add to my overall equipment I have on me without having to replace anything, so in a way that could be a good thing, and accessory items tend to have an active skill ninety percent of the time. If that's the case, it could very well be a great active skill.' Quinn pondered over his choice.

"In that case, I shall leave it up to you. I am fine with anything as long as it won't be another mask since I already have one. Also, I was hoping you could use this." Quinn pulled out a special type of crystal. It was shiny and had a silver colour, but it wasn't clear like a regular beast crystal. It was the upgrade crystal Quinn had received from completing the quest.

"Remember when I asked you about crystals being able to upgrade equipment? Well that's one of them. Feel free to study it as you wish." Quinn explained.

Alex's eyes nearly grew twice the size as he stared down at the crystal in amazement.

"I can't believe something like this is actually real! How can you just hand me something so valuable like it's nothing? Do you know how much this could change things? Where did you get this from?" Alex bombarded Quinn with a load of questions, not containing his excitement in the least.

Alas, Quinn had no actual answer to that question, because his system had just magically given it to him as a reward.

"I found it inside the Demon tier beast, alongside this strange seed, but it was the only one I could find." Quinn lied, and put out the mask from his dimensional space onto the table.

"I wanted to save it, but I was thinking of upgrading the emperor tier mask I have. I remember what you said, and if I upgrade one of the set pieces of armour that you gave me, It could ruin the active set skill, so I thought it would be best to leave it as it is. At the moment, I need to improve everything I have as quickly as I can." Quinn explained.

Alex started to nod frantically as he continued to hold the crystal in his hand, only now he was making sure not to hurt it, aware of its actual value.

"The gauntlets will be my priority, since they will be easier for me to make." Alex informed Quinn about his next plan of action. " The crystals don't take as long to form, however the Demon tier might take quite a bit of time. Fortunately, with Andrew helping me it will be quicker than if I had to do it on my own though."

Quinn didn't understand the whole process of making weapons, so he just decided to leave it to Alex. There was no need to tell the other he was in a hurry, or that they were running out of time, because Alex would always try his best no matter the circumstances.

A few days passed, in which there had been an update from Sam that the students had finally arrived on the Cursed ship and that a team of potential people had been chosen. It was up to Quinn what he wanted to do with those that were still on the planet he was currently on.

Those that had come with him had been quite the great help, and Quinn was starting to realise just how strong the members of the Cursed faction had grown, even without his help. He also wanted to know if leaving them on a planet next to the Dalki fleet was a good idea. In the first place, this was a Graylash family, and not a Cursed faction family.

Quinn was currently outside the shelter and he could see families peacefully walking around, even Ko and his wife, along with their daughter were walking with smiles on their faces.

'I guess I can't be that cruel, else I'll just be turning into the other leaders... Am I just going to forget about everyone on this planet because they are weak? Should I not help just because their allegiance isn't to the Cursed faction?. What if I was a child raised on this planet? Expecting help from those that could?'

Just then, Quinn received a message that the gauntlets were finally ready. Heading back into the forging room, Andrew and Alex both stood proud over the forging table, and they had the standard cloth out covering the items for the grand reveal.

"From the looks on your faces, I'm going to be quite pleased with this one, aren't I?" Quinn asked, feeling like a little kid about to open a present.

The two of them just continued to grin at Quinn, as he walked up to the table, and pulled the cloth down. Underneath he saw two masterpieces of gauntlets. Impressive in design.

They both were more simple than the other gauntlets Quinn had in the past. Usually they would be covered in scales and bumps indicating the beast they had been made from, but instead these tow for cleanly flat, with a black rim around the edges. It looked like it would be a perfect fit for anyone who was wearing it.

What stood out was how they were both different in colour, one a light soft blue colour, the other dark purple in design. On the fingertips, small little tufts of fur could be seen floating.

Quinn picked them both up and immediately equipped them on, then using his Inspect skill he checked what the system had to say about them.

[You have obtained, the Demi-god tier gauntlet (Toximo Gauntlet)]

[Passive skill: Poisonous blood]

[Each strike has a small chance of poisoning your enemies.

Once poisoned the victim's speed will decrease, they will lose health gradually, suffer from delusions, blurry vision and more.]

[- Warning -]

[With each strike there is a small chance that the wearer will also get poisoned]

[Passive skill: Immune to all poisons]

[-Warning removed-]

There were quite a few things to take in, but Quinn could see that the first passive effect seemed to be quite a strong one on the gauntlets. However, he was worried that the system didn't give him a percentage of how likely it actually was to poison his enemies. In a way it wasn't something he could really do.

On the plus side, it seemed like the passive effect of the gauntlets that would poison the user had been removed due to the passive skill he had earned from defeating the moth. IN a way, it was an item that only he could use.

As for the stats, Quinn first wanted to see what the active skill of his other gauntlet was from. He assumed that this gauntlet was created using the crystal of the Poison moth he had fought, so he wondered what he would get from the other crystal.

Using his Inspect skill he discovered that it did indeed have an active skill, he just couldn't believe how effective it was.

Chapter 1102: Two active skills in one

The Gauntlets were a strange item that would come as a set. Which meant to get the full effect of the stats from them, one would have to wear both at the same time. Otherwise the stats would be halved.

Usually, several crystals would be used to make a set of gauntlets, which all had the same attribute. The good news was, according to Alex the Demi-god tier crystals were enough to make the gauntlets, having obtained two of them. At the same time they were similar and different which was why the colours were different as well.

So it was a rare thing what Quinn was holding onto right now, two gauntlets that worked together, yet somehow they had two complexly different active skills.

[You have obtained, the Demi-god tier gauntlet (Drainimo Gauntlet)]

[Active skill: Energy sap]

[When this skill is activated, as long as the gauntlet touches an entity containing energy, that energy will be drained and added to the wearer. Alternatively this energy can be used to re-energize the wearer's stamina.]

'An energy drain and it can restore stamina?' Quinn thought as he read the effects. He remembered what Sil had told him about the Moth beast they had defeated, how it had caused everybody who touched its fur to fall asleep. Seeing the active ability that must have stemmed from it, it appeared the Moth had actually been draining their energy.

'If I can stay close to my opponents, doesn't this mean I can keep on fighting, while weakening them at the same time? With these two active skills, I will be able to improve myself drastically! Although I would have to hold on to them, so it's not as effective as the beast itself.'

His stamina seemed to be closely related to using his Qi powers, which had often been a problem when he had ended up using it. He would have to test it out, but if Quinn's hypothesis was correct, the gauntlets might allow him to also restore the Qi during a fight.

However, there seemed to be one clear downside the Demi-god tier gauntlets had compared to the Advanced ones. The latter's active skill allowed Quinn to infuse his Qi to make the active skill even stronger, whereas it didn't seem like adding Qi to them changed anything.

The chance that the poison would be triggered might increase, but it was seemingly impossible to actually test it since he didn't even know the actual percentage chance. Adding Qi to the active skill when it was supposed to be a way for him to recharge it, also seemed counter productive.

However, overall he couldn't complain about them. On top of everything, the stats they granted him were nothing to scoff at.

[+50 Strength]

[+5 Agility]

[+5 Stamina]

He was surprised about the power boost, seeing as neither ability had anything to do with Strength. Quinn already had 70 points in Strength, and with the gauntlets alone that would bring it up to 120.

'If all Demi-god tier equipment gives their user this much of a boost in stats, then it's no surprise how Hilston, who is already plenty strong, can be a match for nearly anyone.' Quinn was starting to understand why Hilston was called the world's strongest human, although there had still been one person who had managed to defeat him... and Quinn now needed to be even stronger than that.

"It looks like you are happy with the job the two of us did. These might be the most powerful gauntlets in existence." Alex boasted. "After all, there aren't too many people that choose to fight with their fists or have it as their weapon but you are certainly unique. It's a bit of a shame that it doesn't match your armour set though. If you want, I could certainly dye them, make both gauntlets have the same colour as well."

Quinn looked at them, one had a dark purple colour, while the other side was a soft blue almost white. In a way the gauntlets were the same yet so different at the same time, and working together reminded him of himself.

"There's no need, I happen to like how they are. What about the other stuff?" Quinn asked, seeing there wasn't anything left on the table.

"Unfortunately, the other Demon tier crystal will take some more time due to the uniqueness of it. However, I can promise you that you can look forward to the weapons I will make. You're free to wait, but I thought you had plans."

It was true, he was sure that if Quinn didn't hurry that maybe Eno would rally up the crew somehow and head out without him.

"You're right, carry on working on the mask upgrade and the Demon tier weapon. Send me a message as soon as they're ready. Make sure to keep your Shadow skill active! That way I can hop to you to collect the equipment once it's ready." Quinn suggested.

"Wait, so you want me to stay here and carry on forging, I don't mind but.."

"I think it will be for the best." Andrew interpreted. "I have been informed that there will soon be news that will be passed on to everyone, and it might shake the world a little. So these people need some order."

Hearing this, Quinn wondered if Andrew already knew about the announcement that Oscar would soon release, about the Vs that were amongst all of the factions. As someone who had been tasked with creating the Demon tier he had to be a VVIP.

"Just for now." Quinn replied. "I know it might not be safe, but I have a feeling that the Cursed ship might be moving more often soon as well. I'll be asking for Wevil and Linda to stay behind, just in case anything happens here. Make sure the people can relax for a while, I think they deserve it after what they have been through."

Since there was nothing else for Quinn to do aside from waiting, he rounded up the rest in preparation for leaving. Ko the leader of the orbus faction could see this, and just before Quinn left the faction he had called out to him.

"Quinn, wait." Ko said. "I still haven't been able to thank you. When you came here I was just stressed about everything that was going on. My family had gone missing and more people were disappearing. I thought I would never see them again."

"If you want, you can hit me. Hit me for everything I said." Ko then closed his eyes bracing himself ready to get hit.

"If I did hit you, you might go flying out of this whole Shelter." Quinn joked but was very serious at the same time. "Ko, if anything your frustration was due to you not being able to help the people around you and those that had gone missing, That wasn't a bad thing in the end. It's better than the people who choose to ignore it. Like those who were at the top. I hope you continue to stay this way."

Quinn headed off, as he went to return to the ship, but Ko couldn't help but get a few last words in.

"Quinn I will make sure everyone knows what type of person you and the Cursed faction really are. I won't let anyone say a bad word about you!"

As the others traveled through space, on the Cursed ship itself in one of the training rooms. There was drastic huffing and panting coming from a small person. He could barely stand and held himself up with his Dalki hand facing the ground.

"Come on!" Brock shouted. "This is the last day the two of us will be training together. Do you really think if you were to run into the Blade twins again that you could beat them? Heck, even slowing them down will be a miracle unless you get stronger!"

After a few minutes and having banged to catch his breath, Logan raised his head and his eyes were glowing green. Around him, there were several pieces of scrap devices and his body was cut all over in different places.

"You have a unique soul weapon, one which is undoubtedly strong! However, you need to learn how to use it better! For most their soul weapon is their last resort in a fight, but for you this will be your constant weapon! Now come, attack me again!" Rock demanded.

Pushing himself off the ground with his large Dalki hand, Logan flew a few meters into the air, and let out a scream. His eyes grew even more fierce.

"I won't drag the others down!!!"

Chapter 1103: All our strength

When Quinn and the others finally arrived back on the Cursed ship, all of them shared a sense of returning to somewhere they belonged. It was a bit strange to call a ship that constantly moved through space and could therefore be anywhere at any time 'home', but they all felt this way.

They knew that here none of them would be judged for what they had done in the past, they didn't have to watch what they had to say, and could mostly do as they wished. Everyone knew that with the situation with the Dalki there was a lot to be done, but it didn't hurt to take a breather or two for a second.

The people around the base greeted Quinn as usual, respectful, with many congratulating him on saving the Graylash family and acquiring the Demon tier crystal. The atmosphere was still light, so it seemed that Sam had yet to inform what most of the Cursed group were. He was sure that once the truth was out, the treatment wouldn't be exactly the same.

He asked around whether Leo and Erin had come back, but it appeared that they were still dealing with their own troubles.

"Hey Quinn, can you show me what Alex created for you?" Nate requested as he approached the Cursed faction leader. "Ever since I've heard the news that you guys managed to defeat a Demon tier beast I've been waiting for you to come back and show your new toy!"

Whenever Quinn was walking around the base, he would put all of his beast gear away, only equipping it when needed. It was the same for all those with the shadow ability.

"Believe me, I would love to, but it's not ready yet. Alex is still busy making it." Quinn answered, not bothering to tell Nate about the new gauntlets he had.

"This sucks." Nate complained out loud. "I get why you want me to train the people here, but I've already taught them as much as I could about hand to hand combat. Initially, it was quite enjoyable watching them learn it quickly and improve themselves, but to carry on and improve even more just takes time. They need experience, and fighting against each other can only get them so far."

"What I'm trying to say is, Quinn, I'm bored," Nate openly complained.

Quinn felt bad, Nate was one of the strongest people in his team, but he had felt that the Demon tier beast would have been too dangerous to take everyone. In many ways, he thought where they were going to go next was also a place only for those who had already proven themselves capable

There was also the issue that they needed to leave behind a strong crew on the Cursed ship, just in case they got attacked. At the same time if he would avoid taking new people with him, then they would really stagnate and would be unable to fight the Dalki when they arrived in full force.

At the moment, there were only small battles, but everyone could feel that there would be a full scale war soon. Both sides were just testing the grounds figuring out each other's strength.

"Maybe there is something I can show you before I leave this time." Quinn suggested. "I'm sure it won't bore you anytime soon and once you get the hang of it perhaps you could show it to the others as well."

Quinn then pressed his hand on the other's chest. In the past Quinn had been afraid of doing this, due to him accidentally turning others. The easiest way to show people Qi, was by making their bodies feel it moving around.

Vampires seemed not to have this Qi force on their own, yet those that had been turned did, so someone like Nate should be able to learn it. Nate closed his eyes to concentrate on the feeling, and Quinn started to swirl around the energy in his body.

"Try to follow along with me, focus on the energy and try to push and move it yourself." Quinn instructed.

It didn't take long to feel it. He wasn't very bright, but when it came to fighting instincts, something like Qi was perfect for him, and he could feel it almost instantly.

Then, Quinn's hands were no longer touching his body.

"What was that?" Nate asked.

"I think you already got a feeling on how to use it yourself. Perhaps your years of studying martial arts have already allowed you to experience it, you just didn't know the name for it. That was Qi. Leo was the one to teach me. Just remember this feeling and practice it. Also, try to come up with a way of teaching others without doing what I just did."

"Otherwise, there is the risk that you might accidentally turn them." Quinn said.

At first, Nate thought it was a joke but realised that Quinn was completely serious when he said those last words. Quinn had wanted to teach those on board Qi for a long time, but the only way he had learnt it, was through feeling the process through his body, and that was the only way he had taught it to the other students at school as well.

The thing was, Quinn didn't know of a way to teach the others, and he didn't have the time to go around touching everyone.

'Nate, hopefully you will become a better teacher than I.' Quinn thought.

Suddenly, a meeting had been called as all of the cursed leaders were called to head to the command room.

When Quinn arrived along with Nate, he could see that most were already there, thankfully that included Eno as well, but his calm face from before looked to be more serious as he displayed a constant frown and his arms were folded.

Next, Sil entered with Borden on his shoulders into the room, and his walking was fast paced with excitement, meaning he had an idea of what this whole meeting was exactly about. As for the last ones to enter, they were Logan and Brock. It was strange to see the two of them together.

Quinn didn't even know when they had grown close and the strangest thing was actually the fact that Logan had wounds all over his body.

'What happened to him, did one of his inventions backfire or something? When was the last time I have seen him hurt this badly? Why didn't he go see a doctor?' Quinn wondered.

"Is the meeting going to start?" Dennis asked.

"Soon." Sam replied. "There is still one more person that needs to be here."

As the doors opened one more person walked in on his own, Shiro. He looked frightened as everyone stared at him, but when he saw Quinn, he tried to pretend to be confident and started walking over.

"It's good to see you again, and I have to thank you for accepting my request." Quinn greeted him.

Shiro looked over at Sil, and then back at Quinn. Before he had been a power hungry person, but now he had a debt to pay. These people had saved his life multiple times, and he just wanted to be by their side and help them.

The lives of Shiro and the others had changed at school after meeting Quinn, and he knew that as long as he helped the Cursed faction, everyone's lives would also change for the better.

"Okay, it's time that we talk about Blade Island." Sam announced.

Somewhere a great distance away, in the beast solar system, a man stood in a large hall. His large frame was covered in diamond like armour from head to toe as well as a helmet with slits to allow him to see through it.

The man turned around and looked at the large hall behind him. Inside there were around a hundred people. Every single one of them attached to a metal rod sticking out of the ground, chained up.

"We have prepared for long enough. I never thought that I would meet someone beyond me, but that is why we must continue on. No matter what we must get Sil back, and this time I will use the power of all the chained here!"

Chapter 1104: Changing the future

On the planet that never saw sunlight, preparations were being made. Ever since learning that Arthur would be coming for him eventually, Bryce had been more focused and determined than ever before.

Right now he was in the throne room while Kazz stood by his side.

'I did everything I could to finally obtain the King's seat. Others might just enjoy having fulfilled their grand ambition, grow lazy, while letting things play out until it would be time for their final rest, but how can I?' Bryce thought as he clenched his fist and the veins on his hand showed themselves.

'How can I give up, when the Punisher, that bastard responsible for killing my family, is still out there? Fortunately, I won't have to go out and find him, now that I know that he will be coming for me!'

Kazz couldn't hear what her father was thinking, she could only see him act restless, making her worry for him. However, over the years she had grown somewhat used to it. She was aware that around a certain time of year Bryce would act like that. At some point he would proceed to enter the room where the dreaded paintings were and come out more determined.

She was unsure whether he was going there to remind himself what he had achieved so far, or if there was a deeper meaning behind it. Whatever the case, what used to seldom occur, had become far more frequent in recent times.

Today was another such day and she no longer knew what was the right thing to do.

"Don't you think it will be beautiful?" Bryce asked as he started to walk forward. He suddenly stopped as the shadow of an item went over his face. "When Arthur comes back to exact his punishment, his very own powers will be used against him."

Stroking his hand over the wall in front of him, he could feel how smooth it felt. With how perfect it was, aside from a few missing pieces here and there, it was hard to believe that the wall used to be full of cracks.

"That kid must have taken part of the wall with him." Tempus said, moving from behind the wall. "Using my ability the whole thing should have returned to what it once was, but it doesn't seem to all be here."

Kazz didn't say anything. She was one of the people who had gone in with Quinn, but she had never expected her father to raid the Punisher's castle after his disappearance. When they found the wall, Kazz had never seen a creeper smile on her father's face before.

"Don't worry, it seems we have been able to decipher enough information from this to figure out a few things, bring them in, Kazz." Bryce ordered, and she quickly left the room.

A few moments later, she returned with three vampires, all of them looked tired, exhausted. Sweating nervously, they were afraid of what was going to happen to them.

"Your Majesty, I think you will be quite pleased with our results, today will be the day that we are able to show you something." One of the vampires said as he remained on the floor with his head bowed down.

"Are you sure this is a good thing, your Majesty?" Tempus questioned. "If they learn the ability, it also means that Arthur will be able to use them in some way as well."

"Show me what you have learnt." Bryce ordered, ignoring Tempus' warning.

The three stood up, and stayed in position for a short while. As they closed their eyes, soon the shadow underneath their feet started to move, and then it could be seen hovering over their back. Finally, weeks after discovering the tablet, it looked like they had learnt how to use the Shadow ability.

The tablet that had been left in the fourteenth castle, which showed one how to learn and use the Shadow ability, had been moved to the King's castle, and now Bryce had his first set of shadow users.

However, even though Tempus had agreed to help the king, he was unsure what the other was thinking. Why would he be creating his own shadow users? One of the main abilities of the Punishers were that they were able to travel to each other with their shadow as they wished,

He could only see this causing more trouble than what it was worth... that was until he saw the next set of actions from the King. He walked up to the three of them, and then placed both hands on the shoulder of the vampire centred in the middle.

"You three have done an excellent job, the vampire race will be proud of you, and your names shall be forever remembered." Bryce said, as a sudden blood spike appeared from Bryce's stomach piercing the other vampire's stomach.

At the same time, from his forearms two more blood spikes had come out, killing the other two vampires as well.

When Bryce let go of the one in the centre, he fell to the floor and a shadowy mist started to spring from their bodies.

"Vampires have existed for a long time, but we did not always have abilities." Bryce narrated as he carefully watched the smoke make its way towards him. He then pulled out a clear transparent crystal and the mist started to enter into the crystal. Soon the clear colour started to fill up.

"The world is a complicated thing, and even we don't know all of its secrets." Bryce continued. "But it looks like the gods are on my side, and wish for me to achieve my goal. Kazz, bring me more people. We must gather and teach the shadow ability to as many people as possible."

However, even though her father had ordered it, she was frozen in fear. Was that her father's plan? Raise more shadow users, only to then kill more of his people? Sacrifice the lives of his own vampires just to store some strange shadow in a crystal?

She had seen him go too far at times but this was far beyond anything before.

'God's on your side, you say?' Tempus wondered.

After Bryce had learned that Arthur was coming, he had initially been struck with a bit of fear. Although he had the Absolute blood control from the book passed on by kings, whenever he thought back to the execution platform, and what Arthur had done, anger and fear were the two emotions that entered him at the time.

While stuck in his throne room, trying to clear his head, he had received a certain surprise visitor, one that smelt like a human, a strange thing in the Vampire World to say the least. Being able to make it to him without being stopped, was the best evidence that the girl was not normal.

"I won't waste your time by introducing myself, just know that I have come to help you." The girl had told him cryptically. "There is great trouble in your future and without help you will only fail. As such I have brought you a gift. The origins of the shadow will originally wish to return to the place where it came from."

The girl had pulled out the clear crystal, and placed it on the ground. In the few seconds Bryce's gaze had been on the crystal, she had already disappeared, leaving the Vampire King with an empty crystal and a ton of unanswered questions.

For a day or two, he had tried to ignore this mysterious meeting, but eventually the lack of any solution, as well as curiosity, got the better of him and he decided to verify how powerful the crystal was. Just from them using the shadow powers there was no such reaction, the crystal was on Bryce at all times, but then a sound, as if something was calling to him told him what he needed to. The test with the shadow users and crystal wasn't over yet.

Not too far away, the very person that Bryce was prepping for was thinking about him as well. He was sitting on top of a large building with the night sky, although there was another man behind him.

"We are meeting here again, I guess you have finished with your preparations and It looks like you have made your choice. It's time for you to move, isn't it" The man told him.

"I still couldn't find him, but he is definitely out there, but I can't keep looking. Indeed, there is no better time. But shouldn't you worry about your own side? It looks like to me things haven't gone the way you thought they would. I told you that you would have troubles with them. You shouldn't have underestimated them." Arthur replied with a cheeky grin.

"I hate to admit it, but you're right. Make sure to not repeat my mistake, I would hate to lose you. Who knows how strong they have gotten since we have been away." The man cautioned Arthur.

"Strong? No, the way I see it, they have just gotten weaker...well, maybe not all of them." Arthur corrected himself, as he stood up.

"Once everything is over, remember to keep your promise!"

Chapter 1105: Challenge for the seat

Arthur leaped off from the top of the tower and the next moment his body was covered in shadows.

'I disagree Arthur, although it might not look like it, but things are going perfectly at the moment. My initial plan had never accounted for the fact that you may ever wake up, so thanks to your presence everything will proceed far more smoothly than I could have ever hoped for. Vincent, if only you were still here to see everything your uncle is about to achieve."

The man behind Arthur was none other than Jim Eno, former leader of the tenth family, who not only disgraced himself, but also used his chance to redeem himself as a vampire knight to escape with the Dalki.

Left alone on top of the building, he started to smile to himself, before he broke out in laughter. His imagination had begun to run wild, dreaming about what the future would hold, but then anger struck him, and he punched through one of the wall's at the very top of the tower smashing it to pieces.

"The human's need to be gone, and then they will understand the mistake that they made. I just have to continue being patient, we still have plenty of time." Jim spoke to reassure himself.

Just as he was about to repair the tower, a large horn sounded throughout the entire place. Large speakers would echo it so it could be heard all over the ship like planet.

'They are at it again? It's truly amazing how quickly they have become a civilization with traditions of their own.' Jim thought. 'I should head on over and see for myself how powerful the newly evolved one is...'

The place most Dalki called home was a giant ship that had been repurposed to suit their needs. Just like its inhabitants it was constantly improving and had changed drastically once again. In the centre was an energy core that would power the large thing 'Ship' but it was large enough to be recognised as a small planet as well. It was something the humans had yet to see, always being on the defence.

By extracting the different lands from the beast planets that they had conquered, the Dalki had been able to create their own land. It made for different terrain throughout, but was nothing a Dalki couldn't handle.

On the outside, a large ring like tube made of what appeared to be a type of metal and extended tubes went directly through the land leading to the core, as well as to the large castle-like shape where the so-called Dalki leaders resided in.

Despite being called a 'castle', in actuality it was just a crude mountain top with a few towers built here and there. The Dalki didn't really care too much for architecture due to their beastly nature and had merely built the structures they had been told to. Most of the living areas had been made with the same materials that vampires had discovered to create. The black like hard substance that was equal to galthrium but harder to mold. The entire man made planet had mainly been created by two people, Jim Eno, and the Dalki known as Graham.

Standing outside the entrance to their castle, three Dalki could be seen walking out, all of them sharing looks of irritation. One was a female Dalki, with an extra long tail named Slicer, the other two were One Horn, and Graham.

"It appears another member of our race has evolved and wishes to join the table." Graham stated.

"Can't they at least stop obsessing over who is stronger at a time like this?!" One Horn openly grumbled.

"Oi, have you already forgotten who the idiot was who proposed the stupid rule that any of the leaders could be challenged at any point and time for their position?" Slicer criticized the former, as she wrapped her tail and rested it on top of her shoulder.

The three of them jumped up several meters into the air with their powerful legs, and each time they would land, they jumped again, covering great distance and moving fast, until eventually they landed in a deep giant crater away from their castle. It was in an empty red wasteland. It looked similar to an opening of a volcano with the way the edges were bent, yet it was on felt ground.

Once the three of them arrived, they could see that there was already another Dalki standing opposite them in the crater, and at the very edges up top, several Dalki had gathered to watch the spectacle that was about to occur.

The Dalki turned around proudly showing off the four spikes on his back.

"I have finally obtained my fourth spike! According to the rules, I have come to challenge one of you for the leader's position!" The Dalki announced, and the rest of the crowd watching above cheered as well.

The three Dalki leaders looked at each other to decide what was to happen next.

"It's up to you two." Graham shrugged his shoulders as he took a step back. "I have already made my stance clear about this entire thing being barbaric. I only agreed to it because it seems like the best method to cause the least amount of infighting as possible."

"Dred is no longer with us, so he needs to be replaced, and Green Horn has returned to us barely alive, so it would be good to test him to see if he can replace one of their positions."

"Fine, I'll deal with him." One Horn sighed, as he walked forward, but before he could take another step, a large tail blocked his path.

"Allow me to remind you that this is our home and I'm worried you will only destroy it even more. Have you forgotten who created this giant crater in the first place?" Slicer said as she walked forward.

As the Dalki saw who he was about to go up against, he wanted to make a complaint.

"Graham, I don't mean to challenge you, where are the others?" The Dalki complained, but before Graham could reply, Slicer was already coming towards him.

The Dalki was forced to defend himself. He went to throw in a punch, but it completely missed Slicer, and the next thing he knew was that he felt a sharp pain on his back.

"Oh, what's this? Didn't you say you had four spikes on your back? Why can I only see three then?" Slicer asked, as she brought the other spike to her hand with her tail.

The crowd who had been cheering from above had started to disperse as soon as they saw who had come forward. They were already making their way back to return to what they had been doing before.

As the four spiked Dalki took a step again, Slicer jumped up in the air, doing a backflip, and her large tail went out ward hitting the Dalki from between his legs, all the way up to his head. The hard Dalki skin was unable to do anything as he was sliced in half by her tail.

"You were meant to keep him alive! How do you suppose we can fill in our rank if you test them like this?" Graham complained as he sighed about the loss of life.

"We don't need such weaklings who can't even touch me. Since they managed to defeat Dread, he would not have fared any better." Slicer explained herself, as she walked off, displaying the five spikes on her back.

'Even if he wasn't as strong as Dred, that doesn't mean he couldn't have been useful in other ways. Everything we are doing is just for the sake of us being able to continue living, yet there you go killing him for nothing. Slicer, with Dalki like you around, it's no wonder the humans wish to get rid of every single one of us.' Graham thought bitterly.

"It seems like Slicer is tired of playing games, let's send her out to make the next move."

Chapter 1106: A detour

A banging headache was the first thing she felt, and then pain rushed through her body until it eventually disappeared. However, the thing that caused Erin to finally open her eyes was the smell of something burning, as the scent wafted into her nose.

All she could see was a brown ceiling wall with the light shining in from one direction. No, the ceiling was bumpy and the ground was hard. She tried to get up, but as soon as she moved she heard the sound of chains rattling by her side and she felt the heavy weight on both of her arms.

'The chain is on both of my arms now?' Erin wondered, as she looked to her left and right and could see that they had reached the top of her shoulders. Before she could only remember them being on one arm, and she wasn't even sure how there were enough of the chains to wrap around both of them.

Looking ahead, she was happy to see the person who would be able to answer everything. Leo was sitting by a fire he had made, and was in the middle of roasting a few fish over it. That's when she noticed the two of them appeared to be in a cave of all things with a nice lake seen in the distance.

"Looks like you're finally awake. I thought you might be hungry as you've been asleep for a few days now." Leo informed her. "No need to hold back, as you know I don't really eat this type of thing. Oh and if you're wondering about the chains, I had always carried around a spare with me just in case it got up to this point."

Hearing Leo's words, she was still confused about how they had gotten here or where exactly 'here' was. Her head was still hurting, but slowly images started to flash into her head.

She saw the four spiked Dalki, and herself getting hit. That was pretty much the last thing she could barely remember. At the time she hadn't been in control anymore, but she had somehow retained the memories. Looking at them felt like she was seeing a doppelgänger act, but she knew that this had to have been her.

"I...I tried to hurt you." Erin said, her voice croaking a little. These words were painful for her to say. Leo had always tried to help her, yet she had only gotten in his way and she could only blame her own weakness.

"No one has died, and as you can say I'm. There's no need for you to shed a tear for me. You might have tried to hurt me, but ultimately you failed. Perhaps it means I didn't train you hard enough." Leo chided her playfully.

Erin's body was fine, she didn't experience any difficulties moving it. In fact, after a while she realised that she could move it now even better than before. That wasn't all, she also noticed plenty of other things. The power in her body had increased, but at the same time they were being drained.

'Did I hit a breakthrough, when I took off those chains? Or was it after I got hit by the Dalki?' Erin started to wonder. The conclusion she eventually reached was that her body hadn't simply improved but that she herself was slightly different. She had spent enough time with the vampires she had trained before to understand that she had undergone an evolution.

In the past she would have been happy about something like this, after all this was the fastest way to grow stronger, and she was sure that this evolution would allow her to do some things she might have been unable to before, but a fear had taken over her, as she thought about this, the words of another.

'That girl, she said that I would become 'chaos'.' Erin repeated in her head. 'If I keep getting stronger without learning how to control this power then the thing happened to Leo... what if I attack the others as well? What if it hadn't been Leo but Nate, Sam or even Layla with me?'

These disastrous thoughts of hers were filling up in her head, spoiling her appetite to the point that she was unable to even eat the fish that had been cooked for her. Of course this didn't go unnoticed by Leo at all.

"Erin, without your intervention we would probably be dead by now. You saved me, that stranger and countless others. You were fast, skilled and calm during the first half of the fight."

"At the time, your body must have been urging you to go after me, but instead you focused on the Dalki and did great. I believe you will be able to control the powers inside of you. Back then you were just unlucky enough to become unconscious from your injury, allowing your instincts to take over." Leo explained. "The person who attacked me wasn't the real Erin."

She appreciated what Leo was trying to do, but for some reason it just made her feel even more guilty. "What if it gets worse? We know that if a vampire consumes too much blood they can become one of those monstrous Bloodsuckers. Maybe I'm the same. What happens when it isn't enough?!" Erin questioned Leo as she stood up. Surprisingly, she felt the chains falling off her as well.

"What are you doing?!" Erin couldn't believe that Leo would release them like this.

"Can you feel it? The only way to fight your fear is to face it head on! You can't allow it to take over you. Do you think I'm frightened of you?! You are far too young to be worrying about me!" Leo shouted back and soon Erin swung her blade towards him and a large splash of yellow energy came out.

Jumping out of the cave they were in, Leo struck the slash with his own power, deflecting it into the air, and making it so it hit nothing.

Erin was huffing and panting, and she slowly walked out. With his ability, he could see the struggle she was facing, this strange energy that wanted to constantly lash out at him, while the girl on the inside was trying to suppress it.

'It's strange... this isn't a lust for blood like other vampires have, and when I attempted to give her vampire blood it did nothing for her. Is it a lust to kill?' Leo worried about that possibility. 'The best course of action seems to be to allow her to slowly adjust herself to this feeling, so she learns how to control the urge.'

'The way she currently is, it's too dangerous to bring her back on the Cursed ship. How can I help her control it without allowing her to kill enough vampires until she's satisfied?' Leo thought.

He kept his distance from her as he waited and then when the energy seemed to get too much, and her consciousness seemed to be slipping, he immediately dashed in, and ran straight past her, picking up the chains, and wrapping it around both of her arms again.

Soon, the power within her was dwindling down again, and Leo was left with an exhausted Erin. "You did well, have a rest and I will decide what to do."

Back in the cave, Leo finally came to a tough decision of what they needed to do, but he still wasn't sure if it was the right thing or not.

'There are plenty of bad people in the world, and there are also bad vampires that have attempted to kill us. Perhaps, the only thing we can do is head back to that place... where you will be surrounded by them. Quinn, I wish I could help you, but I fear if I don't do something about Erin now, that she will be a far bigger problem in the future.' Leo pondered over whether or not he should inform Quinn about his choice.

He played with a Demi-god tier crystal that was in his hand, gifted to him by a certain someone. It looked like it had been slipped in and given to him at some point.

'My preparations for meeting your master will have to be put on hold, first, some preparations are in order.'

Chapter 1107: A stronger Qi inside

In the command centre of the Cursed ship, all the leaders of the Cursed faction were present. Sam had just stated that he would be talking about what the Cursed group would be doing next, their journey to Blade Island.

"I'm going to explain everything from the beginning, just so everyone is clear why we are doing what we are doing and so we are all on the same wavelength." Sam stated. "After all, as leaders of the Cursed faction it is important for all of us to know what's happening just in case we need to support each other, and so none of us feel like the others are slacking in their areas."

"At the same time we have a new guest that also needs to be briefed on everything." Sam explained looking towards Shiro with a smile. He had been told a few small details, but through messages alone it was hard for him to understand everything that was happening.

"Blade Island is owned by the Blade family. For those who aren't aware, the Blade family is a strong family that has been controlling the Big Four families from behind the scenes for years. Each one of them has the ability to copy other abilities, and if you haven't guessed by now, Sil is also a member of that family."

Some of this was quite shocking for the others to learn, that there really was a family that was stronger than the Big Four. How had they managed to keep it a secret for so long? However, some things were also starting to make sense to them now. The way people acted once they had learned of Sil's power and discovered his last name.

"As you probably have guessed since Sil is with us, they don't particularly get along, and the Blades aren't the nicest of people. They have abused their strength, and for whatever reason they didn't even help in the first Dalki war."

"The main person to watch out for is Hilton Blade, the leader of the Blade family. Thankfully, we have learnt from Brock that they are no longer on the island. This means we should be able to complete two of our objectives easier than originally planned." Sam pointed to Shiro, signalling him to stand up. He shot up straight away, nervous as all the eyes were on him.

Usually, when one would join a large faction they would do simple tasks and work their way up, but for Shiro's first mission, he had practically been thrown into what looked like a very important mission.

"The first part of our task is to head to the giant stone tablet where Eno will see if the tablet contains the ability we are looking for and pass it onto Shiro as agreed." There was a slight pause as Sam was waiting for Eno to raise a complaint, yet the old man did no such thing. After all, this was one of the options Eno himself had presented.

"With that, there is a second part of the task, and that is to use Sil and his ability to try and tame the Demon tier beast and move it."

Hearing those words, Shiro spun his head around and looked at Sam, his whole body shaking.

"Di- Di- Did you just say- say a Demon tier beast?!" Shiro stuttered and felt like he was about to collapse. He was someone who had no such ability, and could barely fight Intermediate beasts, and now he was meant to confront a Demon tier beast.

"I have to add that moving the Demon tier beast may not be an easy task." Brock interjected. "If Sil's ability is enough then perhaps there will be no need for us to do anything. However, if it rejects or wishes to fight, then we will have no other choice but to weaken it for Sil's ability to work."

"Although Hilston was able to control the beast, he has what he calls the 'Chained' with him, and it appears he has evacuated them all off the island. Most of the high level ability users who are here, Sil can not copy their ability from. It would be great if we could call Oscar or Owen for Sil to touch, but they are doing their own thing, and if possible we would like to refrain from letting them know where the Demon tier beast is."

This was something Quinn hadn't thought of, it meant that they would need to take six humans along with them, for Sil to copy their abilities from, adding more risk to the mission.

"As long as I can place them in the Shadow lock, they should be fine, and if the Blades aren't there the only thing we have to worry about is the Demon tier beast. Well I say 'only', but that's still a big thing to worry about." Quinn said.

"Which moves us on to the next point, for who you wish to bring along, I believe that Nate is already busy teaching the others. I have sent a message to Helen, and asked her to come along since we will need her to give Sil a boost while leaving her two sisters in charge." Sam said.

"Is there anyone who wants to come?" Quinn asked, looking for a show of hands, but nearly everyone had raised their hand. As usual most of the Cursed leaders were fearless, and Shiro looked at this just through one thing.

'These people are so awesome!'

Knowing what they were about to go into, many would have backed out, but for some reason, all this group trusted and relied on each other. This was what Shiro was looking for, and he didn't even know it before. In the past all he had cared about was power, but why did he need that power in the first place?

Brock, Eno, Sil and Shiro were already a given since they had to come. When Quinn looked around the room, he was trying to think of who would be suitable for the task. Last time the group he had brought along with him had been a great help.

"The names I say will be coming along with us." Quinn said after making a decision. "Richard, Brock, Sil, Shiro, Fex, Logan and Borden. Helen will be joining us as well." Quinn said as his final choices.

"Peter, I know you are strong but that's why I want you to remain behind and continue to look after the Blade kids. I'm worried that while we don't know where the Blade members are they might come out and attack us at any point and time." Quinn explained.

Of course, Peter wasn't delighted hearing he wasn't allowed to come along, but he couldn't exactly go against Quinn's orders.

When facing a Demon tier beast, large forces were never a good idea, least of all with this type of Demon tier beast. Quinn was worried that a similar situation that had happened to Owen could happen to the Cursed faction as well. Sam was right, even with his ability to travel to their side instantly, now situations were starting to arise where he had to be in two places at once, and that was impossible. He had to rely on the people around him.

"Please remember that we have to wait for one more." Eno finally spoke. "She has still yet to arrive, but I assure you she is on her way. Aren't you also waiting for more candidates to come?"

Quinn had almost forgotten about it, but to use Sil's ability they would need Mona.

'With Mona coming, then that's one last person that we need to find for Sil. I chose Logan because he's a high level ability user, I don't plan to use him much for the fighting side of things. With Helen as well, that's three abilities that Sil can copy from."

"Sam, will try to find three more members with a high level ability for Sil to copy, in the meantime we will wait for Mona and Helen to arrive. With this the meeting is over." Quinn announced and everyone was ready to get up to head their separate ways.

Just as Quinn was about to leave the meeting room though, he felt someone strongly grab his hand and yanked him away.

"What are you doing, why didn't you pick me?!" Layla asked him directly, the anger in her voice apparent. "It's one thing for you to avoid me ever since, but now you don't even consider me for such an important mission?"

It was then that Quinn noticed that touching each other didn't give them the headaches that they had before. Perhaps it was something to do with the feelings he had felt at the time. Which made him wonder internally what his feelings were for Layla if they weren't constantly going off, or maybe he just had too much on his mind at the moment.

"Layla, this is a Demon tier beast, and the Blade Island. You weren't there last time, but I was nearly killed. We all almost died." Quinn stressed the seriousness of the situation.

"But it was okay to take me to hunt with you for the other Demon tier? You're not making any sense right now. Why are they so intent on avoiding me?" Layla pressed him for an answer. At the moment, she was filled with anger. She hadn't worked this hard, come this far, just to be chucked to the side, and forgotten about.

While feeling her hand on him, Quinn noticed that her grip was incredibly strong, stronger than usual. Layla's vampire subclass shouldn't grant her extreme strength... not unless she had evolved into her second form, so what was powering her at this moment?

"Do you mind if I take a look at you?" Quinn asked and Layla started to blush. She wanted to let go, but Quinn held her hand tightly and closed his eyes.

'What is this in her body? How does she have such a strong Qi? It seems to be even bigger than mine.'

According to Layla she had never learned how to use Qi from Pure, she had never reached the ranks to be taught it in the first place. There was only one explanation how she could have such a large Qi capacity then.

'I knew that her mother had passed Layla her Qi, but I was sure that it would fade away once she healed and time went on, but this is still as strong as ever! If Layla actually learned to use Qi, she could be as strong as her mother, perhaps even stronger due to her vampire powers.' Quinn concluded as he smiled.

"Alright Layla, I will permit you to accompany us, but only if you manage to learn something before it's time for us to leave." Quinn offered.

Chapter 1108: Two heads collide

Quinn wasn't a master of Qi, nor did he understand all the things it could do. He was even unaware of how Lucy, Layla's mother, had been able to give up her own life to heal Layla at that time. He had been sure that all the effects on Layla would only be temporary.

However, since it hadn't disappeared after all this time, it should be safe to assume that it would stay with Layla. Additionally, since she had never trained her own Qi apart from what little she had done with Leo, there should be room for her to improve. From what Quinn had heard, Leo had said that she was a slow learner.

Even with him using all his knowledge, it would have taken her half a year to show any type of results. Which was why Quinn had set up a test, a test for her to fail.

Right now, checking her, it looked like the Qi vessel was ready to burst at any second.

With this new knowledge, and knowing how frustrated Layla would be if left behind, Quinn stipulated this condition to allow her to accompany them to Blade Island.

She was to go find Nate, and learn how to use Qi with him. To see if maybe a second teacher would fare any better. If before it was time to leave, she could learn how to use Qi to a degree where it would be useful and strengthen her attacks to a certain level, then she should be able to take care of herself on the island.

'I didn't take you for such a cruel person.' Vincent commented, after Quinn had presented Layla with a new goal. She had immediately accepted it and before he could ever say anything she had rushed off to Nate.

'How is this cruel, if I simply don't wish for her to get hurt? I might be unsure what exactly I feel for her, but there is one thing that's crystal clear. I don't want to lose her.' Quinn defended his actions. 'I know Qi can take a long time for some people to learn, but there's still a chance and she has tried before. With her mother's power inside her, it might even cause us to have another Cursed monster on our team. We will just have to see how she does.'

Left alone, Quinn decided to head off and look for Sil. He was wondering what state of mind he was currently in. He had seemed mostly fine during the Demon tier hunting expedition, but with them soon returning to his birthplace it would be normal for him to be nervous or feel all sorts of emotions.

Quinn headed to the school area on the Cursed ship, a frequent place for Sil to relax at, due to him getting along with the other kids from Blade Island. Before he turned around the corner, Quinn happened to overhear a conversation.

"I just want to say... thank you, Shiro." Sil said. "That ability will help me bring back my friends."

"Please, you don't have to be like this, Sil." Shiro replied, sounding nervous like he didn't know how to react. "I'm just happy to help anyway I can. You know the second they said it was to help you out, I agreed in a heartbeat."

"You saved me back then. If I had gone too far....I don't know what would have happened to me, but your words, everything you said and everything you did has made me who I am now. So no matter what, I will do everything in my power to help you get your friends back! Afterwards... Maybe I can also become friends with them."

Hearing this, gave Quinn a bit of peace. Sil seemed to be as calm as ever and even thanked Shiro first. Something that Quinn had never expected from a child like Sil. It seemed that knowing that Vorden and Raten were coming back would please him, although this was only the first step.

Even if Shiro did get the ability, they still needed bodies for the two of them, and Quinn didn't want to use the so-called clones that Eno would create. That would be a temporary fix to the whole solution, if anything. They needed Shiro to learn the ability so they could rely on Eno less, but it was impossible to completely not rely on him.

From the sounds of it, Shiro and Sil were about to take a tour of the ship and with Quinn's worries settled, he could go off to do his own thing. As he walked around the ship, he heard the announcement that the docking bay for the spaceships was opening up.

"Someone arrived?"

Knowing this, he thought it would be best for him to also make his way and meet them there, and along the way, he bumped into Brock and Eno.

"Quinn, I have to say so far things have been going very smoothly for you, but that's because it seems that Jim and the Dalki are completely unaware of you." Eno said as they continued to walk.

"At the moment, the Cursed faction is just another group that Jim has to worry about, but once he learns the truth of your identity and the reaction you have to all of us, I'm sure you will become a bigger target than anyone else. I just hope you're ready for that."

However, Quinn didn't feel the need for it to be mentioned, he was already preparing for the Dalki or Jim to come after him at any second. Especially since it seemed like there was a chance that they already knew about Blade Island.

When they arrived at the docking bay, Quinn could see that the guests had already exited from their ship, and he could smell it instantly as they walked off, four vampires were guarding a female in the centre, who was dressed in dark clothing and had a large pointy hat on top of her head. It was Mona.

'So there are vampires working for Richard, after all... but just how many people does he have under him?' Quinn wondered.

"Have you forgotten that I told you that I had eyes and ears in all sorts of different places? You didn't think all of my work was just done by me and Brock. However, don't worry, nearly all of them are just clones of myself, with the transformation ability. Allowing them to change their appearance at will."

"It would be creepy if I just saw myself this whole time."

Quinn understood the logic behind that, but if 'nearly' all the vampires that worked for Richard were clones, who was Brock?

"Who is, Brock?" Quinn asked, not being shy about the question.

"Oh I thought you would never ask, Brock here is an ex Royal Knight. He was my Royal knight during my time of becoming king, and he had helped me a great deal throughout the times. Of course, he used to have a different ability but I changed it to help us more with our situation."

"Changed it? Like with Truedream's ability." Quinn asked, since Richard appeared to be in a sharing mood.

"Not quite, as you know we have already talked about the tablet more than once. It is a special thing, more so than you know, and it can do amazing things." Eno explained, as they continued to walk forward.

Quinn already knew that the tablet was indeed special. He had read all about it in Arthur's journal who had been obsessed about it at one point. That the probability that all the abilities that were currently in existence had originated from there.

"Finally, it looks like I'm out of that place. I never thought you would let me leave." Mona said when she looked at Richard and Brock, then she finally laid her eyes on Quinn.

"I'm surprised you are involved in all of this." Mona said.

He was unsure how much exactly Mona knew, did she know Richard Eno and the others were vampires, what they had planned to do, or was there something else. Through a brief conversation while he was escorting her on her way to Sam, he found out that Mona had been brought up to speed.

She didn't know anything about vampires yet, just that the man who had saved her from Hilston, was Richard Eno, the great scientist, which was why she didn't fear for her life and felt indebted towards him.

When she asked about his relationship to Richard Eno, Quinn claimed that he was his grandfather, the only reasonable thing he could say, and she was starting to get a better picture of everything. The details of what they were about to do, and why they needed to do so were also shared with Mona, and once this was all done, she would stay by Richard's side, at least until the war was over and done with.

"That damn Hilston, that kid has one crazy grandfather!" Mona said, referring to Sil. "I can't believe what he did, but it sounds like he at least got some sort of payback from you guys. I just hope we don't run into him again."

Quinn also hoped the same, but he knew that they would have to face him eventually. The best thing to hope for was that it wouldn't happen right now. It felt silly to worry about a human, of all things when they were in the middle of a war with the Dalki.

With Mona now here, there was only one person left that they needed to wait for and that was Helen, which meant they didn't have a lot of time before they were to head off. A short while later Helen finally arrived.

Once again, Quinn had gone to greet Helen as she had gotten off from her ship.

"I'm thankful that you have managed to come here, on top of all your duties." Quinn said.

"Don't be silly." Helen replied. "You're my leader and future husband, after all. I'm not just going to be one of those wives that just sit back and let others do all that work. Whenever you need me, of course I'll be there."

As usual, Helen was quite headstrong and upfront, and it was a type of personality that Quinn didn't mind, but just didn't really know how to deal with. Now that Helen was here, it meant everyone was there to embark on their Blade Island trip.

It hadn't been long since Sam's announcement had passed, perhaps eight or so hours had passed, but Quinn had no choice.

"Do you mind if we make a stop?" Quinn asked, as they took a detour and Quinn headed to one of the training rooms, where Nate and Layla were both in. As soon as the door was heard sliding open.

Layla could see Quinn, and Helen by his side. Seeing this, Layla stormed forward forgetting what she was doing, and headed towards the both of them, before stopping directly in front of Helen.

"You." Layla pointed at the woman. "I challenge you to a duel and the loser will have to submit to one request from the winner!"

Chapter 1109: Battle for Romeo

Everyone who was needed for the Blade Island mission was now present, so Quinn had gone to the training room to see whether by some miracle Layla had learned how to use Qi. However, he had never expected her to completely ignore him, instead storming right up to Helen and challenging her to a duel like that.

'Layla has never been this confrontational in the past, she is usually quite the calm and chilled girl. Just what's gotten into her?' Quinn wondered.

Noticing the puzzled look on Quinn's face, Nate moved over to where Quinn was and pulled him back away a little from the invisible sparks that everyone could feel between the two girls. Everyone who had been training just moments ago, stopped after hearing Layla's loud challenge.

"You look like you don't have a clue what you've just done, do you?" Nate asked Quinn in a hushed tone.

"What do you mean?" Quinn whispered back.

"Honestly Quinn, how can you be that dense? It doesn't take a genius to see that Layla obviously has had feelings for you for a long time, but we were all there when Helen declared that she wanted to go out with you. So what do you think Layla feels towards Helen?"

"By bringing her here, you've just added oil to the fire and now you have two gorgeous and perfect girls fighting over you! Well, Romeo, you should have decided which one to pick." Nate explained as he punched Quinn on the arm hard.

Just like any single guy, it was hard for Nate to keep his pent up frustrations under check when seeing that the girls who had feelings for his friend were even ready to fight for him. Besides, if anyone could take a hit, then it would be Quinn.

After staring at each other for a few seconds, Helen turned away to look at Quinn, who didn't know how to deal with the situation, before she turned back at Layla smiling.

"Hmph, I can already guess what you want me to do if you win. Fine, I accept the duel." Helen declared.

At this point, Quinn couldn't imagine a worse outcome for this situation. No matter who won, he would be the one who would need to deal with the aftermath. However, before he could do anything about it, everyone else had moved aside. Meanwhile Nate, continued to drag Quinn away letting the two girls conclude their business without him.

Helen stood on one side while Layla stood on the other as well.

"I don't want to bully you, so this is your last chance to back out." Helen offered.
"My Daisy faction used to be one of the strongest factions before we were taken over." She was confident in her words.

"I have been with the Cursed faction for a long while, the very group that took over and beat your Daisy faction!" Layla snapped back, as she checked her bow.

"Easy there ladies, we're all friends here. It looks like you might need a little ref to settle your differences. Since I can't afford to see you two girls get hurt, It will have to be me." Nate decided as he stepped forward, and raised both of his arms.

"Before you begin, here are some basic ground rules. No strikes at the other's head or heart area. The match is over when one of you surrenders or I declare that they can no longer continue." Nate stated.

"Agreed." Both of them nodded.

"Begin!" Nate shouted as he swung both arms down, and quickly went back to where Quinn and the others were up against the wall.

"So, who do you think is going to win?" Nate asked, as Layla placed five arrows into her bow, and was pressing to fire them off, while Helen threw several seeds on the ground which immediately sprouted into the deadly plants that would fire off spikes.

"Or perhaps I should ask who would you prefer to win?" Nate asked with a cheeky grin. He didn't even try to hide the fact that he was enjoying every single bit of the situation. He felt like Quinn deserved this, being the playboy he was without realising it.

"If I had to answer honestly, I see no way for Layla to be winning this. Even Peter had struggled when we fought against Helen." Quinn answered, not letting Nate's teasing get to him.

"Oh really? Well, I think you might be in for a surprise then." Nate said, as he looked towards a part of the wall. Quinn followed his gaze and found several cracks on the wall, with small holes in them as well.

'Layla's telekinesis ability was never strong enough to accomplish something like that, She also doesn't have the best beast equipment on either. Could it actually be that she managed to learn how to use Qi in such a short amount of time?!'

He briefly recalled that Leo had once tried to teach Layla the basics of Qi, but according to him, Layla's aptitude for it had been frankly horrible. She had been an extremely slow learner and even his best estimate had been that she would need at least half a year of intense training before she might be able to learn the first stage of it.

Under his tutelage she had constantly tried, but she just didn't seem suited for it. It also had not helped that Erin had quickly shown off her own talent in that regard, further crushing Layla's ego.

As Layla's fingers let go of the arrows, moving after what anyone had expected, they started to spin and the top of them were infused with great power. The flowers shot out their spikes trying to hit the arrows but when the two collided there was a clear difference in which was stronger, and the arrows continued going forward piercing right through the stems causing them to shrivel.

Even then, the arrows continued as they went and hit the wall behind them, but a single one had changed direction and was going straight for Helen.

"You have some fire in you I see!" Helen praised her, as she pulled out her whip, and snapped it, hitting the arrow by the wooden part, breaking it in half. Her whip was fast enough and strong enough to destroy the arrows without hitting the sharp head.

Something that if Layla wanted to win, she had to figure out how to get past. Soon, she started to run but it was at her usual speed. She didn't slow down, and continued to pull the arrows firing them.

'My best bet is to confuse her. I need to concentrate and use my ability at the same time, but it's hard to do that while also focusing on the fight. Is this what you've been doing all this time, Quinn?' Layla thought.

The thought only continued to spur her on, as she saw Helen, snapping all the arrows in place, and planting seeds at the same time.

"How was she able to learn to use Qi so fast? It doesn't look like she can use it throughout her body yet, otherwise she would be able to move faster, but she's able to transfer it from her fingertips into the arrow? This should only be possible with the second stage Qi, rather than the first."

Was it really possible to outright skip an entire stage without any mastery in Qi?

"Look at her fingers. You should also be able to smell it." Nate pointed out.

Sniffing, Quinn could certainly smell something, blood. It wasn't human blood either. When looking at the training room floor, he could see small drops of blood around the place, and he then noticed the state of Layla's fingers. They were heavily bleeding, each time she pulled the string on the bow.

"That my friend, is the power of love, REAL LOVE. For someone to go that far... She must have never stopped. She seems to know that she doesn't have talent in this area, but there is one thing she certainly isn't lacking. Determination. Ever since coming here, she hasn't stopped pulling that string, and firing those arrows. She would constantly ask me for pointers, time and time again."

"I didn't understand why she was so desperate, but now I think I understand. Some idiot must have said something to her without thinking about it and now she has to prove herself." Nate commented, as the fight continued on.

The arrows were still moving at a great speed, and they were coming out as fast as ever, but the pain on her fingertips was growing, and her accuracy was starting to take a toll. It might have been different if Layla had taken a break before the fight, but after nearly half a day of training her concentration was waning.

Unlike other abilities, the telekinesis ability was one that took huge amounts of concentration, especially to move around as many arrows as she was doing.

"Don't think all I can do is stay still!" Helen shouted, as she dashed forward, running past the arrows and hitting the ones in front with her whip. They were destroyed in seconds, but there were still more coming from behind.

With the beast gear on, Helen's speed was greater than Layla's and throwing out her whip, she tangled the other's leg and pulled to drag the body forward.

"I win, little girl." Helen said as she stood in front of Layla.

However, Layla wasn't done yet. The arrows from behind were still coming towards Helen. As they inched closer, a wall of vines were raised. Although the arrows hadn't stopped, they had been slowed down.

Helen had already grabbed Layla by the neck with her other hand, lifting her and using her own body to stop the arrows. From the looks of it Layla still wanted to control the arrows, so Helen put some slight pressure on her throat, making the other stop her feeble resistance.

Before the situation could escalate any further Nate came forward and declared Helen to be the winner. The next moment, Helen let go of her.

From the look in Layla's eyes, Quinn could see how disappointed she was in herself, but he was extremely proud of seeing her improve to this degree.

'Layla, you shouldn't be sad that you lost. You managed to fight to this degree without being able to properly use Qi, and you also didn't use any of your vampire powers or take on your other forms. Although Helen didn't use her soul ability either, if the two of you had truly gone all out, with a little bit more time of training, it's hard to say who would have won that fight.'

"I'll think of what I want you to do some other time." Helen said as she walked off.

Layla felt frustrated. She had finally felt as if she had made a breakthrough with her powers, but the result spoke for itself.

'Everyone around me is improving so fast, but me....'

Just when Quinn was ready to go up and console her, a certain alarm was heard through the ship.

"Everyone, World Leader Oscar has an important message to announce. Please stop whatever you're doing and listen closely. The World Leader has an important and urgent message to announce."

In every room on the Cursed ship, large hologram screens appeared and Oscar was there from the chest up with a serious look on his face.

"I hope everyone is doing okay. You all must be worried about the Dalki attack, but at the moment I have come to share an important message and warning with you all. News should have already spread of what has recently happened to the Graylash family. We have made the decision to make everyone aware of what exactly has been going on."

Hearing these words, Sam and Quinn already knew what this message was going to be about. Oscar was going to inform the world about the existence of Vampires.

Chapter 1110: Everyone knows

At this time, Oscar's message was being played for all of humanity to see. Wherever there was a faction base, a spaceship out far in the sticks, or even if you were currently in the school toilet. If one didn't have a screen ready where they were, then one would appear from their watch, and if they didn't even have that, then it was still impossible to miss the message since it was being played over intercoms everywhere.

'Why does he have to send out this message now of all times?' Sam thought as soon as he heard the introduction. 'I was hoping for Quinn and the others to be gone by then, and I was going to explain everything to the faction myself in the meantime. Now it's going to look like we were trying to hide it from our own people.'

Whether they liked it or not, they were about to be thrown into a rollercoaster of a situation and there was nothing they could do to stop it.

"As if the war with the Dalki was not enough of a problem, a certain group of people have decided to make use of this chaos for their own nefarious goals." Oscar continued. "This is an important message to everyone out there, as before we had believed that the Dalki were our only enemy, yet those people have actively allied with them! In a time like this we should have been able to unite and fight together for the sake of humanity!"

Although this message had already spread amongst those in the military and those fighting, the general public didn't yet know about any of this, and it was already starting to worry them as they looked at each other.

"We have come to learn that these people aren't exactly the same as us. They may look like us, act like us, use abilities like us and they have even been living peacefully amongst us for at least the last few years. We refer to these people as the 'V'. So far, we have only discovered a few things about them. At the moment, there does not seem to be a surefire way to tell them apart from us under normal circumstances, only when they use their powers. Their eyes start to glow red, allowing them to use a special red aura which grants them access to their weird powers."

With this information, people on the Cursed ship were starting to suspect something was up. Helen's head immediately turned towards Quinn. It was no longer a secret that he had used certain red aura powers to fight off against the Dalki in the war.

"The reason why we are telling you all of this is because recently our own groups have suffered multiple attacks from people who they had been certain they could trust. Perhaps if they had known a bit more they would have been able to avoid the outcome that has happened so far. We want everyone to be wary as the V have a way to convert others into one of their ranks and some of them also seem to be able to control others actions to a certain degree."

"I understand that this news comes as a shock to everyone, but we have to stay strong, now more than ever, and all of you deserve to know the truth of who we are facing! Although it won't work on every V, we know that some of them have a strong reaction to blood. If there is someone that you feel is suspicious or you don't trust then I suggest a little test, but this is still not a sure way to deal with the problem."

"Lastly, I want to inform everyone that the V are not a unified force and have split into at least two groups. Just like they are those who have allied with the Dalki, the other group has come forward in their wish to help us in the fight against the Dalki! The latter group are those that are part of the Cursed faction. Their help so far has been enormous and they intend to use their extraordinary powers to continue to help us fight out there!"

"Please everyone, stay safe, and stay on guard!"

For a brief second, it felt like on the whole of the Cursed ship there was silence between everyone, and even where Quinn was there was no sound at all.

In the command room, Sam was banging his fist on the table.

"Oscar I understand your situation, but did you really have to do it like that?!" Sam shouted. "How is the human race supposed to stay calm when they don't know who to trust? The way you explained it, the main finger and all questions will now be pointed towards us!"

Soon, talk started amongst those on the Cursed ship.

"Hey, you're not a V, like what they said, right?" A member asked his buddy.

"No, I'm not, are you?" The other questioned back, only for the former to shake his head. "But didn't he say that the Cursed faction had Vs? What do you think he meant by talking about blood, betrayal? This doesn't make sense."

On the Cursed faction ship, the general consensus was confusion and for Quinn, he was left in a training room with all eyes on him.

"If I was to guess, V is just a codename that would stand for vampire." Helen stated her own thoughts on the matter. "Beings that react to blood, wield a strange red aura and have powers on top of their ability."

These statements were clearly being directed towards Quinn, and he could hear the heartbeats of all those who had not been turned, beating rapidly, a sign that they were frightened by this possibility.

"React to blood, what do they mean by that, and is the leader one of them?" One of the trainees whispered to another.

"Look at him standing there, he's not saying anything to deny it, so he has to be one." Her friend whispered back.

"Shut up! All of you!" Nate ordered, as he went to stand by Quinn's side. "So what if we are humans, vampires or werewolves for all you care?! In the end, shouldn't it matter what actions we have done? Have you already forgotten what we had to go through to save you all?! Not only did we bring you and your families here, we shared our home and our food with you, made sure to protect you and even helped you all grow stronger, but suddenly because of some message you started to doubt us?!"

"Fine, whoever feels that we don't deserve their trust, get out and leave this place!" Nate now shouted in a furious tone, making all of the trainees and even Helen drop their heads in embarrassment and shame.

"Come on Nate, it's not like that! How are we supposed to react after hearing such news? We just know that the Graylash family got attacked by one of their own and now suddenly we have to come to terms that the same type of people are hidden amongst us! We're just scared." One of the braver trainees defended their actions.

Meanwhile, Sam went around to get a picture of what the general thoughts were after everyone had heard the message. Just as he had suspected the hushed comments weren't really in their favor. The people talked about another race of people that they had never known about, and some others had already figured out that the codename V was just a substitute for the myth known as vampires.

They wondered if those of the Cursed faction might actually be working with the Dalki to secretly take them, and how could they trust each other now. How could they trust that the Cursed faction were really on their side and weren't planning on turning on them eventually.

'I knew something like this was going to happen!' Sam thought, his fists tightened in fury. 'We'll be lucky if even half of our own faction continues to trust us for not having come out ourselves earlier.'

A few seconds later and all the screens that had turned off seconds ago, all lit up once again, this time the one that could be seen was none other than Owen. As World Leaders, they were able to send out an emergency message like this whenever they wished.

So even though Owen was nowhere near Oscar at the time, he could still send out a message to everyone, and it looked like he was in the Graylash base.

"Greetings, everyone. I wouldn't be surprised if a lot of you are currently frightened after hearing what has happened and learning of the existence of a new race.

Personally, I don't know why they decided on the stupid name V, so let's just call them by the name most of you must have already figured out. Vampires!" Owen began in an unexpected way that was guaranteed to get him an earful from Oscar later.

"First of all, let me start by saying that they aren't like the stories you might have read in books and such. Not all races are like the Dalki, and we have already come to learn that not all of them are bad. I have decided to come out like this, because I felt that Oscar's message has left out too much. I wish to rectify that, by publicly stating that Quinn Talen, the leader of the Cursed faction, has saved my life on multiple occasions. Not just mine, but many of those on my fleet owe him for that! We all owe the Cursed faction."

"You may have your doubts, but there is not a single doubt in my mind that Quinn and his Cursed faction are on our side! Right now, I trust them more than even my own family members, which is why if anyone from my family has anything negative to say about the Cursed faction in my presence, they will be severely punished!"

"As one of the World Leaders, and leader of the Graylash faction, we completely stand behind Quinn and his Cursed group of vampires!"

Chapter 1111: Can thank me or not

"I think it's only right that if we stay on this ship, that they should at least tell us every one who is a vampire and everyone who is not, don't you think that's fair?" A member of the cursed faction asked.

"I think that's reasonable, after all Oscar told us to look out for them, but did you hear what Owen said, it seems like he has a lot of trust in our Cursed faction."

"I think that's bull, why didn't they tell us, if they weren't planning something they should have told us from the beginning."

"Yeah, like that would have worked. Would you have believed them if it wasn't such a serious message, and would you really say you were okay with it? The only thing I do agree with you on, is that they should at least tell us who and who isn't a vampire."

There was non-stop talking around the whole world about the two messages they had received, and especially those on the Cursed ship. The first mention of the V's had sprouted a doubt in many minds, not trusting those next to them, but there were two parts to this message, as the second one delivered by Owen, tried to make sure, and make everyone know full well that the Graylash family were on the Cursed side.

It was because of this, that while opinions were originally one sided with fear, they were now equally split down the middle, but there was one thing they were all waiting for, that was an answer. An answer from the Cursed faction leaders themselves.

"Quinn, what are you doing?" Helen said as she went to approach him, while everyone else stood back. "Is what everyone is thinking true, that you're not really a human?"

Quinn clenched his fist for a few seconds, the reason he was standing still was because he continued to listen to everyone's opinions before he was going to decide what to do, and he had finally come up with his answer.

"I'm not human?" Quinn replied back to Helen. "Is that what it looks like to you, do I really look any different? Does that change how you look at me, how you will treat me from now on?"

Helen paused for a few seconds, and looked at Quinn's face. His face wasn't one of worry, but instead it looked more like relief. Relief that a long secret that he had been hiding had finally been revealed.

"No." Helen stated. "I was shocked of course, but as long as the you I know so far has been the real you, then nothing has changed."

With this, Quinn decided to walk past Helen, and Nate, with Layla following him along as they were sure he was about to do something, whether it be a good thing or a bad thing, they did not know.

"Helen, I never got to thank you for the beast gear that you handed to me, it was a nice gift." Quinn said. "It helped me out a lot, and I hope none of this changes our relationship."

Before she could reply Quinn had already left, and for the first time, Helen was left there without knowing what to say.

'Did I say the wrong thing, I thought I was getting closer to him, and then this happened...but the others, they walked with him, and never were worried for a second, even that block head boy.'

While questing her own thoughts, soon an announcement was to be made.

"All members of the cursed faction, please meet in the main hall. There is an announcement to be made, where Quinn Talen will be present. Please make your way to the main hall immediately." Sam stated.

Those on the Cursed ship were a bit nervous, they had no idea what was about to happen, but at the same time they couldn't exactly just leave either, but as they saw others confidently heading to the main hall without any problems, they too did the same.

A few wanted to leave, attempt to go through the teleporters or steal a ship, but there were those that stopped them.

"Let's at least hear what they have to say first, and we don't know who is who at the moment or what." some members said.

Most of those that headed to the hall without hesitation had been directly saved by Quinn. There was a time when the whole Parasite faction was poisoned, and Quinn was the one that saved their lives, never forcing them to do something they didn't want to.

There were those who had lost their lives, but their families continued to be supported by the Cursed faction, through credits, beast crystals, and housing. Quinn had made sure that everyone that fought for him, and had lost their lives would be compensated.

At the moment, Quinn, and the rest of the Cursed leaders who were present, were standing on top of a platform, where the bridge would be used to travel between the main hall and the command centre. Below were all the members of the Cursed that were on the ship.

"Sam, let's send the whole world one last message." Quinn said with a smile.

Sam knew what Quinn wanted to do, and he was already prepared. On the platinum card given to them, this was what could be used to send out a message to everyone. The same way Owen and Oscar did.

Sam nodded, and Quinn pressed a button, holding it down, and soon his face and everything was being displayed to the whole world.

"I think after getting a message from two of the world leaders, it's only right that you get another one from the last world leader, the one that somehow has ended up in the middle of all this."

"I'm going to just say it to you all now, what you have heard is all true, but I want you to think about it. Oscar, Owen and myself. We are the three that you trusted to lead you up till this point, and they still trust me despite knowing what I am."

"That's right, I am a V, but I wasn't always a V. I was human, a weak human who was bullied everyday in their school life for never having power. Abused by the military system and shut down for never being of any use in this war. Just like many of you out there."

"Yet, now that I have power, I am in the position of where I am today, but my goal from the beginning has been to change the way the system was. In a way, I believe the system treated those that were weak inhumanly. Yet ever since I became a V, I was treated more like a human than ever before."

For those listening, some of them were confused, and it didn't really answer their question whether they could trust the Cursed faction or not, but at that point that Quinn didn't care. He wasn't there to change the minds of everyone.

From being in charge of his own faction and more, he realised it was impossible, all he could do was try his best to help those around him, and those that wished to help him. These were the people that he would fight for, and continue to fight for.

"For those on the Cursed faction planets and on this very ship. You are free to leave, you always have been and that will stay the same. I, with my group of people, will continue to protect all of those in the Cursed faction, to me nothing has changed."

Soon, Quinn's eyes began to glow red and everyone could see it on their screens, but it wasn't only his eyes. Sam, who was standing next to him, activated his powers, Layla, Nate and all the other vampires from the Cursed faction stood there with their eyes glowing red.

At that point, the broadcast had ended, but those in the Cursed faction were left confused. With Quinn taking a back seat. Sam walked out instead.

"We understand you are all scared, and the unknown would scare anyone, but Quinn here saved all of our lives. Like he said, we weren't originally V's. We aren't some blood sucking monsters and everything will remain the same.

"If there is anything, any request people wish to ask, then feel free to do so. However, while most of you will be busy deciding whether to trust us or not, we'll be busy trying to end this damn war for your sake, and you can thank us later or not."

It took a few hours for everyone to calm down and it even seemed like there were a few arguments and scuffles on the Cursed ship, as they argued over who to trust and who not to trust. However, eventually there were those that just couldn't stand to be on the Cursed ship anymore, and had decided to leave to join other factions.

What came as a big surprise though, was how little people had decided to leave, fewer than a hundred or so. Those on the Cursed ship, worked with the Cursed leaders, the closisist, and it actually helped their cause when they learnt that not only Quinn was a vampire.

The bond they had built while living on this giant ship called home, couldn't be broken too easily, but it was hard to tell if the rest of the world would think the same.

"Quinn, you just leave everything to me." Sam said. "Go out there and do what you need to do."

As all of the preparations were ready to head to the blade island.

Chapter 1112: It's not easy

Of course a few hours after the announcement, and a few speeches wasn't going to settle the hearts and minds of the restless. Nonetheless, Quinn and his group of people still had their own things that needed to be done.

Everyone, who was told to go to the blade island, was told to head to the ship docking area, where they would then take a medium sized ship with all of them on, and they would then head off to the Blade island together.

When Quinn had arrived, he didn't expect for him, Eno, Brock and Mona to be the first ones there, while the others were still busy getting ready.

"It seems like the world is getting surprise after surprise." Mona said. "And assuming since you are related to him, you guys are part of this V group as well." She sighed and placed her hand on her head as if everything was giving her a headache.

"Honestly, with everything going on, aliens, beasts and super abilities, vampires existing in the world just isn't too wild in my book. I'm just glad you're on our side." Mona said with a smile.

Seeing Mona's reaction had settled Quinn a bit. Of course he was worried about people's opinion; it was hard for him not to be. Everything that he had managed to build up could have crumbled just then, and he had no idea if it was currently crumbling at the moment or not.

It seemed like the people who were in higher positions of power, those who had some type of control over their lives, were less afraid.

"This is what you wanted, right?" Quinn asked, looking at Eno. "You've been pushing for the world to know about vampires, so you must have an idea of what's going to happen."

Looking back at Quinn, Eno's face seemed quite surprised that he had asked this type of question.

"This is what I wanted? If it was, then I would have revealed to everyone that vampires existed a long time ago. Different situations require different solutions and it seemed like it was inevitable that something was going to occur.

"However, I must say that the reaction wasn't not what I was expecting, but I still have many things to see until I make up my mind. Perhaps their reactions haven't been so drastic because there is a common enemy, and remember the human's aren't the only ones that you need to worry about."

No matter how much Quinn hated Eno, he was right. One of the things that hadn't been revealed to them all, was that there was a whole society of vampires on another planet, and some of them didn't exactly want to get along with humanity.

For now, while they were preparing against Arthur, or debating with each other, things were okay, but if Bryce, or another vampire was to act, Quinn would need to step in.

'Will I have to take the role that Arthur gave up, the role of the Punisher?' Quinn thought as he looked at his system title. Even though he was the tenth leader, he was also classed as the leader of the Punishers.

Soon everyone started to arrive together. Sil had come along with Shiro, and both of them seemed to be smiling. It made Quinn feel at peace. After all, he wasn't sure if making Sil go to school at the time was a good thing, but now it seemed like he had made a new friend, outside Borden and himself.

Logan had entered along with little Borden on his shoulder. It looked like once in a while, Logan was still trying to find out a way of either prolonging Borden's human-size fighting state, or making more of the solution from before.

In a way, if they could control the demon tier beast, there was a good chance that as long as the beast was still alive, Logan could continue to create a serum for Borden. Fex had wandered in on his own, which suited him in a way.

A person who got on well with everyone, but wasn't particularly close enough with anyone to click with them. Then, the last two had arrived, Helen and Layla. Quinn didn't know if it was a coincidence, or if the two had met up and decided to come together. The latter was very unlikely, especially with the way the two of them were looking at each other.

As they walked towards him, they were power walking, one person trying to get in front of the other.

"Do you really think you can win him over, because you two are similar." Helen said. The cat was out of the bag, and from the announcement, it was clear Layla was also the same as Quinn. Which meant in a way, she had one up on her.

'Are you sure bringing both of them along is a good idea?' Vincent asked. 'The two of them are already butting heads and we haven't even left yet.'

'A promise is a promise, and Layla actually far exceeded my expectations in that fight. How am I meant to say no to someone who tried that hard?' Quinn said, looking at Layla still having the same fire in her eyes.

After seeing how she was so upset before, Quinn was a bit worried it would take her long to recover. Especially considering her subclass that was more emotional compared to others, but she was back up on her feet and more determined.

Shoving Layla off to the side, Helen had eventually won the barging match and now stood in front of Quinn.

"Quinn I realised that before I didn't really show you how determined I was. Look, I've said how much I like you and I mean it, and I'm not the type to beg." Helen explained. "But if you really think for a second I care about you being a vampire, or that will change how I think, then you are wrong. You can turn people right, then turn me, turn me now." Helen said, as she pulled her shirt slightly and started to bare her neck.

Quinn briefly looked round and could see that everyone was looking at him.

"Well she is feisty and might turn into something good, it might not be a bad idea." Eno suggested. "You will need a queen to tend to your needs someday."

"Look, it's really not like that, besides we don't turn people by biting them." Quinn nervously started to speak fast, trying to get all the information out at once. "You could also turn into something dangerous. You can't eat your favourite foods..."

At that moment, one person had stood in-between the two of them, one and one no one had expected, and it was Fex. He lightly pushed Helen away.

"Do you think being a vampire is easy?" Fex asked. "This isn't something that you should choose on a whim just because there is a boy you like. As much as we didn't want to tell others, we are dangerous beings, and we can turn into monsters."

"I....I couldn't do anything, I couldn't control myself as my body called for blood, and then I killed one of my best friends. One of the leaders of the Cursed group. Even though I knew what I was doing, I could see everything I was doing and I couldn't stop it.

"Being a vampire is not easy." Fex said.

The tension in the air was heavy after that, and it was a reminder to everyone there that being a vampire wasn't a pleasant thing. There was a reason Quinn had called it the Cursed family in the first place.

The doors being heard open had broken the awkward moment in the room, and instead of embarrassing herself any further. Helen chose to just walk past everyone and head into the ship, as she waited for it to leave.

'What has gotten into you Helen, you have never acted like this before, is it because of that brat. I need to stop seeing this as a competition.' She thought, as she began to cool her head down.

The one who entered was Sam.

"Before you guys go off, these are the other three people that will be joining you on your trip." Sam said.

"Bucky?!" Quinn called out.

"Can you at least remember my name?" Chucky replied.

After releasing the report to the whole world, and having two additional world messages being sent out, Oscar was sitting in his seat, shaking his head. He had deliberated when would be the best time, what would be the best thing to say, but in the end it looked like it still wasn't good enough.

"Sir, I know you have multiple requests coming in about the V's, and I have filtered those messages off to the side as you have requested. However there is a report about multiple Dalki being seen in a certain area." Jane reported as she scrolled through her tablet, and brought up the report in front of him.

"It seems like a group of Dalki have been spotted on an ex orange portal planet of ours." Jane reported.

"Ex orange?"

"Yes. The second base at the time had sent out their students to do an expedition there. It turned out that there were advanced tier beasts and possibly more dangerous beasts on there, so the portals were changed to a red portal."

"Soon after our soldiers experienced an attack and decided to abandon the planet, but we still had some surveillance technology left on there. While one of the groups was going through it, they found that a small faction had taken base there."

If the Dalki had gotten on the planet it must have been through a different method compared to usual, and the fact that it had gone unnoticed. The main issue was the old orange portal planet was one of the planets that the human's claimed to own, and it was in the middle of their other beast planets.

"Are there any humans on the planet?" Oscar asked.

"That's the strange thing sir, it seems like the Dalki, they are protecting the shelter that has been built there. It looks like some survivors had decided to make it their base after they had survived. We are unable to confirm whether or not they are V's or not. What would you like to do sir?" Jane asked.

After thinking about it for a while, Oscar had made a choice, due to how close the planet was to the other forces, it was dangerous if they were to attack, they had to get rid of the Dalki.

"We will get rid of the Dalki, it's time for the Earthborn to move." Oscar ordered Chapter 1113: Taming a beast

It was a tough ride as they went from the large Cursed ship, all the way back to earth. Not because they had run into any problems on their way or anything, but just because the group of people going this time weren't exactly the friendliest bunch, nor did they get on well with each other.

The two girls who were interested in Quinn had spent most of their time being petty towards the other, while also trying to avoid each other. Making sure to shut the bathroom door, even if the other was waiting outside. Leaving the kettle empty if they knew who the next person was.

At least Brock and Eno kept to themselves, although whenever Quinn did stumble upon the duo they seemed to be scheming things on their own.

Then there was also the group of three people who Sam had introduced. The first person was Chucky, whose ability hadn't been high levelled originally, but after the mission of looking after Sil he had been well compensated. Thanks to that money he procured the ability books he had needed and had managed to raise his ability to level seven.

The next one that had come on board was another of the Cursed leaders, Megan. According to Sam, Dennis had been completely against the idea. If she was going, then he wanted to come along, but Sam had reassured him that with Quinn, she would perhaps be more safe from an attack then if something was to happen on the ship, and they needed a certain amount of power to defend themselves.

As for the last person Quinn recognised her, but he was unable to put his finger on where and when they had met. Hana was a girl with short spiked hair, who had her hands banded up all the way to her forearms, reminding him of the martial arts god in ways. She was a person who was close to Wevil and part of the Parasite faction and had a level six ability.

Although there were those from their faction that had higher levels, Sam admitted that after the announcement many had asked not to be sent, now that they knew who they were. Although they didn't want to leave the Cursed faction, and would have gone with Quinn if ordered, he could tell they felt uncomfortable.

'It might be just me but this whole atmosphere reminds me of school. People always had their own little groups there as well.' Quinn thought.

"I wouldn't worry about anything." Logan spoke up, as he could see the concern on Quinn's face. The two of them were at a side table that was similar to a bar bench. They could sit on the edge, and watch everyone else as they did their own thing. Little Borden was on the table, and looked to be doing some stretches.

"I think with Brock and Eno, we can lower our guard a bit. It's been a while but they haven't done anything out of the ordinary, and it seems like they really do want to make sure the Dalki don't get their hands on that dragon." Logan explained.

Just then, Fex decided to join them, and before sitting down he raised his hands in the air above Borden nearly three times his height. The next second, Borden bent his knees and leapt up, touching the top of Fex's hand, even hitting it away.

"I see you're just as strong as ever, I'm glad not all the Dalki are as strong as you, otherwise I might not be alive standing today." Fex said, as he sat down next to Quinn on his right side. "You might be right Logan, but I still think we should be careful.

"He is the one that told everyone he was going into eternal slumber but never did, the person who tricked Arthur, and also the one that justified everything he did with I Quinn by calling them tests." Fex argued. "So although we can trust that he might not be out there to kill us, I still think we need to be careful. On top of that, what about the Vampire World?"

"The way I think Eno sees it, is that the Dalki need both parts of the Dragon, correct? But then aren't both halves equally important as well? In some ways, I think we should at least warn Bryce that the Dalki may be coming after them as well."

"There might be a lot of vampires I don't get along with there, but there are few I really care about. Most importantly my sister, my father, the thirteenth family and other people I still care about are also there." Fex explained.

Fex was right, but there was a slight reason why Quinn wasn't too worried, his system. Perhaps he was being over reliant on it, but if anyone attempted to attack the tenth castle or the fourteenth castle, he should get a message, and he was sure he would do so if the Dalki did come to attack.

"I don't think the Dalki forces are large enough to go after two places at once." Logan replied. "There can't be too many of them, especially since they can't make anymore, the energy from the first dragon was almost all used up, that's why I couldn't create enough of the green liquid injection for Borden, however it sounds like this green one is alive and kicking."

Eventually, Helen had shoved Layla while trying to get a snack from the table, and Layla once again, was thrown to the side and had fallen into Mona. Hitting her on her back, making her drop her purple lipstick she was placing on her lips at the time.

"Will you stop it?! I feel like I'm on board a ship full of children!" Mona shouted in annoyance. "I'm going to go mad if this continues. Quinn, aren't you the leader around here? Punish them or at least say something before I will!"

"Erghh..." Quinn hesitated as he didn't know what to say. "How much longer do we have until we arrive?" He asked meekly.

"It looks like we're nearly there." Shiro said as he pointed at the vast blue ocean. They had already gone through the space teleporting station, and had arrived at earth, but seeing the water was making Quinn's stomach act a little strange. He tried to avoid looking at the sea, while placing his hands on his stomach.

"Are you getting sick just looking at the ocean?" Logan asked. "I understood when we were in the small submarine but we're simply flying over it now."

"It's not that." Quinn replied. "It's just I'm starting to remember the last time... who knows what creatures are in there?"

Thinking back, Logan did recall that they had run into a giant beast that was also located in the water.

"Are you talking about that giant beast in the water? That beast should also be at a high tier, and might be quite handy to have." Logan said.

"Maybe it will serve as good practice." Eno interrupted their conversation, it appeared that despite him talking to Brock he had been listening in the whole time, but in some ways Quinn wanted Eno to know what he thought of him and the words spoken about him

"Should we really exhaust ourselves like that? We don't even know what level it's at?" Fex argued against it.

"Not for fighting, but we can use this beast to test just how strong Sil's abilities are after copying everyone." Eno explained.

"Oh, that's how his ability works." Chucky commented, listening in on everything, but he might as well have said nothing, because no one had heard him.

Soon the eyes turned onto Sil, who looked a little shy raising his shoulders trying to block the eyes on him.

"I can give it a go, but I don't really know how the taming ability works, like what happens if I can't tame it, didn't you say we have to beat it up or something?" Sil questioned.

"It looks like you might have to learn on the go!" Brock shouted, as he quickly steered the ship to the side. A large tentacle had appeared out of the water. The tentacle's width was as big as the ships and if it had hit, then they would have all been slammed into the water.

"Get to land, hurry!" Quinn shouted, a little more afraid than usual.

After staring out of the way, Brock landed the ship quite quickly on the sandy beach, and soon, the large head of the giant creature, that was pointy shaped, and a large singular eye could be seen, poking out of the top of the water. It looked quite similar to that of a giant squid.

Everyone quickly got off from the ship, and as long as they stayed on the beach it looked like the squid was going to continuously attack them.

[Inspect]

[Demi-god tier beast]

'I knew it was strong, but I didn't think there would be something that high tier still on earth, surrounding the island. Just what is this place?!!' Quinn thought.

Stepping in front of all the others calm as ever with her pointy hat was Mona.

"You need to learn how to use the ability, right? Well I guess this is a perfect way to show you, and it looks like I might be able to get myself a new pet while I'm at it." She said with a big grin.

"Remember, I too was one of the leaders of the Big Four, my strength doesn't just rely on the beast I have with me. You guys stay back!" She said, as she charged forward.

Chapter 1114: The god of the sea vs a human

The initial reaction in most of those that were there, was to run in and to try and help Mona, not because they thought she was weak, but because that was what they had always done since the beginning.

They had fought against beasts time and time again, that it was now almost a natural instinct to them, however, not all of them had faced a Demi-god tier beast before, and its sheer size had made others think twice.

Although not all of them felt the same way, as Chucky, Megan and Hana had decided to pop off into the jungle, and hide behind some of the large leaves next to some Palm trees, they couldn't help but watch what was about to happen.

"Hey, they're going to be okay, right?" Hana asked, since she really hadn't seen any of the Cursed faction fight for a long time. The last time she had seen Quinn take on an emperor tier beast in the desert, but this beast seemed to be a completely different story.

"Don't worry, Quinn, and Sil are there, and I think with them two it will be enough, let's just try not to get hurt." Chucky said, as he carefully touched one of the black balls he carried with him, just in case they did need to do something.

Then there was Megan, who was shaking. She didn't want to get involved at all. She had gone away from the fighting scene and had mostly helped out Sam with his duties in the command centre. This was due to a dear friend of hers, Mitchell dying while trying to fight a humanoid legendary tier beast, back when she was still part of the Crows.

While everyone who was a leader in the Cursed had improved, she hadn't.

"I'm not suited for this stuff. I can't, I'm not like them. I didn't change, I'm still human." Megan mumbled as she covered her ears.

"Sorry about that." Quinn said, with his hand held out and stretched towards her. "I'll leave you in a safe place where you can't get hurt." Closing his fist, the shadow lock was soon activated and Megan could no longer see the beast.

As Quinn was going to move onto the other two they soon stood up and protested.

"No, wait!" They both shouted.

"We won't get in the way, but seeing you guys, the best of the best out like this, we don't want to miss it either." Hana said, speaking for both of them, but Chucky seemingly agreed as he nodded his head up and down.

Quinn placed his hand down as he thought it would be okay. The two of them weren't weak travellers by any means. It was just with the job they were doing, only the best of the best could face such things.

"Wait a second, Quinn if you're here, who's helping out Mona in the fight?" Chucky asked.

As he stopped to the side, they could soon see Mona battling against the Demi-god tier beast and she was doing so alone, without the help of the others. They were all ready to rush in, but Mona had made it clear that she could battle the beast on her own.

"I think she will be okay." Eno said and hearing him say these words, they had slightly agreed to stand by for the first few moments.

One of the large tentacles came down, ready to crash down on Mona chucking up a large amount of water. When it was about to hit her, raising her arm a small type of purple see through shield appeared out of nowhere, like magic. The tentacle had swung hard trying to smash her but it looked like it had almost bounced off.

'That's not an ability since she has the beast taming ability, so it must be an active skill.' Quinn thought. 'It looks like a strong one as well, even though her clothes don't look like the usuals type of beast gear.'

Mona was cohered in thin cloth, at first he thought it was just a fashion statement along with the hat, but it wasn't the case at all.

Next though, Mona, leapt up in the air dodging another tentacle swipe, which summoned up a wave of sand in the air, she was then soon hit from above with another, but it seemed like she was expecting it, as the purple shield had appeared above blocking that as well.

However, the force from the hit above was used, and as Mona allowed it to propel herself into the beast's other tentacle on the ground. Throwing out a fist, she had made impact to the tentacle piercing its skin causing black blood to fall. Soon she started to run up the tentacle.

Now the beast was weary, as it had felt pain, and was unable to attack Mona while running up it's arm. Instead it flung it's tentacle high trying to shake it off, but as it did, she lept off and hung onto another one.

"What in the world is she doing? That looks so scary!" Hana said with her mouth left open, It was strange it looked like a small human was going up against a god of the sea, and somehow she was able to avoid the giant tentacles while going from one to another, and hurting it along the way.

"Those world leaders wouldn't get far with just their powers." Eno started to explain. "Think about it, in their family they probably have many who have similar levels of ability, but what makes them different, allowing them to grow compared to others?

"For Mona, she is fearless when in battle, and will do anything to control a beast stronger than herself. Watch carefully Sil. To use the tame ability, one must touch the beast on top of its head. However, if it's too strong or your MC points are too low, then it will do nothing.

"You are able to weaken the beast, and hope to tame it once more, using your MC cells. Once a link is successful, then those MC cells you have used will be permanently lost in your body, connecting you and the beast at all times.

"However, there are some beasts that will just refuse to connect, but Hilston managed to tame the dragon, so you should be able to as well."

Although Mona hadn't damaged the beast much, she had tired it out, and it looked like soon, it would dive into the water. Seeing this, Mona then leapt onto the top of its large head, and made sure to dig one of her hands in its skin to hold on.

A few moments later and the waves started to settle, and the beast's arms were lowering, they were no longer frantically moving about in the ocean. It looked like Mona had successfully captured a beast for herself.

While riding, its large head she slowly made her way to shore, and stopped. Lifting Mona off its head with its tentacle, it then placed her on the sand once again and she had a large grin on her face.

"After my last Demi-god tier beast was defeated, I thought I would never see one again, looks like i'm in luck." She said, "Although, if it needs to be in the sea, it will be quite hard to move it, and use it outside of battle. I wonder if it can survive on land?"

"That was really impressive." Layla said, as she had eyes of admiration. She couldn't believe how fearless Mona was. "Your beast equipment, it seems to be at a high level to block the beast attacks, it must also be at the Demi-god tier level."

Mona looked at Layla and was about to ignore her, but she had these large puppy dog eyes that nearly made it impossible for her to do so.

"My gear is impressive, but if I hadn't used my active skill to block one of those attacks I would have been done for. I don't usually like to do that type of thing, but after seeing it move like so, I thought I could do something and no Demi-god tier beast has never rejected my powers before, so really all I needed to do was get on top of its head."

Saying all these things, just made Mona sound more impressive, and made Quinn wonder how many MC cells she must have to be able to control a Demi-god tier beast.

"Are you able to control a demon tier?" Quinn asked.

Mona took a while before answering the question.

"Well if that was the case, then we wouldn't need this fella here would we. Honestly, I don't know. I haven't been lucky enough to ever meet one, but the person before me, who was once on this island, was said to have the same level of ability as mine.

"The one that Hilston took as a chained, and I don't think she could control the beast you are looking for."

It was hard to imagine how much of a difference a Demon tier beast really was compared to a Demi-god tier. In all honesty, the tier with the most varying powers of strength was the demon tier beast, because human's hadn't made a rank higher than that.

Perhaps one demon tier beast could be twice as strong as the other.

What Quinn did realise, was the fact that the ability Mona used, worked similar to his shadow eater skill. The weaker the vampire was the more chance the skill had of working, and this was the same with the beast.

'Let's just hope Sil can do this without us needing to fight it, then we don't need to find out how strong it is.' Quinn thought.

"This dragon is far stronger than that guard of a beast Quinn, I think you should prepare yourself, for a full on battle if need be." Eno said, as if he could read his mind.

Chapter 1115: The Tour of Blade

Leaving the sandy beach meant that Mona would have to leave her new beast that she had just tamed behind. She did a few tests with it, and called it up onto the land. This was when they realised the sheer size of the beast, as a giant shadow had been cast all over them.

The water had made it look a little smaller than they had all imagined.

However, it was clear to Mona and the rest, although it could stay out of the water, it couldn't move as fast nor did it look too well. The good news was, it meant that she could transport it and bring it along with her, but unless it is in the water it would be difficult to actually use it for combat purposes.

So in the end for now, Mona would leave it in the water, while keeping the connection with it. According to Mona, she could give it simple commands and although no words were communicated with the beast, she could tell how it was feeling. When giving commands, these feelings would be passed on and she generally knew what it wanted to communicate.

Now walking through the forest, most of them couldn't stop talking about Mona's actions against the beast.

"I can't believe I got to see one of the big four fights." Hana said. "She's an inspiration to us girls everywhere. I knew there had to be a reason beyond her ability. She was the only girl that was accepted into the big four."

"I always thought she would be more like a...like a witch." Chucky couldn't help but say. He hated to admit it, but he had judged a book by its cover.

'Those skills she used, they had nothing to do with her ability. She actually fought and swung, diving in against that beast on her own.' Layla thought. 'I hope maybe one day people can look up to me like that. I wonder if Quinn likes those types of girls.'

"Come on, if it was me, I would have just tied the beast's limbs up, piece of cake." Fex commented, while pulling back his hair, that had gotten a little wet in the fight.

"I could have blasted it with my thorns exploding them on impact, I wouldn't have had to even get close to the beast." Helen said as well.

"Ah yes, but then you two would have killed it, wouldn't you? But now I get to use it as I wish to help me by my side." Mona replied, hearing everything as they continued to walk through the jungle.

Eventually they started to come to a point in the jungle, where there were pathways leading to different areas, and they now had to choose where exactly to go.

"Whoa, is that a castle, it's like those really old style ones." Shiro said as he pointed towards the top of the hill it was based on. "Wait, Sil is from this place, right? So is this where you grew up?"

Sil didn't answer, of course he didn't because they weren't exactly pleasant memories that he had of this place, and Shiro noticing this now felt kind of bad. After all, they had only come to this place because the Blade's currently weren't here, and he had been told they weren't the best of people.

"Quinn." Sil finally said, as he lifted up his head. "Do you mind if we look around the place, see if there is anything before we head to the tablet. I just want to check if there is anything?"

"I assure you, I checked out the whole island before you got here. I even went to the large tablet where the dragon seems to be remaining." Brock said.

Even with that answer, it seemed like Sil wasn't satisfied.

"I think it will be okay." Quinn said. "After all, it doesn't look like the Dalki are here, maybe we jumped the gun, but I don't think a couple of hours looking around will hurt us. If it does, well then it just means we would be in an even worse situation fighting the Dalki and the Demon tier beast."

After hearing this, Sil's face lit up, and everyone else seemed to be fine with looking around the island. They were in no rush to face the Demon tier beast.

The first place that the group decided to stop at, due to it being close, was the Temple. It seemed to be still partly destroyed from when Vorden and Peter had fought here, against the others.

"What is this place, it looks like some type of school, and a fight broke out or something?" Helen said, as she looked at the giant hole through one of the doors.

"As you all know, the temple is no longer in use." Brock explained like he was some type of tour guide to the rest of them. "During my time here I witnessed everything that went on with the Blade island, those that were children of the Blade would learn their abilities and be sent here for training."

"Then when they had trained for long enough, they were faced against each other in a battle royal, until only one survived. The last one remaining, would be allowed to enter the castle."

Everyone was stunned by Brock words and how they were spoken so casually as if he was talking about a movie, but then realising that he was telling the truth, and noticing the blood marks in certain places they were devastated. They couldn't help but look at Sil in a different way.

Quinn wanted to stop Brock from speaking more, but Sil pulled him away.

"I can't run away from my past, it's okay, I need to be reminded, let him continue on." Sil said.

"Wait, so all those kids with the same ability as Sil, are you saying they came from here?" Chucky asked.

"Yeah, that's right. Actually the one that wanted to save them all no matter what, was Vorden." Quinn said. "And that's why we're going to get him back."

Although some didn't know who Vorden was or what they were talking about, it seemed like a sensitive matter so they chose to avoid it. They didn't stay at the temple long, so the next place they went along to was the Castle.

As they entered they looked around at how grand and vast the whole place was. It seemed impossible for just a single family to live in such a huge place.

"As you are aware this is the Blade castle, where the main family members resided. I was under disguise as the head butler here, and was in charge of all the Blade servants that would work here."

As they continued to follow Brock, he had eventually taken them down to the dungeon, but it wasn't a typical dungeon. It was more of a large empty space, with hundreds of metal spikes that were dug into the floor.

"What...is this place?" Layla said as she looked in horror, all around her. It looked like a room that was designed for torture.

"This is what the Blade refers to as the chained. If you can't guess, this is where they would chain up those ability users they thought were useful to them. Not only top abilities but unique original ones as well."

"Since the Blades could only copy so many abilities at once, they wished to overcome that weakness somehow, and this was what they had found. Still this was a temporary measure. It always seems like Hilston was searching for more, but he never did explain what it was." Brock continued.

"You mean, even you don't know why he did all this?" Quinn asked.

"Yes, I have no idea. Why he had created so many children with his own DNA, hoping to look for someone stronger than himself. It made no sense to me, and it was almost as if he was beyond obsessed."

"When Sil eventually appeared, that obsession died down a little, and instead he chose to go after Sil. I'm afraid, no matter where Sil is, eventually Hilston will try to find him."

If this was the case, then Quinn needed to be ready for him. As they were to leave the dungeon, Mona stayed there for a few seconds. Her family members had also spent some time down there, and she couldn't imagine how they must have felt.

'I hope you're still alive, and I promise I'll pay back that man for what he did.' Mona thought as she went out of the dungeon with the rest.

The last place left to visit in the castle was the throne room. Here they could see a large dining table. Sil remembered this table well, as it was where the family at all times had to eat together, pretending to be happy.

At the side of the room, at the very back, there seemed to be different pieces of a mannequin. One that just had a chest, others just a leg and so on, of every part of the human.

"What's all this?" Fex asked, as he picked the mannequin that only resembled the chest of a human, which fell over instantly onto the floor. He quickly picked it up, just in case it was something important, and just gave a cheeky smile at the others.

"That was what was used to display Hilston's Demon tier beast armour. He had managed to make a full set of it, from multiple crystals and at one point, had one of the best forgers in the world create it for him.

"That was until he had killed the forger shortly after, making it so no one else could create a set just like it."

"A set of demon tier armour?" Mona replied, thinking she had misheard. "You mean it isn't just a random demon tier beast equipment placed together, but an entire set? Did he come across a group of Demon tier beasts or something?"

"I don't know the full details, as I wasn't with him, but it was the most hurt I had ever seen Hilston before, and even his old Demon tier equipment seemed to be quite damaged." Brock replied.

At that moment, everyone's body started to shiver as a natural response. Just how strong was Hilston, and was what Brock saying true? Back then, Hilston was never able to activate the Demon tier equipment he had used against Arthur, but what if he had? Would it have been a different story?

"Come on, we can't be that scared, Quinn and the other leaders managed to defeat him after all, you guys can just gather up and beat him again." Mona said, in a half joking way just to calm herself down.

"We weren't the ones that beat him.." Quinn replied. "It was an old friend of mine...."

'A friend, I didn't hear of this, did he die, judging from how Quinn is speaking of him.' Mona thought.

Come, let's go to the tablet if there is nothing else here." Said Quinn.

Chapter 1116: Two problems at once

The giant stone tablet was located at the back of the castle which was partially built on a hill. However the tablet itself was even bigger than the castle, so it was pretty easy for them to see where they all needed to go next.

Currently, they were making a slow climb up the hill. The terrain was still quite green as they fought through the overgrown trees but at the same time a clear wide path could be seen, as if people had been here multiple times.

The reason why they were moving slowly, was due to the Demon tier beast that was said to be by the giant tablet.

"Why can't my body stop shaking, we haven't even reached the top yet?" Chucky asked, as his legs continued to feel weaker the closer they got.

"Many people are unable to handle the pressure of seeing a Demon tier beast with great power. Faced with one, they would just freeze up and would end up in their belly." Brock explained. "However, in your case, I believe you are just worrying too much."

The girls chuckled at Brock's observation, but that didn't change the fact that they too were a little worried. For they knew that the Dalki themselves that were so strong had come from this Demon tier beast, so they could somewhat imagine its powerlessness.

"I did say you didn't have to come along." Quinn reminded Chucky, as he turned and looked back.

Quinn and a few others were completely fine, unafraid, even Sil because they already knew this was something that needed to be done. "The castle looked like a safe place for you to stay at, that's why I let Megan out and told her to stay there for now." Quinn said.

"Come on!" Chucky shouted, as he punched his leg a few times, straightening it out and continued to walk forward. "I told you already, there's no way I can miss this once in a lifetime opportunity! A tablet that might be the cause of why the whole world has their abilities, and a legendary Demon tier beast that guards it! I would regret it for the rest of my life if I hadn't come along!"

On their way, Brock had spent a little time explaining why they were going after the tablet. Eno's ability should allow them to transfer one of the tablet's abilities into Shiro, who had never learned any other ability before.

What was troubling Quinn though was the senses in his body and head. Ever since they had gotten on the island, his body didn't quite feel like it was working the way it should.

'The same thing happened last time as well. If it wasn't for this I wouldn't have struggled so much to find where Peter had been on the island back then.' He then went to turn to look at the others with him, but they didn't seem to be feeling anything strange, even when looking at the other vampires.

'Is it just affecting me then?' Quinn wondered.

Finally, the hill started to level out, and the path was winding, but at this moment Brock, who had been leading the way so far, decided to stray from the path and enter the jungle itself. His footsteps were almost silent, and everyone else followed him as well, and that's when they could see it. Not only that, but could hear a loud constant crackle, that would disappear going in and out.

A large open area... and the tablet in sight! Alas, that wasn't the only thing that was there. In front of it, they could make out the large black dragon, the crackling sound seemed to be coming from the Dragon due to it being asleep.

"So we have finally reached our goal, and both of them are in front of us, but this brings us to quite the troubling predicament." Logan stated in a quiet tone.

"Indeed, since we hadn't seen the dragon in any other areas, I assumed that it might be here, but I was really hoping that it wasn't." Brock sighed.

Heading away from the edge of the green area, they walked further into the jungle, hiding from the beast, while they decided what to do next.

"I think this whole thing is quite simple. Sil has already copied everyone's abilities." Eno said. "So he should be able to just walk up to the beast and tap it on its head, attempting to control it. If it works then we can move it away from the area."

It seemed like the obvious choice, especially if they wanted to avoid fighting, but Quinn had a different idea.

"No." Quinn argued against it. "Eno, you need to complete your part of the deal first. For one, we don't even know if that tablet has abilities in it, much less the ability that we actually need. I want you to pass the ability onto Shiro first, and once we know we can bring back Vorden and Raten, then we will move the dragon as you wish."

After saying these words, Quinn stared directly into Enos' eyes, and the Original stared back. The others started to move away as they were afraid that a fight might break out any second now.

"Do you understand how important this beast is?" Eno questioned, the look on his face for once changing into sheer annoyance.

"And do you understand how important my friends are to me?" Quinn replied, unwilling to take a single step back. "Or has the lack of having any distorted your mind, old man?!"

"Whoah, Quinn is being a bit feisty, don't ya think?" Fex whispered over to Layla, but she paid less attention to what was being said, instead concentrating on Eno, ready to jump if he made any sudden moves at Quinn, prepared to use the chain lock skill to hold the old man down.

In a similar fashion, Borden had leapt onto Sil's shoulder as well, pounding his fist. It was clear that no one other than Brock was on his side.

"... Fine, have it your way. I did promise you that I would help after all, but I still think the easiest way is for us to have Sil move the beast." Eno conceded eventually.

"Perhaps, but you can't fault me for having trust issues regarding you given your history. We still need to build on our relationship." Quinn said with a smile, that he was sure was going to annoy the old man, but he just ignored it and continued on.

"Now that we have decided to try to reach the tablet first, that still doesn't help with our first problem." Logan pointed out. "The dragon is in the way of the tablet, and although we can sneak past it, it will be a disaster if that fails, and there is a very high likelihood of it somehow being able to sense us, once we are closer to it."

"How about a distraction?" Helen suggested. "One group will make some noise in the vicinity. Once the Demon tier beast chases after them, another group goes to the giant tablet."

"I think the lady has made a fine suggestion." Eno agreed. "It will take me a few moments to complete the transfer, so it would be best if the beast was taken as far away from the tablet as possible."

After much discussion the group had decided that they would be split up into two. One would be the distraction of the Demon tier beast, while the other would protect Shiro and Eno while they were doing their tasks.

This team needed to be equally strong, as they were worried that as soon as Eno touched the tablet or if they were noticed, the dragon could possibly sense it and return. Chucky and Hana, since they were only there to provide powers for Sil where to remain in the Jungle area, as they were still persistent they didn't want to go in Quinn's shadow.

The group that would be working to protect Shiro and Eno consisted of Brock, Sil, Borden and Helen, while the distraction group included Quinn, Mona, Logan, Fex and Layla. Before leaving, Quinn tapped Shiro's shoulder and activated his shadow on, incase of an emergency situation.

"Sil, if you see anything suspicious coming from the two of them, I'm counting on you. I know how strong you are, and how much you don't like Eno." Quinn whispered.

"You know with age my hearing doesn't get any worse, I can hear just as well as you." Eno commented.

The group went back to where they were originally, so they could peak through the greenery and stepping out was the distraction group. The reason Quinn wanted to be part of the distraction group was because he was worried about just how strong this Demon tier beast might be.

Stepping forward, when they were around 100 meters away from the beast, Layla placed her arrow into her bow, and stretched it as far as she could.

"Should I use Qi?" She asked.

"We need to get it annoyed so go ahead." Quinn replied.

She let go, and her powerful arrow was sent flying filled with energy, and was going right for its front leg that was covering part of its face. As it hit, the tip was stuck on the hard skin and the wooden part of the arrow seemed to callpose in on itself breaking it, as the force carried forward, but hadn't pierced the skin at all.

'What the, I used quite a bit of my Qi. The same amount that destroyed the training room wall, but it can't even pierce it's skin.' Layla was flabbergasted.

Since it had done no damage, they were unsure if it was enough, but they didn't want to get any closer, they needed a head start if they were to stand any chance of avoiding a full on confrontation. Seeing the arrow didn't work, Quinn stepped forward, and instantly, the eyelid of the beast opened, and a sharp shaped yellow eye could be seen.

"I think it's awake now!" Fex shouted, as he had already started to run away.

Chapter 1117: The strongest beast yet

Although it might have looked as if Fex had just fled at the first sign of the Demon tier beast waking up, the vampire had done something before his strategic retreat. He had carefully timed it so his red aura string would shoot out wrapping around the dragon's legs, buying the rest of them additional time.

While running, he was also leaving behind several needles on the ground with string attached to them. As long as he used his blood control, he could make the string rise and wrap around the beast's legs.

Unfortunately, the effectiveness of that was vastly limited. As soon as the dragon stood up on all of its four legs, it immediately snapped as if it wasn't even there in the first place.

"These days as the beasts we fight get stronger and stronger, it's like my string is becoming more and more useless. Isn't there any way to increase its strength?" Fex wondered, but now was clearly the wrong time to think about anything but the Demon tier beast on their heels.

Fex wasn't the only one who had gotten a head start. Logan had made sure to stay further in the back, already equipped with his speed suit, and had passed Fex on his left.

From the higher tier beast crystals he had been able to upgrade his three different types of suits, and his speed suit had improved significantly, but there was one thing different about it. The spiders that had transformed into the suit had done so around every part of his body except for his Dalki arm, leaving it in place.

Soon after standing up the Dragon let out an almighty roar that felt like it had the power to shake the entire island. At least the ground beneath their feet had started to vibrate and they had no choice but to cover their sensitive ears as they felt like they were going to burst.

The pain they experienced from that single roar alone had been sufficient to make them collapse on the floor for a few seconds, even those that had run away quite a distance already.

"Hey, kid!" Mona shouted as one of the few that hadn't started running yet. "You wanted to find out if I can control that thing, right? If I succeed then we won't even need the help of the blonde boy, so throw me out!"

Quinn was still recovering from the effects of the roar, and had already summoned his shadow to defend him, on top of everything he had the suit of armour that had been gifted to him by Helen, which improved his speed greatly.

He had stayed behind for two reasons. One, in case the dragon would have continued to guard the tablet instead of chasing after them, and to chase after them, he would need to do more, and two, he was the fastest out of everyone there so he could cover the most ground.

Yet Mona, who was quite fast with her beast gear on, had just asked to be thrown towards the dragon.

"Are you crazy, that thing will eat you up!" Quinn argued.

"Just throw me, you wimp!" Mona shouted back. "Don't hold back on your strength! As long as you throw me fast enough, I'll be able to make it to the beast! "

Quinn thought this to be the craziest idea he had ever heard, but there was one thing that made him consider it for the moment, and that was the system. Why hadn't the system given him a quest yet?

This was a Demon tier beast, sure it didn't seem like it had any special abilities like the Demon tier tree, but this was clearly a powerful thing, so why didn't it give him any type of quest, even one to survive.

It seemed like the dragon was still gathering its bearings, and Mona was already by Quinn's side ready to be thrown.

'With the new gauntlet strength I can do it!' QuInn thought, as he picked up Mona by her two feet with one hand, and then pushed her forward as hard as he could. The veins were popping from his neck, and he made sure to continue with all 200+ stats of his Strength, to push through till the end with his fingertips.

'You asked me to throw you as hard as possible, then I'll do just that!'

Even Mona, had never expected to be launched at such a speed, and so far forward, the G-force was hitting her like crazy.

'That damn boy, just how strong is he to have such inhuman strength?!" She thought. 'Oh that's right, the boy isn't human anymore.'

In an instant she had been launched at the large dragon's neck, and with her hands she held onto one of the dragon's scales. The force from the throw was so strong that she needed to grip onto the scale tight to not fly further. Her fingertips felt like they were slipping.

'Damn you Quinn, that was a bit too fast and hard!' She thought as she finally pulled herself onto the dragon's neck just under its head.

Then quickly acting fast, she pulled herself up onto the dragon and was now on its head.

"Let's see what I can do!" Mona hyped herself up as she touched the beast on top of its head with an open palm.

"Whoa is she really going to control it?" Chucky thought, as they continued to watch everything from what they perceived to be a safe distance. Perhaps there wasn't a need for the plan after all.

However, all of that changed a few seconds later, as soon as Mona activated her ability. She had used it dozens of times, but this time something unexpected happened. A shooting pain went straight to her head, and her vision was turning black. She had passed out within seconds and was now falling off the dragon to the ground.

'Falling from such a height unconscious will kill her!' Hana thought, as she looked over to the original team to see if they could do something to help her, but they knew there was no need, because the best person to help her was already closeby.

Before she touched the ground a shadow portal had opened and Mona's falling body quickly disappeared inside, now in the shadow space.

'You're a brave person. I understand why you were a World Leader and you had so many people following you. Maybe I can be the same.' Quinn thought, as he looked the dragon in the eye.

Using all his strength, Quinn threw out his arms in an X shape and fired off two large blood swipes which went straight for the dragon. Unfazed, the dragon started to run towards Quinn, not caring for the attack.

However, as it hit the dragon's upper body, where its chest area was, it could feel something for a few seconds, before the attack went away.

"Did it work?!" Chucky exclaimed excitedly.

However, when looking at the dragon, the beast looked absolutely fine.

'How can its skin be as hard as the Diamond crab? I thought since this was just half a Demon tier beast it might be a bit weaker.'

After it had stopped for a few moments, seemingly surprised it had been able to slightly feel the attack, it resumed its charge towards Quinn. Each step was heavy, and shook the whole place. Seeing such a colossal beast charging forward, Quinn no longer tried to fight it, but made use of his great speed.

He was glad that the others had taken the chance to get a head start, for the beast was fast despite its size.

'I need to slow it down, or it will catch up to the others as well.' Quinn thought as he turned and activated his shadow path skill.

It went out spreading on the ground, wider than usual, but as long as it hit one of the dragon's legs it should slow it down, but it was at that moment that it leaped in the sky, avoiding the shadow completely, and was now flying up high in the air.

"... Was I the only one who forgot dragons could do that?" Fex asked, but judging from the silence and the blank faces of those next to him, he wasn't. 'I mean just because a creature has large wings doesn't mean they can always use them.'

With its targets locked on, the dragon was ready to punish whoever had disturbed its sleep. The group continued to run, and as Quinn went by the others, Layla hopped on Quinn's back.

With his Strength, she was practically weightless, and she could continue to fire arrows up high in the sky at the beast. She tried to aim for its eye, but a flap of its powerful wings would make the arrows useless.

"Any ideas on how we're going to beat this thing?" Fex asked.

"Remember, our goal isn't to beat it, but just to buy time for the other group." Logan said. "So far, I think we have achieved our goal."

Their distraction group had successfully lured it away from the tablet and if its desire to punish them wouldn't have been enough to make it follow them, Layla continuing to harass it with arrows certainly did the job.

Quinn just hoped they could keep this up without anyone getting hurt.

"Looks like it's our time to move." Eno said and everyone in their group hurried towards the tablet, aware that time was of the essence. The longer they took the higher the likelihood of casualties in the other group.

"Shiro, you need to press with both your hands. I will do the same. Don't worry if you feel a strange sensation in your body, that's just the MC cells inside your body adapting to the ability." Eno instructed. "Now, let's see if the ability we're looking for really is in here."

The two of them pressed their hands on the tablet, and Eno quickly began to search for the ability. It took some time, but a smile appeared on his face as he found it.

"Bingo, looks like we are in luck! It's time to give you your ability."

At the same time, as this process was going on, the distraction group had noticed that the Dragon had turned its head, and it was looking right in the direction of the tablet.

"Crap! We have to stop it from getting back to the tablet, no matter what!" Quinn shouted.

Chapter 1118: The active power

A little while before Quinn and the others arrived at Blade Island, there was a certain question that had been on their minds. 'If the Demon tier beast was so important to the Dalki, then wouldn't it be better to just kill it?'.

If they managed to kill the beast or at least one half of it, wouldn't that stop the Dalki from prolonging their life? Wouldn't it turn into a 'simple' waiting game for the human race? All they would have to do would be to outlast the Dalki until they would die by reaching the end of their lifespans!

However, according to Richard Eno, doing so was practically impossible. In the first place the Demon tier beast used to be a two headed dragon, which had the ability to split itself into two. This was what it had done when originally fighting against the vampires.

Naturally the vampires had done their utmost to kill it, but all attempts had ultimately ended in failure. It seemed that the only way to kill the beast was to either kill both halves at the same time, or it needed to die when it combined into a whole again.

Unfortunately, the beast would always split into two halves when it was on the verge of dying and then flee in opposite directions. Even after managing to kill either half, the other had somehow been able to sprout its second head.

In the end, they had just captured the one half, without killing it.

All of these thoughts were currently running through Quinn's head as he saw the dragon turn towards the tablet. He was reminded that even if they were able to kill the beast then, there was no guarantee the other half of it in the Vampire World wouldn't regain consciousness and become whole once again.

'Still, this beast is too dangerous, and I have to stop it somehow!' Quinn thought, but the dragon was high up in the air.

"Quinn!" Fex called out. "Follow me."

As quick as he could, Fex threw his needles into the trees and also made sure pieces of string were left behind so they could be used as platforms. Quinn quickly followed until he reached the top of the tallest tree.

Layla was still riding on Quinn's back, but even from this distance it didn't look like she could reach the dragon with her arrows.

"Quinn, let me give you a boost!" Logan shouted, as he quickly followed after the two of them.

"Drop me!" Layla requested. "Fex will catch me!"

Everything was happening so fast but he needed to trust his teammates. Doing a small jump, Quinn was in the air for a few seconds before he landed on Logan's Dalki hand. Then with all the strength Logan could muster, he threw Quinn as hard as he could, while Quinn also pushed off kicking from his feet.

Even with Logan's strong Dalki hand, his whole body was flung backwards as a result.

"Damn you guys for making me do so much work!" Fex complained as he quickly used his string to grab his two falling friends. Layla hadn't even looked behind, instead stretching out her hand toward Quinn.

'I know it won't be much, but I'll do what I can to help you reach that dragon as well.' Layla thought, as she pushed herself to the point where all her MC cells ran out.

Quinn looked like a shooting star through the sky, but there was one giant problem. He couldn't exactly change his direction mid-flight and the dragon was slowly turning its body away.

'It's about to fly off, I have to do something!' Quinn thought and extended his shadow to latch onto the dragon's tail. By shrinking it afterward he was eventually able to reach the Dragon's back.

'I have to figure out a way to slow it down somehow.' Quinn thought. 'Or make it plummet down. Wait I second, can't I do that?!" He looked at his white gauntlet on his hand and pressed it down.

Back at the tablet, the process had been completed and Shiro was standing there looking at his hands in shock. "It's... over already? Is it really done? I don't feel a difference yet!"

"That isn't too surprising, I practically added a part to you that you have yet to become familiar with. Normally, you would have an ability book to guide you, but since we have neither that nor someone who could teach it to you, I'm afraid you will have to undergo quite a bit of self discovery. It will depend on your talent as to how fast you will be able to help your little friend there." Eno explained.

Shiro looked at Sil and smiled. "Come on, let's give it a go." He said excitedly, as he reached out towards Sil, but soon his hand was knocked away.

"No." Eno said. "Just like I held up my part of the deal, Sil needs to hold up his as well. He needs to move the dragon first. Your little actions could possibly make it so Sil goes back to the way he once was."

"Brother, look above!" Borden shouted as he pointed towards the sky, and that's when they could see a dragon coming their way. However, it wasn't flying straight towards them, instead it seemed to be flying... drunk?

It flew in circles upside down, and then left to right as it made its way towards them. It would have been hilarious to see if that monstrosity wasn't coming closer with each passing second, despite its questionable style.

"Everyone move!" Brock shouted, and it didn't take long for all of them to split. A few seconds later, the dragon smashed into the ground where they all had just stood, throwing up dust and dirt everywhere.

Fex, with the others, had already been in pursuit of the flying beast. Despite its giant size and ferociousness, they were all worried about Quinn. As for the person in question. When the dragon had crashed, Quinn had tried his best to hold on but the force of impact had thrown him quite a distance off.

'Damn, I think my plan worked out a little too well, and this energy I'm feeling inside me, it's so wild and strong.' Quinn looked at his hand.

While on the beast, Quinn had come up with one of two plans. Plan A had been to attack the dragon repeatedly, until it would eventually become poisoned through gauntlets' passive. The problem with this was the hard skin the dragon seemed to have. He had been unsure he would have been able to succeed in time before the dragon had reached the tablet.

As such he had gone with Plan B, which had been to use his other gauntlet's active skill, the energy drain. He didn't think it would work so fast or well, but he also had nothing to lose by trying it.

At first, Quinn had felt his whole body return to peak condition. He hadn't used much of his stamina so far, but what little he had, had been refilled. After that though, his body had entered into some type of overdrive as more energy was flowing into him, the energy of the beast itself.

At first Quinn didn't think it was having much of an effect, but being powered up, he thought he could at least deal a large significant blow to it, but then something strange started to occur.

The dragon had started to spiral out of control, as if it was doing anything it could to get Quinn off its back. Most likely it was experiencing something it had never felt before, its power being sucked away, so it had wanted to get rid of the tick responsible.

In the end, the two of them had crashed together and Quinn got chucked off to the side. He was in the middle of making a recovery getting up, and when the others had arrived from the other direction, they could see the dragon, creeping towards Quinn with its large head moving towards him, fury clearly written on its maw.

Quinn backed up a few steps, and realised that the tablet was behind him and that's when something strange happened, the dragon stopped in its tracks and stayed there. It blew out air through its nostrils which hit Quinn like a wave of great heat.

'What's going on, why isn't it moving closer? Why did it stop its attack?' Quinn wondered. The good news was, it didn't look like it was going after any of the others as well and was just continually staring at Quinn.

He took a few steps to the left and the dragon's eyes followed after him, ignoring the others. He then took a few steps to the right and it did the same.

"Why, aren't you attacking me?" Quinn asked, thinking the dragon could answer, but it couldn't. For it was nothing but a beast. The others watching were wondering what to do as well. Was this the perfect opportunity to attack it all together or should they let it go?

Turning around, and feeling the strange energy he felt before Quinn realised , that maybe, just maybe everything had something to do with the tablet.

'Is that why it doesn't attack? Is it worried about destroying it?' Quinn thought, as he walked up to it. He was scared to turn his back on the dragon at first, as he turned his head around a couple of times, but it looked like it wasn't going to move anytime soon.

"Just what is going on, I need to find out." Quinn mumbled, as he pressed both hands against the tablet and then the whole tablet began to light up.

Chapter 1119: A family reunion

As soon as Quinn laid his hands on the tablet, it began to shine in a bright blue colour, lighting up the place around them. The others were in shock about all the things happening. First the dragon, a beast that was known for its violent nature to kill anything in sight, had not attacked Quinn and now this.

The reason why they were so surprised was because even when Eno had touched the tablet to grant Shiro his abilities, nothing of the sort had occurred. Logan and the others had reunited with the other group in the jungle. They had a good view of things since the dragon wasn't blocking their vision.

Logan looked at Eno for a possible explanation, but the look on the old man's face was genuine. For once, he was as clueless as everyone else.

Quinn continued to leave his hands on the tablet, as an energy he felt was connecting with him from the inside.

'This feeling... It was so disturbing at first, but now it helps me keep calm. But why does it feel so familiar? Is this how everyone feels when they touch the tablet?' Quinn wondered since he hadn't been there to witness Eno before. 'I guess nothing will happen though since I already have an ability.'

"This young one already has power, and he is unlike the man from before, so there is nothing he can gain from me here." Quinn heard a voice that he was unable to recognise.

Turning his head around, Quinn was looking for where the voice had come from, but everyone was just looking at him, none of them had uttered so much as a single word. The voice echoed a bit, similar to when Jill would send him messages via the telepathy ability, so he tried to direct his thoughts at the tablet. 'Who are you?'

"You... you can hear me?" The voice asked in shock.

'Damn it, it's like speaking to Vincent all over again!' Quinn thought in mild annoyance. All those around him continued to watch him. It was clear to him that he was the only one able to perceive this voice.

"I don't know who this Vincent is, but you're the first one I'm able to converse with." The voice replied, now curious why that was the case.

It seemed like just like with Vincent, that the voice had access to his thoughts while he was touching the tablet. Since Quinn had only been able to hear the voice after touching the tablet, he could only assume it was either the tablet itself or someone or something left inside it.

'Are you the tablet?' Quinn asked as it was the fastest way to find out, instead of racking his brain.

"Do you really think tablets can speak or were you just born like this?" The voice asked in derision. Listening to it for a bit it sounded as if it might belong to a middle aged man, not too old nor too young.

"No, the tablet is merely a tool. I don't know how much you know, but all the abilities that humans currently possess originally came from me. At one point I decided that my time was up, and my final gift to the world was this. My mortal body should have long since perished, but I never expected to still be somewhat conscious when I gave up everything to be placed inside of here."

It was pretty hard for a person to believe, but Quinn had read the diaries of Arthur and heard Eno's explanation. All the abilities supposedly had come from this tablet, and now Quinn was hearing the voice inside confirm pretty much that to be the truth.

'Are you some type of god? How did you leave the world with so many abilities? Did you really come up with every ability, even the shadow ability I possess?' Quinn wondered.

For the first time the tablet seemed to pause before answering.

"Shadow ability? I'm afraid I did not possess such an ability, but someone I knew back in the past did. You must have received it from him somehow. As to your question, no I am not a god, although I managed to become far stronger than any of the gods during my time." The man started to laugh.

This made him seem to be quite the arrogant person in Quinn's eyes. While it was interesting to talk with him, he really didn't know how much this person could help him. Perhaps it was time to think of a way to deal with the dragon. It might have stopped its attack because of the tablet, but there was no guarantee it wouldn't revert to a wild beast, once they were further away from it.

"Wait!" The tablet spoke out. "While I have your attention I must tell you something very important! Leave that dragon be. That dragon, it came here on its own. Weak at first, but its energy slowly recovered. It must have been attracted to the energy of the tablet without realising it. However, now that he has mostly recovered, I've been able to communicate with it somewhat. Maybe because we are similar..."

"For now, the dragon has agreed to protect the stone tablet. You see if the tablet gets destroyed then that also means that all abilities will be lost. The way the system has been set up, the tablet will grant people a suitable ability. When the last person with that ability dies, then it gets sent back to the tablet. Then it will be passed on to a new person who is suitable for that power."

"However, if the tablet gets destroyed, then there is no place for the ability to come back to, do you understand? Earth has gone on a long time without trouble and in doing so it has forgotten its roots, its powers, so this is the only way."

He understood, but Quinn now had a new problem. They had come here to move the dragon beast so the Dalki would be unable to find him, but at the same time, it seemed like the tablet was of utmost importance to humanity. While the dragon was one thing, the tablet would be near impossible to move. The better option would be to protect this island at all costs.

"Honestly, you wouldn't be able to defeat the dragon even if you tried." The voice in the tablet said. "I assume you being here means you know a bit about this island, but not even the man who was here before had a way to control him. I don't have complete control over the dragon either, but at least it listens to me somewhat. Although it's hard to say how much he listens to me and how much he just instinctively chooses to hunt down intruders on the island."

"I know you are young so you might think you are strong and invincible, but believe me you are not strong enough to deal with it. If you try and force the dragon to move elsewhere then I will be unable to help you. You can be sure that it will fight you with its full force!"

'The dragon hasn't been taking us seriously yet?!" Quinn was shocked. 'If that's the case then it's no wonder how the Dalki could be made from the dragon.'

What was even more amazing was that the vampires had somewhat managed to defeat it. It made him wonder what type of forces had been sent out by vampires to deal with the beast.

'I was wondering, since you seem to have been this all powerful special being and all, can you help us? I mean, you gave everyone the excuse that you wanted to save them. Right now, we're in serious trouble and it might end up with the extinction of the human race, so is there perhaps anything you can do to help me?'

For the second time the tablet paused again.

"I'm afraid there is not. You already have an ability so I cannot give you another. I was born strong so there is nothing for me to teach you in terms of skills, magic or the sort. The only thing I can give you is information, but I fear my information stems from so far back that it would hardly help you. What I can do is convince my scaly friend to let you pass unharmed though."

It was a bit upsetting in a way. Usually with such a big event, a big discovery Quinn had expected something more. An opportunity to obtain some rare powers, but if there was nothing that could be done, then he would just be happy with the 'get away from the angry dragon' card.

'Why did you choose to speak to me?' Quinn asked, before letting go of the tablet.

"I didn't choose to speak to you. There was a reaction when you touched the tablet. It has never happened before. As I said, you are the first person to be able to hear my voice. As to why you? Your guess is as good as mine."

Quinn didn't know what really came over him at that moment or what answer he had been expecting, but he had thought that maybe there would be something to it. Perhaps he had read too many fantasy books about a Chosen One, or a prophecy that needed to be fulfilled to vanquish the evil of the world, but it was nothing like that.

"Before you go, I would like to ask you for one last thing. Since you're the first person who I have been able to speak to, it would seem rude to not even learn your name." The tablet requested.

'My name's Quinn...Quinn Talen.'

"That name....it's a very good name." The tablet replied. Quinn had the feeling it had more to say, but it had apparently chosen to keep those secrets to himself. Alas, there was nothing he could do to pry it open.

Letting go of the tablet, the bright light dimmed down until it eventually disappeared. Quinn turned to the others and now he had one more thing to do. Somehow, he needed to convince Eno that moving the dragon wasn't the best choice.

Chapter 1120: A third body is needed

Naturally, Quinn had also wondered about the name of the mysterious 'being' he had been talking to. With how boastful the voice had been earlier, it was actually quite surprising that he hadn't introduced himself. However, the tone of the other's voice after Quinn had introduced himself, had made it clear that the conversation between the two was over.

There had been no way for the others to hear what had just been going on. They had only seen Quinn place his hands on the tablet, it lighting up, and after a while he had let go.

Walking away, the dragon continued to survey Quinn with its eyes, but the vampire felt far less nervous. The voice in the tablet had seemingly kept his word and the dragon didn't attack him.

The others could see how calm Quinn was walking over to where they were, so eventually they came out to meet him, worried that the dragon might suddenly change its mind.

"Quinn, are you okay? Did you hurt yourself when you fell from the dragon?" Layla asked immediately, and Helen soon stepped forward as well, but both of them were a little frozen in place, for they could see the large dragon's head staring at their group. It didn't do anything else, but the gaze was enough to tell them that it wanted them gone.

"I'm not hurt, you don't have to worry about that, but there are a few things I need to explain." Quinn said and shared the details of the conversation that he just had with the person in the tablet. He didn't leave out any details either, as he saw no need to. The group gave a few odd looks here and there, but they certainly didn't think it was completely impossible.

Case in point the Demon tier beast, that was tolerating their conversation.

"Someone with so many abilities had to have been one of the strongest beings in existence. In history we never learnt of such a person." Logan stated. "If he really did have all those abilities, then what you are saying and what this person has done shouldn't be too much of a surprise. However, the only thing I can't understand is why did he choose to speak to you?"

Unfortunately, this was something that Quinn had no idea about, although he would have loved to know.

"We've managed to get to the stone tablet and grant Shiro the ability, so I would like to suggest that we listen to the 'being' and leave the dragon where it is for now." Quinn said. "I don't see any reason for him to lie to me. Honestly, with how powerful only one small part of the energy I absorbed from it was, I don't wish to fight it. If we try to make it move, some of us might get seriously hurt or outright perish. Besides, since the Dalki know about this island, they might destroy everything on it trying to look for the beast, including the stone tablet."

"You're really going to listen to some strange voice you heard in your head?" Eno asked as he stepped out of the trees. "You do understand the consequences of Jim getting his hand on the Dragon, right? He will be able to create even more Dalki, everlasting beings that could wipe out everything this whole universe has to offer!"

Taking one step too close to Quinn, the dragon moved slightly forward and now its large head was hovering over the Cursed faction leader. It was no longer looking at all of them as a group, but its yellow eyes were now directly staring at Eno, perceiving him as an intruder. It was so close to Quinn that he could feel the heat radiating from its large body from his back.

"Is he controlling it, like the same ability that Mona has?" Chucky wondered.

"That would make Quinn the first person to have more than one ability." Hana shouted back as if it was an obvious answer. "I, for one, believe he's told us the truth this whole time! Why would he suddenly make up having talked to a being if he had the power to control it the whole time? That voice must have told the dragon to protect Quinn for now."

Still, despite the large dragon being behind Quinn's back, it didn't look like Eno was going to back down, or at least he wasn't afraid.

"It looks like this is the second time today, that I will have to concede to you, but hear my warning, Quinn. Humanity's sake is no longer just in my hands. Now you hold a large enough position of power that you will have to play your part in all of this as well." Eno pointed at Quinn.

"We still need to figure out some things." Quinn mentioned, with the dragon backing away. Sensing no more hostility from Eno he returned to his role as an annoyed observer. "Just as the voice said, the tablet is one of the most important things here, and if the Dalki come here we need to protect this place!"

"Eno, I was hoping that we could use your army to station a few here, so they could inform us whenever there will be trouble. We can try to build a teleporter, but that might not work. However the good thing is, the island is on earth, so any attack should be spotted before they come here giving us enough time."

Eno didn't give Quinn an answer nor did he show any signs he was going to agree. He was a stubborn old man after all, but by now Quinn knew him long enough that he would at least do this much, especially since he would have an interest in keeping on the dragon at all costs.

"Can I request something?" Logan asked. "Since the dragon seems to be a bit tamer compared to before, do you think we can attempt to take some samples from it? I wish to use its blood to try and create more serums for little Borden."

"I mean I can try." Quinn thought, as he went back and placed his hands on the tablet once more. Unfortunately for some reason nothing had happened. The Tablet didn't light up like last time, and he was starting to wonder if he had gone mad just seconds ago. Until...

[New quest received]

[Learn more of your past and return to this place once more]

[Learn of the Talen families history]

'Huh?' Quinn thought the last thing he had expected was the system to give him some type of quest. After all, what did his family's history have anything to do with the tablet?

"I guess we can try and see if something will work?" Quinn said nervously looking at the dragon.

"I don't mind staying here for a couple of days, we can use the castle as a base." Shiro suggested. "And I can use that time to try to learn how to use this ability. It looks like it will be a while before I'll be able to help out Sil anyway."

After much discussion, they had decided a few things. Eno had agreed that he would send a few of his 'own' vampires here, and they would look after the place, keeping them updated on any changes to the island. In the meantime, Shiro would practice the use of his ability, at least sensing how to use it, since Eno was keeping a close eye on him and Sil.

Lastly, Logan was busy trying to extract a few samples from the dragon. Now that there was no longer a misunderstanding between them and the beast, Logan was able to extract a sample, directly from inside the Dragon's mouth.

Of course, he hadn't done it alone. Since it seemed to have been instructed to protect Quinn, or taken a liking to him, Logan had asked Quinn for his cooperation. The beast had turned out to be smart enough to understand that they wanted and after an annoyed puff of air through his nostrils he had opened its snout.

Quinn entered the dragon's mouth first. When they saw it didn't shut on him, Logan came over. This was one of the few areas that didn't have its hard scales that seemed unbreakable, otherwise Logan would have never been able to get a sample.

Meanwhile, the rest had decided to rest inside the castle. They felt far more safe, staying away from the Demon tier beast. Heading over to the large canteen, Quinn had decided to pay Logan a visit, who was currently using it as a lab.

"I hope everything is going okay." Quinn asked. "Don't worry once Eno comes here with his people, we can head back to the Cursed ship. I know there is only so much you can do here."

The frustration on Logan's face was visible, because he had gained something that he had been looking for, for so long, yet none of the equipment to properly look at it, so he felt far more impatient compared to the others.

"If you're not busy and have nothing to do, can you carry on with that request of mine from earlier? We need to keep looking, and hopefully by then Shiro will have mastered the ability somewhat." Quinn said.

"Are you planning to go behind Eno's back then? If we find what you are looking for before moving the beast?" Logan asked.

"You have to remember, if this works the way I think it works, then Sil will still have all of his abilities in place." Quinn answered before he left to check up on how Shiro was doing.

While walking over there he did have a thought in his head about Shiro's new ability.

'If Shiro is able to extract minds, or spirits whatever it is and place them into other bodies for Borden and Raten, does that mean something can be done for Vincent as well. It would be nice to get you out of my head.'

Vincent seemed silent about this request, because he honestly didn't know how to feel. He had already made peace with the world and spending time watching over Quinn had been a pleasure he couldn't have imagined to get.

'It would be nice to speak to you person to person.' Vincent replied.

Chapter 1121: Lumped together

For a long time, the tension hadn't been quite the same in a particular shelter. A shelter that looked unusual compared to others, for the houses, people and shops lived high above the trees. However, if one was to look at all the people walking around, none of them had a smile on their face.

Instead, their faces showed great concern. If they had the choice, they would try their best to stay inside in their homes. At the moment, many people were outside, and this was due to a meeting that was to take place in one of the larger houses.

It was the highest house in the Shelter and also the largest. Using the bridges that would take them from one platform to the other, a group of people were now heading their way there. Inside the place, the leader of everyone, who was named Ruby, stood on a small raised wooden platform.

She had dark coloured skin and curly hair that was braided down to her waist. She stood there holding a spear with the head of it stuck into the ground. As the room was getting filled, mumbling between everyone started already.

"What are they even doing here? Do we know yet?"

"I can't sleep well at night knowing that they are just right outside our doors."

"But they don't seem to be attacking us. Has there been some type of deal that has been set up? And they have been here a while without saying much at all."

"And where is Arthur, wasn't he meant to protect us from things like this?"

"Silence!" Ruby shouted, her voice carrying loud over everyone. After hearing that name, she immediately wanted to end the discussion there.

"I know everyone is scared, worried and has a lot of questions on their mind. The worry has only been building up, it feels like we can't catch a break, and everyone who we have ever trusted has abandoned us."

As soon as Ruby started to speak, the rest immediately shut up. The way Ruby spoke, she took control of the room in an instant with her voice.

"The Dalki, I don't really know why they are here. The human race has been at war with them for so long, we have learnt that they are the enemy, but we have seen what they have done so far." Ruby continued. "The beasts that regularly attack us, they have for some reason defended us. They have stayed near our borders of the Shelter but haven't harmed a single one of us."

Saying all this, Ruby had to pause, and her fist could be seen tensing over the spear.

"But they are the enemy. How many of us have known someone that lost their lives in the first war. I know the army abandoned us, but we wouldn't be in this place if they never attacked us!" A man shouted and argued, and it looked like a lot of them agreed.

"I know!" Ruby shouted again, silencing them all once more. "But tell me, do you all trust Arthur? He told us that no matter what, they will protect us from whatever is to come whatever the outcome of the war..."

While she said these words, her voice cracked a little, and they realised that the one person this had to affect most of all, was her. Knowing this fact, if Ruby could put up with the Dalki being here, then they could as well.

"As long as the Dalki do not harm us, then I think that we should leave them-"Just as she was about to finish her sentence, the whole room started to shake, and a loud bang was heard from the outside.

Immediately they all grabbed their spears and started to rush outside the world.

"I knew that the Dalki would eventually attack. We have to defend ourselves at all costs."

"It might just be a beast. They have been coming more often lately." Another one said.

Ruby knew that this wasn't an attack from the beast nor the Dalki. It sounded more like someone had fired a type of laser of some sort. When they finally went outside, they could see the chaos that was unfolding.

Mech's dropping in just around the outside of the Shelter where the Dalki were protecting, and ability users nearby outside firing off their powers fighting against the Dalki.

"It's the military. They have come back to save us!" The men shouted.

It certainly seemed that way. There was no reason for them to arrive after all, but Ruby disagreed that they had come to save them. They could have come a long time ago and transported them to another Shelter or planet, but that never happened.

She feared that the actual reason the military had decided to come here was because they wanted to get rid of the Dalki, which would be bad news for her.

'Why, why couldn't you just leave us in peace.' Ruby said as her face was full of tears, and she just wished one person was still here, Arthur.

On the ground floor, two head generals had been sent to get rid of the Dalki force. They were unsure how many Dalki were at the Shelter, but the order was quite clear. They were to suspect that the humans with the Dalki were part of the V's.

The head generals that were down there were head general Sach, along with Samantha.

"It looks like this might be quite the easy task," Sach said. "Bringing both of our forces in, it looked like Oscar wanted to deal with them quickly. I guess it makes sense because of where the Dalki are. How did they even get here in the first place."

"Sach!" Samantha shouted. "We are both head generals, and you decided to go against my suggestion. I suggested it would be best if we could find a way if the humans really were V's or not."

"And risk our people getting caught?" Sach replied. "Then the enemy would know about us, and a whole platoon would have died for no reason. This was the best decision, as you can see."

Even though Sach had his reasons for doing things, she didn't like it. After Oscar had released the information to the whole world, there seemed to be two types of reactions. Either those who are cautious around others or those who trusted no one, and Sach clearly preferred to trust no one.

Soon, the humans had realised this fact as well, as a Mech had dropped down on top of one of the wooden platforms and was pointing its laser arms directly at the humans.

"Watch out, the army. They are attacking us as well!" Ruby shouted, but no warning would save their lives.

Then a large black fist that looked like a claw could be seen sticking through the Mech. the insides were destroyed, and in seconds, it was chucked off the ledge allowing it to fall to the ground. The Dalki was covered in green blood and looked at the humans in front of it for a few seconds, before leaping off and continuing to join the fight.

"The Dalki, they really are protecting us for some reason, and the army, why are they attacking us?" The people thought. "What do we do?"

All of those in the Shelter were now confused. The ones meant to be protecting them were trying to kill them, and those they knew as their enemies for a lifetime were now saving them.

In the end, what choice did they have? They could only join the Dalki as they fought for their lives.

"I guess it's time we finish this up. Why don't me and you join the battle." General Sach said as he looked over to Samantha. "We could have a friendly competition. If I kill more than you, then why don't you take me up on a date?" He asked.

"I would like to take you up on that offer." A voice said from above, and soon the Dalki had landed on the ground shaking the whole area around them.

As they quickly recovered their balance and looked at what had landed in front of them, they could see one thing, a single horn sticking out from its head.

Chapter 1122: One Horn evolving

"What did you say?!" Oscar shouted , echoing through the office they were in. The reason for his cry was the new report that had just come in.

There was a nervous look on his assistant's face as sweat was running down her face. Jane was afraid to repeat the content of it again, for the matter was disbrastly serious.

"We have received an urgent report from the first Earthborn group, they have encountered the One Horned Dalki. The leader in the last war has not only been spotted but appears to have already joined the battle." Jane repeated.

At the moment, Oscar was still on one of the Bertha ships that was nearby the teleporting station. The main reason was due to his gut feeling. It had told him that something would be going on, on that planet.

After hearing the news of the Dalki leader being there, he could only imagine that they were planning something disastrous and if worse came to worse he would have to join in the battle as well.

"Quickly, I must prepare to leave. Samantha and Sach won't be enough to deal with him. It took all of the four leaders to take him on, and even though we have grown greatly since then, I fear that there may be a larger force than we first thought."

As Oscar was getting ready to leave to head out to the battlefield himself, he couldn't help but think this planet or base that the Dalki had created, must somehow be crucial to them. There was no other explanation as to why One Horn would be there personally.

'Could this be the base that allows them to communicate with the V? If so, we have to capture it at all costs. Winning the battle might be the key to ending the war!' Oscar thought, as he rushed over.

At the same time, in the Dalki mountain-like structure that they used as their main base, Graham was the only Dalki present today, only he wasn't alone for there was a vampire sitting opposite him.

"Do you think it was the right decision? You have sent out two of your strongest forces, Slicer and One Horn." Jim asked.

"Of course, else I wouldn't have sent them out." Graham replied matter of factly.
"You should worry about completing your own job. I have already given you a force to help you with that, have I not?"

"Yes, but you see I have lent that force to another, so once again I am left on my own, well not without my own people." The vampire stated.

"Jim, you are a smart person, I'm sure you can guess what will happen. One Horn was sent out to fulfill the deal we made. Consider it our way to prove to you that we are indeed trustworthy. He won't fail his mission and neither will Slicer."

"The humans are still unaware of our true strength. There is no single human in existence that could defeat Slicer or One Horn at the moment. Perhaps if all the powerhouses were to come together it might be a different story, but that is why I instructed them to strike two different places at roughly the same time." Graham explained.

"Not a single human? I guess you believe the vampires are stronger then." Jim spoke. "However, if not a single human can beat them, then what about you? Does that make you invincible?"

"If only we didn't have one defect when you created us." Graham answered with a smile, which showed his vicious sharp teeth. No matter how much he dressed in human clothing, or made himself appear human, his teeth would forever reveal what he truly was.

Seeing the partly broken single horn on the Dalki's head that had landed in front of the two generals, they immediately recognised him. It didn't take long for Samantha to activate her soul weapon. Bringing up the nine tails of earth that would come out from the ground and stay around her.

As for General Sach, his power stemmed from his nearly invincible body, and he needed to get up close to the Dalki. Charging in, Sach leapt forward pushing from the ground throwing out his knee with full force.

As it hit the Dalki, the force could be seen coming out from the other side of his body, and Samantha thought this was the perfect chance for her to use her soul weapon, throwing out all of the nine tails with the pointed tips towards the Dalki's back.

'Please be hurt enough so he says still for just a second!' She silently prayed.

The tails were inches away from the Dalki's back, and were aiming right where their heart would be. It looked like they could possibly deal with this quickly.

"You've underestimated us! You're not the only race capable of growing stronger!" Sach shouted, as he prepared to perform another kick.

The tails had hit the Dalki, but they all smashed at that point including the tips, breaking and chucking up piles of the ground falling to the floor. Samantha's eyes were spread wide open as it was the first time her soul weapon, the sharp tips she could place on her earth ability had failed to pierce anything. It would even work on the Dalki.

Sach went to kick the Dalki's head with all his strength. Although the beast gear he was wearing didn't particularly have any active skills, it was focused on the strength aspect more than anything. Having great strength and speed already, Sach was expecting to kill the Dalki with a single hit.

But, all he could see was that the formerly unmoving Dalki, finally acted, by grabbing General Sach's leg with a single hand. The kicks the military man had trained for a number of years had been stopped just like that.

And that's when Samntha realised they were in for a world of trouble, as she stared at the back of the Dalki. Seeing the horn they had already gauged how much of a threat he would pose, so they had acted fast. One Horn, a strong four spiked Dalki, they assumed him to be the leader of their race, however the number of spikes coming from his back, no longer matched their intel.

'Is this the power of a five spike? Even us head generals seem to stand no chance.' Samantha thought.

"Run! " Sach shouted. "Get out of here and warn everyone!"

The next second, Sach's body was slammed hard into the ground while being held by his ankle. The ground broke beneath him, but his body was fine. Thanks to his ability he was pretty resilient.

"Oh, I think you are the first human I have met whose body didn't suddenly splat into red liquid from doing that. I think I'm going to have a lot of fun with you!" One Horn grinned as he looked over Sach.

When being told to come here by Graham, One Horn was against the idea. He had thought this job would be pretty annoying and he didn't quite understand why they were going through with this 'Promise' of theirs anyway.

As such, the Dalki was now quite excited to find someone that looked like they could put up something. When the Dalki attempted to swing Sach, again into the ground in another area, he tried his best to press off the ground, kicking off using a force equal in power.

'It's going to be hard with one leg, but I have to use everything I have.'

At the same time, the ground beneath him rose and shot up, and the one doing the work was none other than Samantha. With the forces joining together and all of Sach's beast armour powering him, he was somewhat able to equal the force of the Dalki, and was now head height with the Dalki, but One Horn refused to let go of the leg.

Spinning his body, not caring for breaking his bones, Sach kicked the forearm of the Dalki, not once but several times. Each time the air rippled on the other side of the forearm.

"You want me to let go that badly, then be my guest!" The Dalki said, as he swung Sach up high in the air letting him go, and he was soon sent flying, as he continued to go higher and higher into the sky.

"Sach!" Samntha cried out. She needed to save him somehow, catch him or create something to cushion his fall, but she knew the Dalki wouldn't allow her to move.

'But what can I do!' She thought, and it also looked like the Dalki forces were getting a second wind, as the humans from the shelter were starting to support them. Fighting against the military power that was attacking them.

"I...."

"Back down now!" A voice ordered her, and a tunnel of ice shot out, heading straight for the Dalki. This attack made it clear that he had arrived. Oscar, the supreme commander of the military and leader of the Earthborn group.

'A five spike here of all places. This wasn't in the report.' Oscar thought. 'It looks like we need to call for help as soon as possible. Quinn, Owen, I can't do this alone.'

Alas, for now he would have to.

Chapter 1123: Two vampire knights

There were no set schedules between vampires when one would sleep or stay awake. Unlike the humans they didn't follow the sun, nor did they need as much sleep as humans. Then there were also sub classes that didn't require any sleep at all.

As such, it wasn't too surprising that at any time of day, one could see lights all around the place and people coming and going around in the Vampire World. Today though, Bryce had given an order to a certain number of vampires, to gather in the castle once more, to hold a special meeting.

He wasn't in his usual throne room, instead he was in the dungeon of the castle where prisoners would often be kept before heading off to the fourteenth castle or for execution. One of these deep underground tunnels led to a certain place.

A special room that Bryce had created once he had become king, putting a special type of combination on the door. For this door, he didn't even allow Muka to know the combination, and Muka wasn't even made aware that such a tunnel existed in the first place.

Going through the tunnels, the special leaders that had been invited could go and visit Bryce, without the others knowing.

"This certainly seems more fun than the time when I was alive." Tempus said out loud to himself as he walked towards the special door. Giving a type of knock on the door that only he would know, it was soon opened from the inside, and Tempus could now see the other leaders that were there.

"You invited the second Original!?" Suzan, the leader of the third family exclaimed, the shock being so great that she had jumped out of her seat. If it had been any other time, she would have shown the vampire great respect but today things were different for a reason.

"Calm down, he is already aware of everything that is going on and everything that has happened. I know the second family wasn't involved back then, but after what happened to Cindy, it was impossible to hide it from him. Besides, he has been a great help so far."

Learning of this fact, the rest of the leaders in the room stood up and bowed to him. The ones attending were Bryce's two Royal Knights, Prima Kilton, ex leader of the twelfth family, and Kyle Harlu, ex leader of the seventh family.

On top of this, Jill, the ex eighth family leader who still had her dead eyes, was standing rather than sitting at the table.

"As you all have been made aware, Arthur will come to pay us a visit. And there is only one reason we can all think of, he has come to get revenge for what we have done to the other Punishers." Bryce stated. "I don't regret what we did. We needed to make sure that they would never come back, but because we didn't finish the job properly the first time, we still have troublesome people coming back now."

"To rectify our past mistake, I have gathered you here to ask for your help. I know a lot of you have not informed the new leaders in your family about your past, and I don't blame any of you. If we had succeeded in the past we could all just bury this event as a part of history, but since our 'old friend' will come to pay us a visit we will have to deal with him."

"Any vampires that you see as expendable, please send them my way. I have already exhausted my connections to the first family, and I'm aware that Muka already knows that something is up. If the first family's number gets any smaller or we go out to create more newborns, people will certainly start to ask about it."

The room remained silent after Bryce's request. This group of people had hardly met up before Bryce had become King, but at least then, the ex first family leader had treated them as equals.

All of them were here because they had committed the same sin, but now that Bryce was King, although he had 'asked' them for this favour, his tone had made it clear that it was just for appearance's sake. In reality, it was pretty much an order.

"What do you plan to do with these people?" Suzan asked. "It sounds like they may never be brought back. I'm fine with sending you criminals or people who disobey rules, but if you can promise me they will come back, then I'm happy to send you others as well."

Some of the others agreed with this. They too feared that maybe the vampires that they would send to him would forever disappear. It certainly sounded like that based on the way he was talking about the first family.

"Arthur is strong. Have you forgotten how much so?" Bryce replied to them all. "It would be great if that man would only believe himself to be untouchable, but he came at all of us at the same time. We would all be dead by now if he hadn't left of his own free will and even the old King had been unable to do anything about it!"

"Our only hope to stand up against him is that he will believe that we are still weak, that we won't have any solution to stop his shadow powers, but with your help, I will! As for your people... no they will not return." Bryce admitted. "I will make sure that they will be remembered as heroes, but without sacrifice we can't win this upcoming battle."

It worried them a little, the way Bryce was speaking. As the King shouldn't he care for the well being of the vampire race? Didn't they all agree to get rid of the Punishers, so that no more vampire lives would have to end? So then how could he so easily ask for the lives of their fellow vampires?

Still, it also felt like they had no other choice now. After getting involved in the past they could no longer be forgiven. Arthur as the leader of the Punishers might have chosen to postpone punishing them for their crime once, but it was nigh impossible for something like that to happen again.

"If only there was a way to convince the other leaders that Arthur is the villain we should be fighting against." Tempus spoke. "I think it would increase our chances, don't you? Besides, then there would be no need for you to worry about certain leaders teaming up with the Punisher."

The others found it odd that the second family was working with Bryce. After all, the second family had not been involved with the matter of the Punishers back then.

"Oh, if you have a suggestion, please share it with us all." Bryce said.

"I think he will be surprised by seeing some old faces reappear in front of him again." Tempus said.

Over at the tenth castle. Paul had been doing his duties as the Vampire Knight quite diligently. The human soldiers had built up a good relationship with those in the tenth. It seemed like most of the distrust had gone away after Quinn had been hailed a hero.

This had made Paul's job a lot easier than before. Sitting at his desk inside the castle, Paul was going through paperwork, reminding him of the days when he had been in the military without any abilities. It was one of the reasons he had been able to adapt to the situation quicker than most. He also had the likes of Xander and Timmy helping him out.

'Quinn, there has been no report from you. I hope you still remember the request I have made. I know you will look after all of our families, but I can't help but worry that the war has already started. I'm not sure how busy you will be whether you can still protect them all at that time.' Paul thought.

At that moment, the mask that he mostly kept around his waist started to vibrate and he was wondering who could be calling him at a time like this. Sam had given him a few updates about the current situation of the world, but also missed out on many. Perhaps it was because he knew that Paul would want to get involved if he knew too much.

When answering the call, it had come from someone unexpected.

"I see, I think that is possible." Paul replied, as he stood up from his seat, and started to head to the throne room of the tenth castle. There, Paul stood in front of the teleporter.

He pressed a few of the buttons on the front, activating the teleporter and soon it started to light up as it was activated, he waited a few seconds, and coming through the teleport two people could be seen.

Although, one of them looked quite different compared to before.

"Welcome back, I didn't expect to see the two of you return first before the others. Is everything okay?" Paul asked.

"It was an unexpected return for us as well, but necessary." Leo replied, with Erin following him from behind.

Chapter 1124: A ticking bomb

It came as quite a surprise to Paul that the one who had requested a return to the tenth castle, was none other than Leo. He was sure that the other Vampire Knight would be helping Quinn out to the best of his abilities, especially since they were going up against the Dalki.

Who better to have by your side than someone who had the experience of fighting them in the past? However, as soon as he saw the other person next to Leo, he was beginning to get a rough idea what led them here.

Erin's usual blonde hair had turned black, but that wasn't the most prominent thing that stood out about her. That would be the pair of chains that were now covering both arms, clearly tied up in a restrictive way. On top of that, he could see that Erin's arms were still twitching.

'What's happening to her? Is it some type of disease?' Paul wondered. 'Leo has always had a soft spot for his students, but Erin seems to go even above that. I just hope nobody will ever use that against him.'

Paul knew this well, it was the whole reason he had given up his humanity in order to protect his platoon that he had originally arrived with him.

"There are some matters that I need to deal with. You haven't told anybody about our arrival here, have you?" Leo asked.

"No." Paul shook his head. "You wouldn't have asked me to bring you cloaks if you wanted your presence to be known, now would you? Ever since that event, our faces are quite well known all over, so take these and cover up." Paul handed over the cloaks, but as he was about to present it to Erin, Leo snapped it from Paul instead.

It was just the confirmation he needed to know that something was definitely up. Perhaps even Quinn didn't know what was going on judging by the strange way Leo was acting.

"Thank you." Leo said hastily. "I'm sorry to have left you here with all this burden on your shoulders. If there is anything I can help you with, I will be happy to do so once I'm done with my own task."

"Perhaps this is payback for me not looking after the second base so well." Paul shrugged, smiling back at him. Although Paul was the one who had originally hired Leo, they hadn't really gotten around to talk much like this, and who would have thought they would be in this situation at the moment.

"The leaders are seemingly preparing for something and there has been less infighting than usual, so there actually hasn't been much to do. Just concentrate on whatever you came here to do and perhaps after that it would be for the best if you go and assist Quinn."

"The fact that things are that calm is a little unsettling in itself." Leo commented, before he and Erin quickly wrapped themselves in the cloaks to set off.

'Why was I so on guard when I looked into that girl's eyes?' Paul wondered. All the cells in his body had been screaming to either kill or be killed.

Since they wanted to exit the castle in secret, the duo had to scale out from one of the windows, and down from the castle. Then once they were in the tenth area they could relax a little.

Finally away from their family members, the two of them decided to go down an alleyway that was between two large houses. The good thing was that the inner castle area was a little quiet around the tenth area. It looked as if Paul had kept the requirements for entering the inner area quite strict.

"How did you feel when you met Paul? Was it similar to when you are around me? Or is being around more than one of us worsening your condition?" Leo asked.

"Worse." Erin kept her answer short as if talking alone was taking a toll on her while she was holding down her urges. "Ever since we entered I can feel everyone. Imagine the entire place being filled with blood."

Although it was impossible for her to make that comparison because she didn't know what it was like to be addicted to the blood, and Leo didn't know what it was like to be like Erin either.

"For now, try to get used to the feeling. This might be the quickest way for you to learn to resist it. Here in a world where it's plentifully easy to get, then when we are back on track you should be...fine." Leo tailored off, because he could tell the energy inside her was growing by the second.

This was the only choice he had, and if this didn't work he needed a backup plan. Leo didn't know much about the Vampire World, and he didn't know many people he could trust either that might be able to help him in the situation he was in, but there was one person.

In the thirteenth castle, Silver was performing her normal duties and was walking down a grand hallway. Suddenly, someone appeared directly in front of her, someone who she hadn't seen for a while now.

"Leo?" Silver asked, a little stunned. She hadn't gotten any news about him returning and in the next moment she saw the cloaks. Since they had come unannounced then they didn't want anyone to know that two Vampire Knights were meeting informally like this.

"Since when were you on a first name basis?" Erin grunted.

Ignoring Erin's sass, Silver pulled the two of them into the closest unoccupied rooms, which happened to be one of the bedrooms. The female Vampire Knight quickly locked the door behind her, not that it would stop a vampire from coming in, but would give them time to escape, or Silver could just answer saying it was her inside taking a rest.

"What are the two of you doing here?" Silver asked in a hushed voice staring at Leo, but she couldn't help but notice the wincing, and twitching that was coming from Erin either.

"I'm sorry, but there are not many I can trust in this place. The King and the others do not know of our arrival and I would like to keep it that way. We have a problem and I hope you can help with that." Leo explained. "You are trustworthy, skilled, and I'm guessing a beautiful person who wouldn't mind helping an old man, correct?"

"Old?" Silver chuckled. "Perhaps you look old before, but with your evolution you look like a fine man, also agewise I am probably four times your actual age." Silver stated with an amused smirk.

"The bloodsuckers are seen as enemies of the vampire settlement, and I believe that King Bryce had said that he has destroyed all the ones that were being made by Cindy, but I was wondering if they were still more out there, and if they would still count as being a vampire?" Leo asked.

It was a strange question to ask, but maybe Leo wanted to catch the Bloodsuckers to find out more about the second family. Silver too, didn't like the feeling she was getting from the Original second leader Tempus.

"There might be some out there, and there are always vampires that seem to give in to the blood. Although far less than in the past since we have taken measures against them now. However, it might be a struggle to find them. As for your other question, of course they are vampires. Some even believe that they are the vampire's true form, and choose to turn into one out of choice and leave the settlement."

This was a bit of a problem, they could go hunting in the vampire world to try to find the Bloodsuckers, but there was no guarantee that they would be successful, and Erin might explode by then.

Bringing her here was a risk as well, as the vampires could possibly find out about her.

"What about vampires that commit severe crimes, or are to face execution? Does the thirteenth family have any?" Leo questioned.

Now, Silver was at a loss, but since it was Leo she decided to answer.

"There are vampires that break the code, commit sins, and fight against each other. There are even vampires that talk back to their Vampire Knights and leaders and that in itself is punishable by death."

"As long as the vampire being punished belongs to that family, the leaders are usually left to deal a punishment they believe is fit. Unless it is quite a serious matter. This is why even though we are limited to a number of vampires per family, new vampires are born to keep up the numbers."

"Although, I believe some leaders also use this as an excuse to off vampires, in hopes that a stronger one may come from a new line. As for vampires that commit crimes, they are mostly dealt with by Muka, it might be best if you talk to him if you are trying to find someone."

During the whole time the two of them were talking, Leo had kept turning back his head looking towards Erin. They needed to move fast.

"Thank you for your help, it's time we leave. I shall repay your kindness in the future." Leo promised, as they quickly opened the window to the room, and the two of them were ready to jump off from the ledge.

Erin was to climb on to it first, but she soon turned her head to look at Silver, and her glowing yellow eyes were seen. Leo quickly gave Erin a little nudge before jumping off as well.

'Yellow eyes, a search for vampires or Bloodsuckers... no this can't be!' Silver thought, as she had figured out why they had asked those questions.

Chapter 1125: The first loss

A few days had passed since Quinn and his group had arrived on Blade Island. They had learned quite a few new things during their stay and some dynamics had changed within the group.

For one, Quinn had no idea what was taking Eno's people so long to arrive at the island. Whenever he had asked the old man, the only answer he would get out of him was they would be here eventually. It appeared that they had to either be coming from a very far away destination, or were making sure that no one could see them while on their way there.

The Demon tier beast had returned to his original spot in front of the tablet. For most of the time it seemed to be napping, only waking up briefly whenever Quinn would visit to see if there was any information he could get about his family, or if the tablet would speak to him again, but it never did happen.

Since the plan to move the Dragon had been abandoned, Helen had decided to leave ahead of everyone else. Quinn had instantly agreed that it was vitally important for her to head out there. After all, just like Owen was out protecting the planets the Graylash family owned, it was the same for her. Helen was the one that was in charge of protecting most of the Cursed faction planets.

Who knew when the next large-scale attack from the Dalki or the Jim would occur?

Mona had been let out and was updated on the situation. She seemed okay but still didn't really know what happened. Usually, if she couldn't take over she wouldn't pass out like that, but she wasn't keen to try out again so soon.

However, their days on the island weren't totally wasted. The island was full of strong beasts that the others could use as a form of training.

Currently, seen coming out from the forest area that was just an in front of the entrance to the large castle, Fex could be seen dragging a beast that looked similar to a boar. Its tusks were nearly as large as its whole body. Whoever ended up on the wrong end of those would never be able to get off them.

Fex continued to drag the boar that was wrapped with his red strings across the ground, and eventually cut off the string from his hand, leaving it to wiggle around a bit on the floor.

"Few, finally the second one." Fex said, wiping the sweat from his head. "I don't know what you want to do with these things, but it would be a lot easier if I was allowed to just kill it before bringing it over. Trying to capture a beast alive is a massive pain."

Standing in front of the castle were Quinn and Shiro, while Sil and Layla sat on the grand staircase that led up into the castle. Everyone else seemed to be relaxing in the castle itself doing their own thing, not really interested in much. They enjoyed the empty rooms, and this welcomed rest from their duties on the Cursed ship.

"Alright Shiro, it's now your turn." Quinn said, as he gave him a small nudge forward.

On the ground now, there were two different types of beast. One was a giant frog, with six eyes on its head that was also wrapped around with the same red strings. Both of them were Advanced tier beasts.

Even if they were to escape it wouldn't be much of a problem for the people there to deal with them, but Shiro still looked nervous. To him these were deadly beasts.

He inched closer and closer with both his hands out walking towards them.

"You can do this, they need you to do this. You've been practising a lot and I think I got the feeling down." Shiro mulled to himself. "Remember what that book said."

While searching the castle, the group were in luck. For when the Blades had left the island, nearly everything in the castle had been left behind as well. It seemed kind of sad in a way to see so much history left behind in such a place, but it looked like Hilston didn't care about it at all.

There was an entire grand library filled with information on top of information. After searching through the books, they had managed to come across a type of diary. It had details reporting how certain abilities functioned as if they were testing things and one of them, was Shiro's current ability.

It seemed like every chained ability they had was stored in that library filled with these notes and it contained crucial information about each ability. After handing the book to Shiro, Quinn had asked Sil if he could keep all the information. It felt wrong to just take something when it wasn't his and a member of the family he was taking it from was right beside him.

Sil hadn't even hesitated to agree. He didn't care for the books and he wanted to forget everything about the place anyway. Doing so, Quinn had put all of the books in his dimensional storage. These weren't ability books, they didn't tell the user how to cultivate the ability, but did tell them what the abilities were capable of.

Still, Quinn decided in his free time he would read the books as much as he could, knowing your enemy would give a person an advantage in a fight, and at some point Quinn felt like he would need to fight Hilston. Hopefully, however, it would be later rather than sooner.

Thanks to Shiro learning Qi, he was more in tune with his body than the average person. He could feel the changes that were happening as he activated his ability and thanks to the information in the book about what was possible, he could already do a few things.

It made Quinn wonder, if Pure ever did learn abilities it could make them stronger than others. While thinking about this, suddenly the frog beast shot out its tongue straight towards Shiro, and wrapped it around his wrist before it could touch him.

In less than a second though, Quinn was there to slice its tongue off. Immediately he went to look at Fex, who looked like he was trying to shy away.

"My bad." Fex mumbled an apology. "I just brought them here and that thing never used an attack like that when I was fighting it."

"Isn't it a frog though?" Layla questioned. "What else can a frog do?"

Since the danger had passed, Shiro soon walked forward now armed with the knowledge that Quinn would be there if anything similar should occur. Placing one hand on each of the beast's heads, Shiro concentrated. The palm of his hands started to light up slightly in a soft glow, and that was the end.

"Did it work?" Shiro asked

"Let's find out." Quinn said, as Shiro went to run where Layla and Sil were sitting. Quinn then cut the strings that were made by Fex and the two beasts were free. As they stood on their feet something felt strange about both of them.

The boar beast attempted to jump on its back legs, hardly making any distance whatsoever. It also would constantly pull out its tongue as if it was tasting the air. As for the frog beast, it looked like it was trying to figure out how its leg's worked.

It was wobbling side to side pushing its back legs while using its upper body to charge forward which just caused its head to hit the ground.

"Bwahahaha!" Fex burst out laughing, and so did the others by the seats. It was quite a funny scene.

"Well that's good, it looks like you're getting the hang of using your ability. Now let's try to put them back, their minds into their original bodies. After that we can try to just transfer the mind of one into the body of the other." Quinn suggested, as they continued to test out Shiro's ability.

But before that, Quinn could feel that he was getting a call from a certain someone. Placing the mask on his face he answered.

"Quinn, this is Sam, and I have an important report to make." Sam said over the voice in a serious tone.

"Go on." Quinn replied, worried about what might have happened for Sam to react in such a manner.

"Dalki were discovered on one of the planets owned by the humans. Oscar sent out two of his forces and in the end he even had to join the battle, because One Horn was there as well."

'Two groups and Oscar went there himself. How many Dalki were there?' He thought. One Horn was probably the most described Dalki to all of humanity and he was the personification of why they feared the race.

"Does Oscar need help? Has he asked us to come to the planet?" Quinn asked, but there was silence for a few seconds.

"He did, but there was nothing we could do. Before we could even send out reinforcement the fight was already over. ... Humanity has lost their first battle against the Dalki."

Chapter 1126: Plan coming together

In the first major attack of this second war, Quinn had successfully defeated the invading Dalki with minimal losses on the human side. A four spiked Dalki had invaded earth, yet had been unable to progress further from the original spot of where it had landed. Another four spiked Dalki had been beaten so badly that they had been forced to run off, while the rest of its forces had been dealt with, and of course the Cursed faction leader had saved the second fleet of the Graylash family.

All of these battles could be considered victories of the human race, despite the losses they had suffered on their side. So what did a loss mean?

Due to how important this was, and wanting to know more details, Quinn quickly gathered everyone on the island. They moved into the main castle throne room and sat around a dining table that was already placed there.

Next, Logan placed a device in the centre of the room, and a holographic display of Sam appeared in the middle. With it everyone would be able to hear the message and receive the details of what had occurred without the need to repeat it over and over.

"There's quite a bit to explain and soon this information will be revealed to the public. Quinn, you and Owen were asked to be the first people to be contacted and this information to be passed on, so I want you to think carefully about what you want to do next." Sam said.

Everyone in the room was seriously listening in, including Eno and Brock.

"It all started when some Dalki were discovered on one of the beast planets owned by earth. It is centred quite fairly in the middle and not too far away from Earth's Portal Station. Because of this, Oscar decided to treat it as a serious matter and sent out his men to deal with it."

"Quinn, Fex, Layla and Sil, you should already be familiar with this planet. It's the Orange portal planet you all had gone to on an expedition."

Immediately, both Quinn and Fex looked at each other. For it wasn't just the planet that their school had gone on an expedition for, but it was also the planet where they had awakened Arthur from his sleep.

'The Dalki were found there? And the Dalki are there as well. Does this mean... could Arthur really be working with the other side? Just what could they be doing there?' Quinn wondered.

"Why didn't the Earthborn group ask for the Graylash faction or the Cursed action for help?" Chucky couldn't help but ask.

"It's a good point to make, but it was because they didn't think they needed to. Their scouts estimated for there to be only one or two dozen Dalki, a number that two fleets should have been able to beat. There were also rumours of humans living at the settlement in peace, which made the Earthborn group assume they had to be Vs. They sent out two head generals to deal with the situation, Samantha and Sach."

"In the end, the Dalki known as One Horn showed up there as well. Oscar had already predicted something like this might have happened, so he had stayed in the vicinity. The next thing they knew the humans were retreating from the settlement, Sach is in the hospital and Samantha has come out relatively fine. As for Oscar... It seems like he is on his last legs."

"By the time we received a request for help, he was already facing One Horn to allow everyone else to escape. He barely managed to escape, but his arms, legs, and limbs were ripped from his body. His heart has remained intact, and same with his brain, but he is unresponsive at the moment."

"They are keeping him alive, but are unable to perform surgery on him, for fear it might end his life. Now Innu is all that's left really for the Earthborn group. Samantha can't focus her attention due to her father's situation and refuses to leave his side."

"Sach will live but might never be able to fight again, so Innu is panicking and has called for help from the Graylash and the Cursed faction otherwise things might seriously fall apart. I concur with his opinion that this base has to be important to them. The plan is to launch a coordinated attack with you and Owen. And for Owen's response he is waiting for your reply first."

'Didn't Erin and Paul tell us about the people in that Planet, they are not vampires. They were the people that Arthur was with at the time. So why are the Dalki there as well, and why haven't they killed them?'

'Maybe if we go to the place, I'll find out why Arthur did what he did.'

"Decline the request to attack the Dalki!" Was the first words out of Eno's mouth after hearing what had happened. "Quinn, perhaps you're curious why they are on that planet, but it is not worth the risk if One Horn is there."

"One Horn, even if he isn't the strongest Dalki in existence, he is at least the primary reason why the humans, or even vampires for this matter, have little hope of winning this war. Think of what happened to Oscar! He had a Demon tier weapon with him, and two head generals by his side and still ended up in that state."

"I agree." Mona said, who had mostly been recovering in the castle after suffering from trying to take over the demon tier beast. "All of the leaders in the past fought against One Horn, and we still weren't able to kill him. However, he must have gotten stronger to be able to do something like that.'

Although two people were warning him, Quinn felt like they were overreacting. Whenever he had been fighting he had gotten through tough situations and the only opponents that were able to completely overpower him had been Hilston and Arthur.

Were they claiming that One Horn was on their level?

Still more so than anything, Quinn wanted to go there, hoping he might discover something about Arthur. Maybe the people he had protected would know something.

"Perhaps this isn't my place to speak." Layla chimed in. "But I think that Innu is obsessed with revenge at the moment and since he can't do it himself, he wants to use us to achieve his goal. I think the more important thing is what to do with Oscar. Since he's still barely alive shouldn't we help him?"

'Did Layla really just suggest that?' Quinn was baffled.

If a person was on the verge of death, what could they do? The only thing they could do was...to turn that said person into a vampire.

"She's right, this could be the chance to have someone of great influence under your control, but what would the people think, if all of their leaders were suddenly something...different to them." Eno commented with a smirk.

"Can't I help somehow?" Shiro asked, raising his hand. "If I can move Raten and Vorden into a body, doesn't that mean I can do the same thing to Oscar?"

"We haven't tried your ability on humans yet though. We don't know what you can do, especially on someone who is unconscious or brain dead. Maybe Oscar is still alive, but his head is gone" Fex replied. "We don't know until we test the situation ourselves, but using a World Leader seems like a bad place to start. The easiest way might indeed be to convince humans that vampires are good if we turn him in."

Now the humans in the group were starting to catch on, what exactly Layla was getting at.

"He should have a choice in that matter." Logan interjected. "It's unfair to turn someone against their will. I'm sure many people would jump at this opportunity if it was to become a vampire or death, but I for one don't think it's right to just turn someone because it's more convenient to us."

"Also it's not clear yet if he can't be saved another way. Technology has advanced very well. Even without limbs, if he wakes up he will be able to do everything he could before."

In the middle of their conversation, the device in the centre of the table started to vibrate once again, noting that there was an incoming call. When answering they could see Sam again.

"I know I haven't given you enough time to decide what to do, but that is not why I called. Quinn the request that you have asked, we have finally been able to find one. A humanoid Demi-god tier beast."

'Finally.' Quinn thought, as he looked towards Shiro.

Chapter 1127: The strange plan

Sam's second message kind of flew right above everyone's heads. Barely anyone had paid it attention due to the first message pertaining to such a serious matter that they were all still thinking long and hard about before.

"Sam, while you are still on the line I have made a decision. I want you to report back to head general Innu, and Owen Graylash." Quinn said in a serious tone after having listened to the opinion of all those around him. Everyone turned towards the centre of the table to listen to their leader's next words.

"Tell them that the Cursed faction will not participate in the mission to get rid of One Horn." Quinn stated.

A lot of them were holding their breaths, but in all honesty they felt relieved that Quinn had decided to abstain. Most of them had been worried about what would become of the Cursed faction if Quinn might suffer a similar fate to Oscar.

"I would also like you to convey my personal advice for Owen and Innu to refrain from attacking the place. If my hunch is right, the Dalki there won't be doing anything any time soon. Attacking them will only cause more trouble, but I also want to make one more thing clear."

"The Cursed faction is not going to completely leave them be forever either. We will deal with them, just not now." Quinn added.

There had to be a reason why Eno was so sure the human race would lose against the Dalki without his help, and it seemed like the Dalki known as One Horn was a major one.

Perhaps in the past Quinn might have rushed in, wanting to learn the truth quickly, wishing to avenge Oscar. However, now as a world leader, he was aware that his decisions didn't just affect him but the whole world.

Although not now, he still intended to find out just why the Dalki would appear near a human settlement without killing the inhabitants and how exactly Arthur fit into the whole picture.

Innu was currently on one of the Bertha ships the military owned, yet not the same one as Oscar.

Sitting at his desk, he was biting away at his fingernails, not in fear or anxiousness instead it was in excitement.

'I can't believe such an opportunity has actually come my way.' Innu thought to himself. 'I saw how strong Quinn was against the Dalki. If it's just one of them, and with Owen who has already faced a four spiked Dalki, in the mix we can definitely defeat it with the three of us!"

'As long as the three of us can get rid of it, what the other two head generals and the Supreme Commander couldn't, just what position would that put me in? I will be at the top of the ladder! A world leader, the next to become Supreme Commander! Oscar was getting old in the first place, and with how things had been going it's clear that he was most likely going to pass on the role to someone like his daughter Samantha, or that head general Paul of the second base.'

'However, after seeing the way she acts now it is clear she is not fit to be leader. There will be public outcry if she was to be chosen. Everyone will be on my side.' Innu was already dreaming about donning the mantle and receiving the praise and admiration of everyone.

The much awaited call finally came through, and Innu answered it rather quickly. However, it was nowhere near what Innu had hoped to hear. It also wasn't so much a conversation between the two of them as Sam merely passing on Quinn's message on the Cursed faction's stance.

"Let me speak to him! LET ME SPEAK TO QUINN RIGHT NOW!" Innu shouted down the receiver, holding back his anger to not crush it with his hand. Sam of course had half expected this reaction when delivering the message forward. He understood why Quinn had left him this task to handle instead of doing it himself.

"I'm sorry, but Quinn is extremely busy at the moment. He is currently undertaking a secret mission and is unable to get out. I would also like to remind you that we from the Cursed faction do not work under the Earthborn group so you have no jurisdiction over us. We have our own people and planets that need protection. Sending in more people could just cause more deaths." Sam tried to give Innu a professional reply to get him off his back.

"LIES! I know why you won't attack them! It's because you're working with them! The reason why the Dalki are leaving them alone are because they are Vs just like you all! I knew we couldn't trust any of you! Hear my word, I will be sure to let everyone know about this!" Innu complained.

"HEAD GENERAL INNU GET A GRIP ON YOURSELF!" Sam cautioned the other. "I understand that you must be emotional right now, so I shall pretend you hadn't said any of that. Let me repeat, our Cursed faction merely said that we won't attack the planet right now. As soon as Quinn is done—" Sam was trying to fix things diplomatically, but from the other end he heard Innu continue his angry rant. The other seemed unwilling to listen to a word he said, so Sam eventually just ended the call.

'How did someone like him ever become a head general in the first place? I guess this is what happens when you choose the people in high positions based on power over brains. Argh, we still need to keep a good relation with the Earthborn group. I have a feeling that all three groups will be needed to save us all.' Sam thought. He sighed and opted to call Innu back later once he might have calmed down to smooth things over.

Fortunately, delivering the message to Owen was a completely different experience.

"I'm sure he has his reasons." Owen had said in an understanding tone. "I also was contemplating on what to do after what has happened to me but I think the Cursed faction might know more about this Dalki situation than us. So I will trust him."

Back on Blade Island. After the call had ended, Quinn had wanted to do a few more things with Shiro. They were still waiting for Richard's people to arrive after all, and after a series of tests he thought that Shiro was truly ready.

Nearly the whole group were back outside in front of the castle, and had continued where they had left off with the tests.

"The only problem is that you need to touch the person in order to use your ability. It's similar to the beast's taming ability, and Sil's ability as well." Quinn summarised, as he had some concern written on his face.

"Quinn, I have to ask. What was Sam going on about before?" Layla asked. "About how he had found a humanoid Demi-god tier beast? Do you need its crystal for some reason?"

Quinn looked around to check if Eno, or Brock were nearby and then sniffed the air, but it didn't seem like they were around. He then smiled and shook his head.

"I don't need the crystal." Quinn replied. "I wanted to use their bodies and I'm not just looking for one humanoid beast, but two."

At that moment, Sil sprung up like a bamboo shot.

"Quinn are you..."

"If you're okay with it." Quinn smiled. "I've been thinking of a way we can do this for a while now, a way to bring back Vorden and Raten without relying on Richard. You see, his clones would be a temporary step anyway and I don't trust him not to have some sort of power over them. Besides, they would have had to learn the ability of the Blades again."

"I don't feel comfortable using another human's body either, and I don't think Vorden would like that either. So I asked Logan and Sam for a request and they have been searching for a long time now and it looks like they have finally found one."

"Why do you think I've been asking Shiro to do so many tests on the beasts here? I needed to know if his ability would work on beasts just as well as they did on humans. The worry was if we were to put a human mind in a beast, since there not like for like maybe that would cause some problems. If it did then we would just have to get Shrio to put them back.

I thought, what's the closest thing to a human that could survive for a really long time? Why not a humanoid beast? Their intelligence is great, similar to humans and some can even speak especially at the higher tiers." Quinn shared his thoughts on the matter.

Everyone's mouths were left wide open as they couldn't believe their ears. Quinn was really suggesting that they put both Vorden and Raten into the body of a humanoid beast!

"Now all we need to do, is check if Raten and Vorden are still in your head." Quinn said looking at Sil.

Chapter 1128: Going a bit crazy

A lot of time had already been spent waiting on Blade Island, but there didn't really seem like there was anything the group could do. Quinn was getting more and more frustrated with each passing day, especially now that there was a potential way to help Vorden and Raten.

He kept himself busy during his free time by reading through the notes that had been left behind about the abilities that Hilston had kept. Since they weren't ability books he was unable to use the system to instantly learn the information and had to go through them the old-fashioned way. In those peaceful moments, Quinn felt reminded of being a student who was cramming to prepare a presentation for class.

Still, they needed to progress and move forward, so Quinn eventually went to Eno with a request.

Eno and Brock would usually spend their time on top of one of the castle's four towers; today's choice had been the east tower. As far as Quinn could tell the two older men seemed to be just staring up into the sky.

"The Dragon no longer needs to be moved, and a lot of time is being wasted. While we are just waiting here the Dalki out there are constantly out on the move. I think it's best if we leave this place." Quinn said after he had arrived.

"Have you come here to ask me for my permission?" Eno asked without so much as changing his lying posture. "In case you've forgotten, you're your own leader. The goal of this mission was to complete your side of the deal, but we have already agreed that it's for the best to let the Dragon remain here. At least for the time being."

Quinn hadn't forgotten the supposed hierarchy, but due to Eno being with them for a while, and him being the person Quinn had searched for for the longest time, it felt weird to just decide to do things without him. Besides, Eno always had something to say about Quinn's decisions, so he was surprised to hear this now of all things.

"I've come here to inform you about our next course of action. So what are you planning to do? Are you going to come with us, or do you want to wait for the others?" Quinn asked.

"We will stay here." Brock answered as he sat up to face Quinn while Eno continued to stare out towards the sky. "Me and Eno have evaluated the Cursed faction long enough. There won't be much of a difference with us being there or not, and at this point I think my master has something he would like to say."

Brock, then bowed down and stepped aside holding his hand out. Eno took Brock's hand and got up, facing Quinn.

"Congratulations, Quinn. It looks like you're indeed the one I have been waiting for. Now I don't want you to get too big headed." Eno 'praised' the Cursed faction leader. "After watching you for a while, you seem to have the talent to end up in all sorts of situations. Although I'm still not sure if I should say you've been blessed by a god of good luck or one of bad luck considering the constant things that you face."

"Now with the state the human race is in, you are really the only person I can trust to stop the Dalki. You've heeded my warning and you have many people around you that will help. You know what you need to do, when the time is right, I will have someone come out and seek you, but remember Quinn, you are to complete your side of the bargain no matter what!"

"When we need to move the dragon, you will do so with Sil's ability or without it!"

The conversation was over, and Quinn was free to leave, but as he did, he couldn't help but wonder what Eno meant by his words. Did he know what Quinn was planning to do? That he was going to try and bring back Vorden and Raten before moving the Dragon tier beast?

He somehow had known many things before that he shouldn't have been aware of, but at the same time that knowledge hadn't been omniscient.

'Richard did help create the system with me and Logan's family.' Vincent commented. 'He was also able to override it that one time, which means that perhaps he has a way to access your system and see everything you are doing. In some type of way.'

If that was true, then that was a scary thought to have. This system was what had allowed Quinn to grow stronger in such an incredible fast way. It had helped him along the way, but it was a fact that he didn't have complete control over it. Perhaps one day it could be used against him, which made Quinn think if he would have to look for a way to get rid of it at some point.

'I'll need to learn to be less reliant on the system. Even without it, my body can still work using most skills. Still there are some things like the soul weapons and more that I can't use without it yet.'

In the past, it had been beneficial for Quinn to learn how to use the skills himself anyway, rather than relying on the system. It would solve the light delay in time that he had when activating skills through the system.

So it just made more sense for him to learn how to use the abilities properly. Unfortunately that required a lot of time, and how often was he really granted such a luxury? Not to mention there was so much for him to learn and do.

Now knowing that they were to head off the island, Quinn decided to head for the tablet one last time without everyone else. The dragon had remained there and now only half opened one eyelid to see who it was. As soon as he recognised Quinn, he closed it again and continued his slumber

'Who would have ever thought I would make a Demon tier beast grow so accustomed to me that it would just sleep around.' Quinn thought amused.

He started at the tablet and checked his Quest log. There were two main quests still available for Quinn. One to find out what lay beyond a Vampire Lord, only levelling up was taking an incredibly long time these days.

He was also worried that this was something no other vampire had ever reached or heard of before, so when would he evolve again? Level 70? Level 80? Level 100? There were perhaps any other conditions the system wanted him to fulfill?

As for the second quest that was to find out more about the Talen family.

'How do I even start that?' Quinn wondered.

When checking out his system, his eyes went towards one of the items that were there, something he still had no idea what to do with.

'The seedling from the Demon tier beast. I was thinking about putting it somewhere on the Cursed ship so I could observe it, but that might be too dangerous. It would be a catastrophe if it turns into the same Demon tier tree again.' Quinn thought.

He could just try to plant it on the original planet it came from, but none of the inhabitants would want that for obvious reasons. Then there was Blade Island. Currently it was inhabited by no one but a large dragon and beasts.

In the middle of the open ground, Quinn dug a hole, and planted the seed in place covering it up. He really didn't know what to do, or what he expected to happen from the seed now. He just watched it for a few seconds, and then, the ground where it was buried started to light up, glowing slightly pink.

A strong life energy could be felt from it, but at the same time it was only a baby.

'Will this really grow into another Demon tier beast? I guess this island will be the best place to put it, it won't do harm to the tablet, and even if the Dalki attack they would be in for a surprise.' Quinn smirked at the thought.

For a second the dragon turned its head and got up on all fours looking at the area the seed was planted, it looked like it was about to do something, but then soon sat down.

'Did it not like that to put the seed here, maybe that guy from inside the tablet told it to calm down.'

"Hey big guy, I'll be leaving now. Make sure you look after this little seed for me alright. You already protect the tablet so that can't be too hard of a job for you, right?" Quinn asked.

The dragon blew through its nose once. Quinn had no idea if that was supposed to be a yes or no, but one thing was clear, it could somewhat understand what he said.

Going back to the seed Quinn placed his hands on it once again. The higher tier a beast was, the more advanced its intelligence seemed to be, so maybe it was the same with this seedling even though it was a baby.

"Grow up big and strong okay, and when I come back, try not to kill me." Quinn spoke to it softly.

The pink lights shined brightly for a few seconds then dimmed down again.

"I must be going crazy, talking to a seed." Quinn mumbled once he was a bit away.

Chapter 1129: Always getting in the way

After more than a week of relaxation on Blade Island the Cursed group had finally headed off again, back to the main Cursed ship. There they wanted to retrieve further information from Sam on the details of the Demi-god tier humanoid beast.

Humanoid beasts were said to be the strongest type of beast for that specific tier. Not just because of their powers but more so because of the level of intelligence they displayed. Quinn had now fought against two Demon tier beasts, but neither of them had been the humanoid type, so perhaps this would prove to be more difficult than that, in fact he was sure of it for a major reason.

Their goal was not to kill the beast but to capture it. What's more since they planned to use its body, they would have to make sure to keep it as intact as possible. Sure, a healer might be able heal some of its wounds, but that was under the assumption their abilities would work on the beast's body.

Chucky was the last one to enter after taking a toilet break. The room was mostly silent and Quinn could be seen reading a book, as for himself though he didn't really have anything to do, so decided to go to the bar-like setting area and chat with the others.

"So I heard that the Demi-god tier crystal is also near the earth station, right?" Chucky asked. "Does that mean you're going to pay Oscar a visit before landing, or on the way back?"

Quinn placed his book down after folding a corner of the page to remember where he was, and looked up at who had asked the question. Chucky didn't exactly have a memorable voice.

"We will make a stop before confronting the beast. Perhaps Shiro might be able to do something after all, and we can also take the chance to take a look at the others." Quinn replied. "It should further prove that our relationship is not just a superficial one. There is just one troublesome person I would like to avoid."

That person was naturally Innu, the head general that was currently in charge of the Earthborn group. Despite Sam doing his best to smooth things over, it had been apparent that the other didn't trust them for refusing to get revenge on the Dalki.

Shiro was still practising using his ability. He had yet to manage to communicate or wake up Raten and Vorden in Sil's mind. Without that, the whole mission would be useless. The only problem was, that this was considered a different skill to swapping minds and such, and one couldn't really practice this on beasts either, so Shiro was left to read the notes left behind carefully.

'How did they get this much information? They must have really put the Original user of this ability through a lot.' Shiro thought as he looked through the pages, seemingly hoping it might reveal something new to him.

Going by the dried blood stains, he could imagine them practically torturing the man, putting him in life and death situations while another person sat down and wrote notes.

Finally, the ship had arrived at the Cursed base, and everyone was free to relax again once more. A quick update showed that nothing bad had happened to the ship while they had been away, still Quinn wanted everyone to keep on their toes just in case anything was to occur.

However, there were a couple of people that Quinn didn't expect to be around. When he was walking through the halls, he could hear a particular voice from quite a short distance away.

"So how much has changed for you ever since you found out about the existence of the V?" Bonny asked.

"Honestly, not much has changed around here. We continue to operate just as we did before. I trust the leaders, they pay well and so far they haven't shown any signs of planning to break their promise to look after our families even after anything happens to us."

"That's a benefit that not everyone can guarantee, which is why I decided to stay in the first place. The only thing I will say is we don't really interact much with the leader Quinn and most things are done through..." As the man was about to finish his question, the very person he was speaking about was approaching the two of them.

The two that had arrived on the ship in Quinn's absence were Bonny and Void. They had gone to the break room and had explained to Quinn exactly the reason why they were here. It was due to the recent reaction and announcement of the Cursed faction having V amongst them, most prominently Quinn himself.

"Don't you think this is a good idea?" Bonny asked as she took a sip of her coffee. "People are scared after the reveal of the V but as if that wasn't enough, they have also been told that you are our supposed allies. Is it any wonder that most don't know who they are meant to believe now? Showing them the daily life of those in the Cursed faction and telling them what you guys are planning to do, this way people will be less fearful of you!"

As she was saying that, Void walked over and passed a coffee over to Quinn, and his hands were shaking as he handed the cup over. Of course, Quinn placed it right down onto the table. He knew Void was just trying to be polite but he didn't drink that stuff.

It was at that point that Void started to realise all the different small actions of Quinn and certain other people on board.

"If you are wondering, I just drink blood and meat that has been cooked quite rare. We can also taste alcohol as well." Quinn said with a smile. "You can put that in your little interview if you want to spread the word out."

Quinn was trying to be a little playful and it driving home how people viewed them. The fact was even Void was scared of him right now, so he couldn't imagine all the others that were out there as well.

"I assume Sam has already given you permission, so I don't see any reason to revoke it." Quinn sighed. The secret was out, so what was the worst that could happen?

"Actually I was kind of wondering about Quinn. We heard the news about Oscar, it hasn't been announced yet, but are you going to go and try to save him?" Bonny asked.

After what had happened with Owen, Bonny and Void actually had paid a visit to him first, and Owen couldn't shut up about the apparent miracle that Quinn did on him. How he had saved him when no one else could.

So they assumed that perhaps Quinn would be going to Oscar next, and perform something similar. Catching this on video would be sure to change the opinions of everyone around the world.

"Unfortunately Oscar's situation is completely different to Owen's." Quinn admitted. "I will certainly pay him a visit, and there are a couple of things we will try to do to help him, but we have already talked about it and we will make sure that nothing will be done against his will."

In order to travel to the Bertha ship where Oscar was currently receiving medical treatment, the Cursed faction needed to ask for permission and make them aware that they would be coming for a visit.

Of course at the moment the person who was incharge was displeased.

'You're saying those Cursed bastards are planning to visit the Supreme Commander? Do they really expect me to comply when we know what they are?! What if this was all a plan, what if he strikes him on his deathbed or worse, he turns him into one of them?!"

'It could be the end of the human race as we know it, I have to put a stop to the two of them getting it.' Innu worried.

Chapter 1130: Bringing one back

While waiting for a response from the Earthborn group, there was something that Quinn needed to do beforehand anyway. Inside his own personal training room was Logan, Sil, Shiro, Peter, Fex and Layla.

These people were in the room due to their connection with a particular person they were planning to bring back.

'This room looks a lot better than the last time I was in it.' Quinn thought as he noticed the walls were no longer covered in blood.

Shiro was standing on one side of the training room, with Quinn just behind him. While standing opposite the two of them was Sil. Everyone had gathered because today was the day where they were going to run a little test. A test to see if they could wake up Vorden and Raten, who were inside Sil's head.

"If it doesn't work, I won't blame you," Sil said. This had come as a surprise to everyone. Sil was actually the one trying to comfort someone else for a change. Hanging around with Shiro and making a new friend really did help him out.

'I don't want Sil to go back to the way he used to be, if we get back Raten and Vorden, only one mind can be present at a time, and maybe Sil will just go back to the way he was before. This is just a test for now, and we will definitely move them later.'

"Right, I think I have the hang of it now, but it might take a few tries for it to work. I've never done this before." Shiro said. He wasn't worried about using his powers. It was more that he was concerned about disappointing Sil and everyone around.

"We have analysed that there should be less risk at this point," Logan stated. He was looking at some information on holographic screens that would appear in front of him. A copy of the notes was on display, giving him everything he needed. Placing it in his database to bring up whenever he wished.

"Using this type of skill with his ability only requires you and another user. There is little room for problems to occur. Perhaps the worst thing that could happen is that the two of you switch minds, then we would have another problem on our hands.

"Still, we wouldn't have lost the ability. Since even if you were to end up in Sil's body, due to the two of you touching, you would still have the same ability to fix the problem that has occurred. In a way, doing this with Sil due to his ability is probably the safest person one can do it with."

It was clear that Logan's explanation was meant to calm Shiro down, but it didn't help one bit. Still, he had practised for this day and placed his hand on top of Sil's head. Everyone waited silently for a few seconds, and Shiro's hand started to glow slightly.

"It... didn't work," Shiro said, looking at Sil's disappointed face, but Quinn quickly placed his hand on Shiro's shoulder.

"It didn't work yet," Quinn said.

They repeated the process over and over again, and Shiro carefully tried to remember how to use the skill. Even Logan would reiterate the words and how the ability user of the past felt when using this skill.

After several tries, it seemed like Shiro had finally gotten somewhere. His body was currently in a dark room, or it was safer to say that his mind was. He had done this several times and had gotten to this step, but before, he couldn't see anyone. Now he saw something for the first time.

Two glowing lights out there in the Dark space. As he reached out to them, his hand went through it like it was nothing.

'I thought that would work. What should I do?' Shiro thought.

He was unsure if this would work, but maybe things were complex because several minds were in one. Instead of swapping minds like he had done before. On the outside, he was already using the ability and had to concentrate. Focus on using the body while exploring the black space.

But what if this version of him, the one in the black space, also needed to use the ability. Shiro held out his hand again, touching the bright ball of light. Then his hands started to glow, and he was transported inside of another Dark space.

Only he wasn't alone, and another could be seen.

"What is this?" The person said as he turned around. Am I dreaming? I've been alone in this place for so long, but I've never seen anyone before, and I don't even recognise you?"

The speaking boy looked identical to Sil, only he stood quite confident, tall and had a calm look about him.

'Based on what Sil said about the other two people, this one should be Vorden. He said Raten would start cursing at me the second I entered.'

"My name is Shiro, and I'm part of the Cursed faction. Quinn sent me here to see you. He's been looking for you for a long time now." Shiro said.

At first, Borden was taken aback, but then the largest grin possible on his face appeared.

"They've been looking for me, and this whole time as well? What good friends." Vorden replied as he wiped his face with the sleeve of his shirt.

"My ability has allowed me to come into here. I think we can bring you back to the way you were before so the three of you can occupy Sil's mind. Right now, the group is looking for a body to transfer you into, and it looks like he might have found something..."

Shiro explained Quinn's plan, how he wanted to move him into a humanoid beast. Initially, when Vorden had made his decision, he did so for everyone. Not just Sil, but he wanted to protect them all and knew he wasn't strong enough to do it.

At the time, he really didn't know what would happen to him. He was stuck in a black room similar to the one before, only he was alone with no way to see or do anything. In here, he had a lot of time to think, and he missed his friends dearly.

"I can wait a little longer," Vorden said. "I don't care. Quinn can put me in a regular beast for all I care if it works out. I just want to see everyone again, but I think it would be best to leave me be for now. It sounds like that they might need Sil if they plan to capture this powerful beast alive. Our reunion can wait."

When speaking, Shiro could tell Vorden sounded like he was in pain. He knew he desperately wanted to get out of this place. Shiro had never seen a stronger person in his life. Despite all this, he was still willing to make a sacrifice for the whole sake of the Cursed faction.

"I promise, I Promised Sil and Quinn I would bring you back, so I will be back!" Shiro shouted.

"Oh, before you go, don't worry about the other one. If he knows, he will just complain about it and make him even madder. Let it be a nice surprise for when he's finally free." Borden said, speaking about Raten.

Finally, leaving the Dark space, Shiro was now in Sil's Dark space, then he had to leave once more. Opening his eyes, he was finally back in the regular room.

"I did it!" Shiro said with excitement, but his forehead and the side of his head was sweating, sweat dripping onto the floor, and Quinn was right behind him, having caught him. Not even Shiro had noticed he had expanded all of his MC cells and a lot of energy doing such a thing that he had fallen over.

"I spoke to Vorden...both in there." Shiro managed to say before passing out and going into a deep sleep.

Sil had already summoned a wave of tears from his eyes, and he was drenching his shirt sleeve, trying to cover it up.

'It looks like they both are still there, now we just need two more humanoid beasts, and we can get all of them back. Just you wait.' Quinn thought.

'Two more?' Vincent replied.

'Don't you remember what I said before, Vincent? We're getting you a body as well.'

Chapter 1131: The Green's power

If Quinn had claimed he wasn't worried about the whole Vorden and Raten situation, he would have been lying. He was incredibly worried as he had no clue what had really happened to them, only Sil's account on the matter.

Finally Shiro brought them the confirmation they needed, that the two of them were both still present in Sil's mind. Now, everything they had done and everything they were going to do wouldn't be in vain.

The one most happy about it was undoubtedly Sil. Ever since he was practically walking around the base with a hop and skip in his steps. He greeted everyone that walked past. It was almost like he had turned into a completely different person, on top of that, he would constantly ask Shiro, what Vorden said, and how he was doing, even asking Shiro to speak to him again.

Shiro would have been happy to oblige, but using his ability had taken a toll on him and Quinn had ordered him to rest for the time being. Every human was born with a certain amount of MC cells, and it looked like Shiro had almost hit his maximum with doing what he needed to do.

Still, Sil wasn't the only one that was over the moon with this information. Little Borden was as excited that he would finally see his brother again. There was also other good news for him as the syringes of serum were able to be made from Logan. Right now it was just a temporary measure though. Logan was still trying to further improve on it, so that they could bring Borden back to his full size.

Finally, with all that done on the Cursed ship it was time for the group to move out again. The original gang who all knew Vorden was insistent that they wanted to come with Quinn. Logan, Fex, Layla, Peter, Sil and of course Shiro.

However, due to Wevil and Linda still being away with Alex who was crafting the Demon tier weapon, Quinn had asked Peter to stay behind once again.

"I'm sorry that it's you again, Peter, but you have to understand I'm only asking you to stay behind because of how strong you have become. You've been training with Nate, right? Improving how to fight?" Quinn tried to explain the reason behind his choice.

Peter ultimately agreed to follow the order and was currently seeing Quinn and the group off as they were boarding a medium sized ship. One that would be used for commercial flights. They weren't traveling far or heading into battle so it made sense for them to not waste resources.

"You know I was told that a normal Wight's stats usually hit a limit, and that they are able to be as strong as the leader to a certain extent, but you keep on improving and you are just as strong as me. With your healing abilities and if you carry on improving your martial arts, I think anyone that tries to take over this ship will regret it." Quinn said, giving him a few pats on the back.

In the past Quinn used to be worried about Peter a lot, especially after turning him since his personality had changed quite a bit, but lately, as he got stronger bit by bit, his friend became able to display more emotions, and he could tell these few words that Quinn said had pleased him.

Regardless, whether Quinn said them just to please him or not, he was very serious about his words.

"Take this Quinn, maybe you'll need it." Peter said as he handed over the Mud mask, Peter's soul weapon. "You don't have to put it on straight away, and who knows when you might need to use it. People don't exactly like us at the moment."

Of course, Quinn took it and thanked Peter for the gesture. It was indeed a valuable item and thing to be able to change into another. Using his shadow, the Mud mask was one of the things that could be stored just like any other regular item, so Quinn could equip it on when needed.

"Just wondering, don't you have to decide who will disguise me as before you make it?" Quinn asked.

"It was.....what was his name again?" Peter thought. "Bucky."

Quinn smiled, and gave a wave to Peter as he walked towards the ship.

"I think it's Chucky."

There were two more that were on board that weren't exactly a part of the Cursed crew. There was Bonny and Void, who wished to document everything he was doing, at least him meeting Oscar.

The ship was off and started to head to the Bertha ship that Oscar was apart on. The message had been sent and the Earthborn group had already accepted their request. Getting some information from Sam. The Demi-god tier humanoid beast had been discovered on one of the Earthborn planets.

'Just our luck that the Demi-god tier had to have been found on an Earthborn planet... couldn't have been one belonging to the Cursed faction or the Greylash.' Quinn sighed internally.

Although the good news was everything they needed to do was close by.

During the trip, Bonny and Void were looking over the video that they had uploaded. It was doing well and was currently the most watched and hot topic at the moment. The small little documentary they had done on the Cursed ship, asking about how the crew had felt living alongside the Cursed faction's V. The only problem was, the comments weren't exactly positive about the whole thing.

"Of course those from the Cursed faction are going to talk good things about them."

"Maybe they have some blood plant going on where they take their blood, or they're being forced to give those types of answers."

"What was the point of this? This whole thing feels like propaganda. Why are we just getting the view of the people from the Cursed ship? Did anyone else notice that the leaders hardly said anything?"

The Cursed faction was a strange group that always seemed to gather attention in one way or another. There were always people that felt their methods were contradictory so they didn't have the perfect record. Bonny honestly wanted to change that, but one video alone wasn't enough.

'The whole world is watching and wanting to know what you will do next, Quinn. You need to make them believe you can help them.' Bonny thought as she looked towards him.

Finally, the ship had arrived in the area of where the giant Bertha ship was, and it could be seen ahead, but there was something strange going on. As a fleet of ships had also come straight towards them, around ten small ones. These weren't regular ships either, or a commercial one like Quinn was currently flying with no weapons, these were ones that were agile and used for combat.

Then in front of them, there was a larger ship that was currently a quarter size of the big Bertha one. It was what the military had used in the past before the Bertha to transport a number of troops.

"This is Sergeant Malkuris of the Earthborn group speaking. I have been instructed by Head General Innu for you guys to make a little detour before heading to see the supreme commander. Please land on the ship in front of you beforehand."

Looking at the situation Logan went to console and looked at the radar around them. They could see that the fleet of ships went from the front and began to surround them in a type of circle.

"Quinn." Logan turned around to tell him that this whole thing reeked.

"I know, something is up." The other casually replied. The two of them were already making preparations to prepare for what was about to come. As Quinn went to grab something from a different room.

Then, all of the ships had finally circled around them. The lasers had lit up from each of the ships as they powered on.

"I will get rid of the V!" Innu shouted. "Fire!"

Seeing this, everyone on board was in a state of panic. Right now they were in the middle of space. If the ship was destroyed and they got shot down, they would all die in an instant. They needed to protect the ship, or Quinn needed to protect the people at all costs.

'How the hell do I do that!' Quinn thought, while he was still in the middle of getting ready.

"Doesn't this ship have any weapons?" Void panicked as he ran up to the command console as well, but it really was just a commercial flying vehicle. Since they were travelling to a friendly zone, Logan had suggested they keep all the battleships on the Cursed faction.

"Don't worry Quinn, I can deal with this one!" Logan said, as his eyes started to light up green, and a light was shining from his chest as it went all over his body.

'Is this, Logan's soul weapon?' Quinn wondered.

Chapter 1132: Logan activate

With the amount of lasers that were pointed towards them, their small little ship would be destroyed in an instant. Quinn could probably save himself somehow using the shadow ability and at most a few others. However even that was a big if, and he didn't intend to leave anyone behind.

"These bastards, why are they attacking us?!" Quinn shouted in anger. He had already expected Innu to pull some stupid stunt to harass him, but he hadn't thought a head general could be crazy enough to outright execute the visitors.

Quinn quickly went to grab one of the space suits. It was quite fitting to the skin allowing the person to move about as they would do on earth. They also used a special jet pack of sorts on the back, that would allow for movement in space as well, but still the moment wasn't quite the same, and it would be near impossible for a single person to go fighting them all, but Quinn had to do something.

After putting on the suit that was all white in colour, he came back out and could see Logan at the console, his eyes glowing green, and the centre of his chest glowing.

'It's his soul weapon.' Quinn thought.

When the light diminished, Logan's hair was standing up and his eyes lit up green. His soul weapon was an enhancement type, which powered his abilities greatly and due to his ability it was quite unique in its own way.

"Quinn, I'll help you out!" Logan shouted, and soon Quinn was seen going through the airlock space, and exiting out of the spaceship. He quickly used the jets to propel him forward, and climb himself up onto the ship landing there.

'Damn it, it would have been useful to have learned how to use this thing during my second year of school.' Quinn regretted not having had this opportunity, as he slightly overshot where he wanted to go, but seeing a piece of the ship sticking out, he was able to grab on and pull himself forward.

A normal person with their strength wouldn't be able to hold on, as the force from the jet pack was too strong, but Quinn managed to do so with a single hand. He pulled himself forward to see all the ships surrounding them, but he noticed something else as well.

The outside of their ship was almost transforming into something. It started to resemble one of Logan's robotic spiders and then started to take shape in the form of a turret. This didn't just happen in one area but multiple areas.

Back inside the ship, Logan was concentrating hard.

"Bring me as many beast crystals as possible, I need to use them to power my weapons." Logan instructed, and Layla and the others were moving as quickly as they could as they headed into the storage to bring out the crystals.

Logan had figured out how to use his soul weapon a while ago, but the problem was it didn't seem that useful so he didn't really know how to use it for combat. His natural ability already allowed him to communicate with machinery and order them around.

Which was why he could show great power when he was surrounded by different types of technology and made it so his suits were made up from the small spiders. However, he couldn't do the same with other equipment.

He couldn't change or transform a computer into something else. His soul weapon allowed Logan to have complete control of the matter that he was touching, and also to turn it into a computer like system.

With Brock the two of them had practiced, to find a way this could be used. The easiest thing that Logan could do was to transform something electronic into his little spiders and then use them to form into something else.

Logan always had his own type of computer system with him at all times in the form of his suits. Which carried vital information with him wherever he went. He had multiple blueprints and designs of things he wanted to create.

Simply bringing up the blueprint and commanding the robotic spiders, Logan could turn these into them. What he also found was just like his suits which could be powered using the crystals, as long as he was touching crystals, he could also power whatever the small spiders turned into.

Temporary giving them the same effect. Whatever his spiders created, while holding the beast crystal it would essentially be the same level of beast gear for it.

On top of that there was one more thing his soul weapon could do, and that was transform non objects temporally into computerised objects. Something as simple as a book he could turn into a computer system to then be broken down into the spiders, either adding it to his own suit to create something significant or more.

This would use up more of his MC cells though, and would mean he would have less time to control things. For this reason, while he was on the ship that was already controlled using a computer system Logan was completely in his element.

He had transformed it to create five cannons, to combat those that were against them. He also changed his suit into a fourth form, which created a large thick tube on his back that would directly touch his skin as well.

This form was for when he was using his soul weapons. The others were placing the crystal into this tube and Logan was able to use the power of them all. As soon as the enemy fired out there shots. Logan did as well.

They both hit mid-space causing huge explosions. The attack was a little too close to the ship and it looked like they were going to get hit slightly, but with Quinn at the top, he had spread his shadow all along the ship, covering it from the explosion, then soon let it go again.

'If I didn't have as many MC cells as I do now, this probably would never work, and what the hell is Logan's soul weapon?' Quinn thought.

Still, they needed to focus on the problem ahead of them. The ships were too far for Quinn to hit with any type of attack, and the cannon's seemed to be equal in power.

However, when Quinn noticed that some of the turrets started to turn into something else, something Quinn recognised quite well.

'Are those... Mechs?! Is Logan controlling unmanned mechs now?!"

Half of the turrets were still on the ship, while the Mech's began to fly into space. While Logan was continuing to fire shots after his first attack, the shadow from Quinn could protect them like some type of shield, and the mechs could do the rest.

This made it so the enemy had to focus on one of two things. Either firing off and hitting the Mechs that were flying about, or the Cannons. No matter which one they would choose to focus on, the other would destroy their ship.

This had worked out perfectly. Some of the ships started to move to avoid the Mechs, but then a shot from a cannon destroyed it.

Quinn was blocking some of the shots being fired from the other ships with his shadow, while Logan continued to fire, controlling everything at the same time.

Since Logan's ability allowed him to communicate, he could program the mechs and turrets to act in a certain way, so there wasn't too much control he needed to expand on this part, other than the distribution of energy.

Eventually this continued, as the fleet's ships were destroyed one after the other, and finally only the large ship remained.

"Logan, can you hear me? Dock on board the large ship." Quinn ordered. "Bring back the Mechas. Let's take down whoever pulled this crap on us in person!"

Everyone inside the ship, as they watched what had happened, were relieved. They still couldn't believe how they had just managed to get out of that pinch. As for Bonny she was worried because she had never heard Quinn sound so furious before.

'I remember what Arthur told me. I can't allow myself to remain soft to the people who actively try to kill me!' Quinn reminded himself, as the ship rushed forward. It looked like the two were going to crash, but with Logan in control and with his soul weapon out, it seemed he could do all sorts of things.

As it slowed down and the two of them were connecting. Logan could override the other ship's system, and forcefully opened the docking bay. Then finally they had finally landed inside.

Still on top of the ship, Quinn looked at all the panicked workers who were inside.

"SPEAK!! WHO THE HELL ORDERED THIS ATTACK?!" Quinn demanded to know.

Chapter 1133: An upgrade in powers

Inside the ship, many of those around Logan wanted to hug him as he put his soul weapon away. He was kneeling on the floor, gasping for air. In fact, Fex actually went up and hugged Logan in a bear-like grasp.

"We made it man, you are the coolest little guy out there!" Fex said, but it was clear that his shaking of Logan was just making him sick, and Layla eventually had to tell Fex to stop.

"I hope that idiot didn't shake you too much," Layla said as she placed Logan in one of the operating seats near the command centre. "Seriously though, you were really amazing. I've never seen you do something like that before. Was that your soul weapon?" She asked.

"Yes, any object I can control with my body, after breaking them down into my little machines. They can then be used to create whatever blueprint I have." Logan explained. No matter how tired he was, he was always willing to tell people how his little inventions worked.

"Wait, anything? So those little mech robots we saw, could you have created a bigger one, or even made the whole ship into a giant fighting Mech!" Fex shouted, still having not calmed down.

"Yes," Logan replied. "The only reason I didn't was because everyone was still inside. I can use those robots to even improve my suits, just as long as I have the crystals to back them up. I guess it's an advantage because I can keep changing the forms, unlike when beast weapons are produced, but a disadvantage since the beast crystals energy will be completely used up."

They understood what Logan was saying. They could see that the crystals they had given Logan no longer had the bright glow they usually would have. They were the crystal that was also meant to power the ship as well.

While everyone was busy celebrating, the ramp could be heard being dropped from their ship. Two people on board were eager to go out. Bonny and Void who had their camera and his drone rolling.

"What are you doing? They just tried to kill us?" Shiro said, still not understanding why the Earthborn group would have attempted such a thing. He was a little afraid to step off the ship.

"That's why we need to catch everything," Bonny replied. "Quinn is still out there, and if I was him, I would be pretty pissed at what just happened. If that's the case, then who knows what is going to happen to whoever is responsible. If we don't get the truth out, then the world will only know that the Cursed faction had attacked the Earthborn when that is not true at all."

"Don't worry about that," Logan said, having recovered a little as he got up from his seat. "This ship has an auto-record function. I thought something like this might happen eventually. I managed to record everything. Including their voices on the intercom before the attack. I'll pass you the video along, and you can make a nice edit."

With the ramp down, everyone decided to head off the ship along with Bonny and Void, and they could see Quinn standing there with his shadow behind his back.

Fex was carrying Logan on his back. They couldn't leave him behind in the state he was in. He had his Dalki hand, but who knows what could happen.

"Is no one going to answer me?" Quinn asked, his voice echoing off the metal.
"You just attempted to take our lives, and I can't even see the person responsible?"

The men were unsure how to act at that moment, but there was one thing for sure. The fleet they had just sent out, all the men on board had been killed, and they knew what Quinn was. They started to remember the speech Innu had given to them all beforehand.

"They are not like us! They are not human but V!" Innu said. "If you give them a chance, they will take not only your life but that of your family as well without a second thought! Look at what happened to Oscar, to Sach. This was all because they chose to trust the V!"

Due to these words ringing in their head, they immediately started to attack with their multiple abilities. The Earthborn group was composed mostly of the original military personnel, so the majority had the once military exclusive earth ability.

However, they could do nothing but watch their attacks hit the large shadow that seemed endless to them. They could see everything sinking into it and then being redirected to a different place. They attempted to even attack those behind Quinn, but the shadow would rise behind them before they could do anything.

"A monster, we can't hurt him! He's a monster!" They shouted as they continued on.

Quinn then looked at them all with his eyes glowing red and was suddenly in front of two of them up on a ramp above.

"Sleep!" Quinn commanded. The two felt drowsy as something took over their heads and collapsed to the floor.

"Get out of the way!"

"Move!"

Quinn continued with simple commands as he walked from the docking bay and continued to head towards the command centre. He would continue to use his Influence skill controlling each one of them while at the same time not lifting up a finger. Only the shadow would be used to stop the attacks.

"Hey, are you getting all of this? He is somehow able to control them all with just simple words." Bonny whispered over to Void.

She was worried how this would play out if the world saw how strong Quinn was, but at the same time, something else stood out as well, and it was the fact that Quinn hadn't hurt a single one. He just had just incapacitated them via his orders.

[Your Influence skill has levelled up]

[When using the Influence skill no longer requires you to keep eye contact]

[The skill can now be used in a wide range]

[Its effectiveness depends on how close one is, how fearful they are, and the user's charm stat point.]

It was a skill Quinn didn't even know could level up, part of the reason he hadn't used it that much in the first place, but on this ship, he had used it more than he had expected.

'It's a bit vague with its explanation, but let's see how it goes.'

Finally, he had arrived in front of a sealed door that led to the command centre, but with Logan, it didn't matter; he could unlock it. Even if they couldn't, Quinn could bash it open with his fist.

As the door was unlocked, the open area of the command centre could be seen. Inside, there was Innu in his full beast gear surrounded by ten men, ready to use their abilities and weapons.

"Attack him!" Innu shouted.

"Everyone, lie on the floor!" Quinn commanded, with his eyes glowing red, and in an instant, everyone in front dropped to the floor, as if an invisible weight had been put on their shoulders.

All but one. Innu was resisting the command, his legs shaking.

"You can stay up," Quinn said, looking towards him.

"Haha, I knew you were like this. I knew it was right to try and get rid of you!" Innu said, looking at them all. "I'm trying to save all of our lives. I will gladly sacrifice myself and all these men again if it's to save the human race!"

"Has something gone wrong with him?" Shiro said as he could tell something wasn't quite right. It was like he was almost purely afraid of Quinn and the others.

"From the first time we met, I've never liked you," Quinn revealed. "But back when the Dalki attacked, before you knew what I really was, you had come by my side and helped me fight them. We both worked together side by side, killing the Dalki."

"What's so different now? Shouldn't the enemy of your enemy be your friend? Why should it matter if I'm human or not?" Quinn asked.

"Isn't the answer obvious? You were working with the Dalki! Who would believe you could kill that many? Now I also understand, why you came to the school! You knew they were going to attack. You even told us beforehand! I should have known then. That fake Richard Eno you sent... the two of you... no, ALL THE V MUST BE WORKING TOGETHER!" Innu shouted and continued to laugh while shaking in fear.

He knew at this point that he could do nothing to stop Quinn.

"Back then, I saw you save the children and help me fight against the Dalki," Quinn said "Deep down, you must have thought to have done the right thing for the sake of humanity. I can't exactly fault you for that."

For a brief second, Innu had stopped shaking as there was a sign of relief ahead.

Was Quinn really going to let him go? Maybe he had been too rash with this attack, but he could build up trust in the future. He could get rid of the V easier then. His only mistake had been that he had never expected them to fight so well in space, but as long as he was kept alive, he could come back again.

Quinn looked him in the eye again and clenched his fist.

"However, when you attacked our ship, you didn't just go after my life. You went after the life of everyone on that ship. My comrades who are all dear to my life and I can not allow that to happen again!"

Chapter 1134: Defeated by fear

Right behind Quinn, everyone was watching him waiting to see what he would do. It was an important moment, but they trusted Quinn with whatever decision he was about to make.

At the same time, Bonny and Void were hot on the group's heels, filming every moment of what was happening. So far, Quinn had been calm enough to not kill anyone on board the ship.

'Will he also let Innu go, even after attempting to kill us all. Honestly, if it wasn't for Logan and Quinn back there, me and Void would have died as well!'

Quinn was furious, he could have snapped Innu's neck there in front of everyone, and he was angry enough to kill everyone involved as well, but he also knew that somewhere deep down, the soldiers were just scared and felt like this was the right thing to do in their minds.

However, a certain person had told them to pull the trigger, amplifying the fear of them all, and that was Innu himself.

With him being filmed, Quinn had to be careful how he acted. He couldn't just act on rage. Sure he could ask Bonny and Void to delete this part of the video since it wasn't broadcasted live. They would probably comply as well, but then there would be questions.

Either way, people would find out about what happened today, and if they only had footage of the first half, then rumours would start to spread. Often rumours were worse than the actual truth.

'What do I do with him! I can't just let him go free!' Quinn thought, his eyes still glowing red. The anger and fear were being directed to Innu. No words had been spoken, so he wasn't silent due to the influence. Innu knew that if he made a wrong move or tried to escape, he would be finished off in a second.

'Do I let Oscar deal with him, but we don't even know if Oscar will wake up again? I could use his body, then we wouldn't need to hunt for another humanoid beast. This person is trash and useless anyway, but that would mean Shiro would have to get involved. I wouldn't want to put Shiro through that.'

In the end, Quinn thought it might be best to allow Oscar to deal with this one if he was awake, but Quinn looked into Innu's eyes one more time, and he could tell. The hatred in his eyes was the same way people felt towards the a and how Quinn felt towards those who had bullied him for a long time.

Inuu wouldn't give up here. He would continue to fight. For some reason, he truly hated vampires.

"You really hate us that much?" Quinn asked as he walked over to Innu, and whispered telling him to kneel. Due to them making eye contact, the influence skill was a lot more powerful, and Innu couldn't fight it, falling to his knees.

At this point, Innu knew that perhaps his time was up.

"I'll kill-

"Shut up!" Quinn said as he walked over and leant down to eye level with Innu. At the same time, he made sure to use his body to block the camera. Quinn had then cut the tip of his finger and shoved it quickly into Innu's mouth before the camera could see anything. Then just before leaving, he stabbed the top of Innu's thigh with his clawed hands, falling to the ground. Not a large enough wound to kill him.

[The Blood ritual has been activated]

"Let's see what you are like when you become the thing that you have grown to hate," Quinn whispered.

Innu's eyes opened wide, and he wanted to shout, to say something but the order from before had kept it shut.

"I wondered why you hated us so much," Quinn said out loud, standing up and making it clear so everyone could hear him, including the camera. "Oscar and Owen have both claimed that the Cursed faction, although we are V, we are on your side. So why did you suddenly attack us? Why did you disobey Oscar's order?"

While Quinn was saying all of this, something strange was happening to Inuu's body. He could feel it changing inside him as he spoke. The pain was real, but the influence skill was still working, and his mouth refused to open.

"However, he didn't tell you one thing, that us V who are on your side can tell if there is another one among us. Of course, we have been open in telling everyone who we are. Now that we have come here, I have come to realise that the reason you so badly wanted to make out why you were against the V, is because you are one yourself. You were trying to fool everyone!" Quinn said.

He walked up to one of the men who was on the floor and lifted him up. He then cancelled the influence skill on all the others that were on the floor as well. They were slightly confused by Quinn's words, so they didn't act out.

Quinn's plan was working, and he waited just for the right moment when the evolution was complete.

He cut the palm of the soldier's hand, the blood dripping onto the floor.

"Do you remember what Oscar said, that the V reacts to the scent of blood? You see, we V of course are not affected by this, because we did everything we could to stop ourselves from being consumed by this curse, but some of the other V that are working with the Dalki, are consumed by blood like a lust."

Breaking the influence skill off from Innu, his eyes started to glow red, as he became a vampire for the first time. He had never experienced the smell of blood before. Quinn had purposely made wounds in his thigh so he would experience blood loss, craving for the blood even more. At the same time, due to what had happened, he was consumed with anger, unable to control his emotions.

His eyes had turned red, he could feel the fangs on his body, and immediately he started to run towards the soldier by Quinn's side.

Quinn, doing nothing, watched the shoulder, drew his beast sword, and was ready to attack Innu.

However, before he could get close, one of the other soldiers blasted Innu with an energy blast, an ability.

"It's true, Head General Innu was a V in disguise!" He shouted.

Innu didn't know what was happening, but he just wanted to get the blood in front of him. With his mind a little clear, he attempted to use his ability, but nothing was working. His Mc cells were gone.

"Everyone, fire!" the soldiers said. They threw and used their abilities one after another. With Innu having nothing, he was hit over and over again. It didn't take long until he eventually died there on the spot, falling to the ground, unable to heal.

'He was the one who had planted the fear of the V into his own men, and now he has died due to that very fear they had. Although a bit cruel, this death is fitting for him. I can't say it wasn't deserved.' Vincent said as he tried to rationalise why Quinn had done what he had done.

The others were left a bit stunned, they were unsure about what to do, and due to Quinn turning Innu, they thought maybe he would get him to work for them. They could also feel the bond activating as they were near Innu, but the ten high-level ability users that were at the level of sergeants had defeated Innu far too quickly for them to be able to do anything.

"Did you get everything?" Quinn asked, turning to the camera Void was using, and Void just nodded along.

"Remember, although we are V, we are on your side, and we are also the best in fighting against them. You may not like us, but we are something that you need. Let's go see how Oscar is doing." Quinn said as he went off.

Bony and Void stood there along with the sergeants, not knowing what to do, who to trust.

'How will the people react to this?' Bonny thought.

Chapter 1135: Finish the story

It was clear that the soldiers in the room were at a loss of what to do. They stood there staring at each other, waiting for the next one to speak up, someone to take command. It was a rare sight, seeing their feelings were clearly being put out on display.

Right now, the reporter inside of Bonny wanted to speak to each of them. To see how they were feeling, but this story wasn't over yet. Sure she could make a video about the Cursed with what had happened so far, but she had a feeling that there was still a little more that Quinn was going to do.

"Come on, we have to film the rest of this story." As the two of them turned around, she said to Void and went along to catch up with Quinn and the others. Who's next destination was the Bertha ship to see Oscar.

They didn't have long to travel on the ship. They could even see the Bertha through the window ahead of them. Yet, there was still this awkward silence between all of them who were there until Layla had to say something.

"Quinn, he tried to kill us. I don't think what you did was wrong, and I guess you did it for us. A way so our hands wouldn't get dirty." Layla said. Trying to cheer Quinn up, but honestly, he wasn't thinking about Innu too much, but what would happen after.

"What will become of the Earthborn group, right?" Logan said as he was enjoying a nice lie down, making his chair vertical so he could see only the ship's ceiling. He was hoping that they wouldn't get any more surprises along the way.

"The main leaders of the Earthborn group, there is a good chance that none of them is fit to lead anymore." Logan went on to explain. "We don't know what state Oscar is in, but apparently such a bad state that he allowed something like that to happen. Then his daughter Samantha is probably heartbroken, and Sach, we don't know what he is like either."

"From Sam, it sounded like Innu had temporarily taken control of the Earthborn group, and Quinn... sorry not Quinn, but due to his own actions, Innu has ended up dead. There is no leader of the Earthborn group currently, at least no clear one. What tends to happen in a situation like this is either someone takes over they can all agree on, or there are internal disputes until a new leader rises."

Internal disputes at a time like this. The Earthborn group was the largest group out of the three. If they were to fight internally, then a large chunk of their attack force against the Dalki would be gone. As usual, sooner or later, the blame would get pinned on a particular faction.

"I wanted to ask this question as well." Bonny piped up. "Sure, we all know that Innu was the one that attacked us first, and although I don't believe in killing others, he did attempt to take all of our lives. You handled it well, not harming the crew members and only dealing with the single person responsible.

"But I can say this because I am looking through things with a clear mind. During times of war, people's minds aren't so clear. Did you have something planned for after dealing with Innu? You must have known what state the Earthborn group would have been in."

"Cool your head and just chill with all the questions, hot stuff." Fex said, as he went over to Quinn and wrapped his arm around his shoulder, "And you did good dealing with the situation. If you had done it vampire style, every single one of them would have died, so they should be thankful.

"The Cursed group can just take over the other army groups. We already have two of them, and Nathan and Hayley trust us, right? So why won't the others?"

Bonny scoffed at the naive thought from Fex, but what she didn't realise was that, unlike the others, Fex was a vampire from birth, not understanding how humans felt.

"You saw how Innu reacted. Do you think he's the only one that feels this way?" Bonny asked, "The Dalki are an alien race, and for some people, they view the V as the same. Do you think they would be happy with the Cursed faction taking over? You should see the comments on the videos I uploaded if you really want to see what people think about you."

Tapping her watch a few times, a large holographic display appeared, and then several smaller screens filled with comments had come up. Everyone could now read them and see what the world thought of them.

It was heartbreak for the group to see the comments. All they had done was risk their lives fighting in hopes to save the world for these people, and this was their reward.

Sam knew that seeing such things would demoralise them, and he also knew that their group was far too busy to even have time to look at such things. This was why he had kept it to himself. The only other person who knew about the negative comments was Logan.

"Screw them all!" Fex said. "Quinn, you do this to help all of us. You know what you're doing is right, and we know that everything we have done is for the sake of these people. These keyboard warriors can shove the damn thing up their backside."

"So this is what people think about me?" Quinn was relieved and just smiled. "You know, for some reason, it doesn't hurt too much. Maybe it's because when I was a level 1, I would be called trash, worthless, an oxygen stealer, but now there is attention on what we are doing, I will take this as a good thing, and Bonny, don't worry about the Earthborn group.

"We will solve this issue one way or another."

When they had finally arrived on the large Bertha ship, their treatment compared to what had happened with Innu was utterly different. There was a group of people there to welcome them, but something odd was going on.

"Quinn, I am so sorry!" A man said as he charged in with a few others. Pushing past the initial introduction group. This man was someone that Quinn hadn't seen for a while and was one of the generals at the second base, Nathan. He now also worked under the Cursed faction and was in charge of one of the army groups given to them.

"We could see what had happened, on our radar, but Innu's rank, he's.." Nathan said in a panic. It was clear that perhaps there was already infighting going on in the Earthborn group with Oscar gone. Sooner or later, if nothing was done, there would be a collapse.

In the first place, the two army groups that belonged to the Cursed faction were given by Oscar. They weren't wholly loyal to the Cursed faction. If it wasn't solved, the Cursed wouldn't know who to trust either.

"It's okay, Nathan. We could tell that Innu had used his own personal group for the attack. I will just assume that no one else knew about it." Quinn said.

When he finished, Nathan was peeking his head, looking at those coming off the ship as if he was expecting someone.

"Where is Head general Innu? We will bring him in and give him the appropriate punishment. I will talk to Samantha-"

"He's dead," Quinn said. "Bonny has the video of everything that went on and can explain things later. Please take me to the others right now, we should worry about those who are alive:"

Although Nathan was shocked, he felt like it had to be true. He wanted to ask more questions, but there was a certain air around Quinn and the others. It was as if the group were in business mode.

"I understand," Nathan said.

The group were quickly brought to the medical bay. It was mostly filled with white light, and the walls were coloured the same. There wasn't a single speck of dirt anywhere in the rooms, and they were now walking down a hallway with several large oval doors.

"First, I will take you to see Head General Sach since he is a bit more responsive," Nathan said. Putting in a code by the side of the oval door. A beep was heard, and the door slid down into the ground.

They could see that Sach was being cared for by machinery mostly, while only two people were left to monitor him, but he was conscious as he turned his head to look at the others. Still. His body was not in a good state. His arms and legs were completely wrapped up in metal casing.

"Quinn," Sach called out, a little excited, but then his mood seemed to dampen just as quickly.

"It looks like you put up quite the fight against the Dalki to end up in this state," Quinn said, trying to lighten the mood. Although Quinn wasn't close to Sach, he was close to his other side, his role-playing teacher in the power fighters game.

"I wish. I tried everything on that Dalki, but there was nothing I could do." Sach replied as he tried to move parts of his body, but it was useless. "You know, I thought my martial arts were the best in the world, and when I saw you using them, I felt even more so.

"As long as someone could keep advancing the martial arts, improving upon it, nothing could stand in my way until I met the five spiked Dalki. My ability strengthens my body, and since then, I have never broken a bone in my life.

"Now, look at me. My whole body has been shattered, and they say it's due to my ability that they can't heal it or put it back together? Nothing can work."

It was a sorry state to see someone like this, and all of them imagined if they were put in the same situation, they would feel the same way.

"Quinn," Sach said as he looked up at him. "I....I already asked you one favour, and it's shameful for me to ask you for another, but I heard you were able to heal Owen. Can you heal me?"

For a second, Quinn could see the hope in Sach's eyes. Quinn placed his hand on top of his legs to see if Sach was suffering from the same thing as Owen was, but this was different. He wasn't partially infected. As the doctors said, it looked more like his indestructible ability made it so healing techniques wouldn't work.

Abilities and the human body were a strange thing, and honestly. The way his body was, he wasn't sure that technology could heal this unless he was to turn mostly into a robot man.

From the look on Quinn's face, he could tell that it wasn't an option. He hadn't given up yet.

"I heard from a report from Samantha," Sach said. "That the teacher known as Fex was badly injured, and when he was given blood, all the wounds on his body had healed. I'm assuming he is a V. If I was turned, would I be healed?" Sach asked.

This was the second part of the story Bonny was looking for, as she and Void continued to film it all.

Chapter 1136: The odds

After seeing how Innu reacted after finding out about what the V were, Quinn had been sure that most other people would share his underlying fear of the V. So much so that he never imagined that Sach would voluntarily ask to be turned.

Unfortunately, there was an underlying problem even if Quinn did agree to Sach's request. He had plenty of spaces left to turn others, numbering 18 as of now.

Whenever someone Quinn had turned died, one of the available slots would return to him as well. Turning Innu hadn't caused any problems in that department, but the troublesome fact was that he had no way to control what Sach would turn into.

'You were a little lucky when you turned Innu, but you can't guarantee that Sach will turn into a vampire as well. He could turn into something else.' Vincent cautioned Quinn, just reconfirming his worries.

During the mass turning of Paul's men one of them turned by Quinn had ended up a Wendigo, and they had no choice but to put him down before he could cause any damage to those around him. From his experience the most common results were Halflings and Vampires depending on the strength of those turned.

Still, there had been a few who had turned into something different. In Innu's case, Quinn had already been prepared to use his mind control to make him act a little crazy should he have turned into anything but a vampire.

The only rare form that could be explained away was something like a Dhampir, but so far Erin had been the only one which meant the chances were incredibly low. Either way, the problem was that there was no guarantee that Sach would turn into something that was more helpful to him.

"Sach, you are a skilful person and you taught me a lot." Quinn said. "I've used your techniques to help me get out of quite a few pinches lately. The thing is, there are a lot of things about us that the world doesn't know or understand. If I turn you into one, it means that you will be thrown into that world."

A huge grin appeared on Sach's face hearing these words. "The fact that you said that, means you can heal me if you turn me, you're just worried about what comes after that fact. Quinn, look at me. Does it look to you that my life could be better if I stay in this state? Whatever happens to me, I can't imagine it being worse than not being able to help the people around me. No matter the result, I won't blame you!"

Putting himself in Sach's shoes Quinn would have requested the same. He often wondered what would have happened if he would have had a choice in the matter of accepting the vampire system. If Quinn had been asked whether he wanted to accept it, especially with what he knew about it now, if he would have agreed.

The answer was of course he would.

It was thanks to it, that he could play an active role in deciding humanity's future. Something he always wanted to do.

"Before we do anything, I'll explain everything to you, includings the risks, and only then should you make your decision." Quinn stated as stretched his shadow across the floor and it had risen in front of Void blocking the cameras view.

"I think that means he wants you to turn it off for now." Fex whispered to them.

Bonny looked at Void and nodded. They had already gotten a lot, and she couldn't fault Quinn for wanting to keep some things hidden from the whole world. She just hoped that at some point she would be allowed to show these things.

At the same time, the two doctors were told to leave the room as well, with Nate escorting them outside and making sure they didn't listen in.

"Some important things to note." Quinn started to explain. "Once I turn you, I will become your turner. That means you will be directly under me and part of my family. There will be a connection between us that you will be able to feel. If I order you to do something it will be nearly impossible for you to disobey, even if it might be something you might never do as you are now."

"The reason why I'm telling you this, is because of your position in the Earthborn group. If they find out I've turned you into a V I'm afraid it will sour our relationship with everyone. Right now, there is a good chance that Oscar and Samantha can't recover, and I doubt they would be happy with you taking up such a position."

"So you want to keep this a secret?" Sach addressed the core of the issue. It was tough because if he did get found out, it would be natural for them to assume he had been a traitor all along and there would be no getting out of that one for him.

"Indeed, although in your case it might be easier than with others." Quinn replied. "I healed OWen with my Qi, and I can claim I did the same to you. You see, once I turn someone, their abilities disappear. Due to your ability being so unique the others shouldn't notice that it has disappeared. On top of that, there is a good chance that if your ability is an original that you might still be able to relearn it, but I can't guarantee that. As a silver lining, you will be able to learn another one if you wish, as long as you are compatible with it. Finally, for the last part, let's talk about all the bad things that come with being a vampire."

Everyone was listening in carefully, Bonny and Void couldn't believe the changes that someone would have to go through. Losing the ability one had built up for so long, would be heart crushing for many.

Quinn went on to explain, about the bloodlust he would feel, how they would help him with that, he then later whispered how they would overcome the weakness of the sun. The reason for whispering this was because he still couldn't fully trust the reporters that were behind him, and if they knew about this large weakness it would be trouble for them in the future perhaps. The last thing the two of them talked about were the possibilities of what he could turn into.

"I see." Sach said after taking everything in. "So you can't just go around changing people as you like. The bad types of vampires...have you ever seen someone turn into them before?"

"Yes." It was clear that this one single word was connected to painful memories, but he needed to make sure that Sach knew what he was getting into. It would also be unfair to give him percentages of how likely it was to be turned into something bad or good.

"Let's do it. It sounds to me that there are more upsides than downsides to this." Sach answered. "Perhaps I can surpass a point I could never before. On top of that, if I do become a vampire I can sniff out all the traitors that are within the Earthborn group."

Although this was something Bonny desperately wanted to report on, she knew for the sake of humanity, she shouldn't. This would help the two groups come closer together. It was better for people to believe the Cursed faction leader was also able to help Sach get back on his feet like he had done Owen as well.

Initiating the blood ritual, Quinn did the same as he always had done. When the process had begun there was something different this time compared to all the rest before. There was no screaming coming from Sach on his part.

It was clear he was in pain, but fighting throughout it, he didn't want to make any noise.

'He shouldn't become a ghoul or a wendigo, but I can't guarantee that to be the case. Most likely if he is like Leo, Paul, and Innu, then he should turn into a...'

[Blood ritual successful]

[You have successfully bled a vampire]

The tension from Quinn's face was gone, as he saw the successful sign, and that there was going to be no trouble from what Sach would turn into.

"You have a really strong will, all the others screamed at the top of their lungs when they were turned." Quinn praised him.

"With that kind of willpower, I'm sure it should be easier for you to fight against the craving for blood. Take this." Quinn handed him a flask that appeared from his hand through the shadows. "Drink a little bit of I , and you should start feeling better. It doesn't look like your body has healed yet. Drinking a little bit at the time will help with your control. At first, you will want to gobble the whole thing up with the state you are in now, but if you can resist it, then in no time you will have no problem being around others even when blood has been split."

The group were quite pleased and glad that they now had another strong new ally that could probably help them just as much as Paul and Leo did, maybe even more so working in the Earthborn group. Just as they were getting ready to leave, Sach called out to Quinn.

"Please, try your best to save Oscar, but honestly with the state he is in...you might not be able to." Sach said.

All of them had left the room, and now it was time for Nate to lead them into the next room. He typed in the code by the oval door once more, and there they could see it instantly. A large glass tube, similar to what the Dalki had been kept in.

They could see Oscar's head floating, and his life's heart beating, with only half of his torso remaining. With the state he was in, it was questionable if he could even be turned.

Chapter 1137: The Supreme commander's fall

From Sam's explanation and the words that everyone else had said, Quinn and the others had believed to have a rough idea of Oscar's current state. However, confronted with the reality of seeing Oscar float about in a strange green coloured liquid, it was beyond all of their imaginations.

The Supreme Commander had no limbs, a strange mask covering most of his face that was meant to help him breathe. Only the left side of his chest was intact, his neck still connected to his head, which had to have been the only reason he was somehow still alive in that condition. Quinn wasn't even sure that with what was left turning him was an option, much less if it could help him recover.

Upon entering the room they noticed someone else as well. A girl with long hair, who was sitting on a chair with a table in front of her, her head knelt down on the table facing away from them.

"Samantha hasn't left this room ever since she got here. She's convinced that her father will just wake up at some point and she's determined to be there when it happens." Nathan explained as he sighed. Samantha didn't seem to have noticed their presence. From the looks of it, she was either asleep or too lost in her own thoughts.

"He's still alive, right?" Layla questioned, since it was hard to believe anyone could survive that much damage.

"We... actually aren't one hundred percent sure on that. We've put him through various tests, but there seemed to be no more activity in his brain. Honestly we aren't even sure what happened that day. Sach seemed to have seen everything, but still hasn't spoken about it much. Our best guess is that One Horn has allowed him to live. Perhaps he got bored playing around with him, or this is some sort of sadistic ploy to let us watch Oscar die, we don't know."

'Live' seemed to be a strange term given Oscar's situation. They had already thought Sach had it rough but if there was no activity in one's brain, it also meant the only thing that was keeping him alive was the machine.

Suddenly a thought went through Quinn's mind. The Dalki not finishing him was possible, but there was no way they would allow the humans to keep his weapon.

"His Demon tier weapon?" Quinn asked, he knew it was insensitive to the situation, but it was something important for all their survival.

"Lost. It's either the hands of the Dalki or the V now." Nathan looked down as he explained the situation.

One of humanity's strongest weapons, was now in the hand of their enemy. Before the news wouldn't have been so bad, as it was well known that the Dalki were unable to activate beast gear. They could still wear the items or use them as weapons, but they were unable to bring out the full power. However, things changed with the V joining their side as they did not have such a weakness.

Eventually, the group started to walk forward, even Bonny and Void put the camera down. It felt insensitive to film Oscar in the state he was in. They didn't want to shatter his image as the Supreme Commander and as the one person who had done the most for everyone in the battle with the Dalki.

Stepping forward were Quinn and Fex, while the rest followed behind, but at a distance. It would be quite intimidating for a single person to be faced with so many new faces all of a sudden.

Shiro started to speed up, as he walked behind Quinn. From what he had heard so far, there was a good chance that maybe he was the only one that could help Oscar in his situation.

As the footsteps got closer, Samantha finally turned her head. She had dark heavy bags under her eye, they were puffy and swollen, and the white in her eyes was all red.

"Fex?" Samantha uttered the name of the first person she already knew. She spoke in a tired voice as if the girl had just woken up. "I'm sorry for telling everyone, about your secret, I didn't keep your-"

"It's okay...the whole world was going to find out sooner or later anyway." Fex shook his head as he gave her a light smile. The news had already gone out and Samantha obviously had far bigger problems to deal with. He went a bit closer to see how she was dealing with things.

"When's the last time you've eaten anything?" The vampire asked as he noticed how frail she looked compared to the last time he had seen her. Hearing this she soon realised that it wasn't a dream she was in, and looking next to Fex she could see Quinn, the leader of the Cursed faction.

'Food, energy, wait, are they really here!' She thought, as she picked herself up from her seat, but her vision was going dark from standing up too fast and having stayed in one position for too long. As the closest one to her, Fex gave her a helping hand.

"Help him, please!" Samantha 'shouted', but even her voice lacked any indication of strength. She sounded sore from the endless amount of crying and screaming. No one should have to see their father like this, and she also blamed herself for being there, but unable to do anything when everything had happened.

"You can do it, right? Quinn, you can do anything. Please help him!" She pleaded again, moving to Quinn and she practically threw her body weight on him, she was so weak but it did nothing.

He looked at her. He had never seen someone in so much pain before. A bond between family, one from a daughter and her father was something he never had.

The problem was, Quinn didn't wish to give her any false hope. Honestly, he didn't know if there even was anything he could do. Before coming here, he had agreed that if Oscar didn't want to be turned then they shouldn't do so against his will while he was unable to make a decision.

"I'll try!" Shiro said, clenching his fist and he looked motivated. "Quinn, please let me give it a shot."

For a brief second there was hope in Samantha's eyes, but what could this little boy do that all the learned doctors and those with healing abilities couldn't?

Quinn nodded as this was the best method. A way to get to Oscar without having to turn him. A small part of Samantha had already given up on ever seeing her father saved, but the bigger part of her clung to hope. She was willing to try anything.

For Shiro to use his ability, he needed to touch the head, which meant he also needed to get into the glass tube container. Nathan ordered some men who were stationed outside to help out, as they brought in breathing equipment that looked similar to a diving suit, but there was no gas tank of sorts, since everything was done through the large helmet he had on his head.

Then from above, he was elevated by a platform, like an elevator. All Shiro did was take a step forward, as he splashed into the liquid and now was face to face with what was left of Oscar.

"I don't know if I could do that, being chucked in like this." Layla mumbled as she realised how brave Shiro was. He hadn't been in the battle long and had only recently learnt the ability. Then, he was thrown into the deep end, with one tough request after the other and Shiro was the one who had actually volunteered this time.

Pressing his hand against Oscar's head, Shiro closed his eyes and concentrated. His hands started to glow as they did before, and a few seconds went past. Which soon turned into minutes, and then finally....

"Get Shiro out of there Quinn!" Logan shouted. "He's going to kill himself if he uses his MC points for too long and runs out of energy like last time!"

Quinn quickly went to grab Shiro out from the container, jumping and hanging onto the edge, before reaching his hand and pulling on him. Just as Logan had suspected. Shiro had already passed out from overusing his ability.

The rest of them waited for a while for Shiro to wake up, as they took him out of the strange wetsuit. During the time, they kept monitoring Oscar, but no change was showing up on the equipment at all.

Eventually Shiro started to come to, and he could see all the others had gathered around him. He looked towards Oscar in the container, and his face started to be filled with tears.

"I'm sorry... I tried... I tried to find him, but I couldn't." Shiro cried. He could see how much pain Samantha was in and he wanted to do his best to help her father. He had been quite confident he could do something, but after saying all that, he had done nothing but waste everyone's time and give them false hope.

"You tried your best, don't cry, I know...my father would be happy to see this many people try their best to save him." Samantha said in an attempt to comfort Shiro, but she was now sobbing too by his side.

'Is it really the right thing to do?' Quinn thought. 'To just sit here, and do nothing? Wait until his mind comes back. What if it never comes back. What if he's like this until the end, unless I try to do something?'

'Oscar, would you be happy seeing your daughter in this state? Sach, told me to do what I can to help you. It's okay, right? You can hate me later if you want, but I can see that the world still needs you!'

Quinn climbed into the tank, and this time he was in the liquid, but he wasn't wearing any special type of suit like Shiro, nor did he need the mask as he simply held his breath shut. It didn't even feel like much of a problem to him and it was possible he could have stayed in the water for hours.

Quinn then released his blood intending to start the blood ritual. When a sudden message appeared.

Chapter 1138: Use my body

[Error]

[Blood ritual is unable to activate]

[It is not effective in this situation.]

Despite Oscar being in front of him, this was the first time that Quinn had gotten this type of message. He had been worried that turning him might not be enough to save him, but he hadn't been mentally prepared that it was actually impossible.

He tried a second time just for good measure, perhaps he had done something wrong. Unfortunately, it only resulted in the same error message appearing once more.

'Again!' Quinn repeated in his head, as he attempted to activate it through the system, yet nothing changed.

'Quinn, I don't think it will work no matter how many times you try. It is clear that there is some type of underlying problem, just like when Shrio tried, in this type of situation there is nothing we can do.' Vincent said.

Hearing these words from a man Quinn knew to be many times wiser than him, who also knew far more about the Vampire World, his hands started to feel weak as he started to sink down in the liquid. There were those that could possibly help, like Tempus or the second leader's ability but there were reasons problems with getting the vampire world involved.

From the outside, Samantha could see this and judging by the lack of any change in her father's condition as well as the defeated look in Quinn's eyes, she understood that all hope was lost.

Immediately, she fell to her knees, there was no more energy in her body and they slammed into the hard ground. This time not even Fex was ready to catch her, but as her body was becoming limp, he did manage to catch her with his strings before her head hit the ground.

"We need to get her some food and energy. I don't think staying in this place is helping her at all. Force feed her if need be, just make sure she gets it!" Fex shouted, as he ordered the other soldiers as if they were his own people.

Due to his assertive tone the soldiers didn't even question Fex' order. A doctor who had been on standby came to look over Samantha. Her diagnosis was that Samantha lacked enough sleep, hadn't eaten or drank anything and was mentally exhausted.

Since there was nothing they could do for Oscar, the group had followed into a larger part of the medical bay, where there were several beds laid out, but at the moment there weren't any other patients currently being treated. It wasn't like the private rooms that had been used for Sach and Owen.

Here, a lot of them sat on the seats that were spread around the room, thinking about what they had just seen. Others were trying to comfort each other at the same time as well. While Quinn, and few continued to stay by Samnatha's side, who had a drip that had been placed inside of her body.

"You really couldn't turn him?" Fex asked, breaking the silence.

"I don't really know what happened. I don't know if it's my fault, or maybe something else. I was sure since he wasn't completely dead, that there should be at least a chance to turn him. Perhaps he would have turned into some type of undead class, but as long as he would have improved we would have been able to deal with it then." Quinn replied, yet all those worries and thoughts before seemed to have been for naught.

When the door was heard opening again, the person who was entering came as a surprise to them. It was Sach who was already back up on his feet and was moving about. He quickly threw the flask over to Quinn who caught it with ease.

"Nice reflexes." Sach said with a smile, but it soon went away when he looked at Samantha. "I heard what happened when you went to visit Oscar. I assume you all being here means you couldn't do to him what you did to me?"

"Quinn, I'm sure you tried your best. Nobody will blame you for it not working this time. All of this isn't your fault in the first place. It's mine. If only I was stronger, he wouldn't have had to try and hold off the Dalki on his own. Oscar wouldn't have to have gone through all of that."

Shaking his head, Sach went to take a seat along with the others.

"Sach, Nathan told us that you were there when this all happened. Maybe you know what was going on. How did the three of you even survive such an attack?" Quinn asked. "If even Oscar ended up in that state, surely he could have killed you all, and why didn't you tell us before."

Right now, certain pairs of eyes were gone. Bonny and Void, the reporter duo, were currently going around looking at the ship and conducting more interviews. Nathan and his group were back to doing their duty, as they had a ship to run, and temporarily he was taking the commanding role.

"I didn't want to say much before because honestly I don't really understand it myself." Sach replied after he made sure nobody was listening in. "You see, me and Samantha were both fighting One Horn. It was clear from the beginning that we were no match for him, but at the same time we were unable to turn our backs."

"At this point the humans who we assumed were V and the Dalki were both fighting against us. If we ran away, then it meant everyone else would have died as well, and I'm not sure One Horn would have let us in the first place. That's when Oscar showed up to reinforce us."

"He told us to run away, but we didn't listen. After seeing Oscar fight with the Demon tier weapon against the Dalki, it quickly became clear that they were stronger. I ended up in the state that I was in, and Oscar was getting pulled apart by One Horn, while Samantha could do nothing but watch."

"He had a giant grin on his ugly face, like a young boy enjoying the fact that he was ripping the wings off a fly. He could have killed him straight away, but he didn't. Samantha eventually got the courage to charge forward, hoping to somehow stop the Dalki from killing her father, but I knew it was useless."

"Honestly, I had accepted that we would all die down there, but then someone had picked up the Demon tier weapon. It was a girl who looked to be from the shelter. She had long black braids, and she held up the sword pointing it towards the Dalki."

"She told One Horn that he should let us go. It didn't make any sense, but for some reason he complied. He had just defeated Oscar wielding the Demon tier weapon, but for some reason he didn't seem to be willing to defy that girl."

"It was then that I noticed that none of the humans that had been attacking us had any of the traits that were described as the V. I didn't understand anything, which was why I didn't want to say anything to anyone yet. The fact that humans were working with the Dalki, and that they were listening to them no less."

"After that interaction, all of the Dalki stopped attacking, allowing us to retreat, and barely come out of it alive. Eighty percent of our forces had already been dealt with."

Hearing all of this, Quinn couldn't quite put his finger on what was going on either, but if those groups of people were really the ones that Arthur had stayed with, then maybe there was a reason why they had listened to the Dalki.

'Are the humans living there actually working with the Dalki? But then why did they save Oscar and the others? Why would someone as powerful as One Horn listen to a girl... unless she was perhaps the only vampire there?' Scratching his head, there was just too much to think about.

After the conversation had died down a bit, they started to ask Sach more details about the fight that went on. Their number of forces, the Dalki's strength and more, but Shiro and Sil were busy having their own conversation from before.

"It doesn't make any sense." Shiro said as he looked at his hand. "I went into the black space, just like I did with you, so doesn't that mean I entered his mind? So why couldn't I find his consciousness? Did I not go deep enough?"

"The others said you were drained Shiro, your ability probably won't let you spend more time in there or go deeper." Sil said. "Your ability seems strong but maybe it needs to be even stronger."

Hearing this, Shiro was kicking himself for being overconfident. He still couldn't believe that he had given them all hope, and he felt like he was to blame. But through their conversation and seeing how Shiro was, it had given Sil an idea.

"Remember what I just said, about how maybe your ability wasn't strong enough, what if I said there was a way to make your ability stronger, by using my body." Sil offered, placing his hand on his own body.

Chapter 1139: Switching bodies

It took a while for Shiro to process what Sil had just said. What exactly did he mean by 'his body'? Whatever it was, he had certainly caught his attention.

"Do you mean, you're going to try and use my ability to search for Oscar instead?" Shiro asked, still a little confused. He did know that Sil could copy his ability, and amplify it by using the MC cells from other powerful users.

"That won't help in this situation. Your ability is too unique. It doesn't share any similarities to any elemental ability or anything else I've used before so I would have to learn how to use it from scratch just like you. You're the only one with experience." Sil shook his head as he explained.

"No your cra...it might have some problems." Shiro stopped himself mid way as he was about to say the forbidden C word among those from Blade Island. It was a warning that Quinn had given him, and he was glad he caught himself.

"Are you saying that you want to copy my ability, and then switch minds so I'm the one that is controlling your body?" Shiro asked to confirm whether he had correctly understood Sil's intention, since he considered the plan to be very risky.

Sil just nodded, in place. "I can guess that Quinn wouldn't allow this, so we have to try and do it without him. Look, even if it doesn't work, you need to practice your powers on human bodies, including moving their minds. It's not like a mind can just get lost. Worst case, I get put somewhere but you will still have the ability to help out."

Judging by how quiet Shiro was, one could tell that he still wasn't convinced to give it a shot. Sure, if it did work, Shiro felt like he could do something amazing, but he had already failed once. He was afraid that he would fail again and that something could happen to Sil if it did.

"There's already three of me in this body." Sil continued to persuade Shiro. "If you don't want to switch minds, then just temporarily go into mine. The worst case scenario then would be you being in my head and together we can always put you back. I know you want to help, and I want to help you Shiro!"

An internal debate was going on in Shiro's head, and that's when he heard a few groans coming from the side. It was Samantha as she was finally waking up after resting and getting some needed nutrients in her body.

"What happened, where am I?" She asked as she touched her head. Samantha had a huge headache and it felt like someone was pounding the inside of her brain with a hammer. Everything that she had put to the back of her mind was coming back to bite her at once.

Then when she saw everyone who was in the room, she started to remember what had happened again. "No. No, no, no." She repeated, readily shaking her head. It was as if saying that word over and over again might allow her to escape the reality she was currently facing.

The others ran to her side to try to calm her, but nothing they were saying or doing was having an effect.

"She's just going to hurt herself more if things carry on like this!" Fex sighed, as he bound her arms and legs with his strings, but through her struggling the needles from the drips had been displaced.

"I'll help!" Layla offered. At least in these situations she had a surefire way to deal with the problem for a short time. Seeing the fog above her head and surrounding her body, Layla consumed it all, placing it inside of her. Unfortunately, it wasn't a permanent fix. Hopefully as time went on they could help her quell the negative emotions that would be returning in due time.

Having absorbed her emotions, Layla now experienced the same pain as Samantha. As for the previously struggling girl, she felt at peace for a few seconds which was enough time for her mind to relax and once again return to sleep just like before.

"Is that going to keep on happening?" Quinn asked, frustrated that he had been unable to do anything for her father.

"Different people deal with trauma in a different way." Layla answered. "Honestly, she was already beaten down before all of this. I guess she was holding out still hoping in some way, but now..."

Seeing all of this, Shiro had made up his mind. He felt partly to blame for getting her hopes up, so he wanted to fix the problem.

"Let's do this. Do you have enough abilities already stored up for your MC cells?" Shiro asked.

"It's become a habit since school, to touch people as much as possible so I can see their strength and what abilities they have." Sil replied.

"Wait, don't Quinn and the others have super hearing? Wouldn't they have just heard everything we said? How do we keep it a secret?" Quickly shutting his mouth, Shiro realised that their 'secret' plan had long since been foiled.

"Don't worry, I have been around them long enough to know how good their hearing is. One of the abilities I've obtained was Sound barrier. It's been active the moment I came to you." Sil replied with a light smile at Shiro's antics.

With the two of them agreeing, they left the room making an excuse that the two of them needed to go to the toilet. Quinn, seeing this, just thought it was a little cute, that the two were now attached by the hip together, although he did feel it was a little strange for kids that age.

'Guess girls aren't the only ones who go together.' Quinn thought, his mind occupied with other things.

Finally out of the room, they immediately headed towards where Oscar was being kept. There were guards standing outside the door, and Shiro was struggling with what they would do, but Sil didn't go into the room, and instead walked past the door and took a left turn down the hallway.

When Shiro followed, he couldn't see where Sil was, until he popped half his body through the wall.

"Another ability?" Shiro asked, thinking that it was kind of cool to be able to use so many different abilities at once. Deep down, as someone who had only recently learned an ability, one which wasn't really suited for fighting, he still wished he had learned the Blade's ability and this was just making him even more jealous.

With the two touching hands, Sil was able to make the two of them phase through the wall allowing them to enter the room from a different side to the entrance. There they could see Oscar, still floating.

"Alright, it's time." Sil said, walking up to Shiro and closing his eyes, unafraid waiting.

'Why is Sil so unafraid of doing this?' Shiro wondered. Still, Shiro had to remind himself why he was doing this.

Pressing his hands on Sil's head, they started to glow. Trying to do what he needed to do seemed harder than just entering one's consciousness, where he had to connect the two dark spaces in their heads together.

It was as if he had to activate his ability twice, and then shove one room into another so now they both shared rooms. Then when Shiro could see Sil, he tried explaining to him, asking him to move far away from each other.

When they were no longer at a distance where they could see each other. Shiro now had to also disconnect these two rooms.

When Shiro had opened his eyes, the first person he could see was him, or more accurately his own body that he just had never seen in this way before.

"It worked!" Shiro said, pointing and now looking at himself from all sorts of different angles. "So this is what it looks like when people look at me through their eyes. It's nothing like looking in a mirror at all. Do I really look so...wimpy?"

Sil looked at himself and could tell that it had worked as well, and just gave Shiro a thumbs up.

"I knew I could trust you. After all you were the person that promised to bring back Vorden and Raten."

Now the real task awaited them. Doing the same thing as before, Shrio put on the wet suit that was still in the room along with the helmet, and was ready to dive in. Activating the elevator he was raised to the same height as the tube, and walking forward he let his body sink in.

At the same time, the alarms started to ring, the whole room started to slash red.

"Quick Shiro!" The others will be here soon.

As he said that, mere seconds later Quinn and the others had entered the room. They could see Shiro on the ground floor next to some type of control panel and someone else in the glass tub.

"What is Sil doing in the container?!" Fex shouted.

Touching Oscar's head his hands started to glow.

"Come on, this has to work!"

Chapter 1140: Do you want to live?

Ever since the Earthborn group had learned of the V, safety measures had been put in place. Guards stationed on the outside and an alarm system set throughout the private medical rooms, which was why as soon as the alarm sounded, Sach knew straightaway what was going on.

At the time Samantha had been so worried about her father that she had requested that only a certain few people would be allowed in. After the group had left, only the patrolling guards were allowed on the inside. As a second precaution the alarms had been reactivated.

When they barged into the room, everyone had expected to see some of the crew members who turned out to be one of the V, but they were now shocked to see two of their own, Shiro and Sil. Making the scene even more bizarre was that Sil was the one inside the tank full of water, pressing his hand against Oscar.

"What are they trying to do? Is someone controlling them?" Sach asked as he was ready to rush forward and pull Sil out of there. Before the group could move though, a certain boy stood in their way with his hands spread out.

"Stop, Shiro is doing something incredibly important right now. We can trust him!" 'Shiro' explained.

Some of them were left puzzled over 'Shiro's' words. Did he hit his head and mistake the person who was with Oscar? But how could he mistake it for himself? At the same time, Sil realised that he couldn't do much if he did want to stop them.

Shiro's body was weak and the only ability he possessed wasn't suited for combat. However, lucky for him there was one brainiac among their group who was quick to put the clues together.

"Did the two of you swap bodies?" Logan asked. Judging by the situation the two of them were attempting to bring forth Oscar's mind. Either Sil had copied Shiro's ability, but in then the mix up of names didn't make sense, so it could only be that Shiro was currently inside Sil's body and was making use of it.

"What! Are you planning to try again?" Fex asked, and all Sil did was nod.

After activating the ability Shiro could see himself in the black room alone. There was no one around and he was able to walk more freely without much trouble. Before he could feel some part of his energy slipping away the longer he was in the space for.

If he was concentrating too hard, it would be unnoticeable which was why he would often push himself past his natural limits causing him to faint on the outside.

'Is this because of Sil's ability? It feels like I'm not being affected using my powers at all, I could stay in here forever.' Shiro thought.

Without the burden of a time constraint he could focus more freely on trying to find out just what had happened to Oscar. He tried to search for the black space. He looked everywhere, even moving his body to different areas but he saw nothing.

Unlike with Sil, where he could see two floating balls of energies that contained their own spaces inside, it truly felt like Oscar's mind had just gone. But if that was the case, then why could he appear here at all?

'Is there really nothing we can do?' Shiro worried. 'Even after going behind Quinn's back, and using Sil's powers?'

Trying to think hard, Shiro eventually needed to try something, and for some reason although he didn't think it could help, he started to activate his Qi energy. Something that every human had, and something he had been practising.

Even though it wasn't his body, Shiro knew the process, allowing him to access a bit of Qi energy inside of Sil's body.

It was strange because technically his body wasn't in the blackspace only his mind, so he wasn't sure if it would work, or how useful it was. When activating it outside though, a connection was made as his hand was touching Oscar's real body on the outside.

For a split second, something appeared in the black space for the first time, or more correctly he felt the presence of something, albeit very vaguely.

'It's over there!' Shiro instantly moved to where the anomaly had occurred. It felt like a sense of hot and cold, as he moved further away the energy was weaker, moving to the right area the energy was stronger but still nothing could be seen.

Until he had reached a point where the energy felt strongest in the black space.

'But there's nothing here?' Shiro couldn't see anything, but he was certain the energy was here.

'No, I need to think of this another way. If this would be all it takes, then I could have done it with my own body, I need to use the ability better.' Shiro started to think back to what the notes had listed. The connections inside that he needed to make to travel deeper into the consciousness,

He focused on activating his MC cells even more, going deeper into the person's mind. On the outside his hands were glowing so bright, that the light was blinding the view of the others from the outside.

Then there was finally a change of scenery for Shiro. He was no longer in a black space but was in a white space. In front of him was Oscar in all his glory. He had no injuries and was in his usual military uniform.

"I don't quite understand what is going on." Oscar said. "But at the same time I feel I do."

"Oscar!" Shiro shouted, ready to hug the Supreme Commander. All of his efforts weren't in vain, he really was somewhere inside the mind of his but it was deep. Too deep to control his body.

"I work for Quinn, he sent me here to come get you, we are trying to save you!" Shiro said everything at once, afraid that any moment the other could disappear again. Oscar lifted his hand to stop him there and started to shake his head.

"I assume if you are here you have an idea of what happened to me. You seem to have some type of ability that accesses one's mind, but even if you do bring me back, what of my body. It is beyond healing." Oscar sighed as he looked down on himself. Right now his appearance was pristine, but he remembered that had happened to him on the outside.

"Quinn!" Shiro replied quite confidently. "He managed to save Sach even though he was in a bad state! The doctors couldn't help him but Quinn did, I just know that as long as we can bring back your consciousness, Quinn will be able to get you back!"

There was a slight pause from Oscar before answering and then a small smile as if he had made up his mind.

"I assume, his way of saving me isn't by usual norms. If others couldn't and he can, does that come at the cost of turning me into the same thing as him?" Oscar questioned. "When the others around him claimed they had been turned, not out of choice, I assume Quinn had been put in similar situations?"

"I'm honored that you must have put in all your effort to try and save me... but I do not wish to be saved. Not like this."

For someone who was as young as Shiro, nearly seventeen years of age, he couldn't understand. Why would someone refuse getting saved when there was the possibility. Oscar could tell this from the look on his face as well.

"I have grown tired of all this fighting. I have given it my all, throughout my life and now... I just think now it's my time to go. I hope you respect my decision."

"What about Samantha? Do you have any idea how heartbroken she is? Don't you want to at least see her for a final time, say some words or see her off?" Shiro asked, hoping to convince him.

"I can't deny that seeing my daughter again does have a certain appeal. However, because she is my daughter I know that she is far stronger than she looks. I know she will come out better from this. I understand that you are trying to convince me, but I have already made up my mind."

"However, there is one request that I have now that you have presented me with the opportunity. It has been a long time coming, but if possible, I wish for a final talk with Quinn. That boy has a lot of questions on his mind, and he deserves to have them answered, especially as he is this world's future. I need to pass the mantle." Oscar requested.

Shiro was trying to think of other things to say to convince Oscar, but if his daughter wasn't enough to get him to reconsider, he didn't know what was.

'How can I face the others again? This time I was actually this close, but I have failed again.' Shiro thought. Still, there was one more chance, as Oscar had requested to talk to Quinn and he was hoping at least Quinn could talk some sense into him.

'It's all up to you Quinn.'

Chapter 1141: Passing on the Mantle

With everything done, Shiro returned back to Sil's body inside the container. He easily pulled himself out, noticing his well developed muscles.

'Oh yeah, that's right, this isn't my body. I always thought he was more scrawny like me, but boy was I wrong.' Shiro then tensed up Sil's muscles and pressed on his hard abs, his finger was practically hitting a solid wall showing he was in top tip shape. 'It's so much different than when I use the ability in my own body. I don't even feel tired after having to search for Oscar. How can one person have so much power?'

After experiencing it for himself he was starting to understand how the Blade family had been able to secretly rule over the Big Four in the past. The things they could do with all those different abilities and the fact that their powers could multiply meant that they would be scary enemies.

'There is still that Hilston guy everyone is worried about out there. If Sil is already this strong, does that mean he is even stronger?' Shiro gulped as the thought crossed his mind. The Blade family leader would not only have had decades more time to gather multiple powerful abilities but also that extra time to have experience with them.

When Shiro went down he was expecting for everyone to start yelling at him and to get told off, but it appeared that Sil had already made everyone aware of what they were attempting to do. When Quinn walked up and held out his hand, he squinted, almost flinching.

"Are you okay?" Was the first question that came out of Quinn's mouth. It wasn't a telling off like he had expected and Shiro nodded in response.

"Wow, that's kinda cool that you can make people swap bodies, and they can use the ability in that body?" Fex questioned. "Does that mean I can see what it's like to be a...a girl for one day?" Now his imagination was running wild.

"Does the ability work on Vampires, maybe it's like Sil's?" Logan theorised.

Despite everyone's comments, Quinn was just happy that there weren't any problems between the process. In all honesty he had been afraid that something might have happened to Shiro and Sil when trying to do something like this, which was why he had only made him run the tests on wild beasts, rather than humans.

However, it was inevitable that at some point Shiro would have had to attempt to do this, and for someone to do it with their own mind, Quinn couldn't imagine how scary that would have been.

"You should have said something instead of running off." Quinn berated Shiro.
"You were lucky that it worked out, but what would you have done if something went wrong? If something happened to you, then it would have been my fault for getting you dragged into this whole mess in the first place. Promise me that next time you try something like that you do it under supervision."

Shiro understood his concern, but didn't really know what to say. He understood that just seeing Samantha in that state and wanting to help her wasn't a good enough excuse. Fortunately, she didn't seem to be with the others either. In the end, Shiro just nodded weakly.

"What's done is done, but we need to make sure we don't have to take these huge types of risks in the future. So did you get any results?" Quinn asked the question that was on everyone's mind.

The conversation between the others in the background died down after this as they were listening in carefully.

"I...I connected to him." Shiro answered, which sounded like good news, but Quinn could tell by the sound of Shiro's heartbeat that something was up. If Shiro could have connected to him, then why was there still no active signs on the monitoring equipment.

"He said...he wanted to speak to you, Quinn. I think it might be for the best. Right now I can use my ability to touch both of you at the same time, and pass you on along with me, so you can have a conversation. It was his... he said that was his last request."

At first Quinn thought that it was quite a risky thing to do. Shiro hadn't figured out everything about his ability yet, since he hadn't been using it for too long, but he did have Sil's powers at the moment granting him access to far more MC cells than he could imagine, but what confined him was the fact that Shiro had stated it was his last request.

'Why would he say that? Unless...'

It was because of this, Quinn nodded. His last request wasn't to talk to his daughter, or anyone else, but to Quinn. The two of them hardly knew each other.

The others knew that once Quinn had made up his mind, he would go through with it, so they sat back and just waited. At this time, arriving into the room were Bonny and Void. From the sound of the alarm they had known that something would be up, but instead of an attack all they could see now was Quinn and 'Sil' entering the glass container, with the younger boy floating in the middle of the container touching both of them.

While activating the ability on Quinn, something else could be felt by Shiro for a second, but choosing to ignore this he continued with his task. Having done it once, it was easier than before and with Sil's power supply it really felt like it was no trouble at all bringing along Quinn as well.

In barely any time they reached the white space, and Oscar was seen smiling as he looked at Quinn. "Young boy, thank you for fulfilling my last request." Oscar said, before turning to Quinn.

"Last request? Do you really not plan to come back?" Quinn asked Oscar. "Even if we can save you? Even if the people out there need you after everything you have already done? Don't you want to watch the end of this all? You could be there when we get over that last hurdle!"

The tone of Quinn's voice was surprisingly aggressive. Shiro hadn't expected him to be like this, so what was the reason?

"Quinn, I have done my duty ever since the first war. I'm not the first one to fall in battle nor do I have grand hopes that I will be the last one. You can't even imagine how many of my friends, peers and subordinates I have outlived ever since. I have done everything I could to grow stronger to save even one more person. Every time I have fought I have done so with my life on the line knowing the risk and the consequences and I ended up like so. I'm just glad that my sacrifice at the end could save my daughter as well."

"For me, my time is over. My fight is finished, even if that means I don't get to see the end of it. I hope that my will, and what has happened to me will encourage others just like you to pick up my mantle and continue the fight. I know why you're upset, I looked into your past, Quinn."

"As a person who has grown up with no ability, your life must have been tough in the world we currently live in. I wouldn't be surprised if at some point you would have blamed me. As the Supreme Commander I must have appeared as the living embodiment of how the world had turned out, but the truth of the matter is that the people decided it to be this way."

"With the war against the Dalki upon us, the strong stood out, the weak relied on us and some people decided to take advantage of that. As a single person I was unable to change what everyone wanted and expected, so I did my best to contain the strong, so the war between ourselves wouldn't break out when it mattered most, but we all know how that went when Truedream disappeared."

"That was the moment I realised I needed to change things to make up for what I have failed to do beforehand, but then like a shooting star, I could already see the younger generation attempting to fix the problem I was responsible for creating. And I am glad you all did a far better job than I ever could." Oscar looked deep into Quinn's eyes, as one of these new people he was referring to was him.

"This is my answer Quinn. I do not wish to be saved." Oscar explained.

Having been around many different types of people, Quinn could tell that at this moment, Oscar had steeled his resolve. Much like himself, he was stubborn and it looked like he had made this decision since long ago.

At the same time, Quinn now was struggling with what he was trying to fight. The person at the top wasn't Oscar. Wasn't he meant to be some type of evil controlling villain that was forcing the weak ability users to live through hell, only caring about the strong? Yet, it just didn't feel that way. The end of his goal, was this...

"Quinn, I wanted to speak to you, because you are one of the people that everyone will have to rely on in the future. As such, I wanted to inform you of a few things. Given your special position, I have naturally looked into your past, trying to find out who you really were, but I have come to the conclusion... that even I was unable to unearth anything."

"For example, the apartment, school fees and your allowance you received when you were younger were all actually provided to you by an anonymous donor. I only later found that some of my people had been told to tell you that we were the ones providing you this service but that's not the case at all."

"Ever since you were young, someone has been looking out for you. It is said that you have no living relatives, so why would someone go that far, but I recently learned that there is one."

"Richard Eno..." Quinn mumbled. Was it really him? Did that also mean that the military weren't the ones that complied with his family wishes and had given him the system book. Did Richard actually have it all along? Had Richard been watching him since he was young, a child even, then what about his parents? If he was watching them, why didn't he protect them and give the book to one of them during the first war?

Thinking about this, Quinn thought about the Quest he had received, to learn more about the Talen family.

"Do you have any more information?" Quinn asked.

"I tried to search for what was relevant, but as someone who didn't really leave behind a strong impression until after military schools there was not much I could find. I am sure that Samantha must be struggling at the moment, but I know she will come out stronger from this. Take this as a selfish request of a father, but try to help her cope with this until she gets better. Perhaps you can ask her to help you retrace your past for you afterward."

"I also have to burden you to explain to her that my wish is to say goodbye to this place. The longer she tries to stay attached to this form of me, the harder it will be for her to pull away, which only delays my peace." Oscar requested.

Shiro now knew this was the real end of Oscar. Not even Quinn would be able to convince someone like that to come back to them all. These were the final words of the war hero, and Shiro was there to listen to them, even though he felt like he was unworthy of it all.

"Goodbye, Oscar. You can rest now, you did what you could, and I will try to do the same." Quinn said as he offered the man one last handshake. Both looked each other in the eye, Oscar with the kind smile of a senior and Quinn with the bitter smile of someone, who wasn't ready to let go of the hand.

Alas, eventually Shiro reminded Quinn that using his ability took a toll on his body, even though they both knew that shouldn't be the case since he was currently in Sil's body. Still, Quinn let go and both of them left the white space.

When Shiro made the disconnect, they found themselves in the liquid again, and raised themselves out of it. Both of their faces were filled with thoughts, and even though the others were dying of curiosity to know what happened they let them be until they talked on their own.

However, Shiro was left wondering one more thing as he looked at his hand, and looked at Quinn's back. 'I'm sure of it, after seeing inside of Sil. Why were there two consciousnesses inside of Quinn?'

Chapter 1142: After the same thing

The conversation with Oscar had left Quinn with quite a bit to think about. Especially the information he had learned from him about his past. There had indeed been times when Quinn had questioned his upbringing, the things he had been told and how his parents had left him with a book he had never seen or heard of before.

'Did Eno really support me during that whole time? It wouldn't be the first time he had hidden things from me.' Quinn wondered. Of course asking Eno was an option, but since Quinn didn't fully trust him and the old man hadn't come forward on his own to share that information, it would be safer to find out about his past as a member of the 'Talen family' on his own. If he was unable to find anything in the end, it would mean he would have to prepare himself to confront Eno.

'I really don't want to do that.'

Speaking to Samantha would be the best next step, although that would have to wait until she was in a better state of mind. He didn't know how long it would take and the need to tell her that her father had requested to be put off life support would surely not expedite the process. Unfortunately, the Cursed group still had other things they needed to attend to. This short stop had turned into quite the event already.

'I wonder, is Richad still on the island? Or would his helpers have arrived by now? I could send someone to the island to look for him, but there is no guarantee he is still there. Mona has also returned to the place she was kept before, yet I have no idea where that is. Damn, why didn't I make sure I had a way to reach out to him?' Quinn thought, conflicted that he had completely overlooked that issue up until now. He was just so overjoyed to finally get rid of him.

He looked up to the others who had so far been waiting for him to speak and began to recount his conversation with Oscar. He told them all about Oscar's wish and Void filmed Quinn conveying Oscar's last words, while the remains of his body eerily floated in the background.

The reactions to this were mixed. Some were able to sympathise with how Oscar felt, while others, albeit not openly, chastised him for having given up too soon. To them it felt that as one of the World Leaders he wanted to run away from his final duty. As for Sach, he was full of tears and he swore to himself to do everything in his power to make sure the Earthborn group would continue to fulfill their duty, even without Oscar.

Despite Quinn wanting to move on, there were a few pressing matters that needed to be solved before they left, so he proposed to hold a meeting. Sach and Nathan, representing the Earthborn group both instantly agreed. Technically the two of them were also part of the Cursed group now, but in a way this would just make things easier to control and should ensure that no more incidents like Innu's attack would occur.

Samantha had woken up again, but everyone felt it would be better to let her rest some more. As such, nobody had told her anything about this meeting. It took place in one of the many empty rooms of the ships, but it was apparent that this was an impromptu occasion. Some were leaning up against the wall, with most just standing as they talked to figure out everything that they would need to do.

"I think it's a good idea, but we'll need to find someone trustworthy to organise the rest of the Earthborn leaders for now." Sach said after they had come to a conclusion.

The plan they had agreed on was to have Sach board the Cursed Ship and stay there for a while. Sam would then get someone to teach him everything there was about being a vampire, controlling the bloodlust, getting his sun ring and learning a few of his new skills.

It was the best place for him to learn all of these things. The excuse they would give was that there was a need to discuss the future of the Earthborn groups now that Oscar and Innu were gone.

"I can keep everything we said here a secret." Nathan said. "But what about the reporters? They will eventually have to break the news to everyone. It's clear that they wish to show the Cursed faction in the best light but there needs to be a good timing for all of this. At the same time we can't wait too long, otherwise rumours will start to spread and people will find out that way."

So much had happened, and so much shaking news would have to be shared with the public. Head General Innu trying to kill the Cursed group, turning out to be a V and perishing, yet that all paled to the revelation about everything pertaining to Oscar.

"The Earthborn group is still in your hands." Quinn stated. "I will let you and Samantha decide when she is full of mind. I think it would be for the best to only inform the public about Oscar, once there is a proper replacement for him. Someone the people will be able to accept."

"That being said, we will have to tell Samantha sooner rather than later if we want her to recover from this. We also need her approval to turn off the machines for Oscar. She at least deserves to say her goodbye to him, while he is still with us. As for the reporters, they should reveal the truth of what has happened with Innu first. That will keep the public busy for the time being."

"They have decided that they will be travelling back to the Cursed ship, just to film a few more things before doing so, I have left it down to them to coordinate with Sam. He is the best person to figure out the timing and what to show and what not to show."

With all the things worked out, the group were now moving on quickly. Bonny and Void had gotten on board one of the military ships to head to the Cursed faction ship alongside Sach. The Head General had left one of his trusted sergeants who would be working closely with Jane, Oscar's top assistant in charge.

He had also requested to receive regular updates on Samantha's situation, and wanted to inform her personally about Oscar's choice. Before they left, Quinn checked the ones that were left in charge just to make sure they weren't V. Even after sweeping the whole ship, they couldn't find any at all.

Still, Quinn reminded them that it was possible they had someone with an ability that could control others. This meant they still needed to remain vigilant even if there weren't any V on the surface.

For this reason Sach left one of his people behind to look after the base. There was no problem with that approach, since he would have been the next best person for the job anyway. After all, ever since Nathan had been asked to work for the Cursed faction, there had been a general dislike for him among those from the Earthborn group.

Everything was just better this way, and so the group was ready to focus on their original task, the hunt for the Demi-god tier beast.

Shiro and Sil had returned to their original bodies, and they were now all on the same ship they had arrived in. The reporters had left, but Nathan had chosen to accompany them.

"You guys will need to be careful once we arrive there." Nathan warned. "I know we're all on the same side, but this shelter originally belonged to Head General Innu's people. It's a military shelter so there will be mostly military personnel and their family members. Even though the news hasn't been spread publicly, I'm sure that someone must have already informed his people that Innu is dead. So don't be upset if they start treating you a little rough."

Quinn pulled out the mask from his dimensional space and held it in his hand. It was the Mud mask given to him by Peter.

'I guess it might be time to use this. It would be troublesome to get into any more unnecessary fights. Especially against people who are meant to be on the same side.' Quinn thought. After speaking to Oscar and having Sach on his side, he now felt that the Earthborn group was more so a part of them. They weren't the enemy, there were just a few bad apples that had spread their thoughts to others.

"Also, they seem to be suffering at the moment. It's one of the few planets where the shelter is still hunting and collecting crystals. But their collection rate has been dropping. On top of that they have been getting into skirmishes here and there." Nathan explained.

"Skirmishes, with people?" Logan asked, overhearing the conversation.

"Indeed. For some reason there are members of Pure on the island as well."

The others looked at each other, and Quinn had a dreaded thought on his mind. According to Leo, Erin and some information from Brock. Pure were trying to create a beast they could control.

If this was true, did that mean Pure were after the very same beast they were?

Chapter 1143: Chasing i

It had been a while since Quinn had heard any news from Pure. He had been far too busy dealing with his own problems. The last time had been concerning a matter that Leo had been personally dealing with, so for the longest time they had been at the back of his mind.

'Are they really going down this path? Making the same mistakes the vampires did?' Quinn thought, but then again, they probably had no clue that the Dalki had been the result of the vampires trying to create a food supply for themselves. 'This Demi-god tier hunt might be harder than we thought if they are also involved.'

Quinn was still internally debating whether he should appear he should disguise himself or not for when he arrived at the Earthborn shelter. In the past it would have been fine for him to turn up and they would have respected him as a World Leader. However tensions were currently skyhigh between all groups after the reveal of the V's existence, especially among those belonging to Innu who had just lost their figurehead.

The final nail in the coffin was the fact that Pure was there. Their movements might drastically change if they were to learn that the leader of the Cursed faction would be turning up, since they still should hold a grudge for Quinn killing one of their single digit leaders.

Ultimately, Quinn went to the toilet on board the ship and placed the mud mask on his face. It started to wrap around him and change his body. A few seconds later, the one who exited the toilet wasn't Quinn, but 'Chucky', a person so plain that he wasn't memorable to all but his close friend.

He had pondered over what the others should call him now. Just calling himself Chucky would be confusing, and looking in the mirror, Bucky was the name that kept repeating in his head for some reason. Bucky cleared his throat so everyone turned around and could see the new improved him.

"What do you think of the new Bucky?" Quinn asked the group.

"Shouldn't you have picked a different name than the person you look like?" Fex asked.

Shaking his head, Quinn was getting quite tired of answering this question, but he couldn't blame the other since he had made that mistake a few times himself.

"His name was Chucky, so Bucky is indeed a new name." Logan clarified in Quinn's stead.

When things were starting to quiet down, Shiro noticed that Quinn was looking in the mirror quite often to check out his new appearance. Shiro understood that feeling well since he had recently been in Sil's body. It was an indescribable feeling looking at oneself and to see someone else entirely. However, that wasn't the reason why Shiro was closely watching Quinn. When the other turned he suddenly saw Shiro standing right behind him.

"Quinn, I was wondering if you had a bit of time. I would really like to talk about something, just the two of us." Shiro requested. Seeing the look on his face, and with them having nothing else to do Quinn accepted. The two of them entered the eating area, which had a see through automatic glass door, however it was sound proof. Allowing them to talk and eat if they wished in peace.

"What's on your mind, Shiro? You aren't usually the secretive type, so it must be important." Quinn honestly asked the other.

"Back when I helped you speak to Oscar I had to use my ability on you as well. I felt something strange inside of you, it felt like there were... two minds in you. It was similar to Sil, but since I was busy connecting you to Oscar I didn't really get a good look at the situation. Do you mind if I check again?" Shiro requested.

This had come as somewhat of a surprise to Quinn but not a complete one. The way Shiro had explained it, he already had a couple of ideas of what the boy might have seen.

'Do you think that the other mind he saw was me?' Vincent asked, who sounded far more shocked than Quinn. The old man knew that it couldn't be the Boneclaw. Familiars didn't occupy their partner's mind but left behind a permanent summoning seal on the body of those they had made a contract with.

'I mean it's either you or the system, but I have a feeling it's more likely to be you.' Quinn replied.

In a way to Vincent it somewhat made sense. These were the two possibilities but either one would work. Either Vincent was part of the system, and the system itself had already bonded with Quinn. It worked using his mind, so it wouldn't be too surprising if it had formed a pseudo consciousness, which was what Shiro had seen.

Alternatively, Vincent came with the system when Quinn had obtained it. Coming together but not really being a part of each other. The logic here stemmed from the time the vampire had lost Vincent for a brief period of time. Back then his ancestor had remained in the tombs below, while Quinn still had the system in full use.

If it was the latter case, then there was a higher chance that Vincent could be removed from the system without Quinn suffering any side effects. This was one of Vincent's other concerns when Quinn had offered to help him gain a body of his own using Shiro's ability. He had never really brought it up in the meantime, because he had honestly thought it would be impossible.

Now that the truth was getting closer and closer it felt unreal.

"Shiro, thanks for telling me that, but that won't be necessary. At least not now." Quinn replied. "You're no longer in Sil's body, so it will just tire you out, and we will need you at full power soon. I already have a good idea of what you saw, so you don't have to worry. It's something or rather someone that won't harm me. I will tell you about it when the time is right, okay?"

Shiro felt relieved after hearing this. He had been worried that it might have been something Quinn might have been unaware about. The boy had theorised that it could be something that all vampires had, another darker side deep down. Perhaps it could have been the mysterious ability of their enemy, who apparently could implant orders into others.

It would have been disastrous if whoever it was, had somehow managed to implant a timebomb into Quinn. Fortunately, it appeared that all his worries had stemmed from an overactive imagination.

When the two of them exited from the lunch room, they could see that they had almost reached their destination.

Planet Humding, a dark brown planet that had hills of mud, and long plots of land with little greenery in the area. It was a harsh planet where one could sink into their footing at any moment in certain places, but if one did they wouldn't suffocate.

Instead they would fall underneath into the planet's ground, where the vast tunnels and beasts lived and worked. In one of these tunnels was a group of people.

One man had an eyepatch over his right eye and a scar beneath it. He also had another scar that went from his chin to his lip. He was dressed in a large black overcoat, but his chest was showing his chiseled abs clearly. The clothing and his style suited his long blessed torso, with his long spiked hair that would always stick up.

"Have we still not been able to capture the humanoid beast?" The man with the scars asked one of his subordinates as he impatiently tapped his right index finger against his thigh.

"Sir, we have located the beast's trail once more twelve hours ago. Unfortunately, every time we come close to cornering it, the Earthborn group gets in our way, making us lose sight of it!" The subordinate explained.

"In other words, we've failed again? Is this what our group is known for? For failing time and time again?" The eye patch man questioned and in the blink of an eye he appeared before the one who had given the report, towering over him as he looked down.

"If the Earthborn group keeps getting in our way, then we will just have to finish them off." The man declared, as he turned around. The subordinate let out a sigh of relief as he looked at his superior's black overcoat with the large Number 2 stitched on it.

Chapter 1144: Evolution tiers

A medium sized ship approached the Shelter on planet Humding. Usually Shelters would be built on flat ground, in a square type shape with walls on all sides. Soldiers, Mechs or Travellers would be stationed on top of them to protect those inside.

On the other hand, this planet's Shelter had been built on top of a large hill, or more accurately the main base was located there. There were several large tubes that had vehicles passing through them.

These would descend down the hill into different areas that had small bases of buildings and people around them. Shockingly there were no walls surrounding them like the main Shelter at the top of the hill, instead there were people protecting the entrance to these large tubes.

"Humding is a little unique for more reasons than one." Nathan explained as everyone was staring out of the window looking at the unique architecture.

"Although there are beasts on the surface you have to watch out for, the greater danger comes from the countless sinking spots all over. The tubes you can see down there lead to some sinking spots the main base has discovered and deemed relatively safe since they are being cleared regularly to use them as entry points."

"Humding is rich in crystals, making it a very important place for the military. Unfortunately, the majority of beasts are also subterranean and don't like it when the military tries to mine those crystals."

Quinn remembered seeing places that were filled with the natural blue crystals, but there was one planet where he saw them more than ever. The Vampire Planet. It was even more reason to keep it a secret from the humans, especially since they were running low on the ressource.

Flying past, they could see many things being transported through the tubes. Vehicles carrying such crystals, and more. The other common thing they saw were Mechs. There seemed to be more here than the standard. It looked like the machines themselves were used to mine for crystals at a faster rate than human hands could.

"Are those robots fun to pilot?" Fex asked. "It would be cool if we could try one out."

"If you want to try it out, we have some back on the Cursed ship." Logan replied. "However, for someone like you it won't be much help. They are mainly given to those who have weak abilities and show no promise in battle or to fulfill menial tasks such as you are seeing them do right now. If Sam hadn't joined the Cursed faction, he might have been given one of these machines."

Quinn had a wry smile on his face when he thought about it. It wouldn't have just been Sam. He, Shiro, Peter. All of them would have been asked to fight against the Dalki, and without his system they would have all been considered too weak and would have had to learn to compensate by using the Mechs.

When they had reached the main Shelter on top of the brown dark mud hill, they noticed something else going on as well. Two Mechs seemed to be battling it out against each other, while wielding giant beast weapons. Surrounding them was a crowd of soldiers who continued to cheer at the top of their lungs.

"The Colonel is a bit of a mech enthusiast, so if you want to try one then he might let you." Nathan said.

The Shelter had been made aware of their presence since Nathan had called ahead of time. They knew that the ones that were coming were part of the Cursed faction, but they had naturally not been made aware that the Cursed faction leader himself would arrive, nor that those who came were particularly close to Quinn.

Once the ship landed, there was the normal greeting that was to take place. Nathan saluted a man, who was dressed in black army uniform and had a golden badge on his side.

"I am Colonel Molitar Longblade." The man stated, looking at the others behind Nathan, although his greeting to Nathan wasn't as formal as to the others. Instead it was as if Longblade was just talking to his own soldiers.

'Looks like Nathan was right. Since these guys were under Innu, it's already great that they aren't too openly hostile towards our Cursed faction. I'm glad Peter isn't here.' Quinn thought.

"While you are here, you are under my command! I run this Shelter, I make the rules for this Shelter and everyone has to obey, understand?!" The Colonel commanded.

The others looked at each other for a second. They certainly weren't used to this kind of managing style. They were actually all leaders of a faction that was of equal size, yet it wasn't something that anyone of their Cursed faction imposed.

Still, they all looked at 'Bucky' who quickly replied by saluting. "Understood, Sir!" Instead of openly challenging his authority, it was smarter to play along for now and let Nathan handle everything later. Seeing their leader act like that they all mimicked him.

According to Nathan, Longblade used to be a Head General under the old system. He had been in charge of one of the eight bases, but after they had reconstructed the system to just three Head Generals, his group got put under Innu.

After their display the Colonel seemed to be in a better mood and he personally showed them the place where they would be staying while on Humding, also providing them with information for what they needed. Walking through the Shelter, they could feel the eyes of everyone staring at them.

"Hey, aren't they from the Cursed faction who harbor those dangerous V?"

"Yeah, I recognise that girl. How can we allow such criminals to just walk out here so brazenly? Head General Innu wouldn't have attacked them for no reason."

With Quinn being disguised, the only V they could identify from the broadcast were Layla, and Fex, who therefore naturally got the brunt of angry and evil stares. The others had gotten a pass.

"We have to deal with this in that other place, and now here too?" Layla weakly complained to those near her. Their current treatment was very similar to when they had been to the Vampire World. To now suffer it in the Human World as well, did they truly not belong anywhere?

While walking around, they could see a group of soldiers who had entered the base, and were injured. They were being rushed to one of the large buildings which appeared to be their medical facility. The wounds though, didn't look like ones that were made from beasts. Some of those looked like powers and beast weapons.

'I guess it's true that Pure really is here.' Quinn thought.

"Hey do you notice something about all the soldiers here? They all have swords with them as their beast weapon." Fex whispered.

"That's because the sword is one of the best weapons out there." Longblade clarified, overhearing them from the front. "I'm a master swordsman myself, and my skills have saved me time and time again on the battlefield. As the one in charge of this Shelter I have been teaching everyone how to defend themselves with the best weapon."

Longblade sounded proud of that fact. Quinn certainly understood how strong a great master swordsman could be, but he also thought of somebody who could probably put all of the people here to shame.

"On an individual basis or preference that's fine, but don't you think that's a bit stupid for a battle or war?" Logan, in his usually charming manner, questioned him. "It helps to have a variety of beast weapon users. What happens if your opponent can fly and attack from the sky? What about support from your ranged users, and protection from each other when fighting in a group?"

"There is a reason why there are multiple weapons in the first place."

Suddenly, Longblade stopped and turned around. "Oh really? Then what beast weapon does someone so scrawny as you use? Talk is cheap, so any of you can challenge me to a battle of the sword and I would be happy to demonstrate which weapon is better."

Out of the current members of the Cursed group, none were sword users or had beast weapons in the same style as it was being used here.

"Say, Molitar, could you give us more information on this humanoid beast that has been spotted? How did you come to find it, and why haven't you been able to defeat or capture it?" Nathan asked, trying to break the just created tension.

"Have you ever hunted underground? It's completely different terrain and the beast is smart enough to be able to use it to its advantage. It's easy enough to track it at any time we wish, though. It leaves behind a certain trail." Longblade answered. "Wherever it goes, it leaves behind dead beasts and all of them have one thing in common. The humanoid beast has killed them in one strike by targeting where their beast crystals were."

The others were in shock. Was the Colonel claiming that a beast was killing other beasts and taking just their crystals?

"It doesn't seem to care that this makes it easy to find. Although it hasn't confronted us, it also doesn't seem to be too afraid of us. We have already made a plan to capture it, by using that arrogance."

'Quinn, did you know that there are some beasts that are able to evolve?' Vincent asked. 'It's only natural for beasts to kill those who enter their territory, but they usually don't consume the crystals. Beasts seem to know about their own limits in evolution. However, if this one actually hunts other beasts for their crystals, it can only mean that it's capable of evolving further and going up in tier.'

'Are you telling me, the humanoid Demi-god tier beast is killing other beasts because it's trying to evolve into a Demon tier beast?!'

If that was true, the simple task was getting more complicated.

Chapter 1145: The fear of the V

Colonel Longblade continued to inform them about the annoyance the humanoid Demi-god beast posed. Although it wouldn't outright confront them, every so often, when they tried to mine, it would come and stop their mining process by destroying the Mechs. It was apparently utilising guerilla tactics and would disappear as soon as it had finished its tasks.

Because of this, Longblade had taken an interest in taking down this Demi-god beast, and it was what had led to the discovery of the dead beast bodies. Following its trails had eventually led them to certain previously unexplored areas in the tunnels where they had found a mountain of dead bodies, all at different stages of decay, but none of which had a beast crystal.

Making things even worse for the military was the fact that members of Pure had recently gotten involved. It had devolved into a battle between three fronts, which had made capturing the beast nearly impossible. Whenever they had gotten close, Pure would foil their plan, although the same had happened vice versa too.

After listening to everything, they arrived outside the main base building, which was placed towards the back of the camp. It was a dull looking rectangular building that was focused entirely on pragmatism over aesthetics. The Shelter was very much like a military base compared to others which felt more like cities with military presence.

There was a lot of open ground, vehicles moving, and it was well organised. Turning around, the Colonel looked over his reinforcement. He checked each one up and down, analysing their equipment. In Bucky's case, he spent only a fraction of a second.

He came to the conclusion that it would be a waste of his breath to even say anything to them. It looked like the Cursed faction had mostly sent over some peons. Perhaps as some stunt to influence public opinion, they had sent two people who were known V, but they didn't seem too strong either.

"Due to everything I have told you so far, that is why our group is suffering from a crystal crisis. We are unable to mine for crystals because the Demi-god tier keeps attacking us when we do. We are unable to hunt for beasts because four out of five we do find, are already dead."

"The key to solving this problem is simple, we need to get rid of the Demi-god tier beast. Unfortunately, we can't do that because Pure keeps on getting involved. I called for help from headquarters to get someone to occupy them long enough to capture it. I just didn't expect them to call the Cursed faction." Longblade looked at Nathan as if this was all his fault.

The truth was, Logan already had access to most of their files, so once the report had been made, the Cursed faction had been made aware of the existence of a humanoid Demi-god tier beast.

"Nathan should know where the living barracks are, the bases are set up in a similar way and most of the people here already recognise him. Make yourself at home as much as you can for now. We will move out, and inform you when the Demi-god tier beast has been found." Longblade said. And he was already walking into the building.

Originally, Longblade was meant to show them where they would be staying, but instead, he had brushed this off seemingly to Nathan.

"Huh, so they aren't just going to let us go out and explore this place on our own?" Fex complained. "I thought we were going to go into those tunnels and explore underground or something searching for the beast. Damn it, would they still treat us like this if er...Quinn was here?"

"I'm afraid so, actually their treatment would very likely be even worse," Nathan answered. "The good news is that the Colonel doesn't think you guys will be able to be of any help, so he hasn't imposed any restrictions on you. If he thought you were too strong or good, then maybe he wouldn't want you to solve the problem. It would look bad on them after all."

"Although those living in the Shelter idolise the late Head General Innu, the same can't be said about the other Generals. Although he shouldn't know about Oscar yet, Longblade surely knows about Innu, and must be hoping to rack up accomplishments to rise up the ladder."

"What about you?" Logan asked. "Aren't you a high ranking member as well?"

"I have no right to be a leader." Nathan smiled bitterly, looking at Quinn. "Just take a look at my history. Back at second base, I was in charge of the first-year students. I knew something was up, but I had no idea that everyone was being treated that badly."

"Even then, I couldn't stand up to Duke for what he was doing. I had been hoping to rely on Paul, until a certain individual came and defeated him. I couldn't do a good job back then, so how could I accept to do a better job in an even higher position with even more responsibility?"

"I tell you now 'Bucky', I don't envy your position, not at all."

Heading to the sleeping barracks, Nathan was to show them where they would be staying. So they could then all go off and do their own thing. The others didn't mind that much because they were sure that there was a chance that Quinn was going to act behind the scenes anyway, and that was what was currently on his mind as well.

'Vincent, if you're correct, then we need to act sooner rather than later. If it evolves, who knows just how powerful it can get?'

Speaking of beasts, on their tour they had encountered several captured beasts of all different shapes and sizes being carted around in special cages. Some of them had been asleep, most likely drugged, while others were banging against them trying to escape, and they were all heading to a certain place. A facility where there were a few men standing outside in lab coats inspecting the beast with special tools and such.

"What is that for?" Layla asked.

"I'm not entirely sure. It's not normal by any means for beasts to be inside a Shelter. This is usually considered a large risk." Nathan replied.

With it getting late, it was time for the others to get some sleep. When they entered the barracks, they realised it was just a large hangar with several beds lying on the floor. Soldiers were sleeping together side by side, and it was obvious that they weren't being treated as important guests at all.

From the right, suddenly Fex started to sniff the air. He immediately turned his head to where the smell was coming from.

"Is someone hurt?" He thought, but instead, all he could see was a person who was a couple of rows over from where they were with a blade in his hand. He had cut the palm of his hand with a beast weapon, and was smiling towards them.

"Did you see that? He could tell straight away? I guess it's true they really are sensitive to blood."

"And we're meant to sleep with these people. General Innu sacrificed his life to take out these guys, and we should be doing the same!"

Due to their sensitive hearing, they could hear all that was being said to them as well.

"Do you really think it will be safe if we stay here?" Layla asked. "What if they attempt to do something?"

"I don't think they will have done anything. If they did plan on it, they would have done it when we first arrived like General Innu did." Quinn replied.

The smell of blood was getting stronger in the sleeping area. Which was strange since the injured would stay at the hospital to be treated. There shouldn't be any open wounds either because they had healers.

That's when Quinn noticed that more and more people were playing tricks on them. Cutting themselves. It was a strange resolve, it took a lot for a person to cut themselves, especially due to something as petty as this, but it was the fear in them. They were doing it as some type of test that would make them feel better.

*Grurglel

A rumbling noise had come from one of the group, and the one it happens to be from, was Fex. His body was reacting to the sweet smell of the blood around him, whether he liked it or not, and the looks of everyone around them was filled with fear.

'What's going to happen now?' Layla thought.

Chapter 1146: Inspect skill secre

"Yeah, now of all times, you know what, if I put a bunch of freshly baked cakes in front of you, wouldn't your stomach rumble? We practically starve ourselves every day to get used to this empty feeling." Fex said.

When Fex spoke, he was speaking quite loudly due to his anger. Layla was trying to get him to shut up, as there was a horrid look on the faces of the soldiers closest to them, to the point where they had their fingers twiddling over their blades.

"Hey, just leave some cake for the others, okay?" Quinn said, smiling at Fex. If they were going to be scared anyway, they might as well have a little fun with it.

Because of all the stares they were getting from the others, Fex, who didn't need much sleep, had agreed he would keep an eye out for them while the others could get some shut-eye. Then in the middle of the night, Quinn wanted to do some investigating on what he had seen earlier. He was planning to see just what they were doing with all those beasts in that lab.

[Shadow cloak activated]

Quinn activated Shadow cloak, making it easy for him to escape and get out without anyone noticing him. It was the same for entering the facility. All he had to do was enter when someone else was walking inside or coming out, and that didn't take long at all, as a beast was being carted and dragged by three men through the facility.

Following where they were taking the beast, eventually they arrived in a room, where a man in a white robe and heavy grey beard and hair had a digital tablet in his hand.

"This is the last one for today, Sir!" One of the soldiers reported and quickly left the room after.

The doctor went up to the beast in the cage, which looked like a giant dog the size of a tiger with bulging muscles and fur going along the top of its head all the way to its back. According to his Inspect skill, it was an Intermediate tier beast.

Quinn followed the researcher to the corner of the lab, where there was another beast. It also had the appearance of a dog, but it was half the size of the first one. It looked similar yet at the same time different. Using the Inspect skill he was told that this one was apparently a Basic tier beast.

"Let's hope it works this time." The old man mumbled to himself, as he started to play with his two fingers, and hovered around the right spot closing one of his eyes as if he was aiming something. A second later and all of his fingers extending outward, piercing right through the Intermediate tier beast. Turning his hand left and right, the old man yanked his arm and held a beast crystal in his hand.

"Studying to see if the Crystals freshness affects the beast in any way." The old man spoke into a recording machine, as he went over to the Basic tier beast. As he got closer, the beast started to act more violent and wild, growling and attacking his case.

'Do beasts eat crystals then?' Quinn wondered while looking at this site. It seemed obvious that the doctor was attempting to feed the Intermediate crystal to the smaller beast. Perhaps it was trying to do the very thing that Vincent had talked about with the Demi-god tier beast.

Seeing that the beast wasn't inclined to eat the crystal, the doctor then started to close one eye aiming again for a certain spot. Then his fingers extended again, placing the crystal in a certain area that looked to be where the beast stomach would be.

After exiting from the beast with his fingers, the doctor had stitched up the beast using his long fingers. Even when the beast would try to hit them, they would stay there strong as if a baby was trying to whack away an adult's hand.

"It appears that despite the difference in tiers, a single crystal of a higher tier beast is insufficient to force an immediate evolution in the lower tier beast. The Basic tier beast will be put under surveillance for the next forty-eight hours, to check for any changes indicating a possible evolution."

"Should there be no signs of evolution, the experiment will be repeated to see how many crystals are required for an evolution to occur. Personal thoughts; As of now it does not seem practical to use higher tier crystals for lower tier beasts. Using the crystals of the same grade might mean the process will take longer, but could be more cost effective." The researcher recorded his findings, before he yawned.

Soon after, the researcher left the lab, leaving Quinn alone with the Basic tier beast.

'Pure, Earthborn, it's like everyone is running their own experiments. Some people might even think the Cursed faction are doing the same with vampires the way things are going on.' Quinn thought.

He searched the room for anything of use, but it seemed like most of the information was stored on computers and more. It would have been more useful if Logan had been here instead of him.

Then there was the basic tier beast lying on its side and looked in great pain as it moaned there. It looked sick, unable to move, and only its belly was moving up and down.

'Maybe I should use my inspect skill again, it will tell me what state it's in.' Quinn thought.

[Inspect]

[Basic tier beast]

[Condition weak]

[Evolution available]

[Current progress 48 percent]

'The Inspect skill, it actually worked like that! This means that it's true that beasts can consume other crystals in order to evolve, but I have no clue how many crystals they used. Even with the intermediate tier crystal, it didn't evolve. But then why didn't it show its progression the first time. Is it only after consuming the crystal and while it's in this state that it's being affected like so?

When first entering, Quinn had used his inspect skill on both of them. Both of the beast's states were green in colour and in good condition. Now the beast was in a weak state.

Quinn looked around and pressed his ear up against the wall. It didn't sound like anyone would be coming back soon, and the doctor even seemed to be done for the day. Because of this, he decided it was best if he just observed the beast for a little while.

In doing so, he had learnt quite a few things. For one, the beast evolution progress wasn't yet complete as the percentage bar had increased during his observation. It had reached 52 percent. Then something strange happened.

Quinn could no longer see the percentage of the beast's evolution when using his inspect skill again. Not only that, but the beast was now also recovering until eventually, its state was good again.

'This information, it could be really useful for us when trying to catch the Demi-god tier beast. If it really is trying to evolve, then it also means it's not consuming the crystal immediately. Because during the evolution process, the beast appears to go into a weak state, but Longblade must already know this.'

'Is this what he meant when he said he had a plan to trap the beast.'

It seemed like this lab of sorts was filled with vital information. It wasn't something that they had suddenly started to do overnight. Now he really wishes that he had brought Logan along, because there could have been heaps of information they could have learnt from this.'

Still trying to search for something, anything, he did come across something else.

Eventually, he saw a familiar device. It was circular in shape, with three buttons on the side, another recording device. Pressing one of the buttons, Quinn played back the latest message that had been recorded.

"Why do you people keep on killing us? This is not your planet! If you carry on, this whole planet will cease to exist! Go back, or I will make you stop!" Quinn heard the voice, only it didn't sound exactly...human.

Chapter 1147: Giant Robots

Just to make sure he had heard correctly, Quinn played the recording back a couple of times. The voice was distinct, deep dark and a bit heavy. It was as if the one speaking wasn't quite used to the act. In a way it sounded similar to the way the Dalki would speak, yet this voice had a different tone to it.

'Is this a recording of the Demi-god tier beast?' Quinn wondered. It was the only thing he could guess since he was still unable to access files or any information on the terminals, nor did he have much experience with the higher tier beasts.

After all, it wasn't that long ago that he became able to defeat them and that kind of information should only be spread among those that had already reached such a level. Still, he had once heard about a Demon tier humanoid beast that had been capable of speaking the human language. Quinn might not have believed such a thing, if the one who had told him wouldn't have been Oscar.

'If a humanoid Demon tier beast is able to communicate, then it might be safe to assume that an evolving Demi-god tier beast can do the same.' Quinn justified the recording. 'But what about that message? It sounds like we are the bad guys here.'

Beasts were known as aggressive beings. They would attack anyone who would enter their territory, be they fellow beast or human. However, this one sounded sad and angry at the loss of its fellow beasts. What's even more interesting was that it hadn't outright attacked them, but had apparently given the Earthborn group an ultimatum.

'Are humanoid beasts that different due to their intelligence? It wasn't just worrying about the other beasts, but about this planet as a whole.' Thinking back at what Colonel Longblade had said, he mentioned that the Demi-god tier beast would come and go, destroying the Mechs and equipment. It didn't outright kill humans and even the beasts it hunted had been killed in one fell swoop.

Could it be that it was its version of kindness?

It was certainly something for Quinn to think about. He then spent some more time watching the Basic tier go through its evolution process, before Quinn decided it was time to finally leave the place. He was sure today wouldn't be the last time he would come visit this lab either. Only next time, he might bring Logan along.

Getting out of the building was no problem at all thanks to Shadow travel. The ability allowed him to pass through walls. He had followed the beast in the cage to find out where exactly it was going in the first place. Once out of the building with Shadow cloak he could go back to the sleeping quarters without them ever realising he was gone.

"Was there any trouble?" Quinn asked, as he appeared behind Fex.

"Damn it, wh-!" Fex was about to shout as jumped up from his position, but Quinn had barely covered the other's mouth. He only removed it once his friend had seemingly calmed down, realising who he was.

"Did you have to sneak up on me like that?" Fex angrily asked.

"I was sure you would have sensed me coming." Quinn explained, since even some humans could detect him when using Shadow cloak, much less a vampire of Fex' caliber.

"Yeah, well I'm tired. The air here is horrible and our roommates aren't much better. There were a couple of guys who kept on coming over, pretending to have some business here. In the end I got pissed and used my Influence skill to make them stop. Don't worry, it doesn't seem like they've noticed anything, but unless we teach them a lesson or two, more will come to bother us."

"Are you sure, we can't just give one of them a crude beating, set it as an example to not mess with us. That's how a vampire would do it?" Fex suggested.

"That might be the vampire way, but we aren't in the Vampire World, now are we? I don't want to rule these people through fear. The people are divided, because we dropped a bomb on them. It might be inconvenient for us, but we need to earn their trust again and beating up some random nobodies won't really help us with that." Quinn disagreed. Fex didn't look quite convinced, but at least Quinn was sure the other vampire wouldn't look for trouble either.

The next morning the sun rose, and the first thing the soldiers did once they woke up was to check their necks. Each one was loudly announcing that they were 'safe'. What's more they even did a headcount to check if any of them had gone missing. Of course this was all due to the new visitors there. When they looked over at them, Fex who had already been annoyed couldn't help but shout: "I might be hungry, but I still have STANDARDS!"

This resulted in some strong gazes, but ultimately nothing else came of it. They started to leave the area and do their own thing while the Cursed group could do nothing but wait. Quinn informed Logan about the lab and told him that he should come along, but the best time would be at night fall again.

With nothing else to do, their group walked around together and they were quickly drawn to the sound of loud cheers coming from a certain place. Loud bangs followed and the sound of something heavy was heard crashing to the floor.

Breaking off from the group, Fex was the first to run around the corner, searching for the origin, and the next moment he stood there with his eyes lighting up and shining stars.

"Hey, there's a freaking giant robot fight happening here! Come on!" Fex enthusiastically shouted. There were just some things that a vampire couldn't experience in the Vampire World, and this was one of them.

When the group caught up to Fex they could see it as well. It was a repeat of what they had seen from above in the ship. However now they were closer they could see things that they hadn't been able to before.

There were makeshift stands where the soldiers stood and cheered for the fighters. It looked like it had been made via the Earth ability, but then in the centre, there was terrain unlike anything on the planet itself.

A large square field the same size as a soccer field was present, yet there was a strange forest in place there. That was the arena for the fight. They would use the trees for cover while firing at each other, dashing and running through, then when they were within close range, all the Mechs seemed to be equipped with a giant sword.

"Wait, what's with those capsules at the end, don't they look like the VR capsules?" Layla pointed out.

At either end of the giant battle there were two pods stationed, and they looked exactly like the one Quinn would often use to play power fighters.

"That's because they are." Logan clarified. "What you're looking at right now is an augmented reality field. The terrain they are fighting on, the Mechs themselves, it's all generated by holograms. Even the sounds and the vibration you are feeling are simulated."

"There are two people in the VR capsules who are controlling the Mechs. It also allows them to train and practice in as many different terrains as they wish."

"How do you know all of this?" Fex asked.

"Because my company is the one that sells these products and I was the one who helped develop them. It's expensive to use actual Mechs in combat. Could you imagine how much that would cost? This is the perfect way for them to experience all the different types of terrain outside the live situation."

"The added benefit is not every person has to be in the VR capsule to watch or experience what is going on, they can all watch, coach and give each other tips on the go. It's too expensive for consumer use, so it's no wonder we haven't seen one until now. " Logan explained.

Entering the crowd, the Cursed group were interested in getting a closer look. They were allowed through and as they walked through the stands it didn't come as a surprise when people started to notice them.

The cheering turned to stares and grunts, as they whispered hoping that they wouldn't choose a seat next to theirs.

"Let's just stand by the railing." Quinn suggested, as they went to the seats that were closest to the area where the show was going on, and were able to just stand and watch.

As they were watching Fex started to imitate the robots, as he imagined polishing one of the things, and the others around found it quite hilarious as they giggled.

"He's like a child, has he never piloted one of those things before?"

"I doubt the V have such advanced techs as mechs? And the Cursed probably don't train there now in things like this." Another said.

Although Fex chose to ignore it and started to root for one of the other members.

"What are you doing, you should dodge to the left, and then slice that other one in half."

Fex's comments were starting to annoy some of the nearby soldiers, as it sounded like he could have done a better job and in the end, the one Fex was rooting for along with many others in the crowd had lost.

"What the hell was that guy doing!" Fex complained with his hands held over his head.

"Shut your mouth you brat!" One of the soldiers shouted. "I don't think you have any idea how to even pilot one of those things! You would lose to any one of us, so unless you want to put your words into action then zip it!"

Quinn didn't like the way this person was speaking to one of his friends. His anger was boiling at this moment, but Fex's reaction was unexpected.

"You mean you'll really let me pilot one of these?!" Fex asked with a giant grin.

They didn't know how, but somehow Fex got pushed to the front of the waiting participants and was ready to head into the VR capsule to have his first match.

"Do you think he'll be okay?" Layla asked.

"I have no idea." Quinn shrugged his shoulders.

The ones in the crowd were cheering as they recognised the person standing next to the other VR capsule. It was Avion Bon, the best Mech pilot they had.

"That kid is in for a world of hurt!"

Chapter 1148: The vampire boy's dream!

The two of them entered the VR capsules and soon Fex watched a digital version of himself being created on the same field. As he turned around he could see the VR capsule behind him, his opponent standing on the opposite side of the field and everyone in the crowd including Quinn and the others.

It was as if a digital version of his body had gone outside. Soon the AR field started to generate new terrain. An orange dry desert with several large cannon openings and closings.

Then finally, the large mechs had been generated. Fex' design had a slight red armour while his opponent's was in blue. Fex excitedly leaped to the cockpit with no trouble and entered immediately.

"Did he just casually jump that high? It doesn't even look like he's wearing much beast gear?" The soldiers were wondering whether they were seeing things.

It was a grim reminder that Fex wasn't exactly human.

Although Fex wore some beast gear at times, more often than not he would follow vampire tradition and forgo using it. It seemed to be ingrained in their mentality that the strongest weapon would be their own body. Using his powers would allow him to advance his blood control and skills without relying on equipment. Then if there was ever truly the need to use beast gear he would be even stronger than at his best.

Compared to Fex, Avion used the Mech's legs to climb up to the cockpit that was located in the Mech's chest area. Once inside, there was room for one to fully move their body. The Mechs that the VR machine were simulating were both top of the line.

In the past, one would have to learn multiple controls, and the ins and outs of each button, but these days the interface was a lot easier to use. As long as one put on a certain set of gloves and boots, they would be able to control it similar to their own bodies.

On the gloves themselves there were several buttons one could press and each one did something different. This was one thing every Mech user would have to learn, so Fex naturally had no clue what they did at all.

"Fex will struggle." Logan stated as he stood on the outside observing. "At least at the beginning stages he will have to get used to this new experience. Not only does he need to figure out what the controls exactly do, but he will have to familiarise himself with the Mech's response time."

"Every Mech has a delay between one's movements and the machine itself. The soldiers train to the point where this delay doesn't really matter to them. A skilled Mech user is someone who is able to predict the others' movements in battle and is able to react accordingly."

"Not only will Fex struggle with it, as a vampire his reaction speed is superior to a human's. The normal delay should feel like an entirety to him."

For once it sounded like being a vampire was actually a disadvantage rather than an advantage.

With both fighters having entered their respective Mechs, a holographic countdown started at ten .

"Alright, let's do this!" Fex shouted.

When the countdown finished, the first thing Fex did was press one of the buttons on his left glove. An energy blast left the palm of his hand hitting the ground.

"Okay that's what that one does." Pressing the next button, Fex mech suddenly had a blade in its hand, and now in the cockpit there was a holographic blade as well.

"So cool, this is why we need to keep humans alive?" Fex giggled to himself, as he swung the sword about, moving his hands at great speed, and that's when he noticed it. The Mech was moving far slower than he had expected. Inside the cockpit Fex had moved at his vampire natural speed, he had even finished his set of movements, and then the Mech emulated them later.

"Oh crap!"

While Fex was still trying to figure out the Mech, Avion was already on the move. He was no longer at his starting position. Seeing that Fex had moved the giant machine to a position where he could find cover, standing behind one of the large orange walls.

'Damn it, I can only hear what the giant robot hears! So I can't locate where he is.' Years of fighting with his supersenses it was hard to break the habit.

Taking a peak around the corner, for a split second Fex could see his opponent firing his way. He pulled back his head, but naturally, he hadn't accounted for the delay yet, so the energy blast sent his giant robot flying through the air.

Moments later, he could see the blue Mech having jumped towards him with a blade in his hand.

Lifting his hands up, Fex tried to blast his opponent in the air. He was sure that the other would be unable to move mid-air, but using a thrust, Avion was easily able to avoid it all.

"Poor kid, I thought that your enthusiasm stemmed from being confident. Here I was looking forward to you showing me a good time, but I guess not!" Avion shouted, as he thrust his sword down.

Knowing what was going to happen, Fex had already pulled out his blade though, and swiped. He was slowly getting used to the delay, or so he had thought. His sword swung to the side, but the only thing it hit was air. The next moment Avion fell down and his sword pierced the centre of the cockpit.

The fight was over, the VR capsules opened up and a disappointed Fex left it.

"Hahaha, see boy, it's not so easy, is it?! You didn't even get a single hit on him?" One of the soldiers shouted in glee. "If all the people in the Cursed faction are this useless, maybe we don't have to worry about the V after all!"

However, Avion didn't share that opinion. His thoughts were still on the last move of their fight.

'He would have hit me, if he had reacted a moment later. Was this coincidence, or did he know what he was doing?'

The crowd's laughter and mocking continued at Fex' expense as the vampire made his way back to his friends and colleagues. Since he didn't react some of the rowdier soldiers started chugging items at him. However, Fex just moved his head slightly to avoid the water bottle. Soon a few more came, but he avoided them all.

No matter what or how many items were thrown at him, Fex didn't even break into a sweat, but eventually he grabbed one of them midair.

"I may be useless in the giant robot, but I could beat you all in a fight anyday!" Fex shouted back, clenching the water bottle and bursting it into pieces.

At that moment, the VR machine had activated again creating a new field. This time it was the same forest that they had seen before. This would only happen when someone had entered the VR capsule, but who would do such a thing?

Until the other person entered the VR capsule, they wouldn't see who had exactly entered on both sides, and they were wondering just what to do.

"Why didn't you stop him?" Shiro asked. "You saw what happened to Fex. Do you think this would be any different?"

"Of course it will." Quinn replied leisurely.

At that moment Fex had returned and he noticed that one of them was missing.

He wasn't the only one, the soldiers as well as Avion noticed the same. Quickly his peers were cheering for their best pilot to teach them another lesson.

The pilot had no problem with that. He turned around and entered into the capsule, and the soldiers began to cheer him on even louder than before. Finally the machines started to do its thing as it created digital copies of the two of them.

That's when the whole crowd could see what looked like a middle school boy out on the field.

"It might be a different story for anyone else, but how can Logan lose when it comes to a fight in machines?"

Chapter 1149: Is he Cheating?

'I hope the soldiers went easy on the Cursed group. I don't need any of their blood on my hands right now. Not unless we are underground and there is plausible deniability at least.' Colonel Longblade thought as he left his office in the main base Shelter in the morning to enjoy the nice day.

'Besides, I should even thank them for getting rid of Innu. I always knew his own incompetence would be the end of him one day, just never thought it would be like this. It's a bit strange that they still haven't made an announcement about it yet. Could there be something else going on? Although it doesn't matter since news has already spread around this base.'

Until his scout teams returned from the tunnels to report back there was not much else to do for the military leader, so he decided to visit a certain place. One of his favourite pastimes was to head down to the AR field.

As soon as he arrived, the soldiers immediately saluted their superior and let him through to the special seating area reserved for him. It was located midway down the stands and the seat had a special red cloth with a gold outline placed on them, similar to a makeshift throne.

The surrounding seats were also free, because they all knew who the main seat belonged to, Colonel Longblade, the Mech enthusiast who spent most of his days watching battle after battle whenever he wasn't leading any expeditions or teaching swordsmanship.

"Oh, how come Avion is down there? Did he change his mind or did one of our soldiers actually grow competent enough to be worthy of him participating again?" Longblade asked one of his favourite subordinates.

"Negative, Sir. One of the Cursed faction members has been complaining about the performance of one of our pilots, so we invited him out to the field to teach him a lesson. Due to the disrespect that was being shown we requested Avion to show off the difference between both our factions! As expected he defeated his opener swiftly!"

The man who had answered him, stood to his left, with another one to his right. These two were in charge of the AR matches which was why they knew all of the details of what was going on and they had also been the ones that pushed Fex up the list.

"That makes sense, but why did Avion just climb back into the capsule?" Longblade questioned.

The two men quickly looked at each other with worry, and finally the one to the Colonel's right then broke the news.

"Another person from the Cursed faction has entered one of the capsules, although we have no idea how he was able to access the machine or start the match without our approval. Perhaps there is a malfunction, in any case we have already reported this problem. Nevertheless, there does not seem to be any problem with the actual equipment itself, so it should be more likely a software issue. Now that Avion has entered again, another match looks like it will soon begin." The man explained.

They half expected for Longblade to be upset, but instead he had a smile on his face. The only thing he was upset about was the fact that he hadn't arrived earlier to have watched their best pilot school a member of the Cursed faction.

"At least I will get to witness something fun today. It's not everyday that we witness someone as skilled as Avion fighting. It is a shame that he has no talent with abilities, so his skills aren't so great outside the Mech, but inside the machine he is a combat genius. Someone like him can only truly be appreciated here." Longblade mused.

The countdown for the match was about to begin, as Logan and Avion both got into their mechs. There were those that were supporting Logan who were a little nervous. While the soldiers had no worry at all. They thought the small child must have just gotten out of school. Piloting the mech required a great deal of physical strength as well, as one would get hit and injured. Stopping suddenly and moving about one would have to take the massive amounts of g-force that went with it.

Which was why they just couldn't imagine someone like Logan fairing well.

"Doesn't it take a lot of skill to pilot a mech?" Shiro asked. "I mean, I know Logan is great with technology but you have to know how to fight in them."

"That shouldn't be any problem." Quinn replied confidently. "Logan has his own unique ways of dealing with things sometimes. Don't forget he's a man of probability, so he wouldn't have gotten in that Mech if he wasn't convinced he could beat the other guy and get some revenge for Fex."

The match began and immediately the two of them started to run forward with their Mechs. Both of them dodged in and out of the trees.

'Now what would be the best method to crush someone of his caliber?' Logan deliberated. 'Should I beat him in a skill competition? With my ability I could ask the Mech to battle on its own, but he should be too skilled to be easily beaten. Which means there is only one sure way to win.'

So far the movements from either side had been cautious. There had been a few shots of energy blasts fired here and there, but the only targets hit had been the trees.

'This person's movement is a lot better than the last one.' Avion judged. 'But, when it comes to combat, no one is better than me.'

Just then, the Earthborn pilot spotted Logan running towards him with his Mech. It was a direct path where trees weren't going to help any time soon.

'Got you.' Avion thought as he raised his hand, and was ready to fire out a blast, but then something strange had occurred. His hand lit up, but it felt like something was off.

'Shouldn't it have fired by now?' Avion was confused. He knew Mech's better than anyone else from his peers. It should be impossible for him to make such an amateur mistake as to misjudge the timing.

Before he knew it, Logan's Mech had dashed forward and was directly in front of him, knocking the hand away so the resulting blast fired off, hitting just a branch in one of the trees. Next a leg was coming to kick its body, but Avion was prepared for this. He was ready to use his thrusters to reposition himself.

However, once again, his timing was off, allowing Logan's kick to connect and damage the outer hull.

"What's going on? Avion's getting slaughtered out there!"

"Did you see how fast that Mech moved? Since then do thrusters activate that fast?"

Although it was unnoticeable for those in the crowd, it wasn't unnoticeable to Avion's mind and body. He had practised in the Mech to perfect the timing to the point where he felt like his body was actually in sync with the Mech was suffering because it was currently out of sync.

'The one sure way to beat you...' Logan thought as he lifted out both his hands, they started to light up. Getting off the ground, Avion quickly moved his Mech behind a large tree to take cover. '... is to use my powers.'

With that he shot out a blast with both of his hands, aiming right for the tree. Of course. Avion had played the game 1000's of times so he knew that this tree would be able to block the energy blasts. When it hit, the tree broke and the blast hit Avion' Mech right in the chest.

'What, but that's impossible, the tree should have blocked the hit!'

However, the attack hadn't stopped there as it started melting through the metal and eventually the notification screen was seen ending the match right there and then.

"What just happened? I've never seen anyone do that with an energy blast before! Did he finish the person off with just one enemy blast attack? Is that really possible?"

"I've seen Mechs get hit countless times by blasts. Even in the chest but it's never ended the match like that, but it has to be something the game is cable off. PErhaps there are things we don't even know about them?"

What they didn't realise was that Logan Green was the creator of the game. With his powers he was able to do whatever he wished. If he wanted to modify the thrusters and grant them a quicker launch time, then he could. If he wanted to amplify the power of his blast then that was no problem as well.

Lastly, if he wanted to alter his opponents Mech, he could do that as well.

"Did Avion just lose? I never thought I would see something like that, and the other guy didn't even seem like he was trying that hard!"

"Who is that kid? Could it be that the Cursed faction had some legendary pilot we never heard of before in their midst?"

The crowd was left stunned, as they never expected the match to have one that way.

'At the end of the day, this is just a game and we do everything we can to win. In the real world it will be the same.' Logan thought to himself, as he left the VR capsule.

'I think that last move made it a little too obvious that you didn't really play fair.' Quinn was slightly worried.

Standing up from the crowd was Longblade. As the Mech enthusiast he was, he knew exactly what those machines should and shouldn't be able to do. He had never heard of such functions. Walking down from the stage, the military leader entered the arena, before Logan could leave, and now the two of them stood in front of each other.

"Do you really think you could fool me?" Longblade asked. "Why don't we see if you can do that same trick again, but in a real battle?"

He had his hand ready to pull out his sword, yet it was more of a threat since he never expected Logan to accept in the first place. When trying to pull it out to further intimidate, it felt like it was stuck.

Turning around, he could see an insignificant young man. He had seemingly appeared out of nowhere on the arena floor, and held the sword's shaft from behind.

"I'm sorry but I don't like it when people draw a weapon on my friends."

Chapter 1150: Bucky steps up

Although Colonel Longblade wasn't using his full strength to draw out his sword, he still found it strange that someone was able to stop him by just using their bare hands.

'I don't see any beast gear on him, but he must be holding the scabbard hard enough to cause it to flex inward, trapping the sword itself. Is that even possible with a human's strength? Could it be that he has an ability to increase his strength?' Longblade wondered as he seized up the stranger.

Someone with this kind of strength and skill should be known far and wide by now. Information on the Cursed faction wasn't widely available for anyone outside their faction. Still, Head General Innu had recently conducted a special meeting for high-ranking officers, so they would ingrain certain prominent members. Looking at this person, Longblade was unable to associate him with any of them.

'No, it's my fault for judging him with human standards when this person is from the Cursed faction. We already know that some of their members are V, but there was no reason for them to give us a full list. For once I agree with Innu's approach, it might be safer to assume that every single one of them is a V.' The Colonel concluded and intended to reevaluate the other members at a later point in time as well.

With neither one of them budging, the military leader released the grip on his hilt.

"What's your name again?" He asked.

"It's Bucky, Sir. Our Cursed faction's higher-ups have tasked me to make sure that not a single member of our group is hurt. At least not by fellow allies." Quinn smiled as he explained. It was impossible to pretend to be a nobody at this point, so going with the flow he had decided to appear as some sort of trump card.

Hearing this, Longblade started to laugh and looked over the winner of the last match. Staring at the metal plate covering one of his arms. It wasn't unusual in this day and age for people to replace their bodies with robotic parts, but then he noticed something.

"Now that I can take a closer look, I should have realised my mistake. We were told that the Green family was working for the Cursed faction, I just never expected them to actually come out on the field. Forgive me for being so rude earlier." Longblade apologised with a gentle bow.

The whole crowd started to gossip between each other as they heard the name 'Green family'. Although not a part of the previous Big Four their influence hadn't been too far off, by creating a number of systems for the world.

The only thing was, not many people knew that Logan worked on more of the game-like projects compared to the ones his parents worked on. Be it as the creator or with his ability, he had no problem to change it into the way he wished.

"However, that only strengthens my belief that there was foul play involved!" Longblade stated, intending to stir something up. Now that Quinn was on the field though, Logan no longer had anything to worry about, and he just walked past Longblade.

"As a military man you should be aware that a win is a win. It doesn't matter if one defeats their enemy through an 'honorable' one-on-one fight, teams up on the enemy, or utilises traps. A loss in the real world means death. I would love to see people making excuses like that when they are dead." Logan declared, as he continued to walk off.

After learning of who Logan was, there wasn't a doubt in people's mind that he had somehow cheated. Avion had already felt that something was off, but with this knowledge he was certain that he had been cheated.

"I want a rematch!" Avion demanded. "Let's use real Mechs and fight again! I have practically dedicated my life to these machines, so it's impossible for me to misjudge the timing if you hadn't messed with it!"

"Stand down." Longblade ordered the pilot. "Do you really think there will be much of a difference in a real match? If he can alter the game system, he must be able to alter any system. It might hurt your pride but I won't permit you to risk your life in such a stupid way. We still need you for the war against the Dalki!"

"He has a point, in a real fight if your Mech's sensors got scrambled and something like this was to happen, who would you complain to?"

"Which is why I suggest something else. I'm sure you know that the game can be used in other ways. Not only can it simulate a field for Mechs to fight in, but also one for our users to fight in. Similar to the game Power Fighters. If you are up for it, we can fight again. In the real world you could do nothing to alter our fighting skills with your abilities, so hope you wouldn't claim it was fair to do that again if you were to alter yourself and opponent in this match? What do you say?" Longblade offered.

It was a troublesome request. Of course they could just decline this little game. After all, even though Logan could fight, he wasn't the best to go against someone who used beast weapons regularly. Even if he did use the system, the Colonel would call it out straight away as soon as he noticed something off, possibly stopping the match midway.

"Well there's really no upside to this whole thing." Fex complained who was still sulking in the stands. "Logan already beat that Avion guy, so there's no need for us to play a match by their rules."

"I do agree, but I think 'Bucky' might have other ideas."

"I'll take you up on that offer." Quinn agreed. "We don't want you to accuse Logan of cheating again, so he won't participate. How about I give it a shot? After all, I am a member of the Cursed faction as well. Any objections?"

Longblade didn't like the fact that this enigma had so willingly excluded Logan. He also didn't like the fact that 'Bucky' was this confident, but he had met many foolish young people in his life, hoping he was just one of them.

"That sounds great. What better way to bring our two factions closer together than through the art of combat and coalition. Before you accept though there are a few rules." Longblade nodded as he continued to smile, not showing his concern.

"Master Green here is to stay in the stands far away from any of the machinery. Before your fight is to take place we shall have a test run, and the game we shall play won't exactly be the same as Power Fighters either."

"As you have already noticed, everyone of my soldiers uses a bladed weapon. The most common one is a sword to do battle. To make it a little more fun we have altered the gaming system. Each combatant starts off with a hundred points of Health. Each blow takes off points, up to a maximum of ten if you hit a lethal spot. For a regular hit five."

"I know in the real world, one would die from a stab to the heart or the head, but this is all for us to improve our skills. After all, there are some foes we face that don't die even after suffering such an injury. So what do you say?"

Logan, who was still there, didn't like it. Nobody in the present Cursed group used swords as their weapons. With all things in the Colonel's favour, Logan expected Quinn to refuse or at least make some demands of his own.

"I'm in. Shall we start now?" Quinn asked with a smile.

It came to a surprise for most of the Cursed and they were wondering just what Quinn was up to. Leaving the field, Logan didn't even have time to ask, but Quinn just gave him a thumbs up as he neared the stands.

"Excellent, I am very pleased we have someone who doesn't shy away." Longblade bellowed out as he turned and made his way to the other side of the field, yet his fake smile soon turned into a frown.

'Is he this confident because of what he is? We have to win this fight to prove to the people that the V are something that can be dealt with. Most are afraid of the V and disgusted by them, there is only a select view that isn't swayed by the countless rumours, that going the Cursed will turn you into a V and give you great power.'

Whether right or wrong, Longblade had his own reasons for wanting to win this fight. As stipulated, they witnessed a fight between two other soldiers take place before the main one. The field had changed once again, this time into a stony area with several large rocks and pillars all around.

The two of them used their swords and the field reacted as it would to in real life, each slash against the rocks would cut and break them, and even the attacks against each other would simulate the pain and reaction their body would feel.

The only difference was, that once the pain disappeared the wound would heal instantly. At the same time, everyone could see the health bars above go down as each opponent struck each other.

'I see. Well, it seems I've learned a lot, watching them.'

As for Quinn's reason for wanting to fight, it was actually quite childish. Similar to Fex's dream of piloting a Mech, when Quinn had first entered the military academy and joined the beast weapons class, he had originally wanted to use a sword to do battle.

The main reason he hadn't selected that weapon was due to the system informing him it wouldn't have supported his Blood swipe and other blood powers compared to the gauntlets. Now that he had extreme strength, speed, reflexes and experience under his belt, Quinn wanted to see how exactly he would fare with the weapon he had once neglected.

With the match over, Quinn's and the Colonels' match was about to begin.

"Come on Bucky, kick his arse!" Fex shouted and cheered as loud as he could. Since the whole arena was now chanting the name of Longblade. It was quite overwhelming as the loud sound was drowning out everything, and Fex even had to cover his sensitive ears.

'Quinn, good luck.' Layla thought.

"What a surprise to stumble upon an Ex agent of Pure in this place." A voice whispered behind her.

Chapter 1151: Best babysitter

Layla only noticed that someone had snuck up on her when that person whispered in her ear, and the contents of those words had made a shiver run down her spine. After all, there were only a few who knew of her past, and those that did that had good intentions, wouldn't approach her in such a manner.

She was unsure what to do, should she turn around at that moment? Call for help from her fellow colleagues?

Judging by the way Fex was swinging his head and covering his ears, it didn't seem like he had exactly noticed what was going on and the others also seemed completely focused on spectating the match before Quinn's.

'Can I get their attention somehow, with my ability, maybe I can grab something and hit Fex or Sil.' She thought.

"Don't worry, if I wanted to harm you I would have done so already. I just couldn't help my curiosity. Now why would the daughter of one of Pure's founders be working for the person who had caused her death?" The person asked.

Layla could tell that the voice belonged to a male. Unfortunately there were far too many agents in Pure for her to figure out which one was behind her, with just the voice alone. Although to be this confident, it had to be a high ranking one, at least a numbered agent like herself of the past. For now, she was looking at her surroundings as she tried to come up with a plan in case that mysterious man changed his mind.

"Aren't you the least bit ashamed of yourself? Your 'poor' mother would be rolling around in her grave if she knew. She created Pure for a reason, but I guess by the fact that you are part of a faction of monsters you either don't know about any of that... or you simply don't care!"

The words struck a chord inside Layla.

"You know nothing about my mother!" Layla whispered back in anger, hoping to get the attention of someone, even if it was just one of the Earthborn groups. Something had been pressed against her back since the beginning of their conversation, which was why she didn't dare to agitate the person behind her too much.

However, listening to these accusations, although they weren't exactly wrong, she had to stand her ground. "That is something we can agree on. I wasn't particularly close with your mother so I didn't know her. However, I know of somebody who was close with her. Agent 2 is on this planet. If you want to know more, why don't you follow me and ask him. I'm sure he would be happy to welcome back an Ex agent. Especially one with a close connection to our organization as you." The voice suggested and the next moment, Layla could no longer feel the pressure that was on her back.

She naturally turned around, hoping to look at the man and catch a glimpse of what he looked like, but he was nowhere in her vicinity.

'If he wasn't lying and Pure really sent out such a high-ranking single numbered agent, then that means they are putting far more importance into capturing this Demi-god tier beast than we realised. Should I take his word for it? Can I just go off, to find out more about my mother... Agent 2 should be one of the first members of Pure, so he should surely know Mom created Pure in the first place... Can I really go when all of this points to a trap? Or would he hurt me somehow, mother is no longer there and she won't have the power to protect me anymore. Not that she ever did in the first place.' Layla was conflicted.

Just then, she saw a hooded man exit the area. He put up one hand and slowly put down a finger, one by one. Layla understood that this was a sign for her that he would leave in a matter of seconds, whether with or without her. However, by following him, she would leave Quinn and the others. Should she ask them to come along?

'It might be a big trap and if anything happens to me it will just cause more trouble for Quinn, but if Pure is planning to do something to me, he could have just attacked me there. Is there something that my mother still has a play in? did she ask someone to maybe still look out for me?' She thought.

As the man started to leave, Layla had no choice but to move, still undecided. 'I'll contact Quinn through the mask once his match is over, and he can come over then. If I'm there, maybe I can find out more information about the Demi-god tier beast from Pure. Without the need for fighting between the two groups. I know Quinn is strong, but he isn't the only one Pure is fighting against and I don't want anyone to get hurt if I can stop it.'

This was how Layla justified her action to herself, but in reality she just wanted to know more about her late mother, and Quinn didn't need to be a part of that life. He had done enough for her already. She was also afraid that relying on him like so, would make her appear weak. She didn't need looking after and she didn't want Quinn to always babysit her actions.

However, there was one person who had noticed her leave the scene, and that was Logan who had little interest in the exhibition match.

'Layla, why don't you ask us for help? I know what it feels like to want to do things on your own, but if you go out without telling anyone, it will just worry Quinn all the more. It's dangerous to go alone, especially on an unknown planet.'

Following behind Layla, Logan was sure that something would happen, so he decided to keep up and close, only unlike her who had been pressed for time, he left behind a little spider.

Finally as the match started, the cheers started to die down, and Fex could hear freely again.

"Damn man, who knew a bunch of grown men could scream so high-pitched." Fex mumbled looking around and all he could see was a bored Sil, and Shiro who were by his side looking at the field.

"Hey, where the hell did the other two go?" Fex asked. He then noticed a small spider on the railing jumping up and down. Seeing this, he knew Logan must have left it behind and placed it on his mask.

"Logan, where the hell did you and Layla go?" Fex asked, worried what could be so important they couldn't stay to watch Quinn's match.

"Layla seems to be following someone at the moment, I'm just tagging along for back up. I've left one of my spiders with you. Once Quinn is finished beating the Colonel, just follow the spider to our location." Logan informed him.

"Wait just you two alone, don't you need my help. What if there;s someone reallys torng the two of you can;t handle. Do you expect me to just stay here!" Fex started to shout at the railing. The ones close by were looking at him as if he had gone mad, since they were unable to see the spider. Even if they could, they would have thought he had gone crazy.

Regardless, his words had gone unheard for Logan had already ended the call.

'Should I go anyway, I mean I know Quinn will be able to handle himself, and there are others that can cheer him on.' Fex thought.

Looking to his left and right, he could see Shiro and Sil, just casually talking to each other. Sil who was an unstable person who could probably destroy the whole shelter if someone got on his bad side, and Shiro who if others knew his ability would try to target him. That's when Fex realised.

'Did they just leave me with babysitter duty?'

Chapter 1152: The faction of monsters

There was no need for Logan to completely change into his speed suit, as Layla wasn't as fast as the other vampires. Changing into another form now would just frighten those she ran past. Right now, she was using Qi on her feet to allow her to run faster to catch up to that mysterious man. Not wanting to fall behind, Logan created a pair of speed boots for himself out of the spiders.

He was keeping up with the girl with relative ease and soon enough he saw who it was she was running after. For Layla to be chasing after someone like so, he could only assume it had something to do with Pure. Eventually, the man had disappeared between two large buildings into a dark alleyway. For a second Layla waited outside of it, she might be desperate for information, but she wasn't foolish enough to just run in.

'I know this is a trap... but I need to know why... Why did Mom treat me like a tool for her whole life? It was always 'for the greater good' this, and 'for the sake of Pure' that, so then why did she give it all up at the end? The childhood I never had... everything was because of Pure, yet I don't even know the reason why she started it.' Layla thought. She had struggled with herself with what to do, but soon felt her legs walking. As she cautiously entered the alleyway, afraid the man would just run away. For a brief moment, she wouldn't even mind getting captured by Pure, as long as she could find out the truth.

Contrary to her fear, the man had stayed there. He was leaning up against the wall in plain sight, as if he had expected her to always come. In fact, he had turned around, revealing a full set of beast gear and a sword by his side. He then pulled off his robe to reveal a number on his shoulder. One that displayed the number 11 in black ink. A tattoo that was wide and thick, a proud symbol.

'Double digits, but not too far off from being a single Agent. Just how much manpower has Pure sent here? and why would you tattoo your own agent number on yourself? What happens when he ranks up or ranks down?' Layla wondered, taking a step back.

The man had a mask on, one of a clown which was fully white with a large red nose. It covered his face but where the mouth was located one could see his mouth and tongue. He started to laugh out hysterically, like a mad man, echoing through the alleyway.

"I've heard about her having an incompetent daughter, but how much of an idiot can you actually be to follow me into a place like this? Are you just trying to cause trouble for your new group? Or do your mommy issues really affect you that much?"

Number 11 pulled out his sword, which had a red hilt on the bottom, and suddenly flames started to flicker as it was activated.

"You know, I hated your mother for the longest time, she was always so uptight. Thought that her way was the only right way. She got in the way of not just Agent 2, but nearly all the other leaders time and time again. There were so many things that we wanted to do, but she just had to get involved. For some reason, 0 had a soft spot for her, so we had to be careful."

"In the end, we didn't even have to use our plan to get rid of her, but seeing how her daughter is still very much alive, I just had to act. Do you have any idea how many times that bitch punished me to 'correct my behaviour'? Claiming I went too far?! Well now she's gone, so I'll at least have fun with her daughter! And you know the best part of it? After I have had my fun with you, I can bring back your corpse and will be hailed a hero for getting rid of a traitor!"

This was new news to Layla, whenever she was at the Pure base everyone seemed to respect her decisions. Even the other single agents listened to what she had to say. She never knew that her mother was always seen as the enemy within Pure.

'How could that be, how did it even end up being that way?' Layla thought Powered by her strong emotions, Layla had enough. She quickly placed an arrow into her bow and fired it out. Agent 11 lifted up his sword, still laughing as he activated his Qi to block it.

'This will be an easy fight, she was never even ranked above fifty. Despite her being that woman's daughter!'

When the arrow collided, neither one was giving in. The arrow was stuck mid air against his sword. Even activating the flames it seemed like they were unable to reach the arrows for some reason, eventually Agent 11 got pushed back, since the force of the two arrow's were stronger than his.

'Using my ability with my Qi has gotten a lot better. I can increase the force even now.' Layla thought.

"What? When did a lowly double agent like you learn how to use Qi? It was your bitch of a mother, wasn't it? Ha, just wait until I tell the others! For being so uptight about rules and order, she actually taught it to you even though she was the one who had insisted that we only teach it to high-ranking agents!" No longer trying to block the arrow, Agent 11 moved to the side allowing it to continue going forward.

However, another one was coming towards his face, and without knowing about it, one was heading towards his back as Layla was able to control the direction of them both.

'He's too overconfident because I was a low level agent, and I can use that to my advantage. I've got him!', Layla thought. At that moment though, the arrows fell to the ground. As two more men came out slashing at the wooden part of the arrow and stopping the attack.

Then, two more had appeared behind her.

"What a silly fool, you will die the way you were made!" Agent 11 laughed, as he charged forward with his sword. Seeing how now they were too close, Layla had no choice but to transform, sadly the process took some time so she needed to find a way to buy it against their group.

Smashing down one of the agents, Logan had arrived and lifted his metal plated arm to block the sword attack from Agent 11. Two more robotic arms had come out from Logan's side by his ribs and fired energy blasts hitting the other two away.

"Logan!" Layla shouted, but she didn't have time to worry, as she turned around to face the two agents behind her and fired out two shadow chains. Locking them both in place. Now she had the time to transform into her second form. Horns grew from her head, her body grew slightly taller, and placing the bow away she now drew the sword by her side.

In her second form Layla had the strength of a vampire, which could even exceed that if fuelled by negative emotions. And right now, the girl was pissed, intending to make sure to at least find out what Agent 11 meant by stating she would be killed the same way she had been born.

The man could only think one thing as he saw the girl transform in front of his eyes, that she was a monster. He also didn't understand how a regular person managed to block his Qi-filled attack with just a metallic arm. Soon enough he got an answer, as the casing from the arm fell off, damaged from the sword strike.

"I knew your faction housed monsters, but I didn't know you even housed Dalki!" Agent 11 shouted in horror, as he looked at two monsters in front of him.

Chapter 1153: Layla's anger

Entering the field, Quinn grasped the sword that was in his hands and made a few practice swings in the air. He looked around, taking everything in as it all felt so real. It was different from playing the VR game Powerfighters. He wasn't sure if it was due to the mix of VR and AR that had created something extremely special or if it was something else.

'Logan, it looks like you've improved something yet again.' He looked to the side of the arena expecting to see him there, but that's when Quinn noticed that not only was he missing, but so was Layla.

'Did they both have to go to the toilet at the same time? Judging by Fex's exaggerated expression I don't think they went to the toilet.' Quinn thought. Sound from the outside was emulated into the machine, so Quinn was able to hear the cheers from everyone around, but specific things that they were saying weren't heard at all.

'I might have to try and finish this quickly.' Quinn thought as he looked at Longblade on the other side. The field had finished generating, this time it was an open field, with long grass and nothing else.

"It looks like I'm in luck. This is one of my favourite maps to fight on. There is nowhere to hide, and only our skills will decide the outcome of the fight." Longblade thought as he pulled out his blade which was long like a katana. Going by his weapon's choice he had the feeling that the Colonel and Leo would surely hit it off.

The fight began, and Longblade dashed forward running with his sword down by his side. When he was within range, he struck upwards from below. Pulling back, Quinn was able to avoid the blow that almost grazed his chin.

'This person is good. No wonder he was one of the Head Generals in the past.' Quinn thought.

To everyone else, they were expecting the fight to have been easy. After the first connection, Longblade would start to deliver the remaining finishing blows, but that wasn't the case at all. The simulation allowed them to use their beast gear and the stats that were powered within it. However, 'Bucky' wasn't wearing any beast gear.

If he did, he would have been able to use the speed of his set to his advantage and could finish the fight in seconds. Quinn had intended to beat him fair and square, hopefully earning the Cursed faction a good reputation during their stay.

Of course, if he had known that Layla and Logan would have gone off, he wouldn't have cared for that. He had earned his equipment, so Longblade wouldn't have been able to criticise him for it, still his natural body as a Vampire Lord was fast enough even without it.

After the first strike from Longblade, a few more came after and Quinn blocked each one with his sword. Unlike his opponent he was using a standard long sword. Someone would usually have to wield such a large blade with two hands but Quinn was able to with one. He blocked the swords moving them in place whenever he could see Longblade striking and was being pushed back a bit.

"You're just relying on your body's natural reactions, I can tell!" Longblade pointed out. "But you are inexperienced when it comes to holding the sword."

It was true, Quinn didn't know how to properly parry, or do any of the sort, but his strength and speed allowed him to deflect all those attacks aimed at his vitals. Exchanging blows with him, Quinn could tell that Longblade's swordsmanship was impressive.

"I have fought against someone who is better with the sword than you. I thought I could learn something, but I guess not." Quinn sighed, as he struck, not holding back as fast as he could towards the side of Longblade.

The attack was too fast for him to react, and he had been hit. With the system emulating the power in the strike Longblade felt the pain and was sent across the field. The only thing he could do to slow down the attack was to dig his blade into the ground.

"How fast was that attack?" Longblade wondered, When looking at the game screen, Quinn saw that the Colonel's points had only dropped by five. Meaning it wasn't counted as a lethal blow.

'I see, the system is going to make him recover from this, so it looks like I'm just going to have to hit him a few more times.' Quinn concluded.

At the same time, Longblade stood up, but he hadn't lost hope, for he had an ace up his sleeve. The use of abilities wasn't exactly banned from the match, so there was one thing he could do, as his eyes started to glow.

In the alleyway, a sword was shining brightly as it was covered in flames, but it was doing nothing against his opponent. Logan could feel only a little heat from the sword he was blocking with his Dalki arm.

"The Cursed faction seem to be just full of monsters!" Agent 11 shouted, as he placed more Qi into his blade making the flames brighten more and was ready to strike again, but then Layla barged forward and struck with her sword. The two powers of Qi clashed, creating vibrations through the air.

"Logan, let me deal with this one!" Layla requested showing off her large teeth. In a close range fight and a battle of strength, her second form was better suited than her third form, and she was just hoping it would be enough.

"Well, little beast, at first I wanted to kill you, but I guess you still might have some use being kept alive! Too bad for you, we don't need you in one piece!" Agent 11 let out another crazy laugh, as he swung his sword again, managing to cut Layla's arm. It wasn't deep as the girl managed to pull back avoiding most of the blow but her body wasn't healing like it usually would.

'Is this the second stage of Qi?' Layla wondered, as the clown started to bombard her with his attacks. She knew how to use the second stage of Qi to a certain extent, but she was unable to use it on anything but her arrows. Unfortunately, her arrows were not enough to deal with him, but she wasn't faring much better with her sword. She wasn't a master swordsman, either, but he seemed to be quite skilled.

Soon the attacks were building up on her body as she was cut more and more in different places.

'I hardly used the second form, I should have practised with the sword more instead of using my arrows.' Layla chastised herself, but now was the time for regrets. She knew that would have to wait until after the fight.

The only reason why she was doing okay so far, was because she could still power her sword with the first stage of Qi. Making her strikes powerful. Nonetheless, the difference between the first stage and second stage quickly became apparent.

Coating his sword with the second stage of Qi, he was able to chip at Layla's sword which was at the King tier level. Both swords were made from the same level of quality crystals, yet Layla's weapon continued to suffer until, it broke.

"You're finished!" He shouted.

With nothing else to use, she decided to block the attack with her bare arm. Afraid that something would happen, Qi started to run through her veins and she used what power was in her body to allow it to do so.

Striking forward Agent 11 was going for a clean cut, but instead his sword was left there stuck in place.

'What is going on, is the Qi in her body really this strong? Strong enough to even block my second stage and when using a weapon.'

Layla didn't know how her bones and flesh were able to withstand the sword, but the sword was slipping deeper and deeper into her by the second and something had to be done.

Jumping back, Layla pulled out an arrow from behind, she held onto two of them like a spear. In the desperate situation she threw both of them towards Agent 11 who was confident enough to dive right in. He went to strike and block the blows but the power of the Qi was more than he had expected, getting pushed back before he could further injure it.

'How is that possible? I hate to admit it, but somehow her Qi is actually stronger than mine. I've only had the advantage because I know the second stage, but she can actually use it in her arrows to some extent.'

Changing the shape of his Qi, he was able to redirect the arrows, but when he was ready to, he felt something slice the back of his ankles causing him to fall to the floor. The next second, pain shot from the front of both his feet.

Looking down, he saw that the blade that had broken, she was controlling it with her telekinesis and used it to attack the back of his foot while he was distracted, and now lifting the two half into the air, she slammed them down on his foot, and they had pierced the front as well.

'But how? I'm wearing beast gear, and have the power of Qi running through my body.'

The next second, Agent 11 was constricted by the body of a serpent, as it wrapped around him. His body was getting crushed by muscles stronger than he had felt before, and on the tail end of it, he could see a beautiful woman.

'This Qi! It's as powerful as the first digits! And that attack just now... did she infuse the blade with the second stage as well... is that... how she hurt...' Before he could finish his thought, Agent 11 had passed out and Layla left him on the ground. Having exhausted a lot of her strength, the girl turned back into her usual self, but she could barely stand as she knelt up against the wall.

'I did it! I was able to beat a single high ranking double digit agent that was able to use Qi, by using my own Qi. I have improved... Shit, Logan.' Layla suddenly remembered that she wasn't alone. Turning around, she saw that Logan was having hardly any trouble dealing with the other agents, and now that their leader had been subdued on the floor, they decided that fleeing the area was the better choice than continuing to fight against Logan.

'We already have the highest ranking one, and I'm sure there are other Pure members out there. It's better to fall back.' Logan decided. The spiders started to form and collect over his Dalki arm once more. They took the broken parts from the floor and started to fix it in place covering it once more.

Then the spiders soon moved to the Agent who was left passed out on the floor, and they started to cover his legs in place, and surround his body as well.

"He's an agent of the Pure I'm assuming. I can only imagine that group causing you to act so reckless...." Logan was about to give Layla a lecture about her stupid act, but he decided to postpone it. She had done well in the fight, and she was obviously exhausted.

"Let's take him back to Quinn. With his powers he's the best person to interrogate him." Logan said. "If we hurry, we might be able to make it in time to see him humiliate Longblade!"

Chapter 1154: Bucky a legend?

Before entering the VR capsule both parties had been told the official rules by the organisers and both had agreed to them. They were allowed to wear whatever beast equipment they wished. The only beast weapon they were to use had to be a blade of some type.

Both of the blades that would be used would be of the same tier level. Since it was VR, Quinn was able to select a suitable weapon for himself but just chose to go for a standard longsword.

However, the rules had never mentioned anything about abilities and this was because Longblade had one that would give him a huge advantage in this type of match. Since his skills with a sword were usually enough to win over his enemy he didn't really abuse it, but this fight was one he just had to win.

'Did that Logan Green do something to increase his avatar's speed output? Tamper with his strength? At least it doesn't seem like I am suffering from anything like Avion. I didn't want to do this, but I need to even the playing field somehow.'
'Longblade reasoned as he activated his ability.

His eyes started to glow slightly and pupils' outline became blue. A sign his ability was activated and now he could see it. It was strange when Longblade first used the ability playing the game he thought it wouldn't work, but it had something to do with seeing the opponent in front of him that allowed it to.

'Now let's see, what exactly you plan to do.'

Around this time, Logan and Layla returned, only there was a suspicious large box shaped like a coffin on the boy's back. Making it stand out even more was the fact it was easily twice Logan's height. It looked quite heavy, but ultimately the ones doing the heavy lifting were the additional robotic arms. When they finally met up with Fex and the others, Logan put the box down upright by the group's side.

"Finally, you guys returned. What exactly happened?" Fex asked as he turned around to see the strange appearance. "What the hell is in the box?"

"A person." Logan stated without blinking an eye. "We don't want this one to escape so we had to restrain him. Don't worry, he's still alive and has enough air to last for a while. I just thought this would be the best appearance to cover it up. It should deter others from opening it, as they might think there a V is inside."

Fex wanted to say something, but judging by how extremely tired Layla looked, the cuts on her arm that were healing slowly, ,while part of her body was badly bruised he understood that it couldn't have been an easy fight.

On the other hand, Logan looked completely fine, no wounds whatsoever on him. At least from what they could see on the outside. It made the vampire question if he had actually provided backup or had just let the girl do all the work.

Logan had been able to stop most attacks with his giant Dalki arm, but there was something he had realised during the fight. Although the Pure members that had fled didn't seem too powerful, they were able to use Qi. They hadn't been too proficient with it, either that or they had a low reserve of Qi, but it had been enough for Logan to still receive a cut on his arm.

When he was cut and blood was drawn he noticed the colour was green and something strange happened. An energy had entered his body, and he had felt himself becoming angrier. Because of this, he had ended up fighting more cautiously after and it was also the real reason he didn't want to chase after those that had runaway.

'I guess I might need to run a few tests on myself. Otherwise I could become a liability to the whole group. In Borden's case he stated he felt an energy rising in him whenever he was injured and his anger was always directed towards those that hurt him and not the others around him.' Logan thought.

He wasn't too worried right now, but it was always better to be safe than sorry.

Back in the arena now that Longblade had been sent across the field, Quinn had time to look at the others and there he could see that Layla and Logan had returned. It was a relief for him, that he didn't have to go on some grand journey to save them once again.

He had done that often enough already. Now that he knew they were safe, he could relax and have some fun just as he had intended in the first place. Quinn gripped the sword and waited for Longblade to make his next move, but for some reason he hadn't moved at all.

Instead his face was twitching as if he was angered by something, something that he didn't quite understand.

'This doesn't make sense. With my ability I can see the outcome of the next five seconds based on my movements. So why? Why is the future telling me that no matter where I attack, that I will be the one getting hurt no matter what I do?' Longblade was getting frustrated.

His own ability was simply telling him that no matter what he was going to do next, this Bucky guy who he had first heard of today would be able to react and counter him. However, there was one ray of hope, as Longblade found a way through.

He charged in like before, unfearful and more confident because his ability told him that this would work. Seeing this, Quinn thought it was the same set of moves as last time, but he could tell something was up.

'I might need to use my full strength and speed for this one. I was hoping to win with a clean score.' Quinn smiled to himself. This was what he wanted, to see a swordsman at work, one that showed everything they had.

When Longblade finally reached Quinn, he swung his sword once again striking from down below. Seeing this Quinn went to block as he always had just moving his sword in the right place.

'I'll strike after this block and keep doing so, ending this match.' Quinn thought.

But then something strange had happened, as the sword was in the right place to block his opponent. It seemingly phased right through the Colonel's sword, disappearing and then reappearing like Quinn's sword was never there. It sped up significantly and a clean strike was made right through Quinn's head cutting through from the chin.

A large pain went through him, but the gaming system allowed him to recover quickly and he jumped a few steps back. Looking at the scoreboard it counted it as a lethal blow meaning Quinn had taken ten points of damage.

"Whoa! That's Colonel Longblade for you! The best swordsman in the world."

"I was getting worried for a second when his opponent was blocking all the attacks."

Quinn stood there for a few seconds in disbelief. He had been taking it easy so far, but just now he had used everything he had in an attempt to block the sword and at that moment, he had no clue what happened.

Of course, if Quinn was using his beast gear, blood powers and shadow powers it might have been different. Then Colonel Longblade wouldn't have been a match for him but it was still apparent that if the two were fighting sword to sword, Quinn would have lost his life.

Not wanting to waste any time, Longblade decided that he would go for the same move again. After all, it was the only one that his ability told him would work.

'It's not really the way I wanted to win, but as the Green kid said, a win is a win!' He thought.

Then for the first time, Quinn entered into a stance. He bent down his knees slightly and placed his sword into his scabbard. He made sure his fingers firmly gripped his sword waiting for the right moment.

'A stance? But that stance doesn't match the sword.' Longblade was unsure whether Bucky was doing something crazy or was just an amateur who attempted something he didn't understand wouldn't work.

Erring on the side of caution, Longblade activated his ability once again and he could see it. The next move was beautiful, it was fast and would slice him in half. Regardless, Longblade had already started the first steps for the phantom blade strike, the only thing he could do was try to cancel it mid strike in order to survive.

When Quinn could see his foot was in range, unleashing his hand as fast as he could, he attempted a quick draw slash.

'I don't know if this will work, because all I'm doing is imitating what Leo did at one point!' Quinn thought as he pulled out his blade.

Seeing this, it was exactly a repeat of what Longblade's ability had shown him. The Colonel cancelled the attack and tried to move out of the way. It looked successful until he felt a sharp pain hit him in his right thigh.

If this wasn't a game his leg would have been chopped right off.

At that moment five points of HP had been lost from Longblade and the two of them were now at 90 HP points each.

The match was intense, and after seeing that move the crowd thought differently about Quinn. A young man had just pulled off an impressive move. Who would be the winner now? No one knew.

'That move, where have I seen it before?' Longblade thought.

A few seconds later and a notification screen appeared in front of them both.

[The match has been forcefully cancelled]

"Sir, I apologise for interrupting your match, but an urgent report just came in. The Demi-god tier has been spotted!"

Chapter 1155: A copyca

As soon as the news about the sighting of the Demi-god tier beast was revealed, it felt as if the entire base had started to mobilise. Even the lab was busy and soldiers, together with researchers, could be seen pulling out the beasts. The non-military folk all came out to cheer the soldiers before they set out.

By the time Quinn and Longblade had left the capsules, half of the arena had already left. The first thing the Colonel did was to wave over 'Bucky', who appeared by his side nearly instantly.

'Well that confirms it. He actually is that fast. I was sure that Green Boy had pulled some trick on the VR machine, but unless one has trained for years and has perfected their body over time no one should be capable of such a thing. It's actually scary to think how fast he would be if he had put on some decent beast gear.' Longblade thought.

Using his ability he could see that there was nothing he could do, even with his favorite sword against the unarmed boy. Bucky would be able to counter him no matter what he did. A shiver ran down the military leader's spine as something even more frightening was revealed. If Longblade attacked this person right now with the intention to kill him, he would be defeated by him with his bare fists.

"I didn't know the Cursed faction had someone who is so talented in martial arts and the way of the sword. You said your name is Bucky, correct? That movement you pulled at the end, it looked a little awkward but familiar. Who is your teacher?" Longblade asked.

The aggression and arrogant tone that had been present in Longblade's tone upon their arrival had disappeared. Quinn didn't know about the other Earthborn soldiers, but it became apparent that he had at least earned a bit of respect from this man.

As for how to answer the question, right now he wasn't Quinn, but 'Bucky'. As for the last move...

"My teacher's name is Leo Suiyan." Quinn eventually answered truthfully.

The second Longblade heard the person's name, his eyes lit up, and now he understood why the move looked so familiar to him. Leo Suiyan was someone he had admired greatly. Longblade, although a middle aged man, had been inspired to pick up the sword due to seeing the war hero Leo in battle.

In the past he had been someone who relied on guns for battle, but they had proven useless against the Dalki. One day, he had the fortune of being saved by the Blind Swordsman, allowing him to witness Leo's swordsmanship. It was one of the reasons he vehemently defended the statement that the sword was the best weapon one could have and why he had insisted on teaching it to those under him.

"Does that mean Leo is with the Cursed faction?" He asked.

That was when Quinn also realised that not everyone seemed to associate Leo with being part of the Cursed faction. He had never been seen in public with them and he had naturally refused all sorts of interviews. Of course, that also meant that the world was still unaware that their war hero was now one of the V many feared.

"He is someone with close ties to the Cursed faction but he freely does as he wishes." Quinn answered because that's how he honestly felt about Leo. Regardless if he was his Vampire Knight or not, to Quinn he was his first teacher and someone he still had a lot to learn from.

"I see, in that case I'm even more sorry for the disrespect I have caused his student so far. You are a strong person, Bucky, and I wish you could introduce me to your teacher someday. I would like to personally thank him for what he did in the past." Looking over, Longblade saw his men already waiting for him. If they had found the trail of the beast, it was safe to assume that Pure did as well.

"The Cursed faction are welcome to come along with me personally as we look for the Demi-god tier beast. Please meet us outside the main Shelter's headquarters. I will be waiting for you there and will be speaking to Nathan." Longblade said, before he went off to coordinate the plan they had put in place.

It looked like his fun little game had worked out for the best for all of them. Perhaps Longblade had never intended to put much woe into the Cursed faction, but now it seemed like his opinion of them had changed.

Since the field was not empty of soldiers, Quinn quickly went over to where his friends were and he could tell immediately that Layla was suffering with sweat running down her face and that she was exhausted.

"What happened?" Quinn asked as it was fairly obvious the two hadn't just gone off to the toilet at the same time. Logan filled him in, about how one of Pure's members had been present in the crowd and they had eventually tracked him down and that they had captured him, in the hopes he might reveal some intel.

Going by her injuries, Quinn decided to have a quick look at Layla and could tell straight away what the problem was. The amount of Qi in her body was still too much for her body to handle. Quinn had the body of a Vampire Lord and even then, using Qi would put a lot of strain on himself.

For Layla, it was more beneficial for her to use the second stage of qi, or perhaps the third stage, since the Qi would leave the body, rather than reinforce it. If Layla continued to use the first stage to power herself, it would only harm her body, doing more damage than good in the long run, especially with the large quantity she had inherited from her mother.

"Layla, you need to use less Qi on your body. When you shoot it from your arrows it's okay since it's not affecting your body so much, but if you use it too much you might damage your body. Imagine if Logan wasn't there at the time."

"The rebound on your body was too much and any other pure members would have been able to hurt you." It sounded and felt like to Quinn he was telling off a child. The thing was Quinn didn't really understand why Layla had gone after him in the first place, because she hadn't explained what exactly Agent 11 had said about her mother.

Still, she knew she had done wrong, so she listened to him without complaining.

"Fex, I think it would be best if you stay here for now and look after our captive. Maybe it's best for you to take him somewhere quiet and ask him the question we need. How many pure members they have, what their goal is and so on. Being a high ranking agent he should know a lot." Quinn ordered.

Fex honestly wanted to protest, he wanted to go with them but understood. Since Pure was most likely also going after the Demi-god tier beast carrying another person around would be a huge distraction. If anything while no one was keeping a good eye on them, it was the perfect time to do some investigation of their own.

"Logan, it sounds like the army seems to be making movements. My guess is they're going to try and use some of the beasts that they have captured as bait for the Demi-god tier beast. The stronger ones should have left the Shelter, or will be protecting the outside walls. If you can, I think this would be the perfect time to head inside, and maybe you can find more information. There are some interesting things there."

"Lastly, me, Sil, Shiro and Layla will head off with Longblade and his group. Hopefully when we come back, we'll have good news for you all." Quinn said with a smile. With everyone knowing what they needed to do, it was time for them to move out.

'Vorden, Raten, it won't be long until I can see you again.' Sil thought.

Chapter 1156: A special gif

Outside of the main base, Quinn was waiting with Sil, Shiro, and Layla. Using a bit of his own Qi abilities, Quinn was able to settle the wild Qi that was affecting her body, allowing Layla's natural Qi to fuse with her injured cells allowing her to start healing.

With the foreign Qi expelled, she was soon enough good as new. At least physically speaking, mentally was a different story. Honestly, Quinn didn't really want to take Layla in her current state. He was deeply concerned, since it was clear there was something that she hadn't told them, and he knew well that she had a history with Pure who were also out on the hunt for the Demi-god tier beast.

The reason why he allowed her to come along, was because he was worried that she would just go off on her own once more, if she was left behind. There was no guarantee there would be Logan or someone else rescuing her next. It was far better off being next to him than away.

While waiting, Quinn observed everything that was happening. Mechs were being escorted out of the large tube tunnels and then being taken to a factory. They were coming out partially destroyed. It looked brutal as more and more were being dragged out.

Quinn noticed another strange little thing. The captured beasts were actually being sent down a different tube, meaning they were heading to a different pit in the landscape underground, not where the damaged Mechs were coming from.

'Are they trying to trick the humanoid beast somehow? If the same thing happens to the Demi-god tier beast as the basic one, then it means after it harvests the crystal it should enter a weakened state. Do they intend to attack it while in the middle of its partial evolution?'

'Are they trying to use this information to their advantage? If they send it down the same tube then maybe it will be too obvious. While sending it to one next to it, perhaps after the beast is done destroying the mechs, it will move to hunt for beasts again.'

Of course Quinn was just guessing, but other than that he didn't really understand what they were trying to do. Perhaps Logan would have been able to shed some light once he had obtained more information.

'Still if we can, it would be nice to capture this beast in one go, and hopefully we can use its body straight away. There will be the matter to discuss with the Earthborn group, but if by then a new Supreme commander has been selected, we can maybe use Sach to order them to stand down.'

Finally it looked like Longblade was done with his meeting, as he came out with a strong team of five men, each one armed to the max in high tier beast gear. Nathan, was an additional sixth person who had come with them, who had listened in on the meeting as their representative.

"I'll explain what has been discussed on the way to the Demi-god tier beast. These five including Nathan are really the only ones capable and strong enough to go against such a beast. The soldiers are evacuating the underground area at the moment, so we might have to use a special travelling tube to go in and out of areas." Longblade explained.

He then looked at who was coming from the Cursed faction, and noticed that the Green boy and one of the V had been left behind.

'I assume it's because Green isn't really much of a fighter. 'Bucky' and the V girl are here. Could it be that not all of them are as strong as him? Or did they just leave the other one behind as a guard?' Longblade wondered, but after having experienced the strength of Leo's student he was glad that he came along.

"Here take this." The Colonel said as he held out what looked like a type of katana blade of some kind. "I know in the VR game you used a sword, but you should follow in your teacher's footsteps. That sword there is a Legendary tier sword. It's the old weapon I used to have, but I found one with an active skill that's more suited to my needs."

"Think of it as your reward for winning that fight earlier." Longblade said.

For a second Quinn didn't even know what to do, should he just accept the weapon or was this some kind of trap. Quinn had grown too used to people from the Earthborn group trying to get revenge, attack them or even more, but Longblade wasn't doing any of that.

Using the Inspect skill, Quinn was worried that maybe there was some type of curse put on the weapon, but he was just even more amazed at what he could see. He had also forgotten for a moment, that the one receiving the gift wasn't him, but 'Bucky'.

Although the weapon had no active skill it had one very special trait. The weapon was indestructible. It was unable to break.

'Can this be real, can a weapon really have this as a skill? Just what type of beast had to be killed to create something like this?'

The stats that came with it, weren't even close to his gauntlets. At the same time he was no master swordsman, but maybe one day it would come in handy to train in the sword, and this would certainly be useful in these types of situations.

"I thank you, for your generous gift." Quinn bowed down and took the katana-like sword that was shining a bright silver in colour, and placed it on his side. He wanted to put it in his dimensional space but was afraid it would give away who he was.

'It seems like hiding who I really am was the right move, and it proves that not everyone in the Cursed faction is a group of bad people.'

Before leaving, Sil had touched Colonel Longblade, taking a part of his power. He looked at the kid, and by now most people were aware of who he was based on the description, so the Colonel didn't say anything and allowed for it to happen.

Finally the group was off.

Meanwhile, Logan was attempting to complete his own mission that had been assigned to him. Standing outside the lab, he could see that they were in a rush to get the beast transported down to one of the special tubes.

Using this brief moment of opportunity, Logan was able to take advantage of the situation. His spiders were able to locate and enter the inside of the facility. Watching their every move, while sending information back to Logan.

'I haven't done this stuff in a while.' Logan thought as he walked rushing into the facility just acting as every other soldier did. It was easy to enter the base and he understood once inside why they were a bit lax on the outside. Every door seemed to be made out of glathrium, and had a passcode machine to its side.

Although there were those like Quinn who could bypass those, not many people could. As for Logan, the machine that could keep him out would have to be created first.

'Are all the doors reinforced because of what's inside?' Logan wondered, remembering what Quinn had told him about his nightly escapade. He walked around looking for the specific door that Quinn had entered from last time.

During his time here, he didn't want to leave any stone unturned, but he thought if his time was limited it would be best to get to the most important thing first. Eventually, he reached the area where the said beast was meant to be. Using his spiders they were able to squeeze through the small gap in the bottom.

He checked for any signs of anyone else inside, scientist or anyone else, but apparently there were only a few beasts. Placing his hand on the access code, it took a few seconds before he was allowed in. Logan left a few of his spiders in the hallway, acting as sentries to warn him if anyone wanted to enter.

Once inside, Logan quickly found the Basic tier beast that was being experimented on, telling him that he was indeed in the right room.

"Let's see just what sort of things you've been doing here." Logan mumbled as he placed his hands on the terminal, and the information flooded into his brain. A couple of minutes later and all the information he found useful was inputted into him.

"It seems like there are more labs like this one with different beasts, and they only store the information of each beast in a certain lab. It doesn't seem like they have been monitoring this one for long. But there is one thing that interests me, in one of the files.'

When looking through all the information, Logan had obtained a map to all the labs where they were running similar experiments on the beasts. But the one that had caught the most attention was one that was labeled Humanoid - Legendary tier beast.

'Are they trying to make another Demi-god tier beast? Or do they plan to go even beyond that?"

Chapter 1157: Project: Evolve

Looking at the files, Logan was checking through all of the information. The main problem was that it was pretty lacking. It seemed the military was quite careful about not linking systems. So if there was a breach, a single person wasn't able to access all the files.

'This might be due to people who have abilities like me. In this case, not even my back doors work out for this type of stuff!'

With no more information being gathered from the current room he was in, Logan decided that it would be best that he head off to the place where the legendary tier humanoid beast was meant to be located.

Before leaving himself, with his spiders still down the hallway, he allowed them to locate where the room was first. Now having access to the map of the facility, it was easier to navigate and eventually, his spiders had reached the room. Once they entered, Logan was filled with confusion at what he could see.

'Is that real? Without just the spiders, I won't be able to access any information from the terminals. I will need to enter the room for myself, but what could have happened there?'

Trying not to waste time, Logan sent out his spiders on a different task. They were to head to each room, where a beast was meant to be held captive. It looked like a lot of the beasts they captured were going to be used for bait. However, the others, those being experimented on, were in a different area. Which was good news for him since he was currently on the second floor with the experiments, and there weren't many people out and about on this floor?

Each room had the beast present. There was even one room that contained a king tier humanoid beast as well. Which was interesting. Suppose all else failed, as long as the intelligence was still there and Shiro could move human minds into them. Despite what tier it was at, they could use the humanoid beast to place Vorden or Raten inside.

Of course, half of Quinn's idea to use Demi-god tier beast or higher was the fact that they would still have strong power. Being in a beast, they would no longer have the powers they once had before.

'What Quinn never considered was the fact that the beasts can evolve.' Logan thought as he stood outside the door where the legendary tier beast was meant to be. Getting inside, it was as easy as the last door, and now he could see the place with his own eyes.

'So what the spiders sent me was real.' Logan thought, looking at the scene in front of him. The whole lab, compared to the other one's, was destroyed. It looked like they had a strange circular container that was centred in the middle.

The front half of it had been ripped apart and chucked to the side, then there were several containers on the outside as well, with glass on the floor. On top of that, nearly everything else in the room had been ripped apart or destroyed, but one terminal remained, the one that was required for the door to be opened.

'Let's hope there is still some information that I can gather from here.' Pressing his hand on all the terminals, Logan was able to extract some information, but a lot of it was unretrievable. With the odd bits of information he did obtain, he did learn of something. The beast that was contained here was the first project they were working on.

It was the oldest compared to all the other experiments.

'I thought that they started experimenting on the beast to find a way to get rid of the Demi-god tier beast, but the reports don't match up. This beast was captured way before the Demi-god tier even started appearing.'

Searching for more information, Logan knew there had to be something here since this was the first experiment, perhaps the reason why they were doing this in the first place. Then finally, he had found two vital pieces of information.

One was a recording of what happened on the last day of the experiment. There were no more dates after this, and the other was why they were running these experiments in the first place.

'That's what the facility was being used for? It was a project to upgrade the beasts to create stronger crystals. They were trying to find the most effective way to make the beast evolve to create stronger weapons.'

'It makes sense since, for one, demon tier beasts are hard to come by and very dangerous to kill. Even if they couldn't make a beast evolve to the Demon tier level, it is still an improvement for the army to have anything legendary tier and above.'

In all honesty, Logan couldn't fault them for what they were trying to do. They were just trying to use what they had to their advantage. Although it was cruel for the beasts in a way, what choice did humans have? They were in a desperate time, and if they didn't do this, their lives would be in danger.

Next was to play the video, and now finding this out and putting the pieces together, Logan had a pretty good idea of what happened that day.

The video started to play, and it was an exact replica of the room Logan was in, only that everything hadn't been destroyed yet. In the centre of the room was a circle machine where the beast could be seen inside. It was hard to make out precisely what it looked like due to where the cameras were positioned.

On the outside of where the beast was, there were several glass displays with crystals floating about inside. A tube above it all redirected to the beast in the centre. Suddenly, all the crystals on the outside started to light up simultaneously. One of the doctors standing in the middle had a smile on his face.

When the lights from the crystals disappeared, the beast in the pod started to light up brightly. Shining so hard that all of them had to cover themselves.

"Finally, we did It! We managed to evolve a Legendary tier humanoid beast into a Demi-god tier beast!" The man dressed in white said. A few seconds later and there was a rumbling that had come from within the centre container.

Several loud bangs were heard after, and the look of panic appeared on the scientists' faces as they took a step back. The next second, the door was ripped off and thrown all the way to the side.

When Logan looked at where the door had landed, he could also see that the door was still in the same place. Unfortunately, from that moment onwards, the video footage was corrupted, and Logan was unable to see more.

'The date on this video. It's only been a month since this happened. It was so soon. Is that why the room still hasn't been repaired yet? And if my guess is right. The humanoid Demi-god tier beast that the scientist and Pure are after is the Demi-god tier beast from this facility.'

Exiting from the room, it was quite the revelation that Logan had found out, but it didn't really change anything. They still needed to get the Demi-god tier beast for themselves. However, Logan wasn't ready to leave the facility yet.

Not all beasts could evolve, and it looked like they had found a way to determine which beasts could evolve. Perhaps this information could be used to help Borden, Raten and Vorden.

After getting all of the information, Logan realised that there was one thing he needed more to figure everything out. He needed to take a subject back with him. Which was why right now, he had moved from the destroyed room where the Demi-god tier beast was kept and was currently in the room where a King-tier humanoid beast could be seen.

The beast could be seen behind a large glass wall. When Logan entered the room, its eyes locked onto him. Following his every move.

'Is it acting this way because its never seen me before?' Logan thought.

The beast had a humanoid figure but was covered in black fur. Its eyes were piercing red without any white area. On top of that, it had several tails coming out from its behind that were large and fluffy. They could be seen extending to the top of its head.

'It will take too much time to look for another Demi-god tier beast. I can use this one to research how to know which beasts can evolve and which can't. At the same time, we can just evolve this one.' Logan thought as he went to the terminal and placed his hand down.

Here he had access to many different options, one of them allowing for a special type of gas to enter the glass room the beast was in. The gas was pink in colour and filled the room until the beast itself couldn't be seen.

When the gas finally disappeared, the beast was seen on the floor lying down.

'Now, just need to take this someplace safe. I think it might be best to get back and hand it to Fex. We can try to wrap the beast up. With his strings and my equipment, we should be able to hold it.'

Activating another button, the glass door started to rise. Walking over to the beast, before he knew it, its red eyes shot open and stared right at Logan.

"Thank you for letting me out!" The beast said.

Chapter 1158: Pure or Demi-god

The journey was set for Quinn and the others. At the moment, they were walking towards one of the temporary stations built around the Shelter. All these stations had soldiers guarding the outside of them. This was because they were where the special tubes were used to transport Mech's and more, taking one to the sink spot locations.

What impressed Quinn the most was just how organised and well controlled the army was. The only person he could praise this for had to be Longblade. It seemed like everyone had great respect for him, even though it couldn't have been long since he ran the place.

Most of these men weren't even originally his. A lot of them actually belonged to general Innu.

"I must say you run a great place here," Quinn said, wondering just how he did so.

"Of course, these people know why we do what we need to do," Longblade replied. "We are the support for the main Earthborn group. Without us, there are no crystals for the war. In a way, we are the fuel that powers the engine. I make sure everyone knows the importance of their tasks. If we fail to produce, then it's even worse for the others."

Hearing this made Quinn realise that the people worked so well because they all believed they were working towards the same goal. Defeating the Dalki was essential to the whole of the human race. Still, it was also crucial to make sure that everyone knew precisely their part and how it would contribute to the overall goal.

"Our group is the same Q...Bucky." Shiro corrected himself before he said the wrong name. "From what I have seen. Many of those in the Cursed had nowhere to go or felt like they had no purpose, but they are given a purpose when they are taken in. On top of that, we have a leader that cares for us, and it feels like he will do anything to protect us."

The reason Shiro spoke up was due to the look that was on Quinn's face. He could see he was in deep thought after hearing this.

"Are you talking about Quinn, the Cursed faction Leader?" Rafer asked. The man who asked the question, full name was Rafer Lyle. He was a large man who wore a heavy set of armour from head to toe. His shoulders were nearly as broad as the length of Quinn's whole body he was so big.

He was one of the sergeants currently working under Longblade, and he was one of the few who did not quite have a bladed weapon. On his back, he had what looked like a lance. However, rather than a single point as its attack. The lance had four-bladed edges that ran down to the tip.

"I have heard a lot of things about him, about how powerful he is. A man of that strength, I would love to see him fighting up front." Rafer said with a big smile.

"But isn't he a V?" Another soldier asked, who was originally a high ranked A class female traveller called Joy. She was on the opposite end of the spectrum, wearing light armour, and had two thin blades on her back as well. "Did you guys even know about it before the announcement was made? I just don't know how I would feel."

While saying this, Joy also looked towards Layla, as she was one of those reviled on the broadcast. Longblade also looked at Bucky as he was sure he was a V as well.

"Some of us knew about it for a long time," Sil answered surprisingly. "It hasn't changed anything in the group. It's really annoying how your people look at us as well."

Frankly, nearly everyone was getting tired of how the others looked at them. Even now, when they were walking with Longblade they would get stares.

"He's right," Rafer replied. "It shouldn't matter, and I think if we can work on this together, it will prove that the Cursed faction are nothing to worry about."

Finally, they had reached the station, where a strange vehicle was waiting for them. It was mostly clear on the outside and shaped like an old fashioned car. Longblade was the first to get on, and the five men behind him followed. Then Nathan did along with the rest.

The vehicle itself had seats for them to sit on and looked large enough to fit around a hundred people. So there was plenty of room for them all. Then, the vehicle started to move all on its own down the long tube. Now they were travelling down the large hill, exiting from the Shelter where it was placed on a hill heading straight for one of the sinking spots.

"Okay, I guess it's time for me to explain what is going on," Longblade said in a loud voice as he stood in the middle. "The Demi-god tier has been found in one of our mining areas as usual. We have cleared all of the destroyed mechs as well as all of them that were mining there."

"The sinking spots have their own natural tunnels below, as well as the large areas we have excavated, but other than that, there is nowhere for the beast to run. After clearing out a mining area, it seems like the beast goes out to eat in one of the other areas. We have planned a trap, so we have put various beasts in different sinking areas near the mining area where it was located."

"These tubes with these vehicles are the quickest way we can travel to each area. Currently, combat mech teams have been sent to the other areas while we are going to the original area where the beast was spotted. We will attempt to follow its tracks, and if we get a report of the beast being spotted in another area, we are to head to these tubes and travel to its location."

Quinn understood why they were planning to do this. They were using the information they had already received from the lab. That the beast would be in a weekend state after consuming the crystals. Which was why they weren't in so much of a rush to actually send the current team to where the beast would be.

It's almost as if they wanted the beast to eat the crystals.

"This has been our plan for a while now, and we have been able to trap it on a couple of occasions. However, at the same time, Pure has gotten in our way just as we are about to battle with the beast, allowing it to escape. Before, we were initially going to be the ones to deal with the beast while allowing the Cursed faction to fight with Pure.

"However, I think you guys are quite dependable. So I will let you choose which one you would like." When Longblade asked this question, he didn't look at Nathan like he would before. Instead, he turned to Quinn.

When the question was asked, Layla had tugged Quinn on his sleeve as if she wanted to say something.

"Feel free to discuss it with your group first," Longblade said. He could tell something was up and headed back to the others.

"What's wrong?" Quinn asked.

"I wanted to tell you earlier, but I wanted to talk to you about Pure," Layla said. When she spoke, it sounded a bit painful.

"When I went off to meet with the Pure agent, it was because he said he could tell me something about my mother. I know you might not quite understand, but I want to know more about her? Why did she create Pure? What was her reason for doing all the things she did?"

What Layla didn't realise was Quinn understood quite a bit. For now, even he wanted to know more about the Talen family, and why exactly the stone tablet had talked to him only. Curiosity was a strange thing and sometimes, one would go to great lengths to satisfy it, especially if it had family ties.

"You, Logan, I know you're both right, but it's still strange to ask you guys to get involved with my personal business. When it has nothing to do with you guys. How could I ask you guys to fight for me, protect me just because I wanted to know more about my mother? That's why I decided to go off on my own. I know you would have done the same to Quinn, but what's the difference between you and me?" She said as she paused for a bit. She knew the difference. The difference was in strength.

However, Quinn risked his life on numerous occasions, and she was willing to risk hers to find out these answers. It would be selfish of her to ask the Cursed faction to do the same.

"I just wanted you to tell me these things for a reason. My mother was one of the Founders of Pure, and to get my answers, those who are high-ranking in pure will know. The guy I fought against was called Agent 11, and he said that Agent 2 is currently here as well."

Quinn knew from battling with Layla's mother Lucy and the single digit agents were strong. According to Layla, her mother wasn't even in her position due to her strength, but it was because she was one of the founders.

One of the differences between the leaders and those that weren't was that they knew all three Qi stages, while Quinn still only knew two.

"So you're saying you want us to face Pure instead of going for the demi-god tier beast, or are you worried that maybe the Colonel can't handle Pure if we leave it to them? Perhaps you want us to capture agent 2?"

Layla remained silent. She really didn't know what to do. This might be the only chance they could capture a humanoid Demi-god tier beast. At the same time, when would they meet single ranking agents of pure?

They soon were coming up to the sinkhole, and Longblade stood up expecting an answer.

Chapter 1159: Solving both

It was time for Quinn to make the decision. However, it wasn't quite as black and white as some people thought it might be. As he looked over at Sil he could see a smile on his face swinging his legs like a little kid. Ever since being on this mission, his mood had brightened up. Now that he was so close to achieving the goal, if they failed, or it got delayed any longer, then perhaps Sil would snap.

Although Quinn could control him and face him somewhat, it wasn't something he wanted to do.

Sil had waited long enough already. On top of that, the military would most likely just kill the beast instead of capturing it unless Quinn made a request.

'Now that our relationship has improved with Longblade, maybe if we ask, he will agree. Still, his number one property has to be to get rid of it?' Quinn thought.

Looking at Layla and everyone there, the worry deep frown on her face, he knew what the right decision was to be.

"You don't have to worry, Layla. Remember both groups will be together, just both have different tasks." Quinn replied. "It's not like we're splitting up or anything. Well, try to do both." At that moment, Quinn wanted to comfort her. His hand reached out for hers, but before even touching, a strange feeling had come over him.

'Again? But before, we could touch just fine, but now it feels like that stupid connection thing is coming up again! Why does it only activate sometimes?' Quinn thought.

Standing up, Quinn walked over to where Longblade was and was ready with his answer.

"We will take care of the Pure group. However, I would like to make some requests." Quinn said. "I know your group has already done a lot for us, even allowing us to come along, but the Cursed faction needs the Demi-god tier beast. We need it alive."

Hearing this, Joy thought this Bucky person was crazy. Why would they agree to capture the beast alive? Not just that, there was a double meaning to this request. If they were asking this, it also meant they wanted to keep the Demi-god tier beast as well. Since the military had no use for it alive apart from its crystal.

"I would like to put Sil on your team. I'm sure you know about his powers." Quinn said. "He will be strong enough to allow your group to subdue the demi-god tier beast alive. In return, whatever you need from the Cursed faction, we will comply."

Although Sil was unstable at times, Quinn could rely on one thing, and that was his power. Knowing how important this job was for him, Sil would make sure it would happen by putting it in his hands.

He could see that Layla would go for the Pure members, and Sil would go for the beast no matter what. So in his head, it was who needed more help. Still, if he finished one job quickly, he could help out the other as well.

Longblade paused for a few seconds, not giving an answer. While he looked at his people and the others.

"The Demi-god tier beast has hurt a lot of our people. They will be upset to hear that the creature is in the Cursed group's hands, and a Demi-god tier weapon would greatly improve our group's strength. Especially a humanoid one. Whatever you give in return will need to be of equal value or greater." Longblade said. "Do you have the authority to promise us this?"

Without hesitating at all, Quinn replied.

"Yes, I do."

The largest grin had appeared on Longblade's face after hearing the answer.

"Then we agree, but I will not force my people to keep the beast alive. If they are in danger, they are to protect their lives most of all. I will also not be responsible for looking after the Blade boy."

Longblade had heard from Oscar, who precisely this boy was, and how strong his powers were. It was a story many of them found hard to believe, but since the report came from Oscar, they had no choice but to.

"Of course," Quinn said.

At that moment, Longblade leaned over.

"I hope this can improve our relationship, Quinn," Longbalde whispered and walked off to his people to make sure everyone was ready.

Hearing this, Quinn had a look on his face of disbelief. He didn't understand how Longbalde had found out. His disguise was perfect.

'Of course, he would find out who you were.' Vincent said. 'Who else would have the authority to give something of equal value as a Demi-god tier crystal. You didn't even hesitate or ask for an okay from the others.'

It was a slip up, but Longblade must have had his suspicions after the match.

They entered the underground tunnels, and the vehicle they were in was starting to slow down. Eventually, it had come to a complete stop, and two giant mechs were seen standing by the vehicle as well as two more guards. Their duty was to protect that underground station.

Getting off from the vehicle, it was quite impressive what they could see. It wasn't a tunnel like they had imagined. The walls were far wider than they could reach. It could fit at least four or more of the vehicles they had come in; it was so wide.

The walls were also filled with white lights that would go across the edges, making it easy for all of them to see. The only thing that felt like they were underground was the flooring. However, even that was flattened out for them to walk on.

"As we mine, we also continue to resurface the place and make improvements," Longblade explained. "The planet is full of sinkholes that one can't really travel on the surface. So we thought of moving the Shelter underground and travelling via the vehicles when needed. The above Shelter will remain as a storage place for the crystals." Long Blade explained. After that, he pulled out his katana blade and walked forward.

"It's time to head to the mining area where the beast was last seen." Longblade ordered. The groups split into two and started to walk side by side. Quinn out front with his group, and Rafer standing out front for Longblade's group. He was a large, powerful man that looked like a tank. A person who wouldn't fall easy, so it made sense to put him out there.

Meanwhile, in the tunnels themselves, in an area that wasn't as well done up as where Quinn and his group had arrived from. There was agent number 2.

"Alright, this time I'll be moving out by myself. I'm sick and tired of staying in this underground place. We have news that they have called for help from the Cursed faction, but no one of significance has arrived. We need to deal with this before even more help is on the way."

After walking for a while, they came across the mining area where blue crystals completely lit up the wall. It was a big area, and even looking up, they couldn't tell where the ceiling was. Yet, they had built machinery to help them extract the crystal from up high. It was as if they wouldn't let a single crystal go to waste.

Looking around, it didn't seem like the beast was here. They could only see destroyed machinery and a few parts that had fallen off from the mechs earlier.

Just then, Longblade received a message.

"Everyone, the beast has been spotted in area C. That is one of the areas where the beasts are located, hurry let's head back to the vehicle. We can catch up with it then. Otherwise, it might get away before we get to it."

"Longblade, is there another way to get to the beast other than using those vehicles?" Quinn asked as they were running back. Once they reached the station, they could use another one to take them to the area they were heading in.

Longblade then pointed to a hole in the tunnel back the way they were. It wasn't carved out properly since it was a natural tunnel and not one created by them.

"If it's in area C, it means it must have used that tunnel to reach it, but we wouldn't get there in time. There is another reason why we had to come to this area first. I don't know how, but I think it can sense when we arrive at the last area. "

"Only then does the beast move to another area, so it must have just arrived at Area C. We have only recently been using vehicles. Even then, we are only managing to catch it on the tail end just as it's in the middle of fighting the last beast."

Hearing all of this, Quinn knew what he needed to do, a way for him to solve both of the problems from earlier. All he had to do was capture the Demi-god tier beast before Pure arrived.

"You guys go ahead. I'll meet you there!" Quinn shouted, turning back around and running the opposite way.

Longbalde wanted to ask what he was doing, but there was no time to waste. If they didn't get to the vehicle now, they might miss the beast. Or worse, Pure would arrive before them.

So far, they had been arriving at the exact same time. It was a race.

When everyone finally left, Quinn activated the shadow putting on the beast gear set that shined a great silver with blue.

[Armour set skill activate]

[Nitro accelerate]

Chapter 1160: Pure scum

It seemed as if everyone was off challenging new threats and going on exciting adventures... yet there was one member of the Cursed group that didn't feel this way at all, and that was Fex. The vampire was currently on the roof of the Shelter's tallest building, the main military base .

It would be hard for anyone to find him up there, as only the soldiers and Mechs guarding the Shelter wall would even be able to look that high. However, the distance was so great that they would have to have the sight of a vampire to see anything but a black dot, not that they had any reason to look for him in the first place.

'What's with my luck today? I thought it was a good day when I got the chance to pilot that Mech, but this is the second time today I got assigned babysitting duty, while the others are off to have some fun.' Fex clenched his fist in anger, as he looked at the one he blamed for his current situation.

With him on the roof of the building was Agent 11. He was the whole reason why Fex had made his way up here. The prisoner was sitting on a chair that the vampire had swiped from one of the rooms on the way up. His legs and arms were heavily bound with the red string.

Fex had made sure to not hold back, as lately they had snapped so many times that he had started to wonder about their durability. As long as Fex had time, he could reinforce the strength as much as he liked, preventing most from escaping. In a fight he only had minimal time, besides his string ability had always been meant for puppeteering, instead of their current utility.

'Should I perhaps create something like my father had? If I ask Alex he might be able to create a few things for me from beast gear. Maybe like an empty knight of armour or something like that. Although if we need a 'living' subject, there is one right in front of me. I doubt Layla will mind once I get the information out of him.' In the middle of his thoughts, Agent 11 was attempting to move but he barely managed to move the chair. The strings around him resembled a large cocoon, preventing him from any types of movement except for wiggling.

"Who are you? Are you working with that damn traitor?" Agent 11 asked.

Looking at the man, Fex sighed. "Come on, do I really have to explain your current situation to you? It should be obvious which one of us will be the one asking the questions." Looking the Agent dead in the eye, the vampire's eyes started to glow red. He then pulled out a sheet of paper with the list of questions he needed to ask him.

"How many members of Pure are currently present on this planet?" Fex asked, as he was ready to scribble in an answer.

However, contrary to his belief, the Pure Agent didn't give him an answer. As Fex looked up, he could see that the other's eyes didn't have the typical look of someone under a vampire's control.

As a member of Pure he had been trained to protect his mind from mental type abilities, which was delaying the Influence skill Fex was using. Still, it felt like it would soon win out and take over him.

'Those red eyes, so he's one of those V. Is this the mind control that they warned us about? I can't use my Qi to break out of these strings, but I can still do this.'

Controlling his Qi, Agent 11 was able to use the second stage to form something akin to a barrier around his brain. Then using the first stage, he was able to power up his brain even more, dispelling whatever was trying to force him to answer the question.

When he no longer felt any power inside him, he looked up at Fex and smiled.

"Nice try. Go on, ask me as many questions as you like? I have all the time in the world, buddy."

'What the hell? Nobody told me my Influence skill doesn't work on those Pure guys! Fex was shocked, shaking his head. 'Shit, I have to do something! What kind of embarrassment would it be, if I can't even complete such a small task by the time the others come back?'

The vampire pondered what he should do now that his go-to method had failed. He could resort to torture, but the man in front seemed like the type that wouldn't respond to it. In the first place, torture ran the risk of only receiving the type of answer the torturer wanted to hear, with no way of verifying it. Under the Influence skill the victim couldn't lie, which made it the far better choice.

"Did you already run out of questions? How about I help you? Why don't you ask me some things I would just loooovvvve to share with you?" Agent 11 offered with a self satisfied grin. "You're with that bitch's bastard daughter who is just dying to find out more about mommy dearest and since I'm feeling generous let me tell you some things. Now those might just have been rumours about her birth, but if that was all they were, there would have been no reason for Zero to forbid anyone from ever talk-."

The next second, Fex had already wrapped the man's mouth. He was tired of his cocky nature and he had no desire to listen to him badmouth Layla. The vampire walked up to the bound prisoner, lifted up his hand, and before the Pure member could blink he already felt the sting from the other's slap. The whole chair fell to the side from the force behind it, and Agent 11's cheek grazed across the ground.

"You're so annoying. What the hell do I care about her past?" Fex questioned him, not expecting any answer. "She helped my arse back then, so I'm just trying to help her out as well."

'How strong of a slap was that to have knocked a few of my teeth loose? I was using Qi to protect my body from torture, yet he managed to overwhelm my defense that easily? Damn it! We knew about the Cursed faction coming to reinforce them, but who knew they were this strong? I have to somehow find a way to warn Agent 2 that we have completely underestimated them.'

Standing on the edge, Fex looked down on the busy mass of people. Out of curiosity he placed his hand cupping around his ears to have an easier time hearing what they were saying.

"The Sergeant has told us to get the Mechs ready and to move them to area A where the beasts are located."

"But doesn't that mean we will have to fight the beasts off, what are they thinking?"

"It's in case the Demi-god beast decides to change areas and hunt more beasts. The idea is not to kill the beasts but just hold them off with the machines. We just need to wait for the higher-ups to arrive and then make our way out to not get in the way. Alright, I'll meet you in the hangar and we can get our team ready then." Avion explained.

'What an interesting conversation, so they send Mechs down in the underground tunnels where the others are. Well, there's not much I can do with that guy, so I might as well make myself useful. Logan should be fine on his own, since he's just getting information from the Lab.' Fex reasoned, but there was just one problem he had to deal with. He couldn't leave the guy up here on his own.

Carrying Agent 11 under his arm, Fex had a goal. He quickly traveled to the hangar, where the Mechs were located. He used his hearing to locate a soldier away from others and quickly found one who was about to board on to a Mech. Fex quickly pulled him down, and activated his Influence skill once more.

"I need you to tell me your name, your rank, pretty much everything so nobody gets suspicious about me piloting your Mech." Fex ordered. Fortunately, there was no problem with his Influence skill this time. After getting the answers he needed, he tied up the soldier and hid him behind a bunch of crates where he wouldn't be found anytime soon.

"Soldier Kane, why are you slacking behind!" Avion shouted through the Mech's terminal as the other pilots had already started to leave the hangar.

Quickly jumping in, and throwing Agent 11 in the cockpit cramping him up against the wall, Fex activated the Mech and trotted behind the rest.

'Hehe, this is going to be great.' Fex thought with the biggest smile on his face.

Chapter 1161: Unlikely Pair

Fortunately, Logan hadn't gotten too close to the beast before it had opened its eyes.

'Why did I trust the amount the scientists stated?' Logan blamed himself for this grave miscalculation. When going through the terminal via his ability, he had read the report about how much of the pink gas had to be used to subdue the beast. As such, that was also the amount he had used, yet the beast before him showed no sign of being sleepy or even drowsy.

'Was it smart enough to fool them, waiting for an opportunity such as this all along? It's even able to imitate our speech to a degree where I can understand it, so it's undeniably intelligent. To have learned so much by just observing humans during its captivity... no if this one is already this crafty, doesn't that mean that Quinn and the others might be in danger?'

"I've never seen you before, you seem younger than the others?" The black beast spoke as it sniffed the air. It was around 7 foot tall, a little smaller than a Dalki, but Logan looked even smaller than a middle schooler in comparison.

"That's because I'm not with the others." Logan explained as he took a careful step back. If the humanoid beast was able to talk, then perhaps he could reason with it without the need for a fight.

"Then why did you use the gas? If you just wanted to free me you could have done so without it. You might not be one of them, but all you humans want my crystal." The beast placed its hand around its chest where one's heart would be on a human.

"You use our crystals to power items, like the weapons you hunt us with. To all of you we are simply tools. Even the armour and that arm of yours must have been created from the crystals from one of our kind."

The red in the beast's eyes was getting more fierce as it spoke. Logan didn't know how fast or strong that beast was. There had been some data on it, but since it had fooled the scientists about the guess, it was safer to assume it had been hiding its true strength as well.

"Not all of us are the same." Logan replied, ready to defend himself at any moment. It still hadn't attacked him, so he didn't want to do anything to make it. "There are beasts in nature who attack us on site."

"You're the ones who have invaded our home." The beast replied. "Wouldn't you attack someone who entered your territory? Just because others of my kind don't possess the ability to reason with you and do what is natural you justify killing our kind? Are you saying I get to live because I have some form of intelligence? Then what happens when something more intelligent than yourself comes along, does that mean you all deserve to die?"

Were it not for the dangerous situation he was in, Logan would be admiring the beast's ability to reason right now. It was the first time for him to come across a humanoid beast, he had never realised just how... human they were. Were it not for its outer appearance it would be hard to distinguish it from one.

"I know why you're doing this. You need our crystals because your kind is at war. I have heard this numerous times already. One of you confided in me, claiming how she felt bad about doing this to me. However, it was not because she was sorry for me, no your kind just feels conflicted because I have taken on a form resembling your kind!"

"Just because your kind is fighting against those you call Dalki, you justify what you do to us! You don't even care what you do to our home. The planet is a living thing too and those crystals you mine are what powers the life force all around us. It creates the nests for us to come to live. Getting rid of the crystals means destroying our home!" Throwing out his hand, a swift sound was made through the air.

The distance between the two of them was around ten meters, yet Logan knew the beast wouldn't just swipe through the air for no reason. Pressing his hand on a terminal nearby, his eyes started to glow green.

A beast of this level of intelligence, even if it hasn't reached a higher rank, would be a foe that he couldn't go easy on. Activating his soul weapon. Several of the tubes that were stuck in the terminals started to move about like snakes. The ones on the ground quickly wrapped around each other forming a type of shield in front of Logan, while the ones from above came down trying to attack the beast.

'Good thing I'm in a lab.' However, Logan soon saw that the machinery was useless in stopping the beast attacks, as the temporary shield that had been made was ripped through. The machinery that had tried to attack the beast suffered the same fate. The beast started to run around the room they were in around the edge of the room in circles, Logan continued to use its powers trying to trap it or slow it down. He even formed a blaster on his hand, firing at it.

As each thing came towards it, the beast would use its agility to dodge the cables. Each foot step looked incredibly light and the amount of time it spent touching the surface of the ground was close to none.

'Does it have wind powers? Is that what makes it faster than my speed suit? I'm just going to have to try and create something that can face it, while it's being distracted.'

Using his powers, the terminals around started to deconstruct into spiders and soon they were forming into other things. Unfortunately, the beast ignored all the machinery and continued pursuing Logan. It leapt up on the side of the wall, and pushed using its powerful legs. It spun its body and several of its tails started to spin with it. All the cables that would come close to it were being pushed away by the power of the wind its tails were creating.

'Damn it!' Before Logan could change his plan, the beast appeared directly in front of him and the only thing he could do was lift his robotic arm to block its strike. The beast looked confident as it went to grab hold of the arm latching onto it. It ripped into it with its claws and once the metal was off, the scale-like black arm became visible.

For some reason it paused, instead of continuing its attack. Not one to let go of this opportunity, Logan slammed the beast into the ground with all his strength. Hitting the ground, the boy pinned the beast down and placed his Dalki hand around its neck, gripping and holding it in place, slowly squeezing.

'Looks like the training with Brock was worth it. I'm no longer useless in a direct fight!'

"You...are you a beast as well?" The beast managed to let out, as it lifted its arms and grabbed Logan's wrist, slowly pushing it away. "Why... why are you with the ones that are trying to kill us then?!"

The beast was clearly angry, but Logan's Dalki arm was far more powerful than it had expected. Even using all its strength it was hard for it to push Logan off. So it resorted to the only thing it could do at the time. It opened its mouth revealing its sharp teeth and bit down on Logan's hand. At that moment, green blood started to ooze from the wound and flowed into the beast's mouth.

However, that was a mistake. This only increased the energy inside of Logan's body giving him more force pushing the beast back down.

"Your blood! It's not red! If you're no human there is no reason to fight!" The beast exclaimed in surprise.

'If I knew it would be this easy, I would have let it bite my arm from the start. Now what should I do, before it realises its mistake? It seems to be willing to listen now, so we should get out before anybody comes here. Convincing them to join us might pose a problem, though.'

"That's what I said." Logan softened his grip. "I'm not with them. Come with me if you want to get out."

The next second, the door opened up. Their fight had created a lot of noise and had attracted two scientists dressed in white robes, accompanied by around twenty armed soldiers.

"Isn't that the kid from the Cursed faction?" One of the soldiers pointed out.

"But look at his arm!" Another screamed out, pointing at it. "That's a Dalki arm!"

"Maybe it's just a beast transformation skill." A third soldier reasoned.

"Who cares who or what the kid is!" The older looking scientist shouted. "He has broken into this facility and wanted to kidnap our test subject. Kill the boy and capture the beast alive!"

Seeing how bad the situation had just turned out, there was only one thing Logan could do. He completely let go of the beast and moved to the side. The two of them gazed at each other and nodded as if they had come to an understanding. If they were going to get out of this one, the two of them would have to work together.

Chapter 1162: Slight hiccup

Deep in the underground tunnels, Longblade and the remainder of the Cursed group, apart from Quinn, were hurrying as they made their way to the unique transportation vehicle. They were planning to take it to arrive at Area C, where the bait for the Demi-god tier beast has been placed.

"Hey, your friend back there, is he going to be okay?" Rafer asked.

Layla looked back to check if Quinn would catch up to them, but there was no sign of him at all. Shiro wasn't much in use in combat and Sil would naturally want to go after the humanoid beast, so was she supposed to fight off Pure on her own?

Layla had succeeded against Agent 11, but there was a huge difference in fighting abilities between a double digit Agent and one in the single digits. The girl wasn't conceited enough to not have realised that she had barely come out as the victor in their match. Luck alone wouldn't be enough to defeat Agent 2.

"He will be okay." Layla answered. "I'm more worried about myself." She mumbled, but soon she realised that she found herself relying on Quinn once again. After insisting that she could do things on her own, now here she was hoping that he had stayed with them.

'I really can't seem to make up my mind, can I?' Layla shook her head.

Longblade had no idea what Quinn had in mind by staying behind. The quickest way to travel was via the vehicles, but judging by him asking about the tunnels that led to the very place they were going to. He could only guess he was planning to travel on foot, but would he be able to find them since this would be the first time in these tunnels for him.

'There's no humanly way possible he can reach the area before us.' Longblade thought as he smiled. 'But he isn't exactly human, now is he?'

They eventually arrived at the station and quickly entered the vehicle. Everything had already been prepared for them by those guarding the vehicle. The next second, they started moving, travelling so fast through the tunnels that they could hardly see anything.

Finally, the vehicle stopped, allowing them to get off. They ended up in an area that looked almost identical to the one they had just come from. The shapes of the tunnels were slightly different, but it was hardly noticeable, especially for those unaccustomed to this.

However, the soldiers who were protecting the station were nervous as they stood there guarding the place. Afraid that the beast could come for them at any second.

"Has the beast ever attacked the stations?" Shiro asked, looking at how nervous the guards were as they walked through the tunnels quickly but cautiously.

"So far it hasn't." Longblade answered. "It seems to be scared. We thought that it might attempt to head to the surface. Perhaps attack the Shelter, but it has remained down here, doing its own thing, binding its time."

Although Longblade didn't mention it, he did have an idea of what the beast was trying to do. Perhaps it was waiting and gathering crystals down below where beasts were plentiful in the hopes to evolve. Then when it was a Demon tier with great power, it would come back with a vengeance.

Eventually, they could see the tunnel opening up ahead, and this was where the apparent beasts would be. If the beast was in the middle of fighting the others, then they could take advantage of the situation. Still, at the same time, they would have to be careful that the other beasts didn't turn and try to attack them.

When Longblade and the others entered, the first thing they did was check the area. They all stopped for a second at the entrance as they didn't quite know what to do, until Longblade had given them an order.

"Check to see if anything is still alive and moving!"

Hearing these words, they all started to move, fanning out into two groups. Because of the current situation, Sil had decided to come along with Layla, something she very much appreciated. The scene before their eyes appeared to have come from a nightmare.

The room was filled with dead beasts. More than twenty beasts of various tiers that the military had sent down, yet not a single one of them was moving.

"The beast could be hiding inside here still, so everyone be careful!" Joy warned as they poked and prodded the beasts. What they did notice was that all of the beasts had a hole in one particular area. Only the higher-tier beasts had more than one wound.

"All of them...they all have their beast crystal taken out." Shiro said.

This fact was overheard by Longblade and the others, and they all looked at each other smiling. It meant that their plan had worked, and they had created a perfect opportunity to capture the beast. From their research, the beast should be using it as fuel to evolve, making it enter a weakened state.

At that moment, Longblade pressed his hand against his ear, as he got a report.

"Alright everyone, we need to move out again!" Longblade informed them. "The beast has been spotted in Area A. Avion and his team of Combat Mechs are there. They should be able to hold it there long enough for us to arrive. It will be the perfect time to strike. Due to how far it is from here, we should reach there before Pure does as well. Most likely, they will have been heading in this direction."

Informing them of this, the group was on the move once again, but that's what had worried the others. Shiro, Sil and Layla were all looking for any signs of Quinn. They had an idea of what he was trying to attempt. With his speed, he was going to try and outrun the vehicle to get here before anyone else, yet he wasn't here.

Now with the location changing it would make things more complicated.

Layla put on her mask, intending to inform him, but when she tried to connect, there was no answer on his end.

A short while ago, Quinn had activated his armour's special set skill, the Nitro Accelerator that increased his speed significantly. Using this, he ran through the tunnels, and everything became a blur.

Things weren't as confusing as he thought they would be since there was only one direction he could head in.

'I guess this isn't the time to hide exactly who I am.' Quinn thought as he used shadow equip while running. His hands were now also covered in the two new gauntlets he had obtained. The main goal was to defeat the Demi-god tier beast as quickly as possible.

'With the white gauntlet, I can hopefully drain its energy just enough so we can capture it.'

Quinn had a plan, but there was a slight hiccup. While travelling, Quinn heard the sound of voices ahead of him, and he was heading right on course for a collision into a group of men. He had no choice but to slow down, but it was hard at the speed he was travelling. The Vampire Lord couldn't instantly stop the muscles in his legs, as he still wasn't used to running this fast.

"What's that sound?" Someone asked. It sounded like a drill going off in the tunnel, but it was just the sound of Quinn's feet hitting the ground at great speed.

Stepping in front of his men, the man with a large number two on his back held out his hand for a few seconds. Then for a split second, they could see what had come around the corner. Seeing the group of people, Quinn leapt up into the air to try and avoid them and felt his body slam against something that felt like an invisible wall.

Agent 2's face squinted as he quickly took down what he had put up, and Quinn was seen skidding across the floor. He soon got up and could see the large number 2 on the person's back.

"Pure!" Quinn shouted out.

Chapter 1163: Agent 2 power

Seeing the large 2 on the Agent's back, Quinn knew he was in for a world of trouble. He had never expected to be so unlucky as to actually run into Pure. Quinn had known that they would be after the humanoid Demi-god tier beast as well, but to use the very tunnel he was using right now...

'Wait, isn't this a perfect opportunity? This should be the majority of them, if not all! As long as I keep them occupied, the others can focus on the beast alone. I just have to trust them to be able to subdue it. No, with Sil there he will surely do whatever's necessary to reunite with Vorden and Raten!'

Making use of the Pure members' confusion, Quinn quickly threw out his hand releasing a Blood swipe aimed directly at Agent 2. If he could take him out, the rest should be a cinch.

Agent 2 saw the strike coming his way and just lifted up his 'weapon'. It was similar to a sword in that it had a hilt and a sword guard but rather than being sharp and thin it was just a thick large blunt object like a pole. Swinging it he whacked away the Blood swipe without any trouble whatsoever.

'Of course, it would have been too easy if that had worked. I guess even with my new blood skills the simplest of my attacks won't quite work on him.'

Quinn was no longer as fast as he was when rushing over here. Having used the armour set skill to arrive here, it was now on cooldown. Meaning all of the normal stats the armour would additionally give was now useless. He covered his body in shadow to switch to a different equipment until the cooldown had elapsed.

In the middle of his transformation, two Pure members came rushing forward, intending to disrupt whatever he was doing. Fortunately, Shadow equip took less than a second, so there was nothing for him to worry about.

What he didn't expect was a couple of arrows to be fired off from the back. Raising his shadow Quinn planned to block this, but midway in their flight they suddenly sped up, and when they touched the shadow it went directly through it.

'They went through my shadow? So far Lucy was the only one able to go through my shadow!' Quinn was starting to take things more seriously. He grabbed both of the arrows with his bare hands and felt the strong Qi coming from them. In terms of Qi, he wasn't a slacker in that department either and with his own strength he was able to stop them easily.

'Shadow powers? Did the Cursed teach it to more of their people?' Agent 2 wondered, looking at the person in front of him. His hand rested on the shoulders of two men who were about to fire more arrows at Quinn.

In the cramped space there wasn't much room for the Cursed faction leader to maneuver.

'I might be unable to use my shadow to block attacks, but I can certainly use it in other ways.' Quinn reasoned as the shadow that hovered around his back fell to the floor, and started to spread across the whole area, enveloping the tunnel ceiling, the side of the walls far and wide on the ground.

'Why does he seem so confident in facing us? He is alone and we have him surrounded. No... crap, did the Cursed faction leader really come down here personally?!' Agent 2 inferred.

"Everyone be careful!" He shouted.

The next second, Quinn sank into the shadow, only to appear from the side of the wall. Coming from such an unexpected angle, he grabbed the head of the closest Pure member and slammed it into the wall. Holding out the palm of his hand, Quinn activated his Blood spray and the Agent next to the incapacitated one got chucked back several meters into the other side of the wall.
